Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tamil Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY

VOL. 11
1986
No. 13 — 23
Pt. 2

G. K. V.
Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078614

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMPILED

028614

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
JULY 15, 1986
Rs 6.00

ARJUN SINGH
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
BARNALA: FOUND WANTING
RAJYA SABHA ELECTIONS
DOMESTIC TOURISM BOOM
THE AIDS SCARE

KAPIL DEV
INDIA'S GREATEST ALL-ROUNDER

पुस्तकालय
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय
हरिद्वार
5/7/86
078614
RT-01175
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LOHIA MACHINES LTD., AND PIAGGIO OF ITALY.

In every hard-working man's life, some moments stop for a thing of beauty.

In a class beyond compare. Anywhere in the world.

LML vespa 150

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

India's Greatest All-Rounder

Though somewhat overshadowed by the football fiesta in Mexico, the triumph of the Indian cricket team in England was a significant achievement. The man who deserves the most credit is Kapil Dev, who showed that he has finally matured as a captain.

COVER STORY 146

An Escalating Crisis

The complications on the exchange of territories between Punjab and Haryana has put the clock back in Punjab. Meanwhile, Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala's increasing weakness and the rise in terrorism has reduced Punjab into a state of desolation.

SPECIAL REPORT 26

The Rajiv Sabha

The ruling party, last fortnight, sharpened its strategy of packing the Congress Parliamentary Party with only those candidates who were personally loyal to the prime minister and denying entry to dissident elements. A report on the selection process.

CURRENT EVENTS 32

'Barnala found wanting'

Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala helped terrorists come back to the centre-stage of Punjab politics by being lax in dealing with them, and has failed to meet the country's expectations, says Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT ... 66

Indians on the Move

As the annual vacation period peaked last fortnight, it was startlingly evident that domestic tourism is experiencing an unprecedented boom. Indians are on the move everywhere and holiday resorts are unable to meet the demand. A special feature.

SPECIAL FEATURE 76

The New Image

V.P. Singh is no more the bete noire of industrialists. He has stopped keeping the captains of industry at a distance, encourages regular meetings with them in the 'Open House' sessions and is also ladling out tax concessions. An analysis.

BUSINESS 90

CONTENTS

OPINIONS TODAY 3
COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
SPECIAL REPORT
Punjab: An Escalating Crisis 26
CURRENT EVENTS
Congress(I): The Rajiv Sabha 32
Uttar Pradesh: Fires of Hate 36
Mizoram: Peace Time 40
Andhra Pradesh:
The Class Struggle 45
Tamil Nadu: Spy Seizures 46
Asoke Sen:
Property Problems 48
Kerala: Odd Man Out 50
DDA: Cleaning Up 57
West Bengal: Red Revenge 58
Bihar: Transfer Tremors 63
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Arjun Singh:
"Barnala has been found wanting" 66
GLOBE-TROTTING
Canada: Unheeded Warnings 70
Cork: In Memoriam 72
SPECIAL FEATURE
Domestic Tourism:
Indians on the Move 76
TRADE WINDS 89
BUSINESS
V.P. Singh: The New Image 90
Foreign Trade:
Temporary Reprieve 92
Courier Services: Going Places 96
Sanchaita Investments:
The Loan Mela 98
HPC: Deep Trouble 103
Holiday Resorts:
A Share of the Sun 104
Computer Shops:Byte Boom 109
The Markets: Small Cheer 113
Economy Monitor 116
STATENOTES 121
PHOTO FEATURE
Bismillah Khan: A Mystic Union 122
HEALTH
Aids: Countering the Scare 132
Test-Tube Babies: Made in India 134
CRIME
Uttar Pradesh: Web of Corruption 138
COVER STORY
Cricket:
India's Greatest All-Rounder 146
BOOKS
The Roots 156
EYECATCHERS 160

Cover photograph by PATRICK EAGAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Who is India's No.1 political achiever? You decide.

How's Rajiv Gandhi doing? Is he doing better at the Centre than NTR in Andhra? Than Arun Nehru at Internal Security?

You decide.

In this, the first of six nationwide Opinions Today polls, you will assess the relative contributions of eight political achievers: S.S. Barnala, Jyoti Basu, Rajiv Gandhi, Ramakrishna Hegde, Arun Nehru, P.V. Narasimha Rao, N.T. Rama Rao, V.P. Singh.

And decide on their ranking on a table of 1 to 8. Two persons, naturally, cannot have the same ranking.

Why No. 1?

Now, you have to explain the reasons for your No. 1 ranking. That is, if you think 'X' is India's top political achiever, then in not more than 50 words, you have to tell us why you think so.

The rankings will be processed by a computer, to determine the national average–the pulse of the nation's mood.

Plus, there is the chance to win awards, for those entries which tie in with this average.

An entry form, alongwith a list of rules and regulations, is at the back of this page.

This poll is about your politics, your political leaders.

And this is your chance to speak out.

The awards.

For this poll.

First	: Weston Colour TV and VCR, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Second	: Encyclopaedia Britannica.
Third	: Weston 2-in-1, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Consolation	: Annual subscriptions to INDIA TODAY.

Across all six polls.

First	: Return First Class air tickets for two to Los Angeles, courtesy PAN AM.
Second	: A specially commissioned painting (30″ × 40″) by M.F. HUSAIN.
Third	: EIKO PC Junior computer with printer, courtesy EIKO.
Consolation	: The World and its People–a 27 volume set.

Turn overleaf to express your opinion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Rules and regulations.

Since the entry forms will be processed by computer, it is important that you follow these procedures carefully. Incorrect or incomplete entries will be rendered invalid.

1. You can voice your opinion only through a valid entry form, such as the one below.
2. In case you have difficulty in obtaining the entry form, please mail a stamped, self-addressed envelope marked 'Opinions Today' to us at INDIA TODAY, 316 Competent House, F-14 Connaught Place, New Delhi-110 001.
3. An individual can send in only one entry form per poll.
4. The entries will be evaluated by means of a software package, specially designed by Tata Consultancy Services. The package will be run on a Burroughs B 6900 mainframe.
5. Important: while filling in this entry form, please ensure that you leave one square blank between the various units in your name and address.
6. All the eight options in each poll have to be ranked from 1 to 8. No two options can have the same ranking.
7. The name should start with the family name, followed by the first name.
8. Also ensure that you enter your first two or three initials in the space provided.
9. The date of birth should start with the date (two digits), followed by the month (two digits) and the year (again two digits). For example, if your date of birth is February 9, 1956, it should be entered as 090256.
10. Please tick the appropriate square, for other details such as sex, education, occupation.
11. In your address, please also give the pin-code number.
12. Please ensure that you fill in your particulars consistently across all subsequent polls.
13. In every poll you will have to explain the reasons, in not more than 50 words, for your No. 1 ranking. This is the 'tie-breaker'. Be sure to write the tie-breaker. You can miss out on the big awards if you don't. However, if your entry ties in with the national average, you will still be entitled to receive consolation prizes.
14. The entries will be evaluated by a panel of judges.
15. The results will be published in the forthcoming issues of INDIA TODAY. The winners will also be notified separately by post.
16. Employees (and their relatives) of Living Media India Pvt. Ltd., its associate companies, Tata Consultancy Services, and Interface Communications Pvt. Ltd., are not eligible to participate in this opinion poll.
17. The decision of the judges will be final and binding.
18. ALL ENTRIES MUST REACH LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD., P.O. BOX NO. 29, N.D.H.O. NEW DELHI-110 001, BY THE LAST DATE INDICATED ON THE ENTRY FORM.

ENTRY FORM: 1

Please fill in BLOCK CAPITALS

NAME: Mr./Mrs./Ms. _____ Surname _____ First Name

INITIALS: _____ DATE OF BIRTH: D D M M Y Y SEX: M [1] F [2]

EDUCATION: Professional [1] Post-graduate [2] Graduate [3] Matriculate [4] Others [5]

OCCUPATION: Service [1] Business [2] Housewife [3] Student [4] Others [5]

ADDRESS: _____

City _____ Pin-code _____

OPTION NO.:	PERSONALITIES	RANKING
1	S.S. BARNALA as C.M., Punjab.
2	JYOTI BASU as C.M., West Bengal.	5
3	RAJIV GANDHI as Prime Minister.	1
4	RAMAKRISHNA HEGDE as C.M., Karnataka.	3
5	ARUN NEHRU as Minister, Internal Security.
6	P.V. NARASIMHA RAO as Minister for H.R.D.	4
7	N.T. RAMA RAO as C.M., Andhra Pradesh.
8	V.P. SINGH as Finance Minister.	2

Please give reasons for your No. 1 ranking _____

Your opinion must reach us by 19.7.1986.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 13
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JULY 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SHEKHAR GUPTA
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312093, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. CALCUTTA ●
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

MORE than anything else, INDIA TODAY is concerned with change. All news is change, and a newsmagazine looks constantly for what is new, different. It is an exciting task—capturing change—but not always an easy one, and is almost like capturing the wind. The obvious changes are like strong gusts of wind whose directions are clear. But then there are the cross-currents that make it difficult to pinpoint a trend. And, of course, there are times of complete stillness. But even then, there are underlying transformations taking place, in social attitudes and life-styles, making it necessary to go beyond the 'news'. After all, what often passes for the day's news is less significant than the more basic transitions that are under way.

A stagnant society would have little use for a magazine like INDIA TODAY. But India, fortunately for us, is constantly pulsing with myriad changes: the new personalities shaping the country's politics, emerging conflicts, technological leaps and the advent of new forms of entertainment, successes in the worlds of business and sport where none existed before, the yielding of the old order in an ancient society finding new expression as a young nation.

For all their expertise, even the best journalists need every now and then to check the barometer of public opinion, for the experts can be out of step with the real pulse of change, or unconscious of a new beat. This is why we have introduced with this issue OPINIONS TODAY (page 3): to find out what our readers really think and feel about the people and personalities who, while hitting the headlines, personify and influence the changes taking place in the country.

This is not, strictly speaking, a national opinion poll as a professional pollster would define it. But it tests the opinions of a literate, educated, English-speaking section of the country, and a larger sample than used by professional pollsters. And, as each of the last four general elections showed, on big issues the country tends to respond with a common perception and a collective will. So, however unrepresentative INDIA TODAY's readers might be of the country as a whole, in a strict psephological sense, I believe that your opinions will be pointers to the public perception vis-a-vis the people and issues that figure in the six editions of OPINIONS TODAY. When your choices are in, we will be able to present back to you the mood on a wider range of issues than has been attempted to be captured so far in the country.

LETTERS

OPIUM ON CELLULOID

Religion is no longer the opium of the masses. Films are ("Invasion of the Starlings", June 30). And why not? The starlets' nubile charms, cacophonic singing, epileptic dancing, and improbable victories over evil are much better than what religion seems to come up with. National integrity would be assured if all Indians could (in the patriotic sense) feel for each other the love that Farha and Khushboo so obviously do!

Bangalore VINOD KUMAR B.

■ Your article on upcoming film stars was really exclusive and informative. It has been a long time since I read truly reliable and well-written material on modelling and the film world.

Gwalior DR GYANESH

■ Legions of new juvenile stars have chimerically expunged the big bad world of the Bombay film industry. They have even adumbrated the established stars of yesteryears and been accepted with open arms by the audience. But it is also true that the craze for young stars is temporal. Only the talented last. So the Bombay film industry beckons young blood. Aspirants had better make it quick and fast before it's too late.

Bangalore K.CHIDANAND KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDAL.
Moving with the times.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDAL. Introducing just about every alloy of aluminium in India. Pioneering practically every end-use. Committed to make aluminium a way of life. From foil packed life saving drugs to currency coins, to high rise claddings, to industrial roofings, to fighter aircraft, to transformer winding sheets..... And now, India's entire commercial transport industry is being taken to new heights of efficiency and profitability with INDAL's pioneering efforts. Light weight, high strength, extruded systems will transform the basic performance parameters of the road transport industry in tune with prevailing international standards. In energy savings. In increased payload. In better economy of maintenance. That's just one example of the many new directions INDAL is moving in.

INDAL is the first aluminium company in India to go into chemicals. Special grades of alumina and hydrate have been developed by INDAL for newer and more high-tech uses in conveyor belting, ceramic fibre, refractories and insulators.

Also in the pipeline are new projects in chemicals, extrusions and sheets. In Balasore, Orissa, INDAL has set up Orissa Extrusions Limited in collaboration with IPICOL, to make specialty extruded products. In Haldia, West Bengal, INDAL has planned a new caustic/chlorine project employing the very latest pollution free membrane cell technology.

Thus, aligning today's breakthroughs with tomorrow's priorities, INDAL stands poised to take off into greater heights than ever before.

Indian Aluminium is Indian aluminium

INDAL

Indian Aluminium Company, Limited

CONTAD/INDAL/3-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ I cannot understand why a magazine of your repute has given so much importance to Indian cinema, which has gone down the ladder of decency in recent years. In your article and photographs you have exhibited vulgarism and obscenity, much to our dislike.
Madras F. STANLEY

CANDID PORTRAYAL

Your special report ("The Flip-Flop Pandit", June 30) was a very real and candid appraisal of Kamalapati Tripathi. Despite his exploitation of his 'freedom fighter' image and his links with the Gandhi family, he has the audacity to blackmail Rajiv in the garb of party welfare. Surely Rajiv deserves commendation for his magnanimity.
Lucknow SAYYAD NADIR ALI KHAN

■ Your story makes it clear that old politicians of dubious repute are the most reluctant to fade out when the time comes. Their escapades into the realm of wrong-doing would make any hero of the Chambal ravines red with envy. When Mayapati stood for election as a rebel Congress(I) candidate, Kamalapati did not condemn him—there was probably nobody around to draft a letter of admonishment.
Lucknow LT-COLONEL S.K. MUSHRAN

GORKHAS' LAMENT

It was heartening to read your unbiased, factual report on the Gorkhaland movement ("Hounded at Home", June 30) which made no attempt to malign the genuine voice of the Indian Gorkhas.

The Centre and the Left Front Government have branded the movement as secessionist without giving a hearing to the grievances of the Gorkhas, who have lately realised that sacrificing lives as soldiers is itself no guarantee for citizenship. A separate state is the only way to give us an Indian identity.
Delhi NITA SUBBA

FOR THE RECORD

In your report ("Saffron War", May 31) the correspondent has called me a Kannada zealot without caring to know what I stand for. I never told Belgaum corporators to use Kannada as a sole official language. It is not true that I insisted on speaking in Kannada. I did try to speak to them in English, but they did not give up their interruptions.
Bangalore P. PUTTAPPA

CONFIDENCE BUILDING

The exodus ("Migrants of Fear", June 15) can only be stopped by creating conditions which will inspire confidence in the minority community. The internal fighting by Prakash Singh Badal and his colleagues should stop and they should help in checking this exodus, for, if not checked, it will create a backlash.
Patna Saheb MAJOR BALBIR SINGH

■ One would fully agree with Satyapal Dang that there would be more unemployed youth in the event of closure of factories. The terrorists trained in Pakistan get their unenlightened manpower from among the jobless lower-middle class youth.
Nasik ANGELA VINEET

VESTED INTERESTS

The menace of bogus membership has been dominating the Congress since the days of Pandit Nehru ("The Bogus Bandwagon", June 15) because of lack of ideological commitment among the rank and file. It is the creation of vested interests to capture party machinery.
Madras V.R CHANDRAN

CORRECTION

Your feature on Vikram Seth ("Literary Sensation", June 15) states that he is the author of three books: From Heaven Lake, The Humble Administrator's Garden, and The Golden Gate. This is incorrect. His first book, Mappings, was a collection of poems and translations from Urdu, Hindi, Chinese and German, published by Writers Workshop (Calcutta) in 1981.
Calcutta P. LAL

BLACK GOVERNMENT

I am a student of Gandhi Vidyashram at Kodaikanal who had testified before the Supreme Court Commission in the case of bonded labourers in the Kodai Hills ("Inhuman Bondage", June 15). There are over 800 families working under Tan India, South India Viscose and Seshayee Paper Mills, not just 44 families as you have said.

The Collector, M. Nambiar and the Tamil Nadu Government have backed the vested interests to the hilt. Sub-Collector Pirzada's order releasing the labourers was illegally stayed and the relevant file taken away. Where is the much-touted clean government?
Kodaikanal S. BALACHANDRAN

■ It is a sad irony that this tragedy of inhuman bondage has been relegated to the back pages of your magazine and merited just one page of coverage! Magazines like yours must help expose such link-ups if companies like Tan India are to be exposed, or you will only be playing into the hands of the powers that be.
Kodaikanal N.P. MATAI

PITY THE DEAD

Your report ("The Barabanki Bomb", June 15) ignores the fact that the administration does not have a right to shoot anyone in the name of smuggling. Those killed were innocent, poor Muslims, not smugglers. I welcome the decision to transfer the SSP and DM.
Aligarh N.J. ANSARI

FIRST INFORMANT

The article ("Legal Row", June 15) gives the impression that the Consumer Education and Research Centre has jumped into the fray on the complaint filed by a shareholder against W.S. Insulators Ltd regarding "Equity-linked debentures". We have to clarify that CERC was the first informant in the matter of companies adopting restrictive trade practices. As early as January 22, CERC had informed the Director-General of Investigation and Registration (MRTP Commission) N.P. Bhatt, that the practice of linking up equity shares with debentures amounts to adoption of RTP per se for the purposes of MRTP Act, 1969. Subsequently, whenever an incident of linked issue appeared CERC has informed the director-general requesting him to initiate appropriate action.

In the case of the equity-linked debentures, due to extensive research work carried out, CERC took time in filing the complaint before the commission. On April 26, CERC has filed complaints against more than 20 companies.
Ahmedabad MANGALA JOSHI

■ Your story fails to mention a relevant fact stated in a Finance Ministry report (April 24, 1984) which reads: "Regarding the linking of shares with debentures, the policy is that while the simultaneous issue of equity shares and non-convertible debentures could be permitted, investors should be free to subscribe to shares or debentures, or both, at their option. Obviously, the investors should not be forced to buy one security for the sake of another."
Indore A.D. URDHWARESHE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Save the Accord

Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold;
Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world,
The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere
The ceremony of innocence is drowned;
The best lack all conviction, while the worst
Are full of passionate intensity.

(The Second Coming: W.B. Yeats)

YEATS' words are an uncanny portrayal of the mess in Punjab: the Rajiv-Longowal accord in a shambles, a lame duck chief minister who is suddenly friendless, clumsiness in both New Delhi and Chandigarh, a new level of terrorist activity and a dangerously spreading communal divide. It is easy in these circumstances to despair, pronounce the accord dead, make flip references to Northern Ireland and call for extreme solutions. Commentators in the press and elsewhere, as well as a growing band of politicians, have called for the dismissal of Barnala and the ushering in of the army. Nothing could be greater folly.

AJIT NINAN

Barnala may have made his mistakes, his party may have split down the middle, and he may not have been as firm in dealing with terrorists as he should have been. But he remains both the country's and Punjab's best bet yet, as does the framework provided by the accord. More than the accord and Barnala are required to ensure that Punjab does not go over the brink, but without them there is even less hope of beginning the long, hard climb back to level ground where both the Sikhs and Hindus in Punjab can live in peace.

Removing Barnala at this juncture would be a clear victory for the terrorists and the Akali dissidents, both of whom have set their face against the accord. Dismissing Punjab's elected Government would also be a repudiation of the process of political reconciliation that started with the accord. Sikhs, in and outside Punjab, will accept measures from Barnala that they will not from an ex-Congress(I) governor. And security forces going about their legitimate job under New Delhi's direct instructions run the risk of being viewed as some kind of occupying army. Finally, there is no reason to believe that terrorism can be dealt with more effectively under President's rule: this did not happen in the past, and may not happen in the future. It is also necessary to think a couple of steps ahead: What happens after President's rule? Another election and perhaps a fresh Akali government? Can a new framework for solving the Punjab problem be reasonably expected if an Akali Government with a reasonable chief minister is dismissed?

As for calling in the army, the paramilitary forces in Punjab have been strengthened, they are being given more men and better equipment, new measures are planned to counter terrorism, and these must be given a chance to bring the situation under control. The army, in any case, is not the best force suited for the job of countering terrorism, nor is it good for the morale of soldiers to be asked to fight their own countrymen. The situation is difficult, and both Hindus as well as Sikhs need to be protected from the terrorists, but to call for the army is to despair of more reasonable solutions.

Rather than consider dismissing Barnala and bringing on the army, the Centre should weigh a whole set of alternative options. The Government must recognise that there is logic in Barnala's criticism of the Venkataramiah Commission's unhelpful report and of the Desai Commission's flawed terms of reference, as there is in his declaring that at no stage did the Punjab accord envisage the transfer of Punjabi-speaking areas to Haryana. It must find a response to Sikh grievances, one of which relates to the manner in which the Ranganath Mishra Commission is going about its business. And instead of waiting for Barnala to take the next step, the Centre must display some initiative in breaking the present deadlock while placing greater trust in Barnala than seems to exist.

Barnala has his own share of soul-searching to do. Central leaders have a point when they argue that he released potential or confirmed terrorists soon after he assumed office, and that he has, after all, failed to bring the law and order situation under control. Today, this must be his primary responsibility, and he must remain conscious of the fact that the future of his Government depends deservedly on this single issue. It does no credit to any state government if its citizens have to flee for fear of their lives. Also, the responsibility for picking up the threads once again for implementing the accord is as much with Barnala as anyone else, and he cannot afford to shirk this. Finally, the defeat of Simranjit Singh Mann in the Rajya Sabha elections gives Barnala the chance to try and bring the Akalis back together and forge a united front that can tackle the state's problems. All the Akali politicians need to realise that it is high time they stopped playing power-politics while the state burns, lest they are finally left with nothing but ashes. Meanwhile, whether the politicians behave themselves or not, leaders from both the communities in Punjab should step forward and form voluntary organisations that try and build mutual confidence, prevent migration, and act as ginger groups that put pressure on the politicians and governments to search for the middle ground.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A few things up there cold

Renewable energy — The business opportunity of the future. Using an unending source of free energy commercially.

Like bio-gas, bio-mass and the sun. A field in which we are one of the leaders.

We started off with the more conventional projects. Community bio-gas plants, solar water heating systems, solar cookers, farm power gasifiers.

Very soon we moved ahead. We brought in some of the world's leading technologies.

And some leading business houses to join up commercially, in some exciting ventures. Some of the first of their kind.

Energy from the sun — A 30 MW solar thermal power generating unit will soon be set up in Punjab.

The first solar based plant of this capacity outside the U.S.A. Our collaborators are the world leaders in solar technology, Luz International and a major business house, Ballarpur Industries Ltd.

All this at generation costs that compare well with that of conventional thermal power plants.

Using paddy straw and husk — Both form the bulk of agricultural waste matter. And are

Renewing energy the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cld help a lot down here.

ailable in plenty. It will be used in large scale sification. For power generation and the oduction of important chemicals like ethanol and ammonia.

We've collaborated with the world leaders in sification, the Institute of Gas Technology, icago and the Regional Research Laboratory, derabad.

Certainly not an experiment. But a proposition at is expected to have great commercial tential.

Made possible with our tie-up with Xytel and chtel, U.S.A. and Ballarpur Industries Ltd.

PAIC is now playing a leading role in the growth of renewable energy. Not only in Punjab, but the whole country.

Punjab Agro Industries Corporation.

SCO 307-308 Sector 35-B, Chandigarh 160 036.

the future. Now!

maanorth/2/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New Priority

● Computers have been replaced by concern for the environment at the top of Rajiv Gandhi's list of priorities. In a move that was virtually unprecedented, the prime minister recently summoned a full meeting of the council of ministers to do nothing but listen for two hours to environmentalist Anil Agarwal speak and present a slide show on the environmental disaster threatening the country. Agarwal had earlier addressed all the secretaries to the Government of India at a session where the prime minister sat in. Rajiv now wants him to talk to all the members of Parliament by addressing the various consultative committees attached to the ministries, and Agarwal—who normally spends his time running the Centre for Science and Environment—is readying for the marathon effort of addressing 27 consultative committees, some of which are again chaired by Rajiv Gandhi.

Loyal Force

● The National Security Guards, the crack commando force formed by the Government in the wake of Operation Bluestar, has started displaying signs of fierce loyalty to its chief, T.R. Nagrani. The force, now numbering about 4,000, was raised and trained by Nagrani who was recommended for the post by R.N. Kao, his former boss at the Research and Analysis Wing (RAW). NSG commandos have been used intermittently in Punjab to deal with terrorist situations. Nagrani is due to retire at the end of July, but sources in the intelligence community indicate that his term as commando chieftain will be extended by two years because his men have exhibited an uncanny personal loyalty to Nagrani and have made several representations stating that his retirement will badly affect the new unit's esprit de corps. Government officials have approached Rajiv Gandhi on this issue and the prime minister is reportedly in favour of an extension for Nagrani.

Special Status

● The Indian Government pulled out all the stops for Vice-President R. Venkataraman on his recent visit to Paris. In an unprecedented move, the visit was given all the trappings of a presidential one. Air-India was directed to place a special Air-India 707 at the disposal of the vice-president's party to fly them to Paris in connection with the closing ceremony of the Festival of India. Air-India had to cancel one of its weekly flights to Moscow to accommodate the vice-presidential trip.

When the festival was inaugurated last year by the prime minister, the French Government was given the impression that the closing ceremony would be conducted by the President, Giani Zail Singh. Instead, the French were told at the last minute that the vice-president would officiate instead. The Chief of Protocol in the Indian foreign office, Salman Haider, was specially flown to Paris to explain to the French the change of plan. Obviously to salvage prestige, Venkataraman was afforded the facilities normally reserved exclusively for a head of state.

The Dean Deal

● John Gunther Dean, American ambassador in New Delhi, has been catapulted into controversy by the New York Times, which reported that Michael Deaver, former White House deputy chief of staff and now a high-powered lobbyist, stayed with Dean during a recent visit to New Delhi and that Dean helped fix some of Deaver's appointments with Indian businessmen. Quid pro quo was suggested as Deaver had helped Dean get his Delhi posting in the first place.

Dean issued a denial, but the New York Times produced evidence to show that Dean had tried to help Deaver meet businessman V.K.Modi. Dean says "The linkage that he got me my job and then I offered help is indecent." Is this a case of Eager Deaver getting Clean Dean into trouble?

Envoy Option

● Having co-opted veteran T.N. Kaul as Indian ambassador to Moscow—the age of our man in Moscow going up as the Soviet leadership's comes down—the Government is still in a quandary over the other key vacancy—that of Indian ambassador to Washington. The Government was keen on inducting another veteran, B.K. Nehru, 72, who had served as ambassador in Washington 20 years ago. Nehru cited old age and a recent operation as reasons for being reluctant to strap on his diplomatic guns again, but the prime minister's office is persisting in its efforts to get him back in harness. Only lately has the option been broadened and the likely candidate, if Nehru is adamant, is former foreign secretary M.K. Rasgotra, now in semi-retirement in Delhi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATLAS INTRODUCES THE FUNFLEET

Four Superbikes world-class!

TRIM UP ON SPORTSTER
Adjustable bar. Tachometer for speed and mileage. Sleek hubs and mudguards. Calliper brakes, self-locking side stand, nickel chrome-plated carrier.

SPEED UP ON CONCORDE
Super Racer. Rugged frame tubing. Tachometer Rat trap steel pedals with leather flaps. Extra free-wheels for high/normal speed option.

GROW UP ON SCOUT BMX
MIG welded fork and frame. Extra wide wheels. Adjustable handle with foam pads. Special chainguard. Front and rear, spoke and pedal reflectors.

Nothing as exciting has happened to bikes as Atlas Funfleet. 4 Superbikes. In 4 acrylic polychromatic colours. Sheer world-class. Gleaming with good looks, great technology. And you know Atlas keeps going strong—all the way to millions of fun miles.

AC-26

Atlas
«FUNFLEET»

CONCORDE • SPORTSTER • SCOUT BMX • RAMBLER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Invest in commercial space in the shopping mall

DLF's 2nd prestige commercial centre at DLF Qutab Enclave, the largest township, south of Delhi.

The business boom that is evident all over the country today demands foresight and planning for the morrow. Have you ever thought of the problems of growth — when your present office just cannot accomodate your expansion plans. Already the pressures on good commercial space are acute and rents are spiralling. Isn't it time you thought of the future? Or will you settle for scattered offices all over the city with all the attendant problems of communication, unnecessary expenses and effort of commuting to & fro?

In any case, owning your own space makes sound business sense. Particularly when the space is in a new township. Because not only can you get the space you want but the amounts you have to invest are low. And the appreciation is faster. Which can make all the difference to the colour of your balance sheet. Or if it already has the right colour, it can add a few positive shades to it.

Take a look at The Shopping Mall, the exclusive 3-storeyed commercial complex being developed by DLF in the largest township, south of Delhi. The township that gives you the opportunity not only to plan for your office expansion but also relocate your executives in the residential complex around it. At a price that is a fraction of what you have to pay in Delhi and is in fact equivalent to barely a few years' rentals. What's more, you have a choice of 2½ year and 5 year payment plans.

Drop in at DLF or write today to indicate your office and residential space requirements. The Shopping Mall has split-level shops on the ground floor and office space on the 1st and 2nd floors. With extra storage space in the basement. If you are looking for residential property, DLF offers you an unmatched range — freehold plots, modular homes, luxury homes and apartments. Remember allotments are on first-come-first served basis. So, the faster you act, the better are your options.

DLF UNIVERSAL LIMITED

21-22 Narindra Place,
Parliament Street, New Delhi-110001.
Phone: 322583,
Telex: 31-66885 DLF IN

DLF Qutab Enclave
The new landmark, south of Delhi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fortunately you can be choosy about the fresh foods you buy. Now how about the preserved products?

A cautious housewife chooses the best in fresh foods—fruit, vegetables and high protein products. Dehydration, blemishes, over-ripeness are all eliminated before the food reaches her family.

Yet, few questions are asked about conformity to vital standards of safety in food containers.

Food containers should protect their contents from contamination and toxicity.

Their opacity should be proof against chemical reactions through exposure to heat. Food containers should have a long shelf-life, and should be easy to display and stack in any storeroom or kitchen. They should also be impervious to rodents and pests.

To all this, Tinplate is the answer.

Because Tinplate is still the safest, most versatile packaging material known.

The container is as important as the contents.

ACIL/TCIL/P-3/86

Issued in the public interest by:

TCIL TINPLATE

The Tinplate Company of India Limited
Registered Office:
4 Bankshall Street Calcutta-700 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give your team some of the finest things in life.

When you give your team a gift of Nuware, you give them joy.

Many wonderful moments.

Simply because it's the finest tableware there is.

We've even brought in Swiss technology in melamine tableware. So you can be sure there's none better.

A feast for the eyes. It makes every special occasion just a little bit more special.

Every time they serve their guests on Nuware they'll say:

"Gracious! You've got style."

Call us for tie up promotions too.

NUWARE
Melamine Tableware

NUWARE INDIA LIMITED, 14, COMMUNITY CENTRE, NEW FRIENDS COLONY, NEW DELHI-110 065. PHONES: 636622, 636487

SPEER/A/155

AGIL/TGIL/P-3/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

● The greatest genius of J.R. Jayewardene, the President of Sri Lanka, is that he has succeeded in convincing even those Tamilians of Jaffna, who never thought of a separate state in the island, that they cannot coexist with the Sinhalese hereafter.

■ CHO RAMASWAMY in Sunday

● Mr Basu is trying to compete with me but he will not be able to as he is over 70 while I am just 50. He should go to the lunatic asylum at Ranchi as he has gone completely mad.

■ A.B.A. GHANI KHAN CHOWDHURY, Union minister for programme implementation, at municipal campaign rallies in West Bengal, quoted in The Times of India

● Everybody must be clear on the point that when an issue is remitted for adjudication, the verdict should be accepted.

■ RAMAKRISHNA HEGDE, Karnataka chief minister, on the Mahajan Commission report, in Frontline

● Hegde is a Janata Party man. I am not trying to embarrass him. One should know that the Janata Party passed a resolution rejecting the Mahajan Commission report.

■ S.M. JOSHI, Janata Party leader and president of the Maharashtra Seema Samiti, in Frontline

● Chandra Shekhar kept saying that he never wanted to be president and had already been president for too long. It is obvious now that he did not mean a word of what he said. In fact, Chandra Shekhar wants to be the first and last president of the Janata Party.

■ DR SUBRAMANIAM SWAMY in Imprint

● Some Indian traditions deserve to be abandoned and one of them is that boys are superior to girls. I know that, as a daughter, I am much more considerate to my family than my brother.

■ MANEKA GANDHI in Probe

● For the rebuilding of India it is necessary that interaction between the rulers and the ruled be restored and the former re-learn the art of listening.

■ DHARAMPAL, historian, in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● Everybody nowadays has become conscious of their rights and clamours for more. In the process, they have become more or less oblivious to their obligations.

■ JUSTICE A.N. SEN, chairman, Press Council, in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● The Akalis have been insistent on no reduction in the over 10 per cent Sikh representation in the army. By the same token, they should not be averse to a minority of over 40 per cent being given a larger representation in the Punjab Police than the present less than 20 per cent.

■ S.K. SINHA in The Statesman

● Maninder Singh's figures of 20.4-12-9-3, in which he employed extremely attacking fields and turned the ball on probably no more than two occasions, were considerably more mystifying than the Indian rope trick.

■ TREVOR BAILEY in Sunday Mail

● I know the craft of acting. I don't believe in skipping a bath for three days just because I have to play a Shudra.

■ SHASHI KAPOOR in Frontline

● It's awful staying alone when all your life you have been surrounded by people. There is such a vacuum in me. I get so frightened sometimes.

■ NADIRA in Stardust

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Non-stop to Europe.

Only Lufthansa can bring you 4 weekly flights from Delhi. And 4 weekly flights from Bombay. All bound for Frankfurt. All non-stop and all with arrival times designed to bring you the most convenient connections to Europe and North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE NEVER FORGET HOW IMPORTANT YOUR TIME IS.

You're a much sought-after, busy professional. And you kno what's behind this success: the value you attach to your time.

We never forget this. That's why we lay down a str standard for each and every service we offer you. For instance, your personal cheques must be encashe within 5 minutes flat. Your letters must be attended to within 48 hours.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078614

you kno
time.
yn a str
u.
encashe

But that's not all. We also control our service. With spot checks on every branch every 90 days. And with a special team of Service Inspectors sent in from London to double check once every 12 months.

You know how serious we are about your money. You can now also be sure that we value your time.

Personal Banking from

Grindlays Bank p.l.c.

angri Colle[illegible] Haridwa[illegible]

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Harmony! Isn't that what life's all about?"

"Harmony is essential. Even in the very clothes one wears. Gwalior Shirting's checks and stripes, soft pastel shades and more vibrant colours all blend perfectly with my kind of personality. And provide an ideal match for the super range of trouser materials from Gwalior Suiting. I recommend Gwalior Suiting and Shirting to every man who cares about what he wears!"

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

MAPP-GR-86-105

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KEYSTONE COPS

■ The Bombay police have a reputation for being dogged in their crusade against crime in the city, except they often wind up barking up the wrong tree. With the city's banking circles in something of a panic over the recent rash of bank robberies, police stations were naturally under pressure to bring the bandits to heel. Thus, when the police station at Andheri received a phone call at 3 a.m. from the manager of the United Western Bank, they swiftly moved into action. The manager, who lived in a flat above the bank premises, had said that he could hear peculiar noises emanating from the bank at that unearthly hour.

Thirty policemen armed with Sten guns and revolvers surrounded the bank while the officer-in-charge bravely opened the front door and in the best Clint Eastwood tradition, called upon the robbers to surrender. The sound of whimpering from inside the bank suggested that the bandits had caved in rather tamely. But when the intruder finally emerged, it turned out to be a mangy, flea-bitten pie dog that had been locked in by accident the previous evening. The sheepish cops holstered their weapons and returned to their crime-busting, with their tails between their legs.

LOVER'S KNOTS

■ Marriages may be made in heaven but where the bureaucracy is concerned, heaven can wait. Ask Shalin Parker, a freelance photographer who finally focussed on his soul-mate, a graphic designer, and decided to tie the nuptial knot in Delhi in a civil manner. But his path to bliss was strewn with bureaucratic roadblocks. At the Delhi marriage office, he was asked to produce his birth certificate even though his greying hair clearly proved his 'marriageability'. As he did not possess such a document, he was asked to get a radiology test certificate from a local government hospital.

Armed with a letter of introduction from an MP to the Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital, he met the medical superintendent who sent him to the Physical Examination Department. They shunted him along to the Radiology Department where the doctor asked him why he had come. After explaining his problem, she sent him back to the Physical Examination Department who returned him, on the verge of a nervous collapse, to the medical superintendent who advised him to go back to where else? The marriage office.

GHOST WRITERS

■ Grave issues have been raised recently concerning the eligibility of certain people appointed by the Uttar Pradesh School and Intermediate Board as examiners. Last month, the Vipin Behari Intercollege in Jhansi received an urgent telegram from the board's Allahabad office asking one of its teachers to rush to the centre where he had been appointed to invigilate an examination. The board was late—he had passed away quite peacefully ten years earlier. Barely a week later, another urgent missive arrived appointing another teacher as deputy head of the committee entrusted with finalising the maths papers. Again, the board was asking for a Lazarus-type miracle since the poor fellow had receded into history.

Undaunted, the board then trained its posthumous guns on its own doorstep where an Allahabad teacher was appointed as "examiner" to evaluate answer papers of this year's high school examination in the city. He too, by some fateful coincidence, was dead and buried some six years past. The only conclusion is that the board likes living in the past or has a macabre preference for ghost-written examination papers.

LIAR'S LAIR

■ With the annual summer hordes fanning out in all directions, animals in game sanctuaries are retiring to their lairs to escape the hordes. One wily guide at the Kaziranga Game Sanctuary in Assam, however, convinced a Bengali family that he would, for a little extra, show them rhinos and leopards since he knew every lair.

The only liar, of course, was him. Herding them onto elephant-back, he led them to a field of tall grass and pointing to a large and distant object in the middle, told them it was a rhino. The gullible, tourists happily clicked away. He then drew their attention to a bulge in a distant tree—a leopard!

The next day, the family informed some fellow tourists of their good fortune and offered to show them. On closer sight, however, the 'rhino' turned out to be a large boulder and the 'leopard' nothing more than a bulge in the tree trunk that could, with some stretching of the imagination, be said to resemble one. The redfaced family complained to officials but found that the guide had gone into hibernation—in the foxes lair no doubt.

—Compiled by DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How to get your dream past the blueprint stage

Often, bright business ideas get stuck at the dream stage.

Because, there seems no way out of the maze of problems that entrepreneurs encounter. Finance, Technical information, Confusing procedures.

Udyog Bandhu is your contact if your are setting up a medium/large sector project in U.P.

Udyog Bandhu is a unique two tier body consisting of

(a) A Bureau—to provide guidance, information and most important, liaison services to the entrepreneurs and

(b) A High Power Committee—to monitor clearance and sanctions for new projects by various departments, like the Directorate of Industries, Financial Institutions, Electricity Board etc. etc.

At Udyog Bandhu, things start looking up.

And dreams come true.

UDYOG BANDHU

Make use of our connections

UDYOG BANDHU
Chandra Bhanu Gupta Smarak Nav Chetna Kendra,
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001
Phones : 34615 , 31395 Cable : BANDHU Telex : 0535-274

Shems/UB/20

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOOKS ON YOGA, PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION
SOCIETY'S GOLDEN JUBILEE CONCESSION
From 1st July to 30th September 1986

◆ DISCOUNT ◆

25% on orders upto Rs. 100
30% on orders upto Rs. 300
35% on orders above Rs. 300

◆◆

SWAMI SIVANANDA

The Science of Yoga in 8 volumes—contains 24 titles covering a wide range of subjects—philosophical, cultural, educational, medical and mystical writings on the practice of Yoga. (P.B.) Full set ... Rs. 200

Sadhana—A Text-book on the psychology and practice of the techniques of spiritual perfection. (Board) ... Rs. 90

The Brihadaranyaka Upanishad—Sanskrit text, English translation and commentary. (Board) ... Rs. 80

The Principal Upanishads—Eight classical Upanishads with Sanskrit text, meaning, notes and commentary in English. (Board) ... Rs. 60

Bliss Divine—86 Self-containing essays covering all aspects of the life spiritual.

Practice of Yoga—A general introduction to the foundations of Yoga and effective guide to students of Yoga. (P.B.) ... Rs. 40

Yoga Samhita—Contains presentations on a variety of themes on a vast area of subjects in philosophy, religion and spiritual Sadhana. (Board) ... Rs. 40

Mind—Its Mysteries and Control—The psychology of the Inner man, and its applicability in every-day life. (P.B.) ... Rs. 45

Concentration and Meditation—A through-going exposition of the intricacies of Concentration and Meditation. (P.B.) ... Rs. 35

Kingly Science, Kingly Secret—A pragmatic commentary on select verses of Srimad Bhadavadgita. A guide book on spiritual practice and a 'must' for every spiritual seeker. (P.B.) ... Rs. 30

Health and Happiness—A detailed and comprehensive presentation of the fundamental laws of health and hygiene which could provide a key to real happiness. (P.B.) ... Rs. 25

◆◆

And more than 50 titles on subjects like Metaphysics, Psychology, Yoga, Education, Religion, Health, ect.

◆◆

50% advance with orders. Packing/postage extra. Catalogue available Free. Please mention 'INDIA TODAY' while ordering.

THE DIVINE LIFE SOCIETY
THE SIVANANDA PUBLICATION LEAGUE
P.O. SHIVANANDANAGAR-249192. RISHIKESH—U.P.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

An Escalating Crisis

LAST fortnight, Punjab seemed headed for a new crunch. Surjit Singh Barnala's Government stood isolated and weak after new complications arose on the vexatious issue of the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab. Its diminishing strength also raised doubts on the survival of the Rajiv-Longowal accord which had, less than a year ago, promised to bring permanent peace to Punjab. On the contrary now, violence in the state had even crossed the heights scaled in the pre-bluestar period. Worse it had spilled into the streets as communal mob violence giving a frightful dimension to the perennial crisis forcing the Government to devise a new security plan for the state. To gauge the crisis INDIA TODAY Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA visited the trouble-spots in the state for a week. His report:

THE LOSS of weight shows even on his tall, wiry, frame. The flowing, bushy beard fails to camouflage the deepening furrows on his gaunt face. There is even a persistent and exaggerated tremor to his hands, the hands that hold the reins of the most strife-torn part of the country today.

Surjit Singh Barnala, the chief minister of Punjab is today lonely and more or less friendless in a hostile world, fighting for survival simultaneously on four fronts: against party dissidents, terrorists, against the distrust of the minorities and now against the Central Government.

The fourth front was opened last fortnight after new, daunting complications arose on the territorial issues between Punjab and Haryana, threatening the very basis of the Rajiv Gandhi-Longowal accord. "The Centre has given a most tragic twist to the whole negotiation process," he complained, while announcing his cabinet's decision to repudiate the formation of the Justice Desai panel to decide the territories to be transferred to Haryana from Punjab, in lieu of Chandigarh. He more or less agreed with the suggestion that, with this the spirit of the Rajiv-Longowal accord had perished and the dissidents wore "we told you so" grins. Said a triumphant Parkash Singh Badal: "I had predicted this at Anandpur Sahib after Sant Longowal signed the accord. See how correct I was." Coming in the wake of a steep increase in terrorism and the migration of the minorities from the state, this change had escalated the crisis.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Barnala with Balwant Singh: increasing isolation

Along with a steep increase in terrorism and the migration of the minorities from the state, this new mood of confrontation had escalated the crisis to new heights and put the future of the Rajiv-Longowal accord in the shade.

Indications of the shape of things to come had, in fact, been available even the previous evening as Barnala continued his frantic discussions with the prime minister. He was away in Delhi for his second meeting, when the remaining members of his cabinet called an impromptu meeting where tempers flew high. Some ministers even drew kirpans out of their scabbards, and waving these, angrily shouted that Punjab did not need Chandigarh. "Why should we put this dead snake round our necks? Let the Centre give us Rs 200 crore and we will build our own capital at Ranjitgarh (in central Punjab)," shouted a minister. The others argued that it will be political suicide for the Akali Dal to convince their Jat following that 70,000 acres of land is a worthwhile price for a small city. "The Jat, it is said, willingly gives a lump of jaggery but try and take away even one sugarcane stick from his farm and he will give his life. The same is true of his reaction to giving away 70,000 acres of land in place of a few villages," explained another irate minister.

By midnight, it was clear to Barnala that there was no

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

way his cabinet was going to accept the bargain. Fortunately for him, the escape route was provided by none else than the Centre which, almost quixotically decided to set up a commission and asked it to give its findings within 18 hours. "Nothing could be more ridiculous or a greater insult of the judiciary," said Barnala. Added Finance Minister Balwant Singh: "There is communalism in the Home Ministry bureaucracy. If you want to solve our problem, just put the entire Home Ministry on a ship and sink it in the Indian Ocean."

The confrontation had changed the political scenario in the state drastically and had put into shade the very survival of the Rajiv-Longowal accord and the Barnala Government. For two months since former chief minister Parkash Singh Badal led the exodus of dissidents from his party, Barnala has been heading a minority government (with a strength of 47 in a house of 117 sustained on the support of the Congress(I). Now he was threatened with the loss of even this oxygen vent. In Delhi, senior Congress(I) leaders were now inclined to blame him for the virtual failure of the accord. Accusing him of turning his back on the Desai panel under pressure from his cabinet colleagues, Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh told INDIA TODAY: "The terms of reference (of the Desai panel) were drawn in consultation with him. He accepted the panel. But obviously people in his government are not supporting him on this." (see interview)

In Chandigarh the Akali dissidents attacked him for "failing to achieve anything despite being a court-jester in the Delhi durbar". For the dissidents this was their best chance to pull down Barnala. Said Amarinder Singh, former agriculture minister: "As far as the Sikhs are concerned Barnala does not exist any more. He is dead either way, whether he goes along with the Centre or confronts it." It was obvious that the dissident group now wants to ride the anti-Centre populism in the state, something Barnala had so far eschewed doing. Said former education minister Sukhjinder Singh, reflecting the dissident Akali mind: "Mr Barnala is a decent person but he forgot the basic fact that for us Sikhs, the real Akali Dal is one that fights the Centre. They do not bother whether it is led by a Sajan Singh or Bhajan Singh." Now, however, Barnala was in real danger of falling into the same trap of seeking confrontation to safeguard his political entity.

BHAWAN SINGH

Badal (right) and Amarinder Singh: gunning for Barnala

In Chandigarh efforts have begun to achieve that elusive commodity in Akali politics called panthic unity. The dissident leaders wear 'we-told-you-so' smiles. In Barnala's discomfiture they see their best chance of a good bargain.

Whether he does it or not will be clear in the coming fortnight, but in Chandigarh the political grapevine was abuzz with rumours of fresh efforts to achieve that elusive commodity in Akali politics called panthic unity. While Barnala finally admitted that he found himself weaker in the absence of "my old friends who left me at such a crucial time" (see interview), the dissidents saw in his discomfiture their best chance of getting a good bargain out of him. Accordingly they were demanding a high price: party presidentship for Badal, Barnala's resignation from chief ministership and, to top it all, a complete repudiation of the Rajiv Gandhi-Longowal accord by the Akali Dal. "We are not trying to destroy the country or the Akali Dal. We want to remove this government of two ministers and their gunmen," argued Sukhjinder Singh. The mediators, however, were unsure of finalising anything unless Barnala found himself in an entirely hopeless situation.

That situation can only arise in two events. The first is if the dissident campaign to woo Balwant Singh away from the Barnala camp succeeds. Over the past few days, Amarinder Singh has broadly hinted that his group would not mind accepting Balwant Singh as the new chief minister as long as he set up a high-level political affairs committee within the party to take major decisions. On the face of it, Balwant Singh dismisses it all as "a campaign to create a rift within our party", but high-level Akali sources confirm that last week he had secretly met Sukhjinder Singh to discuss terms for unity.

Barnala, thus is truly cornered now, hunted at home and hated outside where most people blame him for turning his back on the question of territories transfer. And yet the pity is that among the Akali leadership, he is the only one with a strong-enough commitment to fight the terrorist menace, a case of the right person being in the right place at the wrong time.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"He is an absolutely decent man, too decent for his own good. But now he has been used and reduced into a sacrificial goat," laments Lt-General Gurbachan Singh Buch (Retd.), president, Punjab Sikh Forum.

Late last week, however, Barnala showed more political guile than his detractors credit him. He succesfully countered the first challenge to his existence in the Rajya Sabha poll—where the dissidents had been expecting substantial cross-voting from his group in favour of Simranjit Singh Mann, the sacked IPS officer now under detention. But the next challenge is not far away. It could come on July 15, when the Desai panel gives its report or on virtually any other day when the Centre, harried by increasing violence, gives in to the demand of calling in the army, an alternative to which Barnala has frequently expressed opposition. Either way he will be under pressure to return to the old phase of confrontation.

S.S. BARNALA

"I don't want the army"

HIS IS the hottest of all hot seats in the country today. Threatened by the extremists from one flank and by the dissidents on the other, Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala is waging a lonely battle. In an interview with Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA, frequently interrupted by messengers who trooped in with news agency flashes from the secretariat teleprinter on fresh violence, he answered a wide range of questions on the challenges before his government. Excerpts:

Q. Haven't things worsened for you politically since you took over?

A. There is one big difference in that many of my friends have left me. To that extent we are weaker. Once you have a lesser strength in the Assembly, you depend on others and you go down in their eyes. It is always possible, of course, that my friends did not have the courage or the nerve to face the wrath of the extremists.

Q. Are you trying to bring these people back to the party?

A. The problem is, they only want my chair. But I hope they soon begin to realise that it is not possible. They have gone to the masses to try and get a denunciation against me but failed.

Q. Is it true that some of them have links with the extremists?

A. They think that by speaking the extreme language, they will save their lives. Did you hear what Tohra said at the Golden Temple the other day? (He said that if God did not take Barnala away, one of his proud sons would.) What harm have I done to him? For 14 years he was the head of the SGPC and now he was unable to even go and pray at the Harmandir Sahib. I at least made it possible for him to go there and deliver a speech. Is that my crime?

Q. What went wrong with the accord this time?

A. That is the question to which I deserve an answer. When I talk to the prime minister, he sounds forthcoming and sincere. But something goes wrong at the last moment. This time they came up with this outrageous idea of asking a judge to give his verdict within a few hours and that was a most tragic twist to the whole process of reconciliation. It really was so humiliating to be told that a judge was now going to solve the whole problem by doing something overnight.

Q. But one impression is that you first agreed to the formation of the commission and then backed out.

> "The prime minister was sincere but it was humiliating that a judge was now going to solve the problem overnight."
> SURJIT SINGH BARNALA
> chief minister, Punjab

A. When I had my last meeting with the prime minister this never came up. But suddenly in the evening we got a copy of the Government of India resolution announcing the formation of the commission. We had to move fast or we would have been faced with a fait accompli in the morning. So I flew to Delhi and told the prime minister that we had waited for Chandigarh for over 20 years. Now if there was another fortnight's delay, it wouldn't be such a calamity. But again they disappointed us by setting terms of reference for the Desai panel that left us completely baffled.

Q. Is it so that some of your people don't want Chandigarh now?

A. No, not really. The problem, let me tell you, is that everybody wants Chandigarh. But nobody wants to pay the price for it; 70,000 acres of land is, in any case, a stiff price.

Q. Do you agree that the law and order in Punjab has worsened?

A. I do not suffer from the illusion that there could be a quick solution to the Punjab problem. But the violence is overstated. The terrorists are on the run after the loss of their base in the Golden Temple. Many of their important leaders have been nabbed. The intelligence is giving us fairly good information now and we are better equipped in terms of communication, firepower and motivation.

Q. Now that you yourself are waging a battle against these people, don't you think that the demand for the release of the Sikh detenus in Jodhpur and elsewhere is misplaced?

A. On the other hand that may just help matters. I know this personally because, as a lawyer, I have even gone and defended the people in Jodhpur jail. Most of them are innocent people who had nothing to do with extremism. They should be released.

Q. Even Simranjit Singh Mann?

A. Yes. He has been in the jail for more than two years now. If no case is made out against him he is entitled to release.

Q. Do you foresee having to call in the army in near future?

A. The army, I am afraid, is no solution to the Punjab problem. The trouble with the army is that they only know how to kill and that means trouble. If the army comes people will run helter-skelter in fear and many will cross the borders again. Also, terrorists will leave Amritsar and Gurdaspur, go to other districts and kill people there. I don't want the army. They were here and did not do very much. In fact they are responsible for creating the current situation.

Q. Do you still expect things to take a turn for the better?

A. These are difficult times. But I am not afraid. I pray a lot, keep my cool and hope for better times.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Amritsar's Hall Bazaar under curfew

A State Of Desolation

NO LONGER does death in Punjab flow only from the barrel of the extremist Sten-gun. In a state where, till recently, Sikhs and Hindus used to jointly help the victims of terrorist attacks, they are suddenly turning at each other's throats, giving a fresh fillip to the migration of the minorities. And with the growing communalism inevitably leading to tension between the paramilitary forces and the local constabulary, the Punjab Government and the Centre were forced to recast their strategy to effectively combat the terrorists.

A new communal monster now stalks the once lively plains of Punjab, reducing them to a frightful state of desolation. The evidence of the new threat lies scattered all over. Communal clashes have broken out recently in Patiala, Ludhiana, Jalandhar, Nakodar, Batala and Amritsar, towns where curfew has become a part of life. Amritsar remained under curfew continuously for over 96 hours, beating even the 66-hour record set during Operation Bluestar. The death toll in streetside stabbings and clashes last fortnight was just four but there was enormous destruction of property and a clear schism was emerging between the two communities in the cities where Hindus are generally in majority. And as Shiv Sena activists went out on rampage against the Sikhs each time there was a terrorist strike, communal poison also spilled to the villages, where Sikhs were increasingly inclined to help terrorists. The same divide had also helped the Khalistan campaign become a movement among the Jat Sikhs in the sensitive districts of Amritsar and Gurdaspur.

In this complicated scenario, extremism acquired an entirely new edge. Last fortnight, terrorists hiding in the wastelands along the Ravi river fired at a low-flying helicopter of the BSF. And though the airborne security men killed two of the terrorists with a light machine-gun and grenades, the message, that the men sneaking in from Pakistan were now bolder than before, was not lost on anyone. The terrorists were now operating in strength and with a sense of purpose. Killings were followed by widespread "orders" from loudspeakers mounted on vans. The extremists' main objective is to push Hindus out of the state so that it could lead to anti-Sikh riots outside, setting off a Sikh migration. From their point of view, fear in Punjab and outside is the key to Khalistan and they were using both the bullet and psychological warfare to achieve that objective.

The terrorists' mastery of psychological warfare is displayed with rustic ruthlessness in Tarn Taran, the Amritsar subdivision that terrorists claim to be Khalistan territory. The catchword for fear here is jaago aayee (wake up, your death has come), a chorus used with deadly effect in a series of supposedly-devotional songs available on cheap cassette tapes. These have several lines praising Bhindranwale and his cohorts punctuated with the invocation of jaago aayee said in a deadpan, menacing rhythm.

For the village Hindu, it is a bloodcurdling chant. In several passenger buses plying in the region, the tape has replaced age-old favourites, the bawdy drivers' lyrics. Admits a fearful resident of a village near Tarn Taran: "We have learnt to live with it in buses, melas and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The bombardment of the minority mind is unrelenting. Most Hindus receive threatening letters and phone calls and the policemen have a tough time persuading them not to flee dhabas. But once you hear it in your village gurudwara or from a vehicle mounted with a loudspeaker, it is time to pack up your boxes and leave."

The bombardment of the minority mind is unrelenting. Most well-to-do Hindus of the region receive threatening letters and phone calls. They pay outrageous amounts of money as tribute to the terrorists. In the sprawling gurudwara at Tarn Taran, a room proudly displays the signboard of the "Khalistan Commando Force". The blackboard kept alongside reads out the message of terror in stark relief: the names of people who still owe "tax", scribbled in white chalk. Last week the CRPF finally entered the shrine to arrest 17 youngsters from the room amid protests from gurudwara leaders.

Sikhs in several localities of Hindu-dominated cities live in a similar fear. In Amritsar's Krishna Nagar, where 12 Hindus were killed in a terrorist raid in May, a large number of Sikhs have left for the safety of Sikh-dominated localities. Sikhs also felt the vengeful wrath of Hindus in Nakodar (pop: 35,000) near Amritsar, where a number of Sikh shops and houses were ransacked by Shiv Sena hordes after the terrorist firing last fortnight that left over 15 persons injured.

The Hindu frustration is now finding a new expression in Punjab. Says Anil, a young activist of the Hindu Shiv Sena in Nakodar: "What can we Hindus do except to try and save our lives when the prime minister of the country does not have the time from planting trees ?" But the Shiv Sena people are themselves doing no good to the cause of their nation or even the community. They do not even go out to help the rural Hindu families which have shifted to the cities. On the other hand, they make lives of the village Hindu, a hopeless minority, even more insecure.

WITH the day-and-night vigil that security men have to keep, they are inevitably becoming edgy and trigger-happy. The sad fact was startlingly evident in several incidents last fortnight. Near Dera Baba Nanak in the Gurdaspur sector, an ambush party of the BSF fired, even without shouting a warning, at one of its own patrols that had happened to stray into the region. Two men died. In Chandigarh, a Hindu lawyer had an altercation in his house with a young Sikh client and began to shout that a terrorist had come to kill him. The panicky youngster fled and was shot by the guard at the adjoining house.

But both these incidents pale into comparison with the one at village Rupewal near Nakodar in the Jalandhar district where the death of Joginder Singh, a prosperous Jat farmer, and his son, Balwant, brought over 10,000 angry villagers into the streets and made the Punjab Police register a case of murder against nine CRPF jawans. It all started when Bachna, a Harijan, bought six watermelons for Rs 5 from Joginder Singh's farm, but on his way out, tried to filch two more. Joginder Singh's son Balwant caught him and gave him a sound thrashing. Bachna first went to the police station at Shahkot, 8 km away, but when the policemen dismissed his injuries as minor, he made for the nearby CRPF post and complained that he and the other Hindus in the village had been beaten up by Sikh terrorists hiding there.

In a fit of over-zeal, the CRPF sent a nine-man patrol to the village. "They came shouting abuses and beat up all of us," says Charan Kaur, Joginder Singh's widow. In the altercation that followed, the CRPF men shot Joginder Singh and his son. The incident caused widespread resentment as villagers refused to cremate the bodies till action was taken against the CRPF men. The Punjab Police promptly registered a case of murder against them.

Fresh evidence of the growing distrust between the CRPF and the predominantly

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sikh Punjab Police—an inevitable fallout of the growing communal divide—came from Amritsar where personnel of the CRPF and Punjab Police openly clashed on the streets. After the Punjab Police openly accused the CRPF of "murdering" Harminder Singh Shammi, a small-time Sikh leader who, they claim, was carrying a revolver and had defied their road-block, a CRPF patrol on the same day angrily protested when a police party fired indiscriminately in the predominantly Hindu Katra Dullo locality. When a Punjab Police officer fired at the CRPF, a hand-to-hand scuffle ensued. Later in the day, the Punjab Police registered a case against the CRPF patrol for dacoity. They in turn filed a similar first information report.

The developments caused immediate consternation in the Union Home Ministry. The directors-general of Punjab Police and the CRPF were immediately rushed to Amritsar, where they held a joint durbar of the two forces. The rift, however, did serve a useful purpose. It gave an impetus to the finalisation of a new security plan for the region, which was being debated in the corridors of North Block for several days. Under the plan, law and order in the region will be handled under a unified command. In Amritsar, for example, Superintendent of Police S.S. Virk, an officer from the Maharashtra cadre like Ribeiro, has been promoted and appointed the deputy inspector general of the CRPF. The Government also inducted K.P.S. Gill, an Assam cadre officer, as the inspector-general of the CRPF in the district heading the unified command of the state police and paramilitary forces. A similar move is planned for Gurdaspur. Besides, Ribeiro has been appointed ex-officio director-general of police for the 60,000-strong CRPF and BSF units in Punjab.

The hope is that the unified command will help dilute distrust between the two forces. Also it will make for more coordinated working. But the change will also have to be accompanied by a new, firm perspective plan. "Our effort so far has been based on knee-jerk reactions. This is sheer waste," said an officer, adding: "Operating like this amounts to what the Punjabis would call goo wich lathi marna (banging your lathi in horse-shit)."

In Delhi as well as in Chandigarh several new plans were being discussed. Said an officer: "Now it is a state of insurgency and the Government has finally decided to tackle the terrorism before thinking of political solutions." Consequently, the Centre has told the state that resources will not be a constraint. Punjab is to shortly take delivery of 60 new Maruti Gypsies fitted with wireless sets, apart from new arms. Besides, the army has been asked to release a large number of Jonga patrol vehicles, which are sturdier and faster than Jeeps. This will be followed by helicopters for surveillance and pursuit.

Police Chief Ribeiro believes that his forces have succeeded in their first task of engaging and drawing the terrorists into combat.

ON A long-term basis, Home Ministry planners are considering the proposal to give the CRPF and BSF jawans the ordinary police powers of search and arrest, besides substantially increasing the number of police stations. It has also been decided that Amritsar district, which includes the holy city with its one million fractious people and over 1,300 villages, is too unwieldy to be managed by a single police chief. Accordingly, a new police district will be created for Tarn Taran and later for Batala in Gurdaspur.

The Government will wait for the outcome of this effort before considering army deployment. At the moment that alternative is not even being contemplated. Barnala is strongly opposed to calling out the army (see interview). The army itself, smarting under the impact of the post-Bluestar desertions, is not too keen to do a repeat of Operation Shop, the code-name for the highly unpopular clean-up campaign in the Punjab countryside after June 1984. Also, experts dispute the hypothesis that the army will be able to bring back normalcy. They argue that the army, which operates in large number and with exaggerated firepower, will have the anaesthetic effect of a shot of morphine rather than be a remedy. "The army," said an officer, "could at best stay in that strength for six to eight months and once it goes, terrorists will raise their heads again."

It has even been suggested in some security circles that in case it is considered unavoidable to use expertise and manpower from the army, a certain number of troops and officers could be taken on deputation in the CRPF or the BSF. The precedent is the appointment of an army brigadier as the IG of police in Mizoram in the tumultuous mid-70s. "Armymen operating in khaki is the best way of using them without causing any fresh feelings against the olive-green," said a BSF officer in Gurdaspur.

That these options are even being discussed now is an indication of the increased concern about the situation. Last fortnight when Barnala talked of declaring a "total war" on terrorism, he was underlining his admission of the fait accompli of having to fight terrorists bullet-for-bullet without expecting a quick return to peace.

Some indication of the new resolve was available last fortnight as a combined BSF and Punjab Police patrol killed three dreaded terrorists, including Baba Ranjit Singh, one of the top 10 terrorists in Punjab, and the Punjab Police in Amritsar arrested Avtar Singh, the officiating chief of the Babbar Khalsa group. Four of the 38 names on the police hit list of top terrorists have now been accounted for. Almost immediately, Ribeiro recommended a promotion for the commander of the BSF party, offered to induct him in Punjab Police and ensured that the cash reward of Rs 1 lakh for the policemen was paid out in a record 48 hours.

Ribeiro believes that his forces have succeeded in their first task, of at least engaging the terrorists and drawing them into combat. In his scheme of things, pressure from the unified command will lead to more such encounters, draw the terrorists out to attack the security forces and give his men the chance to hit back. But, unfortunately, this will mark the onset of not peace but of the more conventional insurgency which could only mean that the next chapter in the state's violent history will also be written in Indian blood.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

The Rajiv Sabha

IF IT was an attempt to fill the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party with those loyal to him personally, then Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi scored a clean victory over virtually everybody else in the party last fortnight. As the countdown for the election of 45 new Rajya Sabha members began, it was evident that most of the 30 Congress(I) candidates, who were assured of their victory, owed their selection only to the party president and to nobody else.

Once the decision to show the door to those of doubtful loyalty to the party supremo was taken, the axe fell indiscriminately on 21 of the 30 retiring Congress(I) members. In the process the political careers of several luminaries were abruptly jeopardised—including the AICC(I) Working President, Kamalapati Tripathi, Secretary of the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party J.K. Jain, and a former president of INTUC, N.K. Bhatt, all of whom were denied renomination. Also unexpectedly dropped was AICC(I) Treasurer Sitaram Kesri, a veteran of 16 years' standing in the Rajya Sabha, on the plea that he was overaged and was needed for party work.

While the party's bigwigs fell like ninepins, they were replaced in most cases, barring that doyen of administrators L.K. Jha, by upcoming safari-suited young men and well-educated women with savvy in their 30s. As many as eight of the 30 party nominees are in this age group. In fact, the average age of the 30 Congress(I) nominees was less than 43, as against over 50 during Mrs Gandhi's regime.

And when the party workers left for their states after the nominations had been decided, it was clear that none of the chief ministers, Union Cabinet ministers, PCC(I) chiefs or local power-brokers could claim that they were able to influence the selection of any of the 30 candidates finally approved by the Congress (I) Parliamentary Board (CPB) in which Rajiv and his own collection of data had played a decisive role. Said Raghunandan Lal Bhatia, one of the AICC(I) general secretaries: "It was a well-thought-out decision to give representation to young and professional Congress(I) workers who can be expected to make a useful contribution to the debates in the Rajya Sabha. And age is no limitation for that kind of job." Added Arjun Singh, AICC(I) vice-president: "Their selection was done after careful examination of their track record and their capacity to meet the challenges ahead for us."

Obviously the selection process was tailored to meet the challenge to Rajiv from within the party. For the first time, the CPB did not lay down any guidelines for the selection of its Rajya Sabha nominees. The high command allowed the PCC(I)'s from the eight states—Rajasthan, Bihar, Tamil Nadu, Uttar Pradesh, Orissa, Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh and Punjab—to collect applications for filling the vacancies in the Upper House. The PCC(I)'s received over a thousand applications for the 30 seats and over 100 applications were received by the AICC(I) directly but a majority of those selected were from the latter lot.

BHAWAN SINGH

The selection process was tailored to face the challenge to Rajiv from within the party...

Not surprisingly, the two meetings of the CPB at the prime minister's residence were a bit of a formality. All the chief ministers and the PCC(I) chiefs landed there unaware of the fact that the decisions had already been taken and they had been summoned only to sign on the dotted line. Admitted a dejected chief minister who was unable to get any of his nominees included in the list of candidates from his state: "All the names suggested by us were rejected on one ground or the other. We had no alternative but to accept the names suggested to us because we had nothing against them. After all, they had been chosen by the prime minister after careful scrutiny."

The only qualification that mattered was loyalty to Rajiv. Once that was ensured nothing else seemed to matter—not inexperience in contesting elections or failure in recent polls or even a sullied image. The prime minister and his aides had done their homework well in advance so that even as the members of the CPB sat flipping through numerous applications, the Prime Minister's Secretariat was getting in touch with the potential candidates directly. It was in response to summons from the Prime Minister's Secretariat that over a dozen candidates were flown into the capital on the day of the CPB meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jayanthi Natarajan, a 34-year-old advocate and TNYC(I) general secretary, was pulled out of a court hearing in Madras by the local police and put in the executive class of the first available flight to Delhi. In the capital she was received by TNYC(I) President Thangabalu, driven to the prime minister's office at 10.30 p.m. and told about her nomination to the Rajya Sabha, given to her in the teeth of opposition by the seniormost AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar.

Ballav Patnaik did not have a clue of what was happening in his state. He reluctantly gave his nod when the name was brought for approval in the CPB meeting.

Similar surprises were in store for other chief ministers too. For example, Madhya Pradesh Chief Minister Moti Lal Vora had a list of over 100 candidates, including veterans like former chief minister Govind Narain Singh, former minister K.P. Singh and even J.K.Jain, but he Khatoon, 37, even withdrew quietly from Congress politics during the Janata regime to "improve her educational qualifications". Said Thakur: "I am personally indebted to Rajivji for giving me the chance to do something for the party under his leadership." Added Khatoon: "Rajivji has shown great respect to women belonging to the minority community by choosing me for such a responsibility."

In Bihar and Uttar Pradesh too, the

NOMINATED

L.K. Jha

Jayanthi Natarajan

Satish Sharma

Kalpnath Rai

Saeeda Khatoon

S.S. Thakur

She was on board the flight to Madras next morning to be in time for filing her nomination. A granddaughter of former chief minister Bhaktavatsalam, she had never fought an election earlier and joined the party only two years ago. Said an exultant Natarajan: "The Rajya Sabha ticket came as a surprise to me as well. My selection is entirely due to the prime minister."

In Orissa also, a similarly dramatic operation was carried out by AICC(I) Joint Secretary Tara Devi, who flew in a special plane to Bhubaneswar to inform Sushila Tiriya, again a general secretary of the state Youth Congress(I) —and a tribal— to file her nomination for one of the three seats from Orissa. Chief Minister Janaki was handed over a list which had unexpected names like state Youth Congress(I) chief Surinder Singh Thakur and Saeeda Khatoon, a former Youth Congress(I) worker. In addition, Captain Satish Sharma, a former Indian Airlines colleague of the prime minister who quit his job in 1983 and has been looking after Amethi, was also foisted on the state.

...Most of the 30 Congress(I) candidates owed their selection only to the party president.

While Sharma has never fought an election, both Thakur and Khatoon were defeated in the last assembly elections.

chief ministers were totally ignored. While L.K. Jha was chosen to replace Sita Ram Kesri, Surinder Singh Ahluwalia, a nonentity in local politics and a rich trader was selected, ignoring the claims of many senior and loyal party workers. Ahluwalia's claim for a ticket was that he was one of the few Sikh leaders who had supported Operation Bluestar and has been in close touch with Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh.

In the process of locating loyalists, even the oft-trumpeted criterion of a clean image was forgotten. Mahendra Prashad, one of the six party candidates to lose in the last Lok Sabha election in Bihar and known as "King Mahendra" in the state for his strong-arm tactics, was renomi-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

43, Dickenson Road (Road Opp. Webb's Garage), Bangalore 560 042 Tel: 578718/578452 Open: Mon - Sat 10.30am – 1pm & 2.30pm – 7.30pm
92, G.N.Chetty Road (Opp. Vani Mahal) T. Nagar, Madras 600 017 Tel: 441192 Open: Mon - Sat 10am – 1pm & 2.30pm – 7.30pm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even people who are not interested in computers are making it a point to visit Computer Point.

Businessmen are visiting it because they're curious about what a computer can do for them.

Entrepreneurs are visiting it because they think it's the right place to get to know computers.

Students and children are visiting it because they find our range of computer books and magazines an educational experience.

Computer Point has everything for everybody who's interested in computers — and for everybody who's not!

Our professionals talk your language, not Basic or Cobol. And if you want to buy a computer right away, you'll find our prices very, very attractive and our delivery schedules a pleasant surprise!

Come in today and see India's first computer supermarket for yourself.

We'll give you a free demonstration. Make programs to show you. Give you free advice. Even help you choose a computer for yourself. And should you want software, consumables, accessories or anything — you don't have to go anywhere else!

Even if computers are not what you're thinking of, you can't come to a better place than Computer Point.

Because, while everyone else looks at your needs from their angle, we see your point of view!

COMPUTER POINT

We see your point of view!

Sista's-CP-1361

DON'T BE A PARTNER IN SOFTWARE PIRACY

BUY GENUINE

227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025 Tel: 4936716/4930543 Open: Mon - Sat 10.30am – 1pm & 2.30pm – 7.30pm

F-41, South Extension Part I, New Delhi 110 049 Tel: 624370 Open: Mon - Sat 10am – 1.30pm & 2.30pm – 7pm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

nated for the second time as the party's fifth candidate from Bihar. The ruling party can win only four candidates on the basis of its own strength but it allotted its surplus votes to Prashad, known to be close to Makhan Lal Fotedar.

In Uttar Pradesh too, Kalpnath Rai, who is hardly known for his clean image, was able to secure a second nomination for himself. In 1980, he was chosen for the Rajya Sabha by Sanjay Gandhi even after losing the Lok Sabha election and was subsequently made a minister in the Union Cabinet. Considered to be a close associate of R.K. Dhawan, he was dropped from the Cabinet for his controversial dealings as a minister. Rai has been a most vocal and outspoken dissident but according to a party insider, he got the nod because he personally assured the prime minister that henceforth he would stand by him.

Similarly, in Maharashtra also, none of the nominees of Chief Minister S.B. Chavan or ex-chief minister Vasantrao Patil or even state party chief Prabha Rau were favoured with a ticket. Instead, the three fresh candidates the party chose were all those who—unlike the aforementioned trio—had stayed with the party from the very beginning. In fact, the selection of the Nanded journalist, Suryakanta Patil, and Chandrapur district chief Naresh Pugalia was a rebuff to Chavan and Rau, respectively, as Patil and Pugalia are known to belong to factions opposed to them.

DROPPED

K.P. Tripathi

S.R. Kesri

J.K. Jain

The party nominations—centralised and based on no other criterion other than loyalty to Rajiv—expectedly drew flak. Ram Dhan, AICC(I) general secretary, sent in his resignation from the post in a letter he shot off to Rajiv the day after the CPB meeting, taking objection to the fact that no new Harijan candidates were nominated from Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. Ram Dhan's dissatisfaction with the nominees was shared—though for different reasons—most acutely by Bihar's leaders. Even Kamalapati Tripathi, who himself lost Rajya Sabha nomination, joined Ram Dhan when he made a public statement that more Harijans and tribals should have been selected for the Upper House. But Arjun Singh refuted the charge of Harijans being ignored. Said Singh: "If we look at the selection nationally and not statewise then this charge is baseless."

The nomination of "outsiders" has always been resented by local units and Bihar was particularly unfortunate this time round. Three of the party's candidates—Jha, Ahluwalia, and C.P. Thakur, a Delhi University lecturer who came into contact with Rajiv during the latter's days as general secretary of the party—though technically Biharis, only nominally belong to that state. None of them have been politically active in Bihar. Manorama Pandey was renominated for the fourth ticket and the surplus votes for the fifth seat were given to the controversial leader, Mahendra Prashad, thus shutting out any fresh faces. Expressing the general feeling, a senior MP known to be close to Rajiv confessed: "Old-time Congress workers have got nothing and there is great demoralisation in the rank and file."

As party leaders nursed their bruised egoes, one thing became clear: the Rajya Sabha nominations are only the latest evidence of Rajiv Gandhi's desire to shape the party and the Government the way he wants it. And this is not a recent trend. Of the 50 nominations given by the party when the Rajya Sabha elections last took place in March 1984, as many as 10 were Rajiv's favourites. The Congress(I)'s direction is clear, but not so the quality or impact of the emerging Rajiv Sabha.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with bureau reports

UTTAR PRADESH

Fires of Hate

THE SMOKE had barely settled over riot-torn Barabanki in eastern Uttar Pradesh last fortnight, when another communal conflagration erupted in Allahabad, leaving four dead and scores injured. The city of Motilal and Jawaharlal Nehru—which had survived for the last six years as an oasis of peaceful communal coexistence—was plunged suddenly into a nightmare of chaos and dusk-to-dawn curfews as police grappled with mobs to restore law and order.

In Barabanki (INDIA TODAY, June 15) the authorities were able to make a convincing case that the riots were the handiwork of criminals and smugglers who converted a communal conflict, arising from the Babri Masjid controversy, to their advantage in order to embarrass the district administration. In Allahabad, while it is difficult to prove that criminals were behind the mayhem, it is quite evident that there was an element of careful planning and coordination behind the riots. The timing—on June 14—was a little too perfect to be dismissed as merely a coincidence. On that day, the entire district administration including the district magistrate, the additional district magistrate, the superintendent of police, the senior superintendent of police and even the station house officer were on leave. Police protection for the city had dwindled to a minimum because the bulk of the force had been transferred temporarily to Varanasi for the prime minister's visit. And on the night of June 14 when mobs clashed with the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC), there was a power black-out throughout the city. This was followed by simultaneous bomb blasts in five different localities. According to police sources, 50 country-made bombs were lobbed.

What sparked off the arson, looting and bombing were nails driven into the wall of a mosque by a shopkeeper who was constructing an adjoining wall. The mosque was a more or less deserted monument in the Patthar Gali of the Nakkas Kona area in the thickly populated section of the walled city. It was built, not by any Muslim emperor, but by Bega Bai, a prostitute. It is situated in the Hindu populated area, a stone's throw from the Muslim mohallas.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Communal passions began to run high when mobs gathered to demand that the construction of the wall be stopped. A police officer in the area was in the process of negotiating a settlement between the two factions when an explosion shattered the air. That was all that was needed to trigger off clashes between the two communities in which shops were looted and burned. Said shopkeeper Ram Parshad: "This was definitely a pretext to aggravate the already communally surcharged atmosphere in the city simmering since the Ram Janmabhoomi issue."

Only a small police party assisted by some PAC men was on duty under the charge of a circle officer. It became the target of brickbatting from the streets as well as from rooftops. With senior officials on leave and little or no reinforcements in sight, the occasion seemed tailor-made for trouble-makers. Quickly, the clashes spread to Mirpur, and Tulsipur— localities as far away as 2 km from the Beka Bai mosque—an indication, the police said, of planning.

T. Tripathi, DIG (Kanpur range), said that an investigation has already been launched into charges that the riots were pre-planned. He said that crude bombs were used by rioters to "scare away the masses and with the intention to incite communal fervour". Added Director-General of Police D.K. Aggarwal: "In essence it was not a communal riot. There was a lot of pent-up frustration and criminals took advantage of it."

While the absence of senior district officials encouraged rioters to run amok, the absence of political leaders delayed the start of the healing process during the aftermath. Six of the area's nine Congress(I) MLA's did not even visit the affected areas for a week. And the city's flamboyant Member of Parliament, Amitabh Bachchan, issued newspaper advertisements from Delhi appealing for communal harmony. Ravi Wadhawan, chairman of the Amitabh Bachchan Fans Association, toured the riot-affected areas with a bus-load of workers and a relief van. He claimed it was "the appeal of Bachchanji that helped assuage communal feelings".

But a local social worker disputes this claim. He said that during and after the riots, a large area covered by five police stations was under curfew. "How could one read the appeal of Bachchan in the newspapers," he asked, "until the relaxation of the curfew which began on June 22?" On the other hand, Lok Dal Vice-President H.N. Bahuguna, who was trounced by Bachchan during the last general elections, was not allowed to enter the city. Tripathi said that Bahuguna had not been denied a curfew pass as an individual. But he had insisted on taking a crowd of workers with him to the area and this was found to be impermissible because it would have politicised an already tense situation "and made matters worse," he claimed.

Photographs by S. PREMI

PAC on patrol (top); and Naseem Khan with dead birds: communal nightmare

A bunch of other VIP's, however, visited the city in rapid succession. Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh, who has rarely paid visits to cities torn by communal strife, made an unscheduled visit to Allahabad. Singh later told reporters that the riot "was not communal but engineered by anti-social elements". And he sounded a stern warning in which he vowed "not to spare any anti-social elements taking advantage of communal feelings." Union Minister of State for Personnel, Public Grievances and Pensions P. Chidambaram, and Union Minister of State for Welfare Rajendra Kumari Bajpai, also toured the affected areas of the city on June 25 .

Arrests followed. Vashist Narain alias Bhukkal Maharaj, a man with a criminal record, was rounded up for "aggravating tensions". And the police are now on the look-out for two other underworld leaders from the minority community for their complicity in the riots. One of them, in fact, had earlier been taken into police custody but had to be released when a Congress(I) MLA intervened. This has given the prevailing communal atmosphere a strange twist. Sentiment in the majority community perceives discrimination in the way the underworld figures have been handled and Bhukkal Maharaj has become somewhat of a hero to them.

Meanwhile the PAC continues to come under fire. Shopkeeper Naseem Khan, who does a thriving business selling birds, told INDIA TODAY that during the curfew he was not allowed to go out and feed his parrots and pigeons and many of them died of starvation. On one occasion, he said, when he attempted to feed them he was beaten up by PAC personnel. But members of the majority community maintain that the police was not tough enough and exhibited too much restraint. One senior police official said that in cases like this "we always get it from both sides. But we have accepted that this is going to be our lot. We are always going to be criticised for being pitted against one community or the other. But it is better to have a situation in which it is police versus community rather than community versus community".

In the aftermath of Barabanki and Allahabad, one fact is abundantly clear— that the Ram Janmabhoomi issue is far from dead and even the smallest incident is capable of converting a city into a battleground. Criminal elements as well as politicians have exploited this situation, a fact that will call for ever-increasing police intelligence and vigilance.

—S. PREMI in Allahabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MILEAGE
PLUS!

Quite immodestly it's a breakthrough!

An Investment of Research

Crores of rupees of Modi Continental research has created R 80 — the state-of-the-art nylon car tyre.

To give you more

The R 80 premium is extra wide, giving you a surer grip.

The scientifically designed tread surface with 15% more non-skid depth, the seven zig zag shaped ribs and the width give you a road grip you've never known.

Beyond Expectation

Yes! It's a breakthrough beyond expectations. With better mileage than you ever thought was possible. Don't let technology pass you by. Change to R 80 — a footprint ahead of the rest.

Modi Continental

Tyre that never tires

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MIZORAM

Peace Time

IN THE bustling Upper Bazar in Aizawl, the once-embattled capital of the Union Territory of Mizoram, scores of teenagers throng a modest building displaying a signboard that reads: "Emissaries of Peace". They crowd the narrow, wooden staircase leading to the modest first-floor office which has a portrait of Laldenga and Mizo National Front (MNF) slogans on the walls. In command, obviously, is a slim Mizo woman with an air of quiet efficiency.

She is none other than Vanlalzari who, as the teenaged stenographer to the then inspector-general of police at Aizawl, had been convicted for a role in the conspiracy to kill her boss, a deputy inspector-general and a senior superintendent in the Aizawl police headquarters. Then a fanatic in love with one of the assassins, Vanlalzari is chastened and mellowed after nearly a decade in jail. "It is true that we fought for sovereignty," she says and asks almost self-righteously: "But sovereignty by itself does not mean freedom; Poland is sovereign, but is it free?"

This realism and yearning for peace found a new expression last fortnight as Laldenga, the former Indian army havaldar who led one of the bloodiest insurgencies in Indian history for over two decades, signed an agreement with Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh. Under the agreement, he would share power with the Congress(I), with him as the chief minister, during the interim period between the agreement and the elections next year in Mizoram, now destined to be the 23rd state in the Union.

There was instant jubilation in Aizawl. Said C. Rochama, general secretary of the newly-formed Mizo Convention Party (MCP): "People of my age who saw the mayhem dread the very thought of it starting all over again. Everyone wants peace but with honour."

The political agreement stems from a clearer understanding of the reality on both sides. Laldenga and his close aides, including his army commander, "Brigadier-General" Tawnluia, were getting increasingly aware that with the change in the internal political situation and the Chinese preoccupied elsewhere, it was unlikely that their storm-troopers could take on the might of the Indian Army's 57 Mountain division based at Aizawl.

Similarly, the Congress(I), though unwilling to sacrifice power in the manner of Assam and Punjab, saw the writing on the wall. It had won the last election on the promise of peace with Laldenga and the delay in carrying out the promise had already caused fissures in the party. Party president and MP Lalduhoma and general secretary Malsawma quit and formed the MCP. The 10-year-old attempt at an accord finally succeeded when both parties realised that they did not have too many bargaining chips and needed each other.

State Congress(I) Chief Minister Lalthanhawla, a former functionary in the MNF civil wing, sums up the party's policy, saying: "Everyone wants to guard the interests of his party but we never held it above national interest. But we had to be careful. There have been accords in other places such as Punjab and Assam but the problems remained."

Even in Mizoram there is no guarantee that all the armed insurgents—about 500 in Bangladesh and 100 in Burma—will surrender along with their arms. Sources close to Laldenga are apprehensive that the rank and file of the MNF armed wing, which includes several hawks who will balk at the prospect of sharing power with the Congress(I), may pose problems for Laldenga. In the past, he has several times reached half-agreements with the Centre which his armed supporters have rejected. The Government, smarting under the Nagaland experience where a large section of the insurgents stayed back in the bush along with their weapons, was naturally unwilling this time to install Laldenga in power before he fulfilled his promise.

PIB

Laldenga (inset); and Rajiv with Lalthanhawla and Mizoram ministers

> "We fought for sovereignty. But sovereignty by itself does not mean freedom: Poland is sovereign, but is it free?"
>
> VANLALZARI
> MNF activist

But contrary to his slippery, non-committal reputation of the past, Laldenga is now emphatic that he will succeed in his mission. "Our fight was for acceptance as a self-respecting, self-determining and distinct ethnic group within India. Now that we have achieved that the problem is over," he says. If he means what he says, Mizoram could see an era of peace and prosperity and Aizawl, the only Indian city to be bombed and strafed by Indian Air Force fighters, is unlikely to see a repetition of the nightmare.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Aizawl

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When she's too young for perfumes and too old for dolls... she's just right for Amul Chocolates.

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Coffee, Amul Crisp,
Amul Bitter, Amul Milk Chocolate,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Orange.

Amul Chocolates
a gift for someone you love

Soft and creamy, like Swiss chocolates...

its creaminess sealed in silver foil...

and foil-board carton to keep it fresh.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Marketed by: Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., Anand

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When Kilburn said they knew a better way to make tea, everybody laughed.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For over a hundred years, tea had been made the same old way.

Now here was a company suggesting a radical change.

A fact that left many a venerable gent vastly amused.

Undeterred, Kilburn put their design engineers to work. They came up with a fermenting and drying process that's revolutionised tea making for ever: a vibro fluid bed dryer.

Here's how it works.

Tea, when it comes to the dryer, is in the form of soggy lumps. Its flavour and aroma come from the fine black hairs under the leaf. If the leaf gets damaged due to heat or friction, the taste suffers.

Kilburn's engineers overcame this by fluidising tea leaves (making them move like liquid with the help of air-jets). And using vibrations to lift the tea leaves as they move along the dryer, up into the air stream.

They also found that two-temperature drying at 140°C and 105°C was far better than the conventional 100°C.

A pilot plant was constructed to test this out. Some 6000 samples later, Kilburn were convinced they had a winner on their hands.

One vibro dryer replaces two conventional dryers in terms of output.

It has a fuel efficiency double that of a conventional dryer.

And because of its superior processing, tea producers can realise higher prices for their tea.

No wonder then, that 103 dryers have been sold worldwide.

By word of mouth alone.

Of course it's not as if Kilburn has gone overboard on tea.

This kind of fanatical attention goes into every Kilburn Project.

Whether it's Asia's largest spray dryer for instant coffee.

The conveyorised band dryers built for Synthetic Rubber.

Or the sophisticated gas systems supplied to ONGC for its unmanned offshore platforms.

The cutting edge

Kilburn is the only organisation in the country that caters to the entire spectrum of drying systems.

With a team of highly qualified design engineers. (They range from Aeronautical engineers to Metallurgists.)

Comprehensive pilot plant drying facilities to test solids, liquids and gases. (Recognised by the Dept. of Science and Technology, Govt. of India, as a full-fledged R&D unit.)

A quality control system so ruthless it would put Ghengiz Khan to shame.

And the backing of 5 international leaders.

Nara Machinery, Japan: Inventors of the paddle dryer and leaders in fluid bed and flash drying technology.

Bowen Engineering, U.S.A: Pioneers in spray drying and instant-coffee plants.

Pleq GmbH: Specialists in rotary thermal processors.

Babcock BSH: Leaders in industrial centrifugal fans.

Silicagel Gesselschaft: Leaders in solvent recovery systems.

A formidable amalgam of experience and expertise. Which has led Kilburn to make what many would call an unsound business decision:

Offering comprehensive process guarantees.

For more on what's brewing at Kilburn, write in to the address below.

And join the 103 vibro dryer customers who're still laughing.

All the way to the bank.

KILBURN

Heat And Mass Transfer Systems

Mackinnon Mackenzie Building
Ballard Estate, Bombay 400 038. Tel: 26951
Telex: 011-5277, 011-2340

A Division of Macneill & Magor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"Dignity consists not in possessing honours but in the consciousness that we deserve them."

* (Aristotle. Philosopher and Guide.)

Remember one thing—no honour is conferred lightly. You deserve your success—so don't laugh it off. Be modest by all means but know that your success is well-deserved. Wear your honours with dignity. Because you deserve them!

Your dignity lies in the way you walk, or talk; and in what you wear. Show good taste in your choice of clothes. It's vital! Your clothes leave behind a sub-conscious impression on the people that matter and on everyone else.

Choose Graviera Suiting and Shirting for elegance and comfort. Graviera is quality fabric that fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour. There's a wide, wide range of suiting and shirting to choose from. Deep sober colours and soft pastels, in a variety of superb weaves and textures. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Dignified pace-setters like you deserve a dignified suiting like Graviera!

Nothing succeeds like success!

GRAVIERA SUITING GR®

SAPP-BTM-86-50

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

The Class Struggle

TELUGU DESAM Education Minister Galli Muddu Krishnama Naidu is a man in a hurry. Ever since the former lecturer in political science turned a minister in October 1984, he has been on a relentless campaign to "make education less of a business". His motto may not sound as grand as Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao's boast that his government "will not allow the sale of Saraswathi on the streets", but the 39-year-old grim-faced Naidu means business and is showing reformist zeal in making the quality of education in the state "a model for the entire country".

Many trend-setting schemes have been launched under Naidu's tutelage, but last fortnight a dismayed Naidu reluctantly applied the brakes when even parents joined hands with school-owners and managements to protest against the ceiling of Rs 25, Rs 30 and Rs 35 as tuition fee for primary, upper primary and high school students. The school-owners argued—and surprisingly, the parents agreed—that the stipulated fee was much too little and the fees they charged, between Rs 60 and Rs 100, was justifiable in view of the rising costs. Though the rule was made last year, Naidu was keen on enforcing it from this year but the school-owners retaliated by threatening to keep their schools closed even after the scheduled opening.

However, Naidu finally bought peace by taking recourse to the old strategem of setting up a committee. Even his worst critics agree that Naidu—one of the many professionals given Telugu Desam tickets in 1983; his was given at the instance of the villagers of Padanandipadu when he was teaching in Guntur—has pioneered several path-breaking programmes in education:

► Some 50 lakh school-goers in the 5-11 age group are screened twice a year and given free treatment for diseases and nutritional disorders.

► Twenty-eight lakh children in classes one and two whose parents earn less than Rs 6,000 a year get textbooks and two sets of uniforms every year.

► One thousand select schools in three districts will get 16 mm projectors to use audio-visual techniques for teaching class One and Two, for which video lessons have been devised by well-known film director Bapu and writer Mullapudi Venkataramana.

Naidu means business and is showing reformist zeal in making the quality of education in the state "a model for the entire country".

► Thirty thousand students, from the top 10 in the seventh and tenth classes and the intermediate examinations, in each of the 23 districts, will get Rs 500, Rs 700 and Rs 1,000 a year till they complete the tenth class, intermediate and graduate courses, respectively.

► Grants to all schools and colleges will be audited compulsorily by the Government every year.

Yet, many of Naidu's schemes have found disfavour with managements of educational institutions. Private colleges even went to court on the creation of the Andhra Pradesh College Service Commission (APCSC) for the recruitment of teachers. But their claim that they had a fundamental right to recruit staff was overruled by the high court and the APCSC began work in May this year. Now all 439 private colleges in the state can recruit teachers only through the APCSC.

Teachers also went to court, with the same fate, against the government order banning private tuition. The ban was imposed soon after the Telugu Desam came to power in 1983 but was not strictly enforced till April this year when Naidu even organised raids by revenue officials assisted by the police. Explains Naidu: "Salaries have gone up in few professions as in teaching. I joined as a lecturer for Rs 432 in 1973 and when I resigned to contest the elections in 1983, my pay was Rs 2,300. Teachers are given free time to read and prepare for their classes but instead give private tuitions and show little or no interest in college work." Naidu is now proposing to regulate the fees collected by tutorial colleges also.

Yet teachers have dubbed Naidu "anti-teachers" and accuse the Desam Government of carrying on a vendetta against them for going on strike before the examinations. Their feeling of being persecuted was reinforced last month when 1,700 out of 4,000 government lecturers were transferred from places where they had been teaching for more than six years. Argued Naidu: "The move is to prevent teachers from developing vested interests and concentrate on the job. Some of them even own bars and wineshops."

The only serious setback for Naidu came when the high court struck down as "unconstitutional", the state Government's decision to list the nominees to university syndicates instead of holding elections. The Government has gone in appeal to the Supreme Court against the high court's decision.

Meanwhile, the five-member committee to go into the question of the school fees is expected to tour the southern states to see if the suggested amounts are rational. It is expected to submit its report early this month. It is quite likely that the fees will be officially raised but this one small setback does not deter from the merits of the effort of Naidu in getting Andhra Pradesh struck off from the Union Government's list of "educationally-backward states".

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Spy Seizures

WHEN the Tamil Nadu police swooped down on five Sri Lankan and Indian Tamils and repatriates last fortnight, the arrests quickly became the talk of the town. Tamil newspapers played up the story about how the police had, for the first time, all but busted a Sri Lankan spy ring. Said a top police official, who did not want to be quoted: "From what we have unearthed so far, the objectives of these spies were to infiltrate into the Tamil militant groups and sow seeds of dissension among them, to create political problems in Tamil Nadu by using the presence of the Tamil militants here, and finally to spy on the secrets of the groups and pass on information to the Sri Lankan Government."

The five arrested were: Kandaswami Naidu, 42, a Sri Lankan Tamil and former CID sub-inspector and security officer to Sri Lankan Minister for Rural and Industrial Development; S. Thondaman, who came to India after the July 1983 riots; A.S. Manavi Thambi, 57, a Tamil repatriate and DMK sympathiser, who had come back from Sri Lanka under the Bandaranaike-Shastri pact; V.K.T. Balan, 35, partner of a travel agency in Madras; P. Ranjan, 22, a Sri Lankan Tamil who had taken refuge in Tamil Nadu and Radha Krishnan, 34, from Tamil Nadu.

The five were in police custody for two weeks, after which the Additional Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, P. Murugesan, released both Thambi and Balan on conditional bail and remanded the other three to judicial custody. But other than these five, the police have also detained many more for interrogation on suspicion of complicity with the spy ring. According to reliable sources, even the Intelligence Bureau of the Central Government is involved in the investigation of the case.

Observers of the Sri Lankan scene have felt for some time now that moles had gained entry into the Tamil militant groups. The possibility of external agencies at work was first suspected after the bomb blast at Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) spokesman A.S. Balasingham's house in Madras. The suspicion was strengthened after the recent bomb explosion near the Marina Beach podium, from which DMK President M. Karunanidhi was addressing a meeting.

The growing disunity among the Tamil militants after the Thimpu talks had also raised doubts about disruptive forces at work behind the scenes. The LTTE disengaged itself from the apex body of all the militant groups—the Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF)—and then went to war with another ENLF constituent—the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation in Jaffna. There were also clashes between the LTTE and the Eelam Peoples Revolutionary Liberation Front (EPRLF). And finally, there were serious internal dissensions within the Peoples Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOTE).

AJIT NINAN

All of this led to the feeling that there were outside agencies deliberately fomenting trouble. As K.Ketheeswaran, spokesman for the EPRL observed: "It was clear that Sri Lankan intelligence agencies had infiltrated into Tamil Nadu to capitalise on and aggravate some of these problems. These agencies were able to exploit the LTTE's misconception and misperception of itself for their own purposes."

The state police moved in, when it intercepted some communication between Naidu and the Sri Lankan Government. Although the contents of the messages are not known, the police official was categorical in saying that they were directly between Kandaswami and Colombo and not routed through the Sri Lanka deputy high commissioner's office in Madras. In the interrogation, Naidu is also reported to have owned responsibility for the bomb blast in Balasingham's house. The police also found that Naidu had made a couple of secret trips to Colombo under a bogus passport taken out in the name of Nadarajah. Expectedly, cases have been registered against the suspected spies for violation of the Official Secrets Act, the Indian Passports Act, the Indian Foreigners' Act and the Explosives Act.

In apprehending only those known to be close to Thondaman—leader of the Tamils of Indian origin in Sri Lanka, who has denied having anything to do with the five arrested—the Tamil Nadu police has created the impression that they have been selective in the arrests they have made. Police sources confirm that the spy scandal investigation has been wholly the initiative of the state. It is not coincidental that Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran was unhappy that Thondaman had not visited him on his last trip to Madras but had met Karunanidhi. He is reported to have said: "I gave him so much bandobast, but he did not care to meet me," although the fact is he had not given Thondaman an appointment.

While the full dimensions of the spy scandal will only unfold in the court, the case took a new dimension with Kandaswami's admission that he had undertaken to promote the interests of the Sri Lankan president's son, Ravi Jayewardene, as the potential successor, as against the National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali. With the arrest of known DMK sympathiser Thambi, the disclosures in court may well have repercussions not just on Indo-Sri Lanka relations but also on intra-party relations in Tamil Nadu.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your secretary, naturally. Our client. The user of our electronic typewriters.

Your organisation believes in moving with the electronic age, and you recognise the benefits of office automation. Which is why you chose PCL.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With a special customer orientation that is committed to your total satisfaction, and that of the actual user of the electronic typewriter—your secretary.

Our client concern involves customer education by pre-installation training, usage training and special seminars. And our after-sales services include prompt aid by our trained engineers, quick delivery of original spare parts and advice on proper documentation usage mix. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/d86/PCL/225

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASOKE SEN

Property Problems

BHAWAN SINGH

ASOKE Sen, Union law minister and one of the country's finest legal brains, is currently embroiled in an unseemly controversy involving some prized residential property in Calcutta. Battling the law minister are 19 flat-owners of Penn Court—a six-storeyed block of deluxe apartments in the city's most exclusive locality of Alipore. At stake for the flat-owners—most of whom are businessmen not wanting to be identified—is their right to the premises of Penn Court, and for Sen, 72, the right to construct another set of apartments in an adjoining plot which can fetch upwards of Rs 4 crore on sale.

Accusing Sen of having misled the Calcutta Municipal Corporation (CMC) for obtaining permission to construct a new block of apartments, the flat-owners claim that Sen is now trying to evict them because they have been resisting his efforts at encroaching on their property. Sen, on the other hand, contends that the Penn Court residents are trying to "blackmail" him by raising "ridiculous" objections against the new building when, in fact, their contentions have no legal substance at all.

Flat-owners claim that Sen has misled the Calcutta Municipal Corporation and is now trying to evict them because they resisted his efforts at encroaching on their property.

The dispute arose in April when Penn Court residents found a new building coming up on a vacant adjoining plot of land and workers dumping debris on their parking lots. They learnt to their dismay that Penn Properties, owned by Sen, his wife and children, was claiming ownership over the entire undivided property—a boundary wall dividing the two had been pulled down in 1976 on Sen's request—and had obtained the CMC's sanction to construct an 11-storeyed building with a built-up floor area of about 80,000 square feet. The flat-owners also discovered that the parking space for the new building would entail demolition of a part of their own parking space, water reservoir and pumping station.

After several unsuccessful attempts to get the construction stopped by the local police, the enraged flat-owners hired Congress(I) MLA and lawyer Rajesh Khaitan to file a petition challenging Penn Properties' claim to show the two separate plots as a single consolidated property. Sen, they argued, had signed separate agreements with each of the 19 flat-owners, agreeing to convey the flats along with parking and other space totalling 24,024 square feet to Penn Court residents.

KALYAN CHAKRAVARTY

Penn Court; and (top) Sen: building a controversy

In 1983, they pointed out, when the CMC had instituted proceedings against Sen and his wife Anjana for recovery of tax arrears on the Alipore properties amounting to Rs 5.67 lakh, Sen had got a stay from the high court on the plea that since the Penn Court flats had been sold to various flat-owners, the CMC should collect the tax from them. But, according to them, these facts had been concealed from the municipal authority. The plan for the new building, the flat-owners charged in their petition, "has been obtained by suppression of material facts and by deliberate misrepresentation."

In the records of the CMC, however, Penn Properties continues to be registered as the joint owner of the amalgamated three-bigha plot. Explains the law minister's solicitor: "The corporation does not recognise a sale unless the conveyance deed is registered with the Registrar of Assurances and the necessary mutations are made in the record." This has not been done.

According to the sale agreement between Penn Properties and Penn Court flats' buyers, the building, along with the land appertaining to it, was to be transferred to a limited company formed for the flat-owners by Penn Properties or to a co-operative society. But neither was a cooperative society formed nor did the flat-owners register their purchase—a lapse not altogether unusual in a city like Calcutta. Property-buyers shy away from registering their purchases, partly because of the high stamp duty—20 per cent of the property's value—and partly because they fear the Government could acquire it if they were to deflate the flat's declared value. Sen argues that the legal position is that Penn Court has been agreed to be sold but not actually sold. Says Sen: "The sale agreements have not been registered and the flat-owners only have the right to occupy it provided they adhere to all the terms and conditions of the agreement."

By not paying municipal taxes (arrears to the tune of Rs 7.7 lakh), Sen says the flat-owners have "breached the sale

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He works for us. The perfectionist. Whose first priority is to ensure a zero-error product. And, at PCL, there are many like him in every department.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With computer-aided fault diagnosis, a micro electronic in-house Research & Development facility and a high degree of reliability engineering, we make no compromises on quality. On the production floor, field simulation tests ensure a fault free product. And above all, our user feedback system keeps us abreast with your growing needs.

Our customer service includes intensive pre-installation and usage training; and prompt after-sales service that includes the delivery of original spare parts. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology–from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

Finally, it's the dedication of our team that has made us the market leaders in India. 250 talented professionals with valuable experience in the office automation industry. They add the vital edge to our success story.

everest/d86/PCL/226

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906
• Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771 / 4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel . 571502
• Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

agreement and now I can evict them". Eviction notices have already been served on the owners. But they say that they have been unable to pay the taxes because the "law minister made no attempt to make the necessary changes in the municipal records so that our individual share of taxes on the property could be properly determined".

Penn Properties is also trying to get around the dispute by claiming that it had originally agreed to give precisely half of the amalgamated property—a plot measuring 134 ft X 156 ft and not 154 ft X 156 ft—to the Penn Court premises. Sen obviously knew that the 20-feet strip could create problems for him. In his agreement with the builders of the new block, he had mentioned that a part of the land was under dispute and had passed on the entire responsibility of handling any possible legal dispute to the builder.

So far, the law minister appears to be getting off both ways—neither has he had to pay the municipal taxes nor has he had to give up his claim on the ownership of the Penn Court land. So confused is the scenario that even Calcutta High Court Judge Prabir K. Mazumdar, in his judgement handed down in May, threw up his hands and passed the buck to the CMC, saying: "It is made clear that I have not gone into the merits of the case and all the points made in this writ petition are left open." Mazumdar ordered the CMC to settle the dispute and decide which of the two parties actually held the right over the land. Mayor Kamal Basu told INDIA TODAY that his legal department had issued notices to the concerned parties and would take a decision after receiving all the relevant documents and arguments.

Now if the CMC rules in favour of the Penn Court flat-owners, a fresh sanction will have to be obtained for the new building, with a significantly reduced floor area. Says Jalan: "At the maximum, we will have to reduce our floor area by about 10,000 square feet." A reduction that will easily mean a loss of about Rs 50 lakh for Sen and his family. But many Penn Court residents, clearly overwhelmed by the law minister's counter-offensive, are beginning to doubt the wisdom of their action. A couple of flat-owners have already opted out of the court case. For, they have realised that in fighting for some parking space, they may even lose the houses they live in.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

KERALA

Odd Man Out

IT WAS an unusual sight for the waiters of the Indian Coffee House attached to the state Legislature in Trivandrum. M.V. Raghavan, the firebrand Marxist MLA, was sitting all alone while his comrades, who would normally crowd around him, were huddled in a corner avoiding his stony stares. There was anxiety and suspense in the air as the state committee of the CPI(M) was meeting barely a kilometre away at its headquarters in the A.K. Gopalan Centre. At the top of the agenda was the fate of Raghavan. Already under a one-year suspension since January, it was now likely that he would be expelled though he had given no fresh provocation to the party leadership.

Raghavan's expulsion draws the curtain over a tale of ideological bickering and personal squabbling which began nearly a year ago.

The suspense was ended when the CPI(M) released a nine-page statement declaring that Raghavan was being expelled for falling a victim to "parliamentary revisionism". Party General Secretary E.M.S. Namboodiripad, who attended the meeting, along with politburo member M. Basavapunniah, said later: "The party is greater than Raghavan. Nothing will happen to it while Raghavan will end up in political oblivion." Raghavan, normally very outspoken and blunt, was strangely subdued, saying merely: "I will always remain a Marxist and for that I do not require anybody's certificate." He did add though that the expulsion was a result of the "generation gap" between him and the party bosses. At 54, Raghavan was the youngest member of the state committee.

Raghavan's expulsion draws the curtain over a tale of ideological bickering and personal squabbling which began nearly a year ago when Namboodiripad suddenly changed the course of the CPI(M) in Kerala. After first inviting the Muslim League into the portals of power and decades of hobnobbing with both the League and the other avowedly communal party, the Kerala Congress, EMS, as the general secretary is better known, suddenly issued a diktat that the party would in future have nothing to do with communal parties in Kerala. He then went on a protracted tour of the state delivering speeches against the Shariat.

Raghavan opposed the change in strategy, arguing that the party's political line should be that the "capitalist Congress(I) is the enemy number one and there is nothing wrong in allying with bourgeoise and petty bourgeoise parties to isolate it". He had never justified the Shariat—in fact, opposed it openly—but he felt that the strident manner in which the party was taking up the issue would only strengthen the Muslim fundamentalists and isolate the party from the Muslim masses. Raghavan was suspended from the party in January for circulating an alternative document to the party's official party document at the state-unit convention last November, canvassing support for his document and for creating a separate group within the party.

Under the veneer of ideological differences, however, Raghavan's expulsion came about more because of caste- and region-based factionalism in the Kerala CPI(M). In the last few years two clear groups have emerged in the party—the Travancore group led by state Secretary Achutanandan, where the party is dominated by the backward Ezhava community, and the more vociferous Malabar group led by Raghavan, where the organisation is more in the hands of the upper class Nairs and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our people and our products. At PCL, a team of 250 professionals offer you the best services and the best products. Combining their expertise with a commitment to maximum customer satisfaction. Your satisfaction.

Our people, selected from premier technological and managerial institutes, have valuable experience in the office automation industry. A set of perfectionists to whom nothing matters more than successfully meeting your office automation requirements.

To enhance their expertise and motivate them into more intensive client concern, PCL conducts regular human resource development programmes that update their technical and managerial skills. Ensuring their total involvement in PCL's pre-installation and usage training, and prompt after sales service. Through our all-India network of 43 offices. And that's how we maintain a remarkable 98.5% uptime on our products.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/a86/PCL/227

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nambiars. While the Ezhavas have been the backbone of the party—because of their greater number and their firm support for the party—the party's MLA's have mostly come from the northern Malabar regions: currently 18 of 30 MLA's come from the Cannanore and Kasargod regions.

Achutanandan, known to be a fanatic Ezhava, has been building up Balanandan, politburo member and former MP, as the party's prominent leader in the hope that Balanandan—who was present at the meeting which decided on Raghavan's expulsion—would emerge as the party's candidate for the chief ministership should the Marxists triumph in the coming elections. But Raghavan, with the tacit backing of the Malabar group, had emerged as a strong contender. Expectedly, Raghavan and Achutanandan had several major—and not so major—rows.

Raghavan runs a hospital and a snake park along cooperative lines in his village at Pappinesserry in Cannanore district. Achutanandan asked him to hand over both institutions to the party. Raghavan refused. Recently, when Raghavan went to the Gopalan Centre for a meeting with Achutanandan, he refused to have a cup of tea with the state secretary. He was promptly charge-sheeted. Partymen in Cannanore were sent a warning circular for having lunch with him. R.S. Babu, correspondent of the party mouthpiece, Deshabhimani, was transferred out of Trivandrum because he was seen talking to Raghavan. Raghavan's fate was sealed when EMS—though a Nair himself—sided with the Ezhavas.

Political observers feel EMS is being a little rash in writing off Raghavan as a political force. With his skilful use of the rustic common man's tongue, Raghavan has become the greatest crowd-puller among the Opposition's leaders. As a Marxist journalist says: "Raghavan, with no formal education to boast of, has made intellectual giants like EMS look like fools. While EMS blasts Reagan and his Star Wars, Raghavan concentrates on the evil deeds of Karunakaran."

Though Raghavan refuses to talk about his plans for the future, sources close to him say he is expecting seven more MLA's to join him. With elections to the Assembly round the corner, the CPI(M) party bosses will have to work overtime to undo the setback of Raghavan's expulsion.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

University staff on strike

EDUCATION

Academic Stir

YET ANOTHER agitation has overtaken Kerala's highly emotive education industry. The latest provocation came from the Congress(I) Government's decision to delink the pre-degree course from the universities and create a separate board to supervise it. The decision has aroused the ire of a majority of the teachers and employees of the state's three universities—Kerala, Calicut and Gandhiji—who have gone on strike. With work at the universities at a standstill, results of the pre-degree course and other courses have yet to come out, creating problems for those seeking admissions in institutions outside the state.

However, Kerala Chief Minister Karunakaran and his right-hand man, Education Minister T.M. Jacob of the Kerala Congress, are unmoved. Says Jacob: "The plus-two stage—the two-year study after the 10-year school education and before the three-year degree course—is just an extension of school. That is why we want a separate board for it."

In their support, they cite a host of reports, ranging from the Kothari Commission's report of the 1960s to the Malcolm Adiseshaiah Commission of recent times, supporting the separation of the pre-degree course from the universities. Asserting that his decision will galvanise the pre-degree education system, Jacob points out: "The school syllabus has been revised thrice in the past 20 years but nothing worthwhile has been done at the university level to improve the pre-degree syllabus."

But teachers and university employees fear that the delinking will make a sizeable section of the staff superfluous and adversely affect their service conditions. Says a spokesman of the Association of Kerala Government College Teachers: "Nearly 6,000 teachers now teaching in colleges face the threat of losing their jobs. The education minister's assurance that they will be given protection cannot be accepted at face value since the Government would have to raise Rs 12 crore annually to keep the excess staff on the rolls."

The teachers fear that the plus-two classes will be eventually handed over to the schools, which will affect their status. Their fear is seconded by opposition parties who allege that with elections due the ruling parties may award the plus-two courses to private schools in return for contributions to party coffers.

Meanwhile, the Government has asked the vice-chancellors of all the three universities to study all the issues involved in the constitution of the pre-degree board and give its report within three months. But with employees and teachers refusing to go back to work till the Government withdraws its move, the students are going to have an extended vacation.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The new passion...

Product of the Vareli Group of Industries in association with Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100
It keeps the promise.

High performance
On the road all over India, the Hero Honda CD 100 is fulfilling the promise it made. A motorcycle that combines power with elegance, total comfort and safety, trouble-free performance and unbelievable economy.

4 Stroke engine
The Hero Honda CD 100's 4 stroke engine gives maximum fuel efficiency. No carbon on plugs and no decarbonising required. Virtually no engine oil consumption. No need to mix oil with petrol. And no smoke.

Phenomenal fuel efficiency
We promised you higher fuel efficiency. The Hero Honda CD 100 gives 80 km/litre (at 40 km/hr with a load of 130 kgs.), which is even less than 9 paise per km.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foun... Gangotri

HONDA
R&D

Technology from the world's No. 1
Honda's highly sophisticated R&D efforts have made it a household name in 150 countries and the world leader in 2 wheeler technology. The Hero Honda CD 100 is a product of the latest in Honda technology.

Honda service standards
At Hero Honda authorised service centres in India, you get what Honda motorcycle drivers all over the world experience. Prompt, efficient and courteous service, from technicians specially trained by Hero Honda.

HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfaction

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:

Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

Why not try this test yourself?

This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat – a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks".

So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.

Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/BOIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DDA

Cleaning Up

AS METEORIC as his rise to the prestigious post of the Delhi Development Authority's (DDA) vice-chairmanship was his sudden and ignominious exit last month, wreathed in the shroud of scandal. For the last three years, the dapper Prem Kumar had run the sprawling DDA empire like his personal kingdom. But three weeks before his term was to expire, Kumar was abruptly asked to quit and faced the added humiliation of having CBI sleuths crawling all over his house in search of proof of connections between him and the numerous scandalous land deals and award of lucrative housing construction contracts to a clutch of favoured contractors during his tenure.

Axed along with Kumar was J.K. Varshney, DDA's engineer member and Kumar's closest colleague in the organisation, who was also raided by the CBI. After the raids, the CBI registered a case against both under Section 5(2)5(1)D of the Prevention of Corruption Act which deals with the "abuse of official position to cause pecuniary advantage to self or others".

Though both Kumar and Varshney were tight-lipped, the crack-down on them followed a flurry of corruption charges levelled against them recently by members of Parliament and Delhi's Metropolitan Council. A note submitted to the prime minister by a group of 16 MP's on June 3, demanded that "a thorough inquiry by the CBI should be held into the frauds committed by the DDA". The memorandum accused Kumar and Varshney of awarding house building contracts worth over Rs 140 crore to those whose "incapacity to carry out the projects was known to the DDA"—allotment of prized South Delhi flats to their friends and relatives, delay in the recovery of dues worth over Rs 40 crore from leading builders of Delhi and permitting the construction of a commercial complex on green belt land.

In addition, the BJP had also submitted a detailed charge-sheet to the prime minister listing specific cases of substandard houses, incomplete sewage works for which payments had already been made, and leakage of the highly confidential New Delhi Master Plan to selected builders and land developers. The memo also alleged that the DDA was not developing its own commercial complexes in west and east Delhi because of pressures from builders who were interested in keeping commercial building prices at a high rate owing to the artificial scarcity of commercial space.

They listed instances when, for example, the DDA engineer member delayed clearing the file containing designs for the development of a 200-acre Bhola Nath Nagar Commercial Complex in Shahadara for over a year because it would have led to a drop in commercial space prices. The DDA even ignored written instructions from Delhi's Lt. Governor H.L. Kapoor to expedite the development of commercial land in Delhi. The memo charged that it was solely due to connivance between the DDA and certain builders that commercial land prices in Delhi have soared by over 200 per cent during the last three years. While three commercial estates were developed earlier, not one was developed during Kumar's tenure.

Former vice-chairman Kumar

Kapoor personally met the prime minister and reportedly told him that the Government's image would be badly damaged if Kumar was allowed to continue.

Lt. Governor Kapoor

The allegations appeared to be somewhat substantiated by the fact that among the documents recovered by the CBI during their raid on the premises of prominent builders in the city were confidential DDA files. Said Madan Lal Khurana, president of the Delhi unit of the BJP: "The DDA was giving favours to property dealers who in turn were sharing their profits with DDA officials."

But ultimately, it was Kumar's proximity to a clique of politicians and civil servants which proved his biggest liability. Believing himself insured by the support of his friends in South Block, he openly defied the Lt. Governor, who is also the chairman of the DDA. He refused to accompany Kapoor on his visits to various localities and turned a deaf ear when questioned on his claims about the construction of over a lakh houses and removal of corrupt officials.

But Kapoor was made of sterner stuff than Kumar imagined. Since Kapoor had made 'Operation DDA clean-up' his prime objective, he compiled a confidential report on corruption in the DDA and sent it privately to the prime minister. Kumar, however, managed to stave off any immediate action with the help of Urban Development Minister Abdul Ghafoor and Ministry Secretary Ramesh Chandra, both of whom favoured another extension for him. He also succeeded in getting his name recommended for the chairmanship of Air India which was scuttled at the last moment by Minister of State for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler.

But this only made the Lt Governor more determined to bring Kumar to book. Kapoor personally met the prime minister and reportedly told him that the Government's image would be badly damaged if Kumar was allowed to continue. Soon after, Ghafoor received instructions to send Kumar and Varshney on leave pending investigations.

Having won his moral victory, Kapoor has accelerated his plans for cleaning up the controversial organisation. Said he: "We want to make the DDA a live and responsive organisation and not to work against the interest of those whom it is expected to serve." Not to mention the interests of those who served in it.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Red Revenge

THE POLITICAL fortunes of the Congress(I) in West Bengal are receding at an alarmingly rapid rate. Last fortnight's statewide municipal elections showed the party had lost ground in its last remaining bastions—the urban areas where it had once succeeded in eroding all Marxist moorings. The election results ended in the hammer and sickle flying triumphantly from 56 of the 75 municipalities where polls had been held. Whereas the Congress(I) secured outright victories in just seven municipalities and barely scraped through in four others

The defeat has hit the Congress(I) hard. They appeared to show little interest in the eight municipalities where neither of the two political parties secured a majority and where every party should have been making every effort to woo the undecided independents.

For the Marxists, the election results lift a dark veil which the 1984 Lok Sabha elections had cast over their political prospects in the state. At that time, the Congress(I) tide had swamped practically every urban constituency. But last fortnight, the architect of the victory, state Urban Affairs Minister Prasanta Sur, could justifiably claim: "We have broken through to the town areas."

Sur had been preparing the ground for a Marxist victory in the municipal elections for over a year, starting off by changing the laws to give more power to municipalities and vastly increasing the flow of funds to them. Intensive campaigning by younger state committee members like Biman Bose, ensured that every possible pro-Left vote was cast.

"The Congress(I) failed in their organisation and in the crucial job of getting their supporters to the polling booth," says Union Law Minister Asoke Sen, referring to the Kalna municipality in Burdwan where their candidates lost by just two and seven votes.

But the Congress (I) humiliation was not for any lack of effort on Das Munshi's part. Even Biman Bose concedes that he worked extremely hard, personally overseeing the entire campaign and setting up for the first time a network of party observers in the districts to monitor and report on the electioneering. Moreover, the overwhelming majority of Congressmen believe that they are handicapped by the Centre's apathy.

Even Union Programme Implementation Minister A.B.A. Ghani Khan Choudhury, who never missed clarifying that he was campaigning only at the behest of the prime minister, for the first time proved to be a liability. His lurid election speeches never failed to include positively vampirish demands: "Give me blood and I will give you employment!."

Photographs by KALYAN CHAKRAVORTY

Prasanta Sur had been preparing the ground for a Marxist victory, giving more power to the municipalities and increasing the flow of funds to them.

The defeat has hit the Congress(I) hard. The pressures on state party boss Priya Ranjan Das Munshi to resign are mounting within the party.

His injudicious remarks on how much he hated Hindi and spoke only Bengali in Parliament was actually taped by the Marxists and replayed in the state's industrial municipalities dominated by non-Bengalis. As it turned out, the Congress(I) lost in every municipality where Choudhury contested, including his once-impregnable Malda town.

However, the inevitable political fallout is that the pressures on Das Munshi to resign are mounting within the party. Choudhury has already declared his support of Asoke Sen for the state leadership. But Das Munshi himself told party leaders that the high command had not asked him to resign.

In the wake of the municipal elections, the question before the Left Front is not whether they will be able to win the assembly elections slated for February next, but power sharing amongst the front partners. The CPI(M)'s analysis shows declining support for the smaller front partners and suggests that the party will be less accommodating towards them in the future. In the municipal elections, the CPI(M) had to once concede as many as 300 seats to its four smaller partners—CPI (126), Forward Bloc (107), RSP (67) and RCPI (8). While the CPI(M) won 566 seats out of the 811 it contested, the four smaller partners won only 144.

The municipal elections have also proved that for the two biggest parties—the CPI(M) and the Congress(I)—interference from the dissidents and smaller parties can at best be an irritant and not a significant factor in upsetting their political fortunes. This time both the Front and the Congress(I) had gone to the hustings with significant dissidence at the lower levels, including the untested Pranab Mukherjee force.

Though Mukherjee's supporters claimed they had bagged as many as 60 seats, according to estimates made by the major parties, the former Union minister's men could not have bagged more than a dozen-odd seats—only marginally better than some obscure left parties like the Marxist Forward Bloc. The Congress(I) tide might be ebbing from West Bengal but the Left Front knows that when the tide turns it will still be only the Congress(I) that can rock the Marxist boat.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IF PAHARPUR CAN'T MEET YOUR COOLING TOWER NEEDS.... YOUR NEEDS PROBABLY CAN'T BE MET.

Over the years we've built cooling towers for steel mills and food manufacturers, process chemical plants and textile mills, petroleum refineries and automotive assembly plants, electric generating stations and institutional air-conditioning systems.

In fact, we make cooling towers for just about every category and size of industry or business—more than 400 models. Why so many? Because your needs are many; and Paharpur has the capability to build to and for your needs.

Such as data gleaned from 50 years of Marley research. More than 60 years of engineering. And from thousands of installations throughout the world. All essential to a thorough understanding of your specific cooling tower need—which is our prime concern.

That concern is reflected in the scope and quality of our operations. No matter how demanding or unusual the requirements of your next tower, Paharpur has probably faced a similar situation before. And built a tower to tackle it.

And as the years take their toll, you'll discover the value of our single-source responsibility. One call to us, and only us, will be all it takes—for repair, replacement parts, even reconstruction, if necessary. That's why we're known as.....

The Full Service Cooling Tower Company.

PAHARPUR MARLEY ©

PAHARPUR COOLING TOWERS PVT. LTD.

8/1/B, Diamond Harbour Road, Calcuta-700 027, India
Phone 45-8956 (3 lines) Telex 21-3293 PCTC IN, 21-3367 PCTS IN

JETSETTERS/PCT 40/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The climate is always 'just right' in Bangalore. For both business and leisure.

Besides having a cooling influence right through the year, Bangalore's altitude keeps the atmosphere light and dust-free. Which is conducive to the growth of industry. Electronics in particular. Today, Bangalore accounts for a third of the total production of electronics in the country. 80% of the professional equipment with the 'made in India' stamp is made here.

What set the foundation for the breath-taking growth in electronics was the setting up of the public sector giants: BEL, BEML, BHEL, HAL, HMT, ITI, NGEF and more recently, the flood of manufacturers such as BPL and Nippon Electronics.

And what gave Bangalore its prime status in electronics were institutions such as the Indian Institute of Science, the Electronics and Radar Development Establishment, the Indian Space Research Organisation and the Aeronautical Development Establishment.

So, who's been part of this growth story?

In the growth story of any city, its newspaper institutions play a highly critical role. Not just in news reporting. Or in the reflection of views. Importantly, it's in giving talent and enterprise the wide audience it deserves. For public interaction. And support. Also to give readers a fair and accurate picture of developments.

It's a responsibility The Deccan Herald Group has lived up to in more ways than one. The Group, Bangalore's oldest publishing house, brings out four No. 1 publications. Deccan Herald, the mainline English daily. Prajavani, the most popular Kannada daily. Sudha, the complete Kannada family weekly. And Mayura the most widely read Kannada monthly.

The 'listening post' — world-wide

The Deccan Herald Group tunes in to the world through a network of strategically based correspondents covering the US, the UK, Europe, the Middle East, Bangladesh, South East Asia and the UN.

It also widens its canvas with news and feature arrangements, with the Washington Post, the Financial Times, the Los Angeles Times, Asia Features and Gemini.

THE CLIMATE IS JUST RIGHT IN THE AIR-CONDITIONED CITY

THAT'S WHY BANGALORE IS THE FASTEST GROWING CITY IN INDIA

Graph indicates the Reach of THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP of publications in Karnataka in their respective categories. (Deccan Herald reaches 76.3% of all adults reachable through English dailies.) Source: NRS III

PML-1879-A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The nerve centre links up with the national network

The Group's Head Quarters in Bangalore is a hive of activity. Buzzing with news stories from all over. Right from up-to-the-minute despatches sent in by its fully staffed news bureau in Delhi, reports from correspondents in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and other state capitals, to news in the pipeline from the national news agencies. All this, co-ordinated by a large bureau of staff reporters in Bangalore.

When a newspaper becomes an 'institution'

What started off as a small newspaper in 1948, is the largest, most modern publishing house in Karnataka... among the foremost newspaper houses in the country. With sophisticated facilities in design, layout, photosetting and offset colour printing.

All of which means unparalleled state-wide influence. 'EXCELLENT COVERAGE' in other words. To readers it means news. And to advertisers, it means readers.

THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP

75 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

VIDEOCON

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

51cm LARGE SCREEN COLOUR TV SET

207E3E

Compactness And Entertainment: Just Right For Your Home

SUPER-SSI BLACKSTRIPE II

VIDEOCON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Transfer Tremors

IN BIHAR, bureaucrats have come to dread Tuesday, the day when the cabinet of the otherwise ineffective Bindeshwari Dubey Government has its weekly meeting. Seemingly, the Cabinet does little else than decide on transfers of officers of the Indian Adminstrative Service (IAS) and the Indian Police Service (IPS)—since it appears that some ruling party politicians find them a nuisance. In the 15 months that Dubey has been in power, his government has transferred an estimated 300 officers of the two cadres, in many cases even without giving hapless officials the time to unpack. Says an IPS officer of the deputy-inspector general rank: "It's a disgusting situation. Today in Bihar, IAS and IPS officers are the most insecure creatures."

Two recent transfers have brought matters to a head. Shiv Chandra Jha, an SP in the CID, went on leave last month after he was superseded and shunted out of his post because he had dared to forward a note to Director-General of Police S.B. Sahay, suggesting action against a Cabinet-rank minister for his involvement in violent activities in central Bihar leading to the Arwal massacre. Justifying the Government action, however, Dubey said: "What he wrote was beyond his jurisdiction and the department thought it was an act of indiscipline."

More questionable, however, was the case of Ajay Kumar, 34, who was transferred from his post of deputy commissioner of Deoghar within a year because he tried to get the famous shrine to Lord Shiva at Baidyanath Dham liberated from the clutches of pandas and politicians.

Horrified at the state of the holy Shiv Ganga tank and the temple complex, Kumar initiated voluntary labour to clean the tank. The 'Bhakti Seva' became so popular—with 15,000 people participating daily and members of the royal family of Nepal rubbing shoulders with lepers and beggars—that 50 million gallons of highly polluted water was drained out in 13 days at the ridiculously low cost of Rs 30,000. The same work would have cost Rs 25 lakh and taken three months had it been given on contract. After this, the tank was desilted at a cost of Rs 3 lakh—comprising mostly hire charges for heavy earth moving machinery—when the same job would have cost Rs 4 crore on contract.

> In the last 15 months, the Bihar Government has transferred an estimated 300 IAS and IPS officers since it appears they were considered a nuisance to the ruling party.

But before the next phase of work on the construction of a drain to a nearby river, could be initiated, Kumar was transferred to Patna. His plea to be allowed to stay on till the work was completed was ignored and his replacement was asked to take charge on a holiday without even waiting for Kumar, then in Delhi to hand over. Dubey explained: "Deoghar is a small district and an active and energetic officer like Kumar, we felt, was more suitable as director of employment and training. This (posting) is very prestigious and not a punishment."

But sources in the bureaucracy explained that Kumar's popularity had come as the last straw for Union Minister of State for Petroleum Chandra Shekhar Singh, who has long been unhappy with him. Baidyanath Dham is in Singh's constituency, Banka. Kumar had crossed swords with Singh during the by-election to Banka last year when the former was different enough to be neutral. Before that, Kumar, as managing-director of the State Warehousing Corporation, had had a showdown with one of Singh's confidantes.

Kumar's scheme also directly threatened the hold of Krishnanand Jha—the pandas' leader and the area's MLA. He had built a hotel on a 7-acre plot of government land adjacent to the main temple which brought him over Rs 20 lakh from pilgrims every year. Under Kumar's scheme, the hotel had been demolished and the ownership lease on the land, procured in the name of a charitable organisation, was about to be withdrawn. Singh and Jha brought pressure to bear on Dubey to remove him. Said Kumar ruefully: "The whole effort has literally gone down the drain."

But Kumar's case is no exception in Dubey's Bihar where 'punishment' transfers abound. For instance:

► Beguserai magistrate R.S. Sharma was transferred within a year to Purnea ostensibly because Purnea needed a good development-oriented officer like him. But the real reason was that he had hurt vested interests by initiating steps to remove the rot from the district's government hospitals.

► Vyasji, who was the sub-divisional officer of Jehanabad, was hounded out within six months of assuming charge by Congress(I) politicians known locally as the "Jehanabad lobby". His mistake—he had taken a firm pro-poor stand in a area racked by land disputes and infested with the private armies of landlords.

► Sanjay Srivastava has been transferred four times in the last 16 months because he has refused to knuckle under to politicians. He was first posted as collector of the Bhumihar-dominated Beguserai district but was transferred to Bhagalpur on the eve of the last assembly elections. During the elections, he arrested some ruling party

Kumar (in dark glasses) at Bhakti Seva

K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread: More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety:
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design:
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing:
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract/GY-20/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

musclemen, got their heads shaved and paraded them around town. He was promptly recalled to Patna and then posted as the collector of Munger.

▶ Srivastava's successor in Bhagalpur, S.P.Singh, was also transferred within six months because the Banka by-election called for a more 'cooperative' officer.

▶ In sensitive Darbhanga, another young collector, N.S. Madhavan, was shunted out in three months because Dubey was shown black flags by the supporters of Jagannath Mishra at a public meeting.

• None of Bihar's 38 districts has had a collector or an SP for more than a year. The notably backward Palamau district has had five SP's within the last year, followed by West Champaran, Saharsa and Madhepura with three each, and Patna and Bhojpur with two each. Says P.K. Sinha, former general secretary of the Bihar Administrative Service Association: "In the present regime no firm or upright officer can be allowed to hold any significant post much less charge of a district. Politicians are trying to politicise the bureaucracy and make them a partner in plunder."

Dubey: politicising bureaucracy

Dubey claims the transfers are to tone up the administration but the manoeuvring preceding the 300 transfers makes his claim ring hollow.

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

(From left) Sanjay Srivastava, Ajay Kumar, Shiv Chandra Jha, Vyasji

Politicians not only transfer officials, they also block transfers at their own convenience. Navin Kumar, special secretary of sports and culture, was transferred as collector of Purnea but, before he could assume his new charge, his orders were taken back. Likewise, B.B. Srivastava, collector of Vaishali, was ordered to join as collector of Saharsa, but even before he could take charge, was sent to Patna as a joint secretary in the Finance Department.

The fate of even more senior officials is no less pitiable. J.M. Lyngdoh, ex-commissioner of Kosi, suggested an inquiry into the dubious dealings of the son of the powerful Agriculture Minister, Lahtan Choudhary, but even before Lyngdoh's note to the chief secretary could be considered, Lyngdoh was transferred out of Bihar. Zafar Ibrahim was first posted as the zonal inspector-general in Muzaffarpur then to Patna as the inspector-general (training) and within three months made the IG of Patna.

Postings of senior officials are done so often that almost every department has been busy giving farewells. The departments of education, irrigation, cooperatives and the 20-point programme have had four commissioners in the past year, while the departments of health and urban development and the state electricity board have had three commissioners and chairmen, respectively. Says Shivajee Singh, retired IG of police: "The process of destabilising the administrative machinery which started three decades ago has reached its climax now."

The only notable survivor to this continuing spree of transfers is the Chief Secretary K.K.Srivastava, who was once described by former chief minister Jagannath Mishra as a "most incompetent officer". But Srivastava reasons: "Bihar is a big state with about 400 IAS and 300 IPS officers, so some transfers and postings are natural."

It is understood that the Centre has taken note of the Bihar Government's proclivity to transfer officials and has even sought an explanation from Dubey's Government. Rajiv Gandhi had informed chief ministers last year that IAS and IPS officers should not be disturbed for three years at any posting. Predictably, however, Dubey claims that the frequent transfers are intended to "tone up the administration" so that developmental schemes can be implemented efficaciously. "Whenever I find that implementation of the government's programmes are slack, I try to send good officers," he maintains.

However, the dubious manoeuvering which has preceded every transfer makes his claim ring hollow, and Bihar's officials—both civil and police—are increasingly losing patience with the pointless runaround. In May alone there were four rounds of transfers involving about 70 officers. Warned a senior bureaucrat: "If this situation continues, we will have no alternative but to defy the politicians and that will be really a bad day for the administration." But if the speed with which the transfers are being effected is any guide, nobody in Dubey's Bihar is prepared to listen.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARJUN SINGH

"Barnala has been found wanting"

SIX YEARS ago, few had heard of Arjun Singh outside Madhya Pradesh. Today, he is among the prime minister's closest confidantes, one of the key players in the Punjab drama, and after Rajiv Gandhi the most important man in the Congress(I). Among the shrewdest politicians in the country, Singh is phlegmatic and unflappable, smiling away provocative questions like a contented Cheshire cat, dismissively referring to himself as a nuts and bolts man rather than a central figure in the country's politics. Singh spoke to Executive Editor T.N. NINAN and Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA last fortnight on a wide range of issues. Excerpts:

Q. Punjab is the No. one problem facing the country. Why have things gone wrong?

A. The laxity in the initial stages by the Government there in identifying and dealing with the extremist and terrorist elements was the first mishap. This emboldened these elements. Then the state Government began to combat them, but things had gone quite far.

Q. What about the two commissions?

A. Well, a more definitive finding by the Mathew Commission could have taken matters in a better way.

Q. Your own chief minister of Haryana didn't help either.

A. (Laughs) Well, may be he had his compulsions, But in a fluid situation, all these things add to the tension.

Q. Is that why Bhajan Lal had to go?

A. No, not in that sense.

Q. Haven't the conflicting political interests of the Congress(I) and the Akali Dal led to the present mess?

A. The Congress(I) and the Akali Dal have always been contending parties in Punjab. A fact which is forgotten is that the Akalis came into power with less than 1 per cent margin of votes.

At the same time, the Congress did not want to go on a course of collision. On the other, perhaps we have been leaning a little backwards to prevent this.

Q. The Congress(I)'s interests in Haryana might be in conflict.

A. Naturally the state Government has to look at its own interest.

Q. What will happen now?

A. It is difficult to say, because the Akalis have put their face against any determination by a judicial process.

Q. They have said 'no' because they object to the terms of reference, and to giving it 12 or 18 hours time.

A. These 12 or 18 hours only came in because of the prime minister's commitment to transfer Chandigarh on June 21.

Q. But no commission can do its work in that time.

A. I think there was sufficient material before him with which to do it. Anyway, once Mr Barnala said—and he gave it in writing to the prime minister—that he would not mind if the date was not kept on June 21, the prime minister did not insist that it would have to be done in these 12 hours. And the terms of reference which were drawn up after this request of Mr Barnala, I am quite positive on this account, were in consultation with him.

Q. Why didn't you consult him before setting up the commission?

A. It had to be done by a judicial panel. There's no other way of doing it.

Q. But even now they don't agree to the terms of reference.

> The Barnala Government's lax handling of terrorists emboldened them and they became an important factor once again.

A. That is why I say the sequence of events must be correctly put. Mr Barnala accepted the commission, and once he gave his approval on the revised terms, he accepted the Desai panel.

Q. You mean he had agreed to the revised terms of reference?

A. Exactly.

Q. And then his Cabinet said 'no'?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you explain this?

A. Obviously people in his government are not supporting him on this issue.

Q. Is he drifting away from the Congress(I) and the Centre?

A. Nothing was holding them so strong either. It was a relationship which was in Punjab's and the national interest. And there is no deviation from that.

Q. People say you are running the Punjab Government through Barnala.

A. Nothing could be further from the truth. I am not running the Government by proxy.

Q. When the commandos moved into the Golden Temple, Barnala consulted you but not his cabinet colleagues.

A. I am glad you brought this up because the record must be put straight. The impression that Mr Barnala took this decision at anybody's prompting is not a fact. This decision he took on his own.

Q. He consulted you, but not his cabinet.

A. Whom he consulted I don't know. But he took the decision, and it is true that I was aware of his decision.

Q. You were right there in Amritsar.

A. We went along because we also had to make our own assessment.

Q. That's the role of the Government. So how do you come into the picture?

A. The little knowledge that I have, I was trying to make use of it.

Q. How do you see things moving forward in Punjab now?

A. I think the initiative will have to come from Mr Barnala.

Q. What are your options if he does nothing? They've already said 'no' to the commission.

A. I don't think we need to totally despair on the whole thing. But nothing can be spelt out at this stage.

Q. Is the accord as good as dead?

A. I don't think so. But people who never wanted it to be born...(laughs)

Q. Going by the statement of Congress leaders like Tripathi, your party does not seem to trust Barnala any more.

A. There's no question of trusting Mr Barnala. The first priority has to be to deal with the terrorists, to restore the confidence of the minorities. And that is the responsibility of the state Government.

Everything that is possible to assist them has been done and is being done. I can't remember any other situation where any prime minister went as far as Mr Rajiv Gandhi went to mobilise opinion. All the opposition parties, they went all out to support Mr Barnala. The national will was forged in a manner that he deals with these people. Now if that has been wanting....

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. Will you withdraw Congress(I) support to the Barnala Government?

A. There is no occasion now to withdraw support.

Q. Will anything be achieved if he resigns, and there's President's rule?

A. We are not working towards that end, to force Mr Barnala to resign or have President's rule. Of course if that is the only option left, the Government of India has no other way but to do it. But it is not what we would like to happen.

Q. Should you negotiate with the youngsters in Punjab as you did in Assam, and share power with them since that is what they seem to want?

A. The analogy between Punjab and Assam does not exist. I don't think there were any extra-territorial aspects in Assam, whereas in Punjab there are.

Q. You have lost power in Punjab, Assam and now in Mizoram. Don't you think Congress(I) control is shrinking?

A. That argument could be built up in the short term. But both in Punjab and Assam, the Congress is very much there, and I see every sign that when the next elections take place the Congress has a very good chance of coming back to power. Where national interests have to be served, if there is a temporary setback, there's nothing to lose heart about.

Q. What about party elections? Why have you postponed them?

A. The schedule has had to be revised because it would have been difficult in some places to organise voting during the monsoon months. And even though we do not concede that there has been large-scale bogus membership, as has been alleged, there could have been some. We don't deny that. The Congress president wanted every complaint worth looking into to be looked into. This speaks of the prime minister's genuine desire to have that kind of party.

Q. Don't you think senior party workers have been ignored for the Rajya Sabha nominations?

A. If the prime minister is bringing in some professional people it is a good thing.

Q. What are the criteria for nominations?

A. You'll appreciate that in a political party or system, you cannot have UPSC criteria to select candidates (laughs).

Q. Was there an attempt to keep the various groups and factional leaders away while giving party tickets?

A. I think that is the best thing that could have happened to the Congress party. If an attempt is made to reduce the effect of factionalism, it is to be encouraged.

Q. People say Harijans are neglected.

A. I don't think that is correct. May be in one state. But if you take the totality of nominations, I think a very fair representation has been given to the Scheduled castes, Scheduled tribes, and Backward Classes.

Q. What do you have to say to the charge that your assets have increased enormously compared to your statements of some years ago?

A. What has been said is what I said about my wealth in 1960. There are 26 years between 1960 and 1986, my children have grown up, and are making their own living. So to pin me on what was said in 1960 and make that a yardstick without bringing up something concrete...

Q. Would you be prepared to make a statement similar to 1960 today?

A. Well, my properties are part of the family properties. That time I was the only individual, and naturally in the process a lot of things happened.

Q. What is the source of your acquisition of wealth and assets?

A. I think it is all documented wherever it has to be documented.

Q. How much does this house of yours near Bhopal cost?

A. It is not yet completed. I think it should be around Rs 11 lakh or Rs 12 lakh.

Q. There was another charge saying your sons were part of a lottery business where the prize money was not paid.

A. All the lottery accounts have been audited and submitted to the authorities. In any lottery, there are a number of prizes which remain unpaid for various reasons. The same is the case here. I don't think you can read in this that there was any deliberate attempt to deny the prizes and to appropriate the money for anything.

Q. Isn't there a conflict between Rajiv and the party that Mrs Gandhi left?

A. Some people would like it that way, but you can be rest assured that it will never be like that.

Q. He has been trying to change and re-mould the party.

A. Why not, and these conflicts will always arise. Do you think they were not there in Panditji's time? It came to a conflict when (P.D.) Tandon had to resign.

Panditji, Indiraji had a different stature, they were people of a different mould. The party at that time was also of a different mould. The situation which the prime minister faces now is different. So he has to cope with it in that way.

BHAWAN SINGH

"I see every sign of the Congress coming back to power in Punjab and Assam after the next elections."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tap the powers

In the city of Nagpur and in the rest of Central India, the majority amongst English readers has one thing in common. Their newspaper, The Hitavada.

With an average ABC certified circulation of 27,000* during January-June '85, The Hitavada has proved to be the highest circulating English daily in the region.

During the last five years, the circulation of The Hitavada has shot up by an impressive 300%.

This is the result of the extensive, in-depth and well-written news coverage of this daily.

And its superior print quality. A quality that has won it the First Prize for Excellence in Printing and Designing, both in 1981 and 1982.

Today, The Hitavada is read by the most vital demographic segment of Central India.

*July-December 1985 ABC certified circulation is over 28000. The growth continues with current print order of over 34000.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

s of a best-seller

A segment comprising the decision makers, the opinion leaders and the bulk of the region's elite, cosmopolitan market.

Equally popular amongst them is The Hitavada's complimentary Sunday Magazine. A four colour publication that makes good, worthwhile reading. For every kind of reader.

And for children, The Hitavada publishes Twinkle Star. Every Saturday.

Today, beyond doubt, The Hitavada has grown to become an excellent courier of news and advertisements for Nagpur, Vidarbha, Mahakoshal, Chattisgarh. And the rest of Central India.

With the power to make an impact where the market lies.

PLATINUM JUBILEE

The Hitavada

Central India's largest circulating English daily.

PTL-8919

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CANADA

Unheeded Warnings

"Battles being waged in one's homeland cannot be allowed to be carried over into our country. Extremists must be made to understand that we do not regard this action as a political statement but simply as an act of senseless violence."

THAT angry outburst by Canadian MP Ken James recently in Ottawa's House of Commons is increasingly symbolic of the image which the Sikh community in Canada is fast acquiring because of the activities of a handful of hot-headed separatists. The incident that kindled James' ire was the ambush of Malkiat Singh Sidhu, Punjab's planning minister, while on a private visit to British Columbia. Sidhu's car was forced off the road by another car containing four Sikh youths who fired two bullets into him.

Though Sidhu survived the ambush, the incident sent shockwaves throughout the country and served to further tarnish the image of the Sikhs. Till a few years ago, the Sikh community in Canada was viewed as hard-working and progressive. But the Sidhu incident and the earlier tragic crash of Air-India jumbo Kanishka into the Irish Sea last year, during a scheduled flight from Toronto to Bombay killing all 329 people on board, coupled with the bomb placed in the luggage of a Canadian Pacific Air jet bound for Tokyo from Vancouver the same day, which exploded at Tokyo's Narita Airport while being transferred, has changed all that rapidly—and dramatically.

Barely two days before the Sidhu ambush Inderjit Singh Reyat, 35, an auto-electrician from Duncan, Vancouver, was convicted and fined $2,000 after he pleaded guilty to charges of illegal possession of explosives and an unregistered handgun. Reyat had been arrested as part of the investigations launched in the wake of the Air-India and Canadian Pacific Air incidents which triggered off the largest manhunt in Canadian history.

In November 1985, special police units raided a number of Sikh residences around Vancouver in connection with the two air incidents. In Duncan, they arrested Reyat after recovering a bag of dynamite and an unregistered .357 magnum handgun from his house. Also taken into custody was Talwinder Singh Parmar, a Sikh priest who had been under police surveillance for some time. The charges against Parmar were dropped at the preliminary hearing. Parmar's extradition is being sought by India to face charges of the murder of two policemen in Punjab.

According to the details emerging from the Reyat trial, the CSIS first got wind of his activities on June 4, 1985, less than three weeks before the Air-India disaster, when he was visited by Parmar and an unidentified companion. According to the testimony, Parmar, a dedicated proponent of Khalistan, had been under surveillance for over a year before he contacted Reyat.

That day, Parmar was followed by agents Larry Lowe and Lyne McAdams to Reyat's house from where the three drove to a wood near Duncan in Reyat's Ford LTD. Hidden behind a tree the two agents watched the trio remove something from the trunk of the car, and then disappear into the woods. "Moments later, there was a loud bang...something awfully loud, scared the hell out of me," Lowe testified.

The incident could have been crucial in the context of the subsequent Kanishka crash on June 23. But the agents did not treat the incident seriously. Lowe says that after the explosion, the three men drove back to Duncan while he spent "a few minutes" in search for a spent shotgun shell, in the belief that the explosion had been a shotgun.

There was no testimony to indicate that the CSIS showed any further interest in Reyat till after the June 23 crash. On June 28, Lowe returned to the Duncan woods to investigate the possibility that what he had heard was a bomb or dynamite explosion and not a shotgun.

Reyat, according to what he had told the police during questioning, had purchased a stereo tuner of the make that Canadian police believe was used to conceal the Canadian Pacific Air bomb. He claimed, however, that he had given the tuner away to a man whom police have been unable to identify. The prosecution also produced statements from interrogation tapes that showed that Reyat was attempting to produce explosive devices "an acquaintance" wanted to use in India. The acquaintance was identified as Talwinder Singh Parmar.

Reyat was told that he was being arrested on suspicion of taking an explosive onto an aircraft, conspiracy to endanger the safety of an aircraft in flight, conspiracy to commit murder and aiding and abetting murder. On April 29, after Reyat pleaded guilty to charges of illegal possession of explosives and the unregistered gun, the Crown dropped the intent charges against him. He was convicted and fined $2,000.

Two days after Reyat's conviction,

A.P.

The bomb-in-the-woods incident could have been crucial in the context of the subsequent Air-India disaster on June 23. But the agents obviously did not treat the incident seriously enough.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hotel Balwas International introduces superb discount packages.

- Special Package Offer for Student/Executive/Company Training Programmes and for all others.
- Rs. 95/- per head per day triple sharing basis. with Continental breakfast and all taxes inclusive.
- Rs. 120/- per head per day twin sharing basis with Continental breakfast and all taxes inclusive.

A 5-minute walk from Bombay Central Station and 2½ km. from V.T. Station leads to Hotel Balwas International, a luxury hotel with all modern amenities and services.

- 24 hour room service
- 84 luxurious rooms (A.C. and non-A.C.) with attached baths
- Running hot and cold water
- 2 channel music
- Colour TV and Video entertainment
- Children's Playground
- Same day laundry service
- Exotic Indian and Mughlai food restaurant – Mumtaz
- Telephone in each room
- Lockers

For businessmen, executives, special facilities are available

- Conference Rooms
- Well Equipped Training Centre
- Banquet service
- Secretarial services
- Postal and Telex service
- Car rental
- Plenty of car parking

This offer is available for group booking for 12 persons and more.

We offer 3-star comfort with very moderate room tariffs

Hotel BALWAS' International

265-E, Bellasis Road, Opp. BEST Bus Depot, Bombay Central, Bombay 400 008.
Telephones: 391481 (10 lines)
Cable: BALWASINN
Telex: 011-76103 STAY IN

Stay at centrally – located Hotel Balwas International

APEX 86174

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

four Sikhs—Amarjit Singh Dhindsa, 25, Jaspal Singh Atwal, 28, Jasbir Singh Atwal, 26, and Sukhdial Singh Gill, 27,—were arrested and charged with the attempted murder of Sidhu. The four were granted $50,000 bail each and told to surrender their passports.

On May 30 five individuals were arrested in Montreal on charges of conspiring to commit an indictable offence following an investigation involving five police forces in Canada and the United States. Those arrested are Gurcharan Singh Banwait, Kasmir Singh Dhillon, Chattar Singh Saini, Santokh Singh Khela and Ravindar Singh Anand.

RCMP Superintendent John Bentham said in Ottawa that the arrests had nothing to do with the crash of the Air-India jet liner or the Canadian Pacific Air explosion. While Bentham refused to give the specifics of the charges, he said they are charged under Section 423 (1) (d) of the Criminal Code. This section involves conspiracy "to commit murder or to cause another person to be murdered, whether in Canada or not." Subsection (d) states that "everyone who conspires with anyone to commit such an offence is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to the same punishment." Conviction under the section carries a prison term of 14 years. According to reliable sources, the five were taken into custody on suspicion that they were planning to blow up an Air-India plane scheduled to leave New York's Kennedy Airport on May 30.

—SURESH JAIN in Ottawa

CORK

In Memoriam

A newly constructed but spartan memorial a few miles from Dunmanus Bay in the windswept South West Coast of the Republic of Ireland has become a shrine for several hundred families in India and Canada. Last fortnight in a solemn and dignified ceremony about 500 people congregated at the site to dedicate the memorial to the 329 people who perished in the ill-fated Kanishka—Air-India flight 182—which mysteriously plummeted into the Atlantic on June 23 a year ago. The memorial located just off Ahakista village on Dunmanus Bay is a 90-minute drive from Cork—the Irish Republic's second largest city and its largest county.

Out of the 329 passengers who went down the Atlantic, the bodies of only 132 were later found. And consequently for many relatives, both from Canada and India, the aching sense of loss was greater. On their own initiative, groups of relatives have been regularly visiting South-west Cork over the past year. Recently, as many as 700 of them—from Canada, India and relatives of the 45 Air-India personnel who died, visited Cork to pay homage and remember.

Officials from India, Canada and Ireland swiftly got to work to explore the possibility of erecting a memorial. The governments of India and Canada made a joint contribution of £70,000 (Rs 12 lakh) and the Irish Government gifted the present site—the nearest land area to the scene of the accident—and also agreed to its future maintenance costs. A young architect from Cork, Ken Thompson, was selected to work on the memorial. It consisted of a large sun dial, so astutely designed, that on 23 June at 8.15 a.m.—the time when Air-India flight 182 vanished from the radar screens of Shannon Airport's control tower—a shadow falls on the stark inscription in English, Hindi and French which states "in memory of those who died in the Air India disaster". The names of all the 329 innocent passengers who met a watery grave are also inscribed.

The ceremony at Cork memorial

Besides the large gathering of relatives, amongst the dignitaries were the foreign ministers of India, Canada and Ireland—Shiv Shankar, Joe Clarke and Peter Barry. The Indian delegation also included the Civil Aviation Minister Jagdish Tytler, Indian Ambassador to Ireland, Kiran Doshi, the External Affairs Ministry's Daulat Singh and senior Air-India officials. Whilst Shiv Shankar pointed out how the terrible tragedy brought together the three countries—India, Canada and Ireland—and Barry remarked that the disaster was a reminder of the "precarious existence of man", Joe Clarke, former prime minister and the current foreign minister, sounded a grim warning that his government would not rest till the "perpetrators of this outrage" were brought to justice. No mention was made of sabotage or bombs. As Barry presided over the simple ceremony, there followed orations by priests from various religions—Christian, Hindu, Muslim, Sikh, Parsi and Jain.

On behalf of the relatives, a Canadian citizen, who had lost his son, spoke about the "terrible sense of loss" and how the memorial for several hundred people would now be a source of pilgrimage—like an annual pilgrimage to Hardwar. As the dignitaries dispersed, the sorrowing relatives walked to the sea and threw flowers and food into the Atlantic.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIMACHAL ECSTASY

Himalayan Range near Chamba

It's worth experiencing.

Himachal. A serenade of splendid fascinations. A bliss of sublime, sensuous beauty. A land of lavish loveliness, where every moment is filled with Nature's serenedipidity. And joy that transcends the ordinary.

Beas River Kulù Valley

Manali Town

For information please contact H.P. Tourist Offices at:

New Delhi: Chandralok Bldg., 36, Janpath, Tel: 345320, 352104; 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, Tel: 344764.
Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Tel: 219191/284.
Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Tel: 446867.
Madras: 28, Commander-in-Chief Road, Tel: 472966.
Chandigarh: S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Tel: 26494.
Simla: The Mall, Tel: 3311; Panchayat Bhavan, Cart Road, Tel: 4589

For any complaint write or contact:
The Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh,
Daizy Bank Estate, Simla-171 001, Tel: 2028, 3136.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIGH FLIER

That's IPCL – reaching for the sky. Dynamic, enterprising, soaring from strength to strength.
From a gross block of Rs. 30 crores to Rs. 484 crores.
From a turnover of Rs. 5 crores to Rs. 687 crores.
All in just 12 years. Though young, IPCL is now one of the top ten companies in the country, in the Corporate Sector, public and private sector included.

A handsome dividend of Rs. 18.6 crores, enviable debt – equity ratio and reserves... a record breaking performance that has got us a unique 300 million dollar loan from the World Bank. An important phase in the transformation of IPCL into a megacorporation in less than a decade.

Growth plans that go beyond today. A Rs. 1400 crore capital outlay for expansion at our Vadodara Complex and the new Maharashtra Gas Cracker Complex at Nagothane. A targetted turnover of Rs. 1200 crores by the end of the decade. A determination to promote and manage multi-locational enterprises and maintain leadership in a competitive and diversifying market.

Good reasons to say we're High Fliers.

Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Limited. (A Government of India Undertaking)
P.O. Petrochemicals 391 346, Dist. Vadodara.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOMESTIC TOURISM

Indians on the Move

INDIA is on the move. For once, quite literally. As the mercury starts its relentless upward climb and the annual summer exodus to the hills and the beaches gets under way, holiday-makers are discovering that things are not quite the same any more. Train and even plane bookings are almost impossible to get as are hotel rooms in traditional tourist resorts. On the snake-like roads leading to popular hill stations like Ooty, Shimla, Kulu and Mussoorie, traffic jams are as common as they are at Kemp's Corner in Bombay or Calcutta's Chittaranjan Avenue. Honeymooners looking for secluded and romantic hideaways find that there aren't that many around any more. And families loaded down with picnic hampers are trapped in the midst of a veritable sea of humanity.

Almost overnight it would appear, Indians are suddenly rediscovering India. From the Himalayan foothills to the sandy beaches of Kovalam, some 10 million Indians are currently getting away from it all, symbolising a new spirit of adventure and triggering off a travel and tourism boom of unparalleled proportions in the country.

And it isn't only the rich who are slapping travel stickers on their luggage. Last fortnight, K.P. Balaram, a Madras electrician, herded his family and neighbourhood friends of K.K. Nagar onto a bus en route to Rameswaram, Kovalam, Goa, Mysore and Bangalore. When last seen, T.S. Murthy, a government officer of Nagpur and his family of three were posing proudly in front of the Taj Mahal for a snap shot that would find its place in their expanding family album. And R. Sareen, a Ludhiana garment shop owner, was stripped down to his underwear last fortnight under a gushing waterfall in Mussoorie, balancing an aerated drink bottle on his rotund belly. As Nitish Sengupta, the chubby-faced director-general of tourism, observes: "Indians are learning to relax and enjoy themselves. The travel boom is on."

And how! In the last few years, Indian holiday-makers and week-end trippers have been creating an ever-expanding travel circus that now girdles most of the country and has transformed domestic tourism into a Rs 2,000-crore industry employing more than 4.55 million people directly or indirectly. The boom is in evidence almost everywhere (see chart). Goa's legendary beaches, once the exclusive preserve of hippies and foreign tourists, are now awash with dhotis and sarees. In the caves of Ajanta and Ellora, hordes of rustic villagers stare wide-eyed at the exotic frescoes. The Taj Mahal in Agra is now ablaze with colours provided by a variety of ghagras, cholis, turbans and Gandhi topis. And the Malls of Mussoorie, Ooty and Shimla, once the exclusive hideaways of the rich, are now jam-packed with middle class Indians from all over the country. Says Deepti Bhagat, general manager of Ashok Tours and Travels of the India Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC): "Trying to measure the size of domestic tourism is like gauging the amount of water in an ocean."

The boom has succeeded in altering the face of tourist India to almost unrecognisable proportions. Ooty, at one time the quaint and quintessential honeymooners' haunt, now has probably more tourists in its six square km than the pine and eucalyptus trees that dot the surrounding hills. Last year alone it had 7.6 lakh visitors, up from 5.28 lakh in 1980 and the current season is set to break all previous records. On the spiralling road to Ooty last fortnight, traffic had been reduced to a crawl as buses packed with tourists with blaring transistors groaned slowly up the hills. Doddabetta, the highest peak in Ooty, is so crowded that people now have to wait for an hour to view the scenery through the telescope.

Down the hills in nearby Mysore, the Maharaja's Palace looks as if it is staging one of its legendary durbars, with tourists milling around examining the period furniture or preening themselves in front of the Belgian mirrors that line the stately halls. At the famed Brindavan Gardens last fortnight, there was a kilometre-long queue of cars and buses waiting to get in. Within five years, the number of Indian tourists visiting Mysore has doubled to 19.3 lakh annually, an average of 5,000 every day.

Goa too has been enjoying an unprecedented domestic tourist boom with the numbers rising from 3.32 lakh in 1980 to an astounding 6.82 lakh last year. Calangute Beach now resembles a fish market with rows of tourists sprawled on the sands or cavorting in the sea. Shaking his head in disbelief, Bosco Dacosta, a local electrician, says: "We used to have beach parties here every evening. Now we can't even get a place to sit on the beach." Elsewhere, the quaint Goan churches were filled with Indians busy listening to guides explaining the miracles of St Francis Xavier. And Goan bars and liquor shops are doing intoxicating business, having expanded from just 3,220 in 1980 to a staggering 7,548 last year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Illustration by AJIT NINAN & ANUP GUPTA

UP NORTH, Shimla, once the placid summer capital of India, is choked with people. Traffic jams on the narrow hill roads are now routine, restaurants and hotels are packed to capacity and the Mall looks as if a mini-Kumbh Mela is on. The Himachal Tourism Development Corporation that runs coaches daily from Delhi had started getting requests for reservations way back in January and S.N. Verma, its managing director, said happily: "By April all our buses were booked till mid-July." Complains D.S. Dhillon, a Ferozpore landowner: "You have to fight your way to get a seat in the bus, a room in the hotel or food in the restaurant."

In nearby Mussoorie, as the season peaked last month, the prices of hotel rooms also reached new heights. A double bed which usually went for Rs 150 on the Mall now goes for Rs 500 and yet, maintains bespectacled Tourist Officer K.L. Shah: "You can't get a room for love or money now." This, despite the fact that 60 new hotels have been added in Mussoorie in the last five years. Domestic tourist arrivals have been climbing steeply from 6.3 lakh in 1980 to a record 9.5 lakh last year.

And unmindful of the burning desert sun, holiday-makers have been flocking to Jaipur and its environs in Rajasthan, resulting in a 180 per cent increase in tourist traffic in the past decade. The number of regular hotels has increased from just 30 in 1980 to 140 now, far outpacing the growth of tourists. At the City Palace Museum at Jaipur, Director Ashok Kumar Das says: "More than three-fourths of our visitors are Indians and the lower middle class now forms a very high percentage."

In an industry in which not only the weather but the political climate can lead to sharp fluctuations in traffic, domestic tourism has been rising steadily despite the troubled situation in strategic parts of the country in the past two years. In 1984, although the number of foreign tourists dropped from 8.84 lakh to 8.52 lakh, Indians wisely side-stepped troubled Punjab and Kashmir and visited Orissa in the east, Goa in the west and Ooty and Mysore in the south—resulting in only a slight slump in tourist traffic. Last year it was boom time again and if the first six months are any indication, 1986 is going to be another record year.

It is only the Kashmir valley which has been badly hit—tourist traffic fell from a record 5.98 lakh in 1981 to a paltry 1.92 lakh in 1984. It recovered to around 4.6 lakh last year, 15 per cent below the usual level. This year, after Kashmir's Mufti Mohammed Sayeed took over as Union tourism minister, he has been making frantic efforts to attract tourists to Srinagar. Indian Airlines has chartered an additional daily flight to Srinagar and is offering a 30 per cent discount. And, as an added incentive, a rail-road link has been set up which enables a tourist to buy a ticket for a train to Jammu and a bus to Srinagar at the same counter. These measures have already shown results—there has been a dramatic increase in traffic, with more than 4,500 people arriving in Srinagar every day, up from an average of 900 barely a month ago.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Goan beach: replacing hippies

With the phenomenal increase in numbers, new tourist spots are being flooded by travellers as fast as state governments can develop them. West Bengal, where 10 years ago tourists had to choose between Darjeeling and Digha, now boasts of a host of new tourist centres that include the picturesque Mirik lake in the mountains, Sojnekhali Bird Sanctuary on the edge of the Sundarbans and the Ayodhya hills, all of which have become instant hits with tourists. In Maharashtra, the state has set up a high powered committee to go into developing new tourist areas like the Ganpati Phule, a beach near Bombay, where the tourist corporation has built cottages that are already over-booked. The state is concentrating on developing a tiger sanctuary in Amravati and is trying to capitalise on the scenic spots near the Bhandara dams. In Madhya Pradesh, the Kanha Sanctuary and Pachmari hill resorts have been drawing unprecedented crowds. And in Rajasthan, the traditional fairs

BHAWAN SINGH

Folding his pants and carrying his chappals in his hand K.G. Thomas, 43, a naval yard mechanic from Cochin, ran into the sea lapping Calangute beach in Goa only to be pushed back by a huge wave. His sons, James, 12, and Manoj, 8, were more daring. They frolicked in the sea and gleefully splashed water on Molly, their mother, and Thomas while they lept back in dismay. Thomas and six other families from the same colony in Cochin had hired a matador van for the trip and travelled all the way to Bombay. Says Thomas: "Now all of us have become great friends even if we are Hindu or Christian."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Chart by B.K. Sharma

such as the Pushkar and desert festivals at Jaisalmer have become major tourist attractions for Indians-turned-tourists.

But the new boom is best symbolised by the week-end trippers, especially after most states have switched to the five-day-week work schedule. In Tamil Nadu, Mahabalipuram or Mamallapuram as it is now called, is teeming with week-enders and T.K. Nandagopal, manager of the Tamil Nadu Tourism Development Corporation, says: "The five-day-week has increased tourist traffic by 10 per cent during week-ends." In Bombay, apart from Mahabaleshwar becoming a favourite week-end haunt for businessmen, a 60-room luxury hotel opened last February on the Aksa Beach in the Madh Islands, a still undeveloped part of Bombay's coastline—and has become an immediate success. Said its General Manager Rajan Mantri: "People are coming in groups of four or five families mainly from the suburbs to spend the week-end here." Rajasthan has gained the most in week-end tourism in the past two years and Delhiites now visit Bharatpur, Sariska and Jaipur as frequently as India Gate and Jantar Mantar.

Even tiny Haryana, mindful of its strategic geographical location in the context of the increasing tourist traffic, has made a resounding success of what it calls "highway tourism". It has developed 32 tourist complexes on the highways leading to Shimla, Kashmir and Agra that cut through the state, with the result that income from tourism has reached an estimated Rs 7 crore, with around 18 lakh tourists passing through the state every

NAMAS BHOJANI

By the Yenna Lake in Mahabaleshwar, fresh from a bout with the oars guiding a dinghy on placid waters, Mahendra Dikshit,36, was obviously enjoying himself. On a four-days-and-three nights package tour holiday with his wife Illa and daughter Heena 11, Dikshit said: "My parents never travelled but I hope to take my wife and daughter to a new place every year and one day may be even upto Kashmir." He got his friend in Bombay to do the booking. Dikshit, who is paying Rs 600 for the holiday, has only one grouse: the vegetarian food was not as good as Illa's cooking. Next year the Dikshit's are planning to go South.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Brindavan Gardens: tourist boom year. Many of these spots have become popular for week-end trippers and now Haryana is developing Kurukshetra into what one tourist officer ambitiously describes as the "Mecca for the Hindus". In Karnataka, the Government developed the Nandi hills and Pearl valley as week-end spots and daily ticket sales are up from Rs 100 to Rs 10,000 in just two years.

Hotel chains, hyper-sensitive to the tourist pulse, have started cashing in on the boom by introducing special discounts for week-end tourists. The public sector ITDC has offered some of the cheapest packages. They include a stay in many of its classy hotels for just Rs 50 a day for a double room and no extra charge for children. Other private chains like Welcomgroup, The Taj and Oberoi's have introduced week-end packages that give a tourist at least 50 per cent discount on room rates, making five star luxury now affordable to the not-so-rich. In Agra, Welcomgroup's Mumtaz Hotel, which was at one time dominated by foreign tourists, is now filled up with Indians and its Manager Inder Chandok says: "We are no more dependent on foreigners to give us business. In fact, we see so much of Indian potential that we prefer to have them stay with us."

Faced with what has been an unpredictable deluge, the country's transport services are groaning under the unexpected weight of holiday-makers. In New Delhi, I.P.Srivastava, chief commercial superintendent of Northern Railways, was last fortnight snowed under by the

BHAWAN SINGH

Darshan Singh, a machine fitter in Rajasthan's Jhunjunu district, believes in making full use of his leave travel allowance. So last fortnight, along with his wife Mahinder Kaur and sons Surinder,9, and Surjit,8, they set out on a Bharat Darshan by train. From Delhi they moved down south and covered in all a whopping 3,350 kms in two weeks. Each one liked a different place. Mahinder liked Trivandrum because it was clean, Surjit the sunset at Kanyakumari, Surinder a church in Mysore and Darshan the fabulous Mysore Palace. Said he: "If we had more money we would have travelled much more."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

gitiz... Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Mussoorie's Kempty falls: new spirit flood of train bookings. Despite commissioning 81 summer specials for tourists to reduce the load by 1.2 lakh passengers, all trains were completely booked till the end of June and the beginning of July. The Jhelum Express from Pune to Jammu had such a long waiting list that the railways had stopped registering new names. And the Delhi-Dehradun train was booked up till the end of June. Last year, the Railways ran as many as 752 holiday specials—compared to 500 five years ago—and still, as M.P. Singh, member, (traffic) Railway Board, puts it: "If we put more trains, they would still run full."

An estimated 30,000 buses on contract are plying on the roads this year, disgorging tourists in destinations as far flung as Kanyakumari and Kashmir, Jaipur and Nainital. There were no seats available on buses to Shimla, Mussoorie, Srinagar and Nainital. Indian Airlines and Vayudoot services to Srinagar, Kulu, Dehradun and Goa, despite the higher cost, had lengthy waiting lists. Vayudoot, which initially started weekly flights to tourist-oriented destinations like Jaipur, Dehradun, Kulu and Mysore, has been forced to increase the services to thrice a week. Says Vayudoot General Manager Harsh Vardhan: "There is a massive new category of people, especially the rich traders, who can afford to pay for air travel while holidaying."

Energising the welcome wanderlust are such diverse factors as the introduction of leave travel concessions for both government and private companies that

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Nitin ,7,was up at five on a stuffy morning last fortnight and excitedly jumped into the taxi his father Arun Kumar, a civil contractor, had hired to take them up to Mussoorie. On the dizzying drive to Mussoorie Nitin told his papa:"Why don't they just build a road straight up."That night, looking at the twinkling lights of Doon valley far below, an awed Nitin said:" They look like pearls from here." Next day he was off to Kempty Falls where he found the water so cold that "God seemed to have put an ice tray on top of the falls."Then he went horse riding and said: "I felt like Amitabh Bachchan but only he rides faster."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Tourists at Ooty: huge rush make an estimated five million people and their families eligible for travel anywhere in the country every year; the five-day-week that has sent week-end tourism to dizzy heights; the large and increasing number of small but wealthy businessmen; and the growth of package tours that have made travel to distant places now affordable to most sections of Indian society. As West Bengal's Tourism Director A. Bhattacharya says: "The rise in domestic tourism is related to rising living standards and rising expectations of people." Adds M.A. Joshi, secretary of the Hotels and Restaurants Association of Bombay: "It is because of television that people have started looking beyond the city. Better transport and communication facilities have helped greatly too."

And the travel bug seems to have bitten all varieties of people. Traditionally, Bengalis were reputed to have the biggest wanderlust followed by Punjabis and Gujaratis. But now south Indians have begun to cross the Vindhyas more often than they did before with Tamilians and Keralites forming a huge chunk of new tourists. Rajasthanis are moving out in great flocks and so are Maharashtrians. I.K. Dave, former chairman of ITDC and now a hotel consultant, says that the urge to travel on pleasure "is a rapidly accelerating phenomenon that is being translated into a reality by almost every section of society".

But it isn't as if Indians have just begun travelling. In fact, way back in the ninth century when the Hindu seer

BHAWAN SINGH

Velankar and Sunanda of Bombay had been saving for this holiday for three years. Both work as stenographers in Bombay. He says: "We have hardly any time to relax." Or for that matter, spend time with their children Sampada, 12, and Amit, 7. But since it was their first holiday they wanted the best. So they flew into Bangalore from Bombay and then went sightseeing in Mysore before finally breathing the fresh air of Ooty. Their holiday is going to cost them a pile: Rs 2,700 for the air fare. Rs 300 for the bus to Ooty. Plus Rs 125 every day on hotel expenses and food. In all, Rs 5,000. But Velankar says: "We are having fun."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

Ooty's Doddabeta: peak traffic

Shankaracharya decreed that anyone could cleanse his sins if he made a pilgrimage to the four dhams (abodes of the gods): Jagannath Puri, Dwarka, Badrinath and Rameswaram, he really institutionalised domestic tourism. But the ras-carrying saffron-clad sadhus of yore have been replaced today by an army of camera-sporting tourists, who not only take their holy dip, but tack on a fair bit of sightseeing as well. The advantage is that most pilgrim centres have nearby hill resorts—Mussoorie near Hardwar, Puri which itself doubles as a beach resort and Kodaikanal near Madurai and Rameswaram. And most pilgrims to Vaishnodevi make the detour to Srinagar and Pahalgam. Says Cecil Samuel, ITDC's general manager, sales: "There is a definite shift from pilgrim tourism to leisure and sightseeing."

And unlike Shankaracharya's days, when only the truly pious would venture out on foot to make a hazardous pilgrimage, communication facilities have developed so much that an Indian could do the cleansing trip for as little as Rs 1,500 and within two weeks. Last month B.N. Narayanswamy, a ragi farmer from Karnataka's Bagepalli taluk and his wife, along with 10 other farmer families, set out in a bus that went through nine states and, apart from paying homage at Hardwar and Puri, they went sightseeing to Calcutta, Agra, Bhubaneshwar and a host of other places. The trip cost each person a mere Rs 1,500 and included stays at dharmshalas, where facilities to cook

BHAWAN SINGH

All the world smiles at lovers but R.R. Brahmankar ,25, and Pramila,20, of Nasik seemed oblivious of it as they held hands, hugged each other while posing for photographs and even went riding on the same horse around the lake in Ooty. Brahmankar and Pramila were on their rather belated honeymoon. Although they got married a month ago, Brahmankar, a bank officer, waited till he got his leave travel allowance and then decided to go to Ooty. Their honeymoon is not going to cost them too much: Rs 100 a day, including room rent. When last seen, they were heading to Doddabeta Peak hand in hand.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

their own food were available.

The most visible sign of the new travel surge, apart from the flocks of bag-toting tourists, are the numerous "bucket shop" tour agents that have come up in most city street corners and are revolutionising the domestic tourism industry. In the past decade, an estimated 5,000 such tour operators have mushroomed all over the country offering such diverse packages as a week in Kashmir for Rs 750, five days in Mahabaleshwar for Rs 500, five days in Goa for Rs 400 and four days in Mahabaleshwar for Rs 600. Operating from little more than hole-in-the-wall offices, advertising through small billboards in railway and bus station toilets or through freelance touts, these agents have been doing phenomenal business, leaving the giant travel agents spluttering in disbelief—and disgust.

ONE SUCH is E.R.C. Pannicker, 56, who operates from a tiny room in Delhi's crowded Karol Bagh. Pannicker, a former hotel waiter and a lottery ticket seller, started operating a tour once a week to Agra in 1971. Soon he made it a daily service, then started tours to Hardwar and Rishikesh and now runs six types of tours, including week-long packages to Srinagar, Mussoorie and Jaipur. He now has eight luxury buses and currently has to hire additional buses every day to meet the demand. Says Pannicker: "There is a new generation that wants to see places and they now want to travel in comfort." He carries an average 400 tourists daily and reports an annual 30 per cent growth. Admits Inder Sharma, chairman of Sita Travels, among the big three in the business: "We just can't compete with the bucket shop travel agents. Their overheads are so low that we just can't afford to drop our prices to such low levels."

But many of the tour operators have fallen foul with tourists who complain that they do not really keep their promises. D. Ramesh, an advocate from Vishakhapatnam, who had booked what he thought was a luxury bus for a tour of Mysore, found that it was one of those old rattletraps which not only started an hour late but also skipped several of the key tourist spots. Apart from that, many of the tour operators had colluded with people having leave travel concession (LTC) facilities, giving them false receipts when no tour was made. To check this malpractice, all state governments have told their employees that they would have to hire a bus run by the state tourism corporations if they wanted to go on LTC tours.

But even as the boom transforms quiet little resorts into teeming towns it is not without a heavy price. Ooty is now a queen disrobed, with its once-verdant and lush downs now dotted with ugly concrete structures. Complains Ooty resident Piljain Wiedermann: "Ooty has become a big toilet and all the lovely cottages have gone. It is now a concrete jungle." Much the same thing is happening to other tourist resorts. In Mahabaleshwar, Major

BHAWAN SINGH

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Puffing up steep inclines, crossing hairline trails, freezing in the Himalayan snow, Rajendra Shukla and Kiran Kolhatkar were getting all the adventure they wanted plus more. Along with 23 others from the IIT Bombay, Shukla and Kolhatkar were on a 11-day trek in the Uttarkhand region organised by the institute's adventure club. The blistered faces and sore feet apart, the trekkers had a great time except when they had to trudge through bone chilling snow to go to the toilet every morning. The only useful technology they picked up was that thermal tents don't keep warm under extreme conditions. Brrr.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Picknicking at Pahalgam: wanderlust

J.H. Wadia, secretary of the Mahabaleshwar Club, points out that "cleanliness has gone down, there is an acute water shortage, the electricity supply keeps failing and deforestation is affecting the rainfall and temperatures".

IN SHIMLA, property prices have risen higher than the peaks that surround it. Prime sites are now going for Rs 1,000 a square yard—up from Rs 200 five years ago. Unscrupulous builders have been flagrantly violating bylaws and putting up multi-storied buildings that have forever changed Shimla's fabled skyline. And the dilemma is getting increasingly acute. As Himachal Pradesh Chief Minister Vir Bhadra Singh says: "I concede the dangers of congestion but tourism is a great boon for us and thousands earn their livelihood. We have to develop new areas to stop the ecological balance from being upset."

Even aesthetics are being blithely ignored. The Taj Mahal in Agra has suddenly acquired an additional, ugly-looking minaret—a TV transmission tower thoughtlessly put up by civic authorities in total ignorance of its jarring impact on the most famous monument in the country. In Jaipur, the famed Hawa Mahal and the Jantar Mantar are obvious victims of official negligence in maintainance and other historic monuments in the state are now being elbowed out of the picture by the construction of ugly modern constructions. In some tourist centres, the large influx of tourists have started to affect local culture. In Goa, the famed Goan hospitality is in unfortunate decline. Bemoans Gines Viegas, a hotelier: "If people sing songs in Goa, it is for money. Nobody wants to give anything for nothing anymore." And in Manali, the local youth are increasingly getting into the drug culture the tourists brought in.

But the accompanying dangers are being blithely ignored as domestic tourism continues to grow at a hectic pace and state governments rush in to fill the breaches. West Bengal has put up 44 tourist lodges in the state, compared to 18 eight years ago. Maharashtra's tourism corporation has set up 26 holiday resorts and in Himachal Pradesh the state tourism corporation now has 5,000 beds to offer as compared to 600 in 1973.

Last year, the Central Government Tourism Department, which has so far concentrated on developing facilities for foreign tourists, is now giving the indigenous variety its undivided attention. It now plans to construct more than 10 Yatri Niwas complexes which would offer cheap subsidised accommodation. All this is clear enough indication that when the sun next peeps over the peaks of the Himalayas or the endless watery expanse of the Indian Ocean, it will, more than anything else, symbolise the dawning of the age of the Indian tourist.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with M. RAHMAN, GOBIND THUKRAL and bureau reports

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Having a second home in a holiday resort is a new trend and one of the first to do so in Mussoorie was Geeta Rohtagi, wife of a Delhi industrialist. Finding that holidaying every summer was not only expensive but that she also faced hassles of booking hotels and eating food they liked, Geeta bought a one-bedroom flat for Rs 70,000 and fitted it with a music system, television and a fully-stocked kitchen. Although she lives in a sprawling house in West Delhi, Geeta does not mind living in a comparatively smaller flat for two months every summer and says: "At least I don't have the problems of cleaning a big house."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE LAST WORD IN BEARING TECHNOLOGY IS NOW THE FIRST WORD IN OUR NAME

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FAG Precision Bearings Limited

Almost two decades of close association between the world renowned FAG Kugelfischer Georg Schäfer KGaA, West Germany and Precision Bearings India Limited has been both meaningful and eventful.

Now, with FAG as part of our name progress takes a new dimension.

Bearings incorporating state-of-the-art technology. With the highest precision standards. Longer life. Stronger bearings that take the rough with the smooth.

Yes, making the best even better.

FAG Precision Bearings Limited

Maneja, Vadodara-390 013
Divisional Offices: Bombay • Calcutta • New Delhi • Madras • Bangalore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CLASSIC STEEL

The 37-piece Stainless Steel Dinner set by SAIL

Contemporary stainless steel tableware. Refined, beautifully shaped, yet rugged enough for a lifetime of active use.

Stain resistant, breakage resistant. You can serve anything on it, from the sourest to the sweetest. The lustre and shine last as long as the set.

The steel, the basic material, comes from Salem, a very sophisticated steel plant of Steel Authority of India Limited where stainless steel is produced by the most advanced technology. So you can be sure that quality would be top-notch. Year-in and year-out.

A sleek, elegant, well-milled stainless steel dinner set. A tableware of pride. Both for the maker and the user.

And there is a sherbet set. Nasta sets of two kinds. A serving Tray. All available separately. At reasonable prices.

Dinner Set, 37 pcs.	-	Rs. 670/-
Sherbet Set, 7 pcs.	-	Rs. 180/-
Nasta Set I & II, 12 pcs.	-	Rs. 180/- & Rs. 210/-
Rice Tray, 1 pc.	-	Rs. 50/-

 Avail of 5% rebate on limited introductory offer. Local taxes extra.*

STEEL AUTHORITY OF INDIA LIMITED
Central Marketing Organisation
1 R. N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 001

Available at ■ Calcutta—Samavayikas ■ Bombay—Sahakari Bhandar ■ Delhi—Superbazar ■ Madras—Kamadhenu ■ All SAIL steel plant Co-operative Stores.

TCP/SAIL 962 RI/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAXING DECISION

FINANCE Minister V.P. Singh may have slowed down his offensive against tax-offenders and violators of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act, but matters may come to the boil once again if Singh's latest brainwave gets Cabinet clearance. The finance minister has suggested that 52 big industrial houses which owe large sums to the Government as tax—totalling about Rs 1,800 crore—should be denied any further letters of intent and industrial licences until their tax dues are paid up. The Industry Ministry is opposed to the idea, arguing that industrial growth should not be curbed on account of tax disputes. A final decision will now be taken by the Union Cabinet. Singh argues that he has already been able to speed up tax-collection by refusing to clear share and debenture issues of companies that are tax defaulters.

REVISED RIDE

THE NEW automobile policy will now be delayed by at least six months. After an official review, the Industry Ministry's initial draft on the subject has been rejected and the ministry has now been asked to submit a revised draft. Meanwhile, in anticipation of a more liberal policy, both Mahindra and Mahindra as well as the Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (TELCO) have followed in the footsteps of Escorts and submitted revised proposals for their stalled car projects: Mahindra for the Citroen 505 and TELCO for the Honda Accord. Like Escorts (Trade Winds, June 30), both companies have now proposed a quicker rate of indigenisation, while TELCO has argued that its foreign exchange expenditure on the Accord project should be viewed in the context of its export earnings and that the imported content of the car in the first year will be only 36.7 per cent (against 50 per cent in the original proposal), with a correspondingly higher indigenous content in subsequent years.

WASHING UP

AFTER electronics, washing machines are quickly becoming the new business frontier. The public sector Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd has already announced its intention to start manufacturing washing machines. And now it is the turn of Kelvinator of India to join in. The Rs 140 crore-turnover refrigerator and two-wheeler firm has been talking to Japanese, Swedish and American companies for a foreign collaboration deal and plans to eventually turn out 50,000 automatic washing machines annually. According to company officials, the project will require little investment because most of the work will be done in-house.

STEEL SHORTAGE

HAVING failed to construct the Daitari and Vijayanagar steel plants during the sixth plan, as had been promised, and having failed once again to provide the funds in the seventh plan for either of these two long-delayed projects, the Government is now turning to the private sector for help. The Steel Ministry has let it be known that entrepreneurs who are willing to put up mini-steel units at these two places will quickly get the Government's green signal. But this may not be a solution either as power is in short supply in both Orissa and Karnataka, and energy-intensive mini-steel units are unlikely to be smiled upon by state governments that already have a serious power problem.

WHEEL CHANGE

THE TWO-wheeler market is going through unexpected changes. The rapid growth in moped sales has peaked (sales in January-May 1986, at 2.03 lakh vehicles, are only 1.9 per cent higher than January-May 1985), while scooters have overtaken mopeds in sales, growing 45.4 per cent to 2.24 lakh in January-May this year. Motorcycles, which had failed to grow earlier, have similarly seen sales climb 36.5 per cent to 1.05 lakh in the first five months of this year. This growth has come entirely through the new 100 cc models, while all the old motorcycle models have lost ground. While some sections of the two-wheeler market have thus done better than others, the total market has grown more than 23 per cent, moving from 4.3 lakh vehicles in January-May 1985 to 5.3 lakh vehicles in January-May 1986.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

INNOVATIVE STRATEGY

THE RAILWAYS have hit upon several innovative strategies to meet the shortfall in seventh plan fund allocations. Apart from floating bonds, these include proposals to sell urban real estate, to take wagons on lease from leasing firms and to share the costs of running suburban rail systems with state governments. The plans to hawk some valuable real estate on an experimental basis and to take on lease 6,000 wagons and buy them at 20 per cent of their cost after five years are still on the drawing boards, but the consortium approach to suburban railway systems has got off the ground. The railways subsidise the suburban systems to the tune of Rs 85 crore annually and so have roped in Maharashtra's City Industrial Development Corporation to raise money from the market for a project in Maharashtra. Talks are also on with the Tamil Nadu and Karnataka governments in this connection.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

V.P. SINGH

The New Image

FOR MORE than a year, he was the terror of the corporate world. Vishwanath Pratap Singh, arguably the most dreaded finance minister India has ever had, had combined tax raids, grandstand arrests and tough talk to build for himself the image of a stern, no-nonsense guardian of the public exchequer. Entreaties for tax concessions were dismissed, and there was a stubborn refusal to meet the big noises in the business world, to the extent Singh became the focal point of much of the criticism against the Rajiv Gandhi Government.

Now the stick has been put quietly away, to be replaced with not one but a whole bunch of carrots. And the closed doors to the finance minister's wood panelled office in North Block have been flung wide open. V.P. Singh is suddenly a changed man, playing host to a series of friendly open house sessions with businessmen, announcing tax concessions, duty reductions and fiscal reform. Chuckled a Delhi-based industrialist: "We never expected a single penny from a person who had been after our blood for the last one year. But he seems to be very humane and conceded all our demands. And he was able to remove all the misgivings about his personal behaviour."

Industrialists have reason to be happy with the finance minister. In six weeks starting from mid-May, the new V.P. Singh has met more than 200 of them individually or collectively, and spent more than three to four hours with them daily, along with his senior-most officials. For good measure, Singh accepted dozens of invitations from business organisations and criss-crossed the country addressing gatherings of the business elite. Noticeably absent at these interfaces were his earlier diatribes and blunt threats. Instead, he was the personification of sweet reasonableness, asking his audiences to help speed up the country's development.

Finally, of course, it is money that talks, and Singh has been handing it out in generous dollops. At Open House sessions, he has so far doled out customs and excise reliefs worth Rs 170 crore, over the Rs 82 crore tax reliefs that he announced while replying to the Lok Sabha debate on his 1986 budget. Taken together, he has handed back more than half the Rs 489 crore fresh taxes that he originally levied through the budget; and still more may be given out in the near future.

This new generosity with the purse is being followed up with generosity of the spirit. For Singh has promised to come out with a scheme for voluntary disclosure of evaded excise duty; he has also assured businessmen that his officials will not publicise raids on them, and will refrain from launching raids or ordering arrests unless armed with irrefutable evidence.

The tax reliefs have benefited a host of industries:

▶ Electronics, which gets lower customs duty on the import of components. Revenue loss: Rs 60 crore.

▶ Exporters of leather goods, handloom fabrics, carpets and chemicals get bigger duty drawbacks that total Rs 40 crore.

▶ Manufacturers of air-conditioning and refrigeration equipment get excise duty cut from 60 per cent to 40 per cent. Revenue loss: Rs 20 crore.

▶ Consumers of polyester filament yarn, who can import the yarn cheaper because of the withdrawal of the anti-dumping duty of Rs 15 per kg. Revenue loss: over Rs 3 crore.

▶ Small-scale units, since turnover limit for excise exemption has been raised from Rs 7.5 lakh to Rs 15 lakh. Revenue loss: Rs 10 crore.

▶ Steel units, which can now import sponge iron at a lower customs duty. Revenue loss: Rs 27.6 crore.

▶ Consumers of soda ash, on which the import duty has been reduced to 25 per cent. Revenue loss: over Rs 13 crore.

Singh's munificence has not been limited to the large industrial houses or to big industry, and covers such unsung sections of society as cricket and hockey players. He conceded the demand of sports goods manufacturers to treat the cork wood and cork waste imported for these balls at par with other cork products, with a concessional duty of 50 per cent against over 140 per cent for the balls. And in the educational field, a press note last fortnight said: "In the interest of visual and practical education in astronomy etc, for students in particular and members of the public in general, equipment to be imported for setting up planetaria...is being exempted from customs duties." The Department of Revenue was still to finalise the list of equipment required for four planetaria to come up in Rajasthan, Tamil Nadu, Kerala and Gujarat. And a major concession came in the form of a notification which said that any supplies made to Indian companies in response to a global tender would be treated as deemed exports. This was done to make indigenous manufacturers competitive with foreign companies and to help import

V.P. Singh is suddenly a changed man, playing host at a series of friendly open house sessions with businessmen, announcing tax concessions, duty reductions and fiscal reform.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

substitution.

Some of the concessions went directly contrary to what Singh had done in his budget. In the case of the air-conditioning industry, for example, the budget had witnessed a hefty increase in the duties applicable to the industry. But now, Singh announced substantial duty concessions even though two of the industry's stalwarts—Fedders Lloyd and Voltas—had been charged in recent months with major excise violations. Fedders Lloyd has been served with a show cause notice for over Rs 21 crore, while Voltas offices were raided by taxmen. Clearly, Singh now bears no animus against even those businessmen and companies which were in the thick of the battle that he was waging as recently as a couple of months ago for bringing errant companies to book.

BHAWAN SINGH

Inevitably, the business world was abuzz with talk of who had gained and who lost, and who had walked away with the biggest slice of the cake that the finance minister was cutting and distributing. And by common consent, the man to emerge from the Open House sessions with the broadest smile was V.P. Punj of Fedders Lloyd. Under one guise or another, Punj was present at almost half of all the meetings that Singh had with businessmen, and his group emerged as one the biggest beneficiaries. Officials in the Finance Ministry were heard to remark that a man who heads a group with a dozen companies was spending half his day in the Open House sessions, pleading for a variety of duty concessions.

Equally interesting was the case of the withdrawal of the anti-dumping duty on polyester filament yarn. Bombay Dyeing Chairman Nusli Wadia and Reliance Industries Executive Director Anil Ambani were among the industry representatives present at the Open House session for the textile industry. Wadia and others asked for, and got, the anti-dumping duty abolished. While this might help Ambani immediately (he is one of the largest importers of yarn), it is against Reliance's long-term interest. But V.P. Singh was sufficiently persuaded by those who argued against the anti-dumping duty, and off it went.

The business world as well as several leading Congressmen believe that Singh's new approach is in response to the growing criticism that he was treating businessmen and industrialists at par with common criminals. Earlier, Singh had withstood pressures from within his own party to meet businessmen, and gone to the extent of refusing appointments to his own party MPs who had approached him with the cases of 'aggrieved industrialists'. Some important MPs had, after failing to get an audience with Singh, met the prime minister and convinced him that Singh's touch-me-not attitude was annoying the most powerful lobby in the country. Even some friendly industrialists advised Rajiv Gandhi to convince the finance minister that he should not avoid genuine representations and should try to get a first-hand account of the problems faced by industry and trade. This was indirectly conveyed to Singh, but it was also made clear that no mercy was to be shown to any economic offender, irrespective of his connections.

> "There is buoyancy in the tax collections; and if I get more by giving less, then why not? Is it bad economics to give tax relief to generate more production and finally more revenue?"

But Singh and his advisers maintain that no special mercies are being shown in the new drive and that the tax concessions have been given after careful scrutiny. Said Singh: "It is a figment of the imagination to believe that my ministry can be pressurised by any lobbies or individuals. All the decisions have been taken after being examined by not only the Finance Ministry but also by other concerned ministries. I have given reliefs to those who really deserved it." Singh disclosed that the decision to withdraw the duty on polyester filament yarn was taken only on the specific recommendations of the Industry Ministry. Similarly, the tax concessions for the electronics industry were based on the recommendations of the inter-ministerial committee in which the Department of Electronics played a major role. "I have not given anything which the country can't afford," Singh insisted. "There is buoyancy in the tax collections; and if I get more by giving less, then why not? Is it bad economics to give tax relief to generate more production and finally more revenue?" The finance minister promised to exceed budget revenue targets yet again. The revenue target for the year was fixed in the budget at Rs 20,393 crore, but Singh has directed his officials to collect at least Rs 22,432 crore.

Finally, decrying any suggestion that he had become soft on economic offenders and errant businessmen, Singh argued: "It is not correct that the Government has softened its drive against tax evasion and the unearthing of black money. The drive is still on and will soon be accelerated if they don't behave as honest tax-payers." And he instructed his officials to speed up action on some outstanding cases even as tax sleuths scoured London, Switzerland and the United States for evidence of fresh wrongdoing. Said Singh: "Whatever others may say, we still believe that a combination of the carrot and stick is the best policy. At times the carrot may be more visible than the hidden stick." Right now, at least, that is certainly the case and Indian businessmen have enjoyed a summer of unexpected contentment after a winter of conflict.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOREIGN TRADE

Temporary Reprieve

RARELY had the country's foreign trade situation seemed so bleak: an unprecedented trade deficit of Rs 8,300 crore or more in 1985-86 (up by a staggering 50 per cent from the previous year), declining exports, the uniform failure of the Government's numerous export-promotion schemes and a seemingly endless upward import spiral even as the growing repayment of the $3.9 billion loan taken from the International Monetary Fund (IMF) loomed large.

But providence has come to India's rescue once again: oil. Once earlier, oil had provided a bonanza, when domestic petroleum production shot up from 12 million to 29 million tonnes between 1980 and 1985. This time, salvation has come from imported oil, whose prices have crashed to their lowest level in close to a decade.

The fall in international petroleum prices is expected to give India a windfall import saving of Rs 2,000 crore this year—more than thrice the Rs 610 crore that the country will be repatriating to the IMF against its loan. The unexpected bonanza has smoothened many a creased forehead in the Finance Ministry. Said a vastly relieved Bimal Jalan, chief economic adviser: "Now the balance of payments position looks much, much better."

The scenario, just a few months ago, was truly dismal. Exports had actually dropped by over 10 per cent, from Rs 11,855 crore in 1984-85 to an estimated Rs 10,200 crore last year (the final figures aren't yet in). But the lower international oil prices have come like manna from heaven. Even the World Bank in its latest report on India's economic situation felt that, after the fall in the oil prices, India's balance of payments position "changes significantly". The balance of payments deficit on the current account is now expected to decline from 1.1 per cent of the gross domestic product in 1984-85 to a miniscule 0.1 per cent in 1989-90. And according to the Geneva-based secretariat of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), India is one of four countries expected to reap the maximum benefit from lower petroleum prices.

But the new scenario of a lower trade deficit takes factors other than cheap oil also into account. There is, for instance, the simultaneous fall in the global prices of edible oils, another bulk item in the country's import basket. And this year, the Government is focusing on reducing the imports of such bulk items since they account for most of the total foreign exchange bill. Thus, edible oils imports are expected to come down to 11 lakh tonnes, from 14 lakh tonnes last year. Because of higher domestic production, sugar imports will drop sharply from 15 lakh tonnes to 6 lakh tonnes. And fertiliser imports too will be substantially lower this year because of stockpiling last year, when international prices were depressed. It is too early in the day to forecast just how much smaller the trade deficit will be this year as a result of all this, but there is little doubt that the gains will be substantial.

Yet, these gains cannot be expected to be repeated year after year, and the Government knows it. Says Jalan: "We are not counting on this phenomenon while planning our balance of payments strategy." And given the limits to import substitution, exports will necessarily have to rise dramatically if the balance of payments problem is to be licked. As Planning Commission Deputy Chairman Manmohan Singh pointed out last month, the savings in the petroleum import bill will only "give us breathing space to...bring about greater dynamism in our export sector."

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Officials argue that the drop in exports last year was essentially because of a drop of Rs 1,500 crore in the export of domestic oil. If that were the full story, it would be comforting. But the statistics show that there is genuine cause for worry in other export sectors as well. Engineering exports, for instance, were supposed to be the success story of the 1980s, comprising nearly 14 per cent of the export basket. Yet these declined last year, netting only Rs 935 crore in the first 11 months of 1985-86, against Rs 1,020 crore over the same period in 1984-85. Electronic items, motor vehicles, automobile parts, transmission line towers, sugar machinery—all saw a dip in their exports. And these are all areas which had been listed as 'thrust areas" in the much-heralded D.V. Kapur report on the strategies to be adopted for pushing engineering exports. With tea and tobacco exports also dipping, even the export of traditional items failed to cheer.

More worrying, however, is that nothing seems to be succeeding in giving exports a lift-off—neither the various export subsidies (like the cash compensatory support and the duty drawback facility) nor the plethora of schemes to boost exports launched by the Government over the years: the 100 per cent export-oriented unit (EOU) scheme, the green card system, the import-export passbook, the advanced licensing and supplementary licensing schemes and the free trade zones. Thanks primarily to bureaucratic bungling, all these schemes have come a cropper.

The 100 per cent EOU scheme has failed because no state government is willing to grant the concessions and facilities that the Central Government has promised on paper. K.G. Khosla, who heads the K.G. Khosla industrial empire, cites the classic case of Prashant Khosla Pneumatic, a 100 per cent EOU in Nasik which, with all its concessions, took over three years to come on line while a domestic unit of the same company situated nearby started production within 10 months of the foundation-stone being laid.

THE GREEN card, issued to 100 per cent EOUs and ostensibly meant as a passport to the priority allotment of a host of inputs, has become irrelevant because no government department recognises it. Khosla's company, like many others, had no success in obtaining priority allotment for power connections, telephones, cement or steel.

The advanced licensing and the supplementary licensing schemes are archetypal examples of good schemes going to waste purely because of the time taken to procure these licenses. Industrialists cite numerous examples of "advance" licenses taking six months to materialise.

"Now the balance of payments position looks much, much better."

BIMAL JALAN
chief economic adviser, Ministry of Finance

"The smaller oil bill gives us breathing space to make exports more dynamic."

MANMOHAN SINGH
deputy chairman, Planning Commission

Though the Government has decided on four more free trade zones, opinion on their utility continues to be divided.

The latest scheme announced by the Government, the import-export passbook, is a non-starter, as is admitted even by officials of the ministries of commerce and industry. More than 13 months after the scheme was announced not a single passbook has been issued by the offices of the chief controller of imports and exports in Delhi. Said an industrialist: "The greatest non-tariff barrier to exports is the Ministry of Commerce."

Perhaps nobody would agree more than Triveni Engineering's Dhruv Sawhney, who was simultaneously awarded the export shield of the year by the Engineering Export Promotion Council and blacklisted as a defaulting exporter by the chief controller of imports and exports. Sawhney's crime: after successfully setting up a Rs 28 crore sugar plant in Indonesia, Triveni Engineering could not re-export a Rs 12 lakh consignment to Nigeria because that Government defaulted in opening the letter of credit.

A mood for change in official policy has been set with what have come to be known as "Saturday meetings" at Udyog Bhavan, where an inter-ministerial group of officials meets individual exporters every Saturday to thrash out their problems. The Saturday meetings are a welcome change from a macro-level approach to a micro-level identification of not just "thrust industries and markets" but individual "thrust companies and thrust products". Meanwhile, the Government is also roping in the entire diplomatic corps into devoting a "special effort" to increase exports. A letter from the Ministry of External Affairs to all the heads of Indian missions abroad last fortnight stressed that "political and economic diplomacy must go together".

In the ultimate analysis, however, it is the exporters who have to deliver the goods. And as things stand, nothing could be more reflective of the present state of affairs than former commerce secretary Abid Hussain's quip when told by the then commerce minister Pranab Mukherjee that industry should be given the slogan "export or perish". Replied Hussain: "Given a choice Indian industry would rather perish than export!"

—TANIA MIRIA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To us virtuosity means a commitment to excellence in every facet of general insurance. Excellence in servicing the needs of our clients. Excellence in keeping pace with the changing requirements of a burgeoning economy. And, finally, it means striving for, and attaining, goals that are just that much higher than the others.

Just consider the facts. Today we are...

Unmatched in size... the largest general insurance company in the country... with a premium income of Rs. 370 crores; assets worth Rs. 828 crores; accounting for 30% of total domestic premia and 70% of premia written directly by Indian insurers through their overseas offices.

Unequalled in growth... in the last year alone we have notched up Rs. 50 crores. The first time in the industry. Ever.

Unique in some of the covers we offer... need based policies with socio-economic objectives... like the Cancer Insurance scheme.

Unusual in our catalytic effect... because far-sighted manpower planning and training has resulted in producing giants who are amongst the front-runners in finance and industry. The tradition continues...

Unrivalled in technical services both urban and rural... our experts are acknowledged leaders in veterinary science, hydrology, marine insurance and automobile engineering.

Undisputed in claims disposal... with the fastest claims disposal rate in the industry.

What's more, we have taken a quantum leap in our international operations... by establishing our very own office in London.

It is for these reasons (and many more like them) that we occupy a position unique to us.

Head and shoulders above the rest.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India

So much security. For so little.

Contour Ads-NIA-128 A/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COURIER SERVICES

Going Places

SEVEN years ago, air courier companies didn't exist. Suddenly, they are everywhere and custom has been growing 60 per cent annually. At present, the business of speeding time-sensitive documents and parcels to commercial destinations is already worth Rs 40 crore, and getting set for take-off into the really big time.

But the take-off is proving turbulent. TNT-Skypack, one of the industry's leading outfits, set the dovecotes aflutter last month by announcing with an advertising splash that it was chartering Vayudoot aircraft to carry its packages across the country. That single deal would probably help treble Skypack's courier business, to Rs 15 crore, but it also had the rest of the pack screaming foul even as a surprised Minister of State for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler asked Vayudoot how it had given a virtual monopoly to just one company.

Vayudoot quickly made amends by offering similar services to other courier companies at the same rates. But Skypack has already sewn up 1,000 kg on each of the four nightly Vayudoot flights, more than half the total capacity available. So none of the others stands a chance of getting as much cargo space.

Included in the original deal is the Posts and Telegraphs Department, which gets almost as much space as Skypack on the special night flights. But the department was informed of the arrangement only at the eleventh hour, the Vayudoot timings are not the most convenient from the department's point of view, and one concerned official heard the news only on television. A telegram informing the department of the deal with Vayudoot arrived after the new service had already been launched. And the department says the courier services are violating the law by carrying not just parcels but also mail which, under the Postal Act, is supposed to be a government monopoly.

Skypack pulled off its Vayudoot coup when its main rival, Airfreight-DHL, was already negotiating with the airline for charter arrangements. And Airfreight Managing Director Cyrus Guzder claimed that "this service cannot be economical at the price that is being paid". But Skypack has little doubt that it will pay for itself and more. "I haven't gone into this with my eyes shut," said Skypack President Dilip Kulkarni. "Our tie-up with Vayudoot has only just started but we have seen a big spurt of inquiries already."

So, despite the to-do over the controversial deal, courier services are getting into top gear. "The number of courier companies is growing even faster than the business itself," said Ajit Ramchandani, proprietor, Arco Enterprises. He is absolutely right. Apart from Skypack and Airfreight-DHL (both of which have world-wide links), there is Blue Dart (which has links with Federal Express), Air Linkers, Blazeflash, Uniexpress, Trident, Superman, Spiderman and a host of others. "It is like the California gold rush," said Khusroo Dabash of Blue Dart.

"More and more people are realising the potential of courier companies, even grandmothers who want to send the occasional gift."

CYRUS GUZDER
managing director, Airfreight-DHL

Guzder agrees that business is about to explode: "More and more people are realising the potential. Students with applications to foreign universities, doctors requiring vital drugs which lose their potency in a day or two, and even grandmothers who want to send the occasional gift." Kulkarni claims a thousand regular customers, and Airfreight said that 80 per cent of the 101 largest companies in the whole country dealt with them.

But more business has also meant more competition. Companies are undercutting one another, the smaller ones saving on overheads in order to quote cheaper rates. Thus, Prem Gupta of Air Linkers says he charges only half what the big companies do. So even the bigger outfits are now forced to offer contract rates and discounts. Elwin de Souza of Trident says he has introduced a second day service that is considerably cheaper, and Arco has stopped refusing to accept odd-shaped packages.

For all that, there seems to be room for everyone. Blazeflash joined the fray only last April and claims to be growing 40 per cent every week. Uniexpress flagged off its operations only a year ago, but is already doing Rs 1 lakh a month, and Executive Director M. Nath says: "Business is growing day by day." Lemuir Express, which gave up the regular service to concentrate on its diamond courier business, resumed regular operations recently. "We had to start again from scratch," explains Director Snehal Parikh, "but there is no dearth of clients."

With chartered flights, radio-controlled vans and a demand explosion, courier companies are getting into top gear.

The bigger firms continue to aim higher. Kulkarni of Skypack, for instance, talks of having his own radio-control vans and other innovations. Clearly, the courier business is set to go places. And with more than 70 major domestic destinations claimed to be within 24-hour reach, it surely should.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SANCHAITA INVESTMENTS

The Loan Mela

IT WAS a money machine with few parallels. With its astonishing 48 per cent rate of interest, it offered its 2 lakh-odd depositors the hope of making a quick buck. It also garnered its promoters anywhere between Rs 100 crore and Rs 600 crore, pitchforking them into undreamt of wealth.

But five years after Sanchaita Investments crashed, the detritus is still being looked at. Presiding over the process are a retired district court judge appointed by the Supreme Court three years ago to help depositors recover their money, the 2,500-strong Sanchaita Depositors' Forum (SDF), and the West Bengal Government's bureau of investigations. The trio have joined forces to unearth the huge sums of money some of the company's promoters and agents are believed to have squirrelled away.

The Supreme Court armed Sanchaita Commissioner N.C. Datta with powers to seize Sanchaita property even if it was held in benami names. Tipped off by the government agency and the depositors' forum, the 68-year-old Datta has seized and auctioned over 200 items: 20 flats and other real estate in Bombay plus a few in Calcutta, cinema halls in West Bengal, and ornaments and bank accounts from all over the country.

Apart from landing the commissioner in over 100 court cases, most of which he won, the furious spree of seizures has had another fall-out. P.K. Goswami, president of the SDF, reports that he receives phone calls warning him off the Sanchaita money trail. Adds Datta: "Everyone's your enemy if you attach property. I feel that our lives are not very safe."

The bright side of the picture: Datta's haul has snared nearly Rs 6 crore for the company's depositors and may eventually net them another Rs 3 crore. That will certainly be hurrahed by the thousands of poor people who put their last paise into the firm.

Farmer Mrinal Kanti Ghosh, for example, sold paddy and potatoes, pooled in his savings and deposited Rs 4,000 with a local Sanchaita sub-agent six years ago. For over a year, the agent handed over Rs 120 in monthly interest—a hefty 36 per cent annual rate of return on his investment, a welcome addition to his niggardly monthly income of Rs 150. But one not-so-fine day, unhappily for Ghosh, the money finally stopped coming in.

Queues at Sanchaita office

KALYAN CHAKRAVORTY

The Sanchaita commissioner has seized and auctioned real estate from all over the country, raising nearly Rs 6 crore for Sanchaita's depositors. The money is now being disbursed.

LOAN CERTIFICATE RECEIPT

Sanchaita Investments

Loan certificates: breach of trust

Last month, Ghosh journeyed from his home at Meria village to central Calcutta. At a tacky building, he joined people from all walks of life who had been informed that they could collect 15 per cent of the sums they had deposited with Sanchaita—and walked out with a cheque for Rs 600.

The daily queues at the cooperative bank building are a familiar sight by now. They mirror a crumbling of hopes, the denouement of a drama that feverishly gripped West Bengal. For the six years that it flourished, Sanchaita was an El Dorado to its depositors. With tentacles that spread far beyond the state, it initially offered a whopping 48 per cent interest of which only 12 per cent was on paper. Obviously, a company that offered such fantastic rates could remain in business only so long as it attracted large enough deposits to pay the old depositors their dues.

Still, the firm had an impeccable record of paying interest on time, come rain or shine, and the credulous flocked in droves. Depositors who invested early reaped rich rewards, quickly recovering their principal in interest alone. Seeing this, thousands pulled out their savings and followed suit, only to be ruined when the bubble burst five years ago, helped along by the state Government cracking down on the firm. By then, however, Sanchaita's promoters and agents had stashed away crores. Adding mystery to high drama, Sanchaita promoter Sambu Prasad Mukherjee leaped or was pushed to his death from a multi-storeyed building in Calcutta (the murder theory still holds sway in Calcutta although the police claim that he committed suicide), while Bihari Lal Murarka, the second promoter, went underground and has not been traced since.

Right now, however, the focus of attention is the depositor. Some 1.70 lakh investors have filed claims for refund of their principals, but not all will get them. For one, the commissioner's office has prescribed a cut-off date (December 13, 1980, when the bureau of investigations raided the firm and its agents) and those who don't qualify will receive a pittance, if anything. Then, under the terms of a Supreme Court order, only claims relating to deposits of up to Rs 25,000 can be entertained;

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I know! I know! It's Bakeman's Cream Crunch."

Delicious Bakeman's Cream Crunch! You can't mistake the crisp crumbly biscuit and the smooth creamy filling—whether orange, elaichi or butter cream.

Bakeman's Cream Crunch. Just one bite–and you'll know!

Bakeman's
Home Baked Freshness

Cream Crunch

Really creamy down to the last crumb.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Millions of kilometres from the earth, the sun works silently to bring electricity to the Arabian Sea.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Central Electronics Limited – manning the unmanned Oil-well head platforms of Bombay High with solar photovoltaic power.

In the unmanned oil-well head platforms of Bombay High, another source of energy is at work. Silently and efficiently.

Solar Photovoltaic (SPV) Power Systems custom built by Central Electronics Limited for Telemetry, Electronics and Gas Detection Instrumentation function unfailingly.

Round the clock, throughout the year.

Recent inspection and testing on operational platforms on the Bombay High have conclusively revealed that CEL made SPV Systems have been functioning much better than the earlier imported systems. Sturdy, reliable and suited to the Indian environment.

CEL's state-of-the-art technology, and ONGC's choice of CEL Systems against stiff global competition for so vital and urgent a programme, clearly proves India's and CEL's capabilities internationally.

Indeed, an independent U.S. study in June 1985 recognized CEL's role not merely as the leader in all Third-World countries, but also as one of the top 10 firms in the world.

Power from the Sun

The conversion of solar energy directly into electricity, is slowly but surely becoming a reality, especially in remote areas inaccessible to other commercial forms of electricity.

Through SPV—a technology that has been pioneered in this country by Central Electronics Limited.

A Corporation that is dedicated to taking electrical power to places where it was once considered next to impossible. In collaboration with the sun – the inexhaustible source.

CEL Central Electronics Limited

A Govt. of India (DSIR) Enterprise

4, Industrial Area, Sahibabad 201 010 (UP)

Shaping the future with the sun

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone From HELENE CURTIS

The Hair Dye you can trust

New Easy to apply! Tru-Tone Self-spreading Hair Dye.

Self-spreading action:
Just apply the dye and lather it in.
It spreads evenly by itself.

Longer lasting, deep-dye action:
New Tru-Tone comes with the unique deep-dye action to give you a natural colour that stays on longer.

Pleasantly perfumed, with conditioner:
Tru-Tone keeps your hair soft and manageable.
Looking younger was never so easy!

New

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

everest/85/JKHC/603

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bigger depositors will have to queue up for the leftovers.

Few would question these norms. The 1980 cutoff date makes sense because depositors who invested before then would have recovered much of their principal in the form of interest. And the commissioner's office quite rightly has taken up the cases of smaller (Rs 1,000 to Rs 4,000) depositors first and has disbursed cash to the needy. Explains Datta: "Many widows have been ruined. We have been paying up to Rs 1,000 as relief to those suffering from serious diseases." By last month, Rs 1.12 crore had been handed over to some 33,500 depositors. At least an equal number may ultimately gain some cash, and Datta hopes to wind up his show by the middle of next year.

Even so, many believe that Sanchaita agents and others siphoned off much more money than has been unearthed, and that Datta's deadline is therefore over-optimistic. The SDF claimed in court that the company had collected deposits to the tune of Rs 600 crore, while the West Bengal Government in an affidavit put the figure at around Rs 500 crore. Top police sources, however, argue that not more than Rs 100 crore would have been left in the company's coffers after paying depositors their interest and agents their commission. Says a senior police official: "Sanchaita's annual rate of interest before October 1979 was 48 per cent. Another 12 per cent was paid as commission to agents. So 60 per cent of the collections would have gone straightaway."

The police official also claims that the only surviving Sanchaita partner Swapan Guha and his brother Tapan, a company agent who is believed to have masterminded the Sanchaita show in its later years, are no longer as well off as they were. The Guhas were not available for comment, but Goswami remains unconvinced. The retired pharmaceuticals company doctor believes that some of Sanchaita's kingpins stashed cash in Nepal and elsewhere.

Even as the debate continues, major cases are scheduled to come up in court. A host of Sanchaita agents and sub-agents have already been charged with criminal breach of trust and cheating in seven cases, but many are out on bail. Six more cases and 30 more arrests are in the offing. But before Sanchaita's loose ends are finally tied up, years of sparring in court clearly lie ahead.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Calcutta

HPC

Deep Trouble

MAKING paper was discovered by the Chinese a few years before the birth of Christ. Making money has an even more ancient history. But the public sector Hindustan Paper Corporation (HPC) still seems in urgent need of a crash course in both.

The company's inventory is largely a bunch of white elephants. And, just as the beleaguered company thought it would be dealt an ace by the Government, it has been left grasping thin air: a prized newsprint project in Uttar Pradesh will go to Nepa Mill instead of HPC.

"It does not make sense," says bemused Managing Director Major-General V.P. Yadav. "We had worked very hard and had submitted papers for the initial clearance when the project was taken off our hands." He has reason to be worried: without the project, HPC faces a bleak financial future. None of its units is profit-making, not even the Nowgong paper mill commissioned last year; and total losses have increased from Rs 16.9 crore in 1982-'83 to Rs 46.16 crore in 1985-'86. With a total investment of Rs 845 crore, the turnover last year was only Rs 81 crore, and accumulated losses Rs 126.23 crore.

With the Government deciding that a prized newsprint project in Uttar Pradesh should go to Nepa Mill, Hindustan Paper Corporation faces a bleak financial future.

Yadav fired off a letter to Industry Minister N.D. Tiwari protesting against the "illogical" decision of denying HPC the project, but this cut no ice—perhaps because of its dismal record in project implementation and because its own top management seems divided on the subject. While Yadav has been pushing the project, HPC's Delhi-based chairman Subramaniam feels that it has enough on its plate: "My own first priority would be the stabilisation of existing units."

HPC's units could do with a lot of stabilising. The corporation has staked some 70 per cent of its 3.3 lakh tonnes annual production capacity and about 80 per cent of its investment in three north-eastern mills—all potential leeches on its coffers. The Rs 84-crore Nagaland unit, commissioned in 1982, has already piled up losses of over Rs 67.5 crore, and has often worked in fits and starts. The Nowgong and Cachar units, delayed by over three years by the Assam agitation, have cost double the original estimates and made losses from the start. Total production last year was 97,000 tonnes, less than 30 per cent of capacity.

Yadav does not deny that HPC is in trouble. But it never did have much of a chance. Its first unit, a sick private sector mill in Karnataka, was wished on it by the Government. And, though the Kerala unit is contributing its mite, the north-eastern Waterloo has stalled all hopes of emergence from the sick bay.

Cachar plant: losing proposition

JAYANTA SHAW

So, the Uttar Pradesh project was crucial. Says Yadav: "As a potentially profitable proposition, it would have been a great balancing factor in our overall viability equation." Now the only prospect is more years in the red.

Caught in a vicious circle, HPC, with its poor track record, is unlikely to find itself entrusted with more projects. As the chairman admits: "The Government has taken the overall view." And, with only losers on its hands, HPC's performance is not likely to improve.

"I knew what I was getting into when I joined HPC in September 1984," says Yadav. "My idea was to take measures to bring the corporation on an even keel in as few years as possible." But those years seem destined to stretch far beyond what the sanguine general had ever reckoned.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOLIDAY RESORTS

A Share of the Sun

TO SATYA Jain, the advantages seemed overwhelming. By acquiring a stake in a comfortable apartment at a fraction of its cost, she could holiday in Goa at carnival time, and without having to foot hefty hotel bills. Jain vacations almost every year with her husband and children. So last month, egged on by a friend who had taken the plunge, she wrote out a cheque for a week's time in a two-bedroom flat at a proposed holiday home complex in the balmy beach resort.

The Delhi-based housewife is among a small but mushrooming body of holiday-makers who are buying time in holiday resorts. Property- or time-sharing, as the concept is called, offers those who chip in the right to stay for a week or weeks every year at the chosen resort. The right can be willed to one's heirs, sold, rented out or even exchanged for similar time slots at other locations. Imitating similar ventures abroad, six companies including the state-owned Punjab Tourism Development Corporation are offering time-sharing schemes. And a major hotel chain could soon join the fray. Prospective holiday-makers like Satya Jain have already chipped in with over Rs 3.5 crore, which is modest considering the massive media blitz launched by the companies, but pickings are expected to burgeon.

Explains B.V.S.A.N Murthy, general manager of Dalmia Resorts International, which has launched a Rs 1-crore media campaign: "The buyer is assigned an apartment at a resort in perpetuity for a particular week. Obviously, no one wants to go to the same place all his life. Time-sharing gives people the opportunity to exchange with other people." Argues Dattaray Vedak, a director of the Bombay-based Ornate Club, which is hawking a variant of the time-sharing scheme: "With the stresses and strains of modern life people have realised that holidays have become important. Till recently they went to their home towns. Now they are trying to find a place to relax." Adds Gurmeet Singh, managing director of the Palace Holiday Resorts: "This industry's potential is in thousands of crores. The boom will start next year when the first few resorts come up."

The plans on the anvil are ambitious enough. Palace Holiday Resorts intends to launch 35 resorts and hotels nationwide, Dalmia Resorts says it is working on a Rs 300-crore project involving 32 resorts, and even the one-location Shikar Holiday Resorts will eventually spread its wings to cover eight or 10 spots. The profits are expected to match these plans: Deepak Shivpuri of Shikar Holiday Resorts reckons that even in the most adverse conditions his 18-apartment complex at Shimla will fetch him Rs 70,000 a year. The big boys can, of course, expect to rake in fancier sums.

Time-sharing ads: media blitz

The schemes being hawked vary in quality and price. While most offer the comforts of home—linen, kitchenware, television—the upmarket companies also trumpet video channels and other trimmings. Costs range from the down market Rs 5,500 to Rs 28,500, depending, of course, on the number of rooms and the time of the year. Most of the firms in the business are plugging year-round schemes even though the holiday season runs only from April to October. Some will throw in week-end packages for Rs 300 to 400. Says architect V.K. Mago, who heads M.S. Resorts International: "Our income from week-end packages will be pure profit".

If company brochures are anything to go by, the rates are bound to escalate as real estate prices keep spiralling. And promoters argue that the investor will reap fat returns if he wants to sell his week's time-share. Even as that remains to be seen, some companies are bracing to offer clients added attractions: computerised brokerage services to help customers sell or rent their stake.

The final sweetener: facilities to exchange weeks with members of similar ventures abroad. Both Palace Resorts and Dalmia are vying to tie up with foreign firms that offer exchange facilities, and even hold letters of intent from the US-based Resort Condominiums International. What this means is that those who have stakes in the property-sharing schemes can apply for a week's stay at any of the 1,000 sites world-wide—provided they give up their own week at a similar resort in the country, with a fee of under $50. But it isn't clear whether foreign resorts will be keen on exchanging habitation rights when domestic resorts are not even ready.

As a holiday concept, time-sharing still has to take off. But there seems little doubt that it eventually will. And when that happens, it might end up as the biggest vacation industry boom to hit the country.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The technology is Binatone. The success worldwide.

Binatone technology combines the best of the East and West. This has made Binatone the single largest independent Electronics company in England.

The same technology that has planted Binatone's roots throughout the rest of the world, with production and R&D set ups in Japan, Korea, Hongkong, Taiwan, Germany and England.

Today, Binatone products are sold in 50 countries the world over and the corporate quest continues—to turn out products that meet the ever rising demands of a technology conscious world.

No wonder then, Binatone has outsold even Japanese products in England.

Since you buy a Colour TV only once in your lifetime, buy best, buy Binatone.

You won't find a better deal.

Binatone

Built better to last longer

Binatone Electronics Private Limited,
B-58, Site IV, Sahibabad Industrial Area,
Sahibabad-201010 (U.P).

Ams Communications 186

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Chennai Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...on Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd., Surat, an associate of the Vareli Group of Industries.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Garden*®
...and Garden creates the new woman.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Sita, Mercury and Casino Nepal:

The Soaltee Surprise

Escape to the new world of an ancient kingdom in Kathmandu.

Combine a perfect retreat with the most luxurious holiday at the Soaltee Oberoi: 4 days, 3 nights of unmatched pleasure. Your choice of Continental or Indian breakfast every day. Two deluxe half-day city sight-seeing tours. Free accommodation for 2 children up to 12 years in the same room without extra bed. Free airport-hotel-airport transfers.

Plus

Free-play casino-coupons worth Rs. 1,200

All, for Rs. 1,234 per person on a twin-sharing basis (Rs. 1,830 for single-occupancy) — inclusive of all taxes. (Prices indicated in Indian rupees.)

Hotel Soaltee Oberoi

EIH-104/2

For bookings and details, contact your nearest Sita, Mercury or Oberoi Instant Reservations Office or a bonafide travel agent.

Phone Numbers: Bombay SITA 240666 MERCURY 2024343 OBEROI 2024343 Ahmedabad SITA 409105 OBEROI 464451 Delhi SITA 3311122, 3312764 MERCURY 312008 OBEROI 699571 Srinagar SITA 78891, 77186 MERCURY 78786 OBEROI 71241 Kanpur SITA 68171 Jaipur SITA 68226 Agra SITA 66181 Varanasi SITA 42945, 43121 MERCURY 62021 Calcutta SITA 297185 MERCURY 443555/59 OBEROI 292323 Madras SITA 478861 MERCURY 8112220 OBEROI 478156 Bangalore SITA 578091 MERCURY 577681 OBEROI 53444 Hyderabad SITA 233628 MERCURY 34411 Cochin SITA 33012, 31101.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMPUTER SHOPS

Byte Boom

BYTE by byte, they are making their presence felt. Two years ago there was not a single computer retail outlet in India; today they are blossoming like umbrellas in a nonsoon shower. First came Computer Point in Bombay, which soon spread its wings to Delhi, Bangalore and Madras. Then, the avalanche in the making—Computer City and The Abacus, Computer Hotline, Computer Shack and even a computer stationery outfit, Bombay Stationery Mart (BSM).

They are growing not just in numbers but in size too. "We aim to add six outlets next year," says R. Ramaraj, the Bangalore-based chief executive of Computer Point. His company, which made a successful public issue of shares last December, is not alone in trying to make it to the big time. Computer Shack, which set up shop in Bombay barely five months ago, has gone on a major drive to collar personnel for its planned extension to seven other cities. With many others raring to go, the next two years could well see at least half a dozen such retail chains straddling the country.

The figures reveal why everyone is so keen on getting into the business of, as the BSM slogan puts it, providing "everything you ever wanted for your computer". Computer Point's Bombay outlet, set up 18 months ago, is grossing Rs 2.83 lakh a day, Computer Shack is close to hitting Rs 1 lakh and BSM, still in its infancy, is raking in Rs 1 lakh. Those with more shops can, of course, expect bigger pickings. Computer Point, for example, hopes to notch up a turnover of Rs 18 crore this year from its four outlets. And those in the business are convinced that hardware and software worth Rs 500 crore will be retailed in five years' time.

Several forces have converged to make this possible. Retail computer outlets offer a wide range of systems of software, peripherals and other paraphernalia, all under one roof. So they can match the customer's needs much better than any individual manufacturer, and offer credible advice without a manufacturer's bias. "We are not pushing any system," says Farath Kapur, director of Computer Shack. "Our margins being the same, we are bound to suggest the most appropriate make." Adds Shiv Parthasarthy, general manager of the Delhi-based Computer City: "Computer prices have fallen, and with margins low and overheads high, manufacturers are refusing to hold clients' hands. Sorting out the day-to-day hassles that customers face costs money." In steps the retail outlet once again.

And Ramaraj of Computer Point feels that the informal atmosphere of computer shops has also contributed to their growing popularity: "You can come in here and display a certain level of ignorance. Most manufacturers are likely to bowl you over with a lot of jargon. Nobody likes to look like a fool."

BSM's clients evidently didn't. The stationery concern's computer venture was inspired not so much by the realisation of a business opportunity as by the demands of its regular customers for such a service. "We still do not have sufficient hardware," admits a marketing executive of the computer division, "but we have the business."

What is crucial in peddling computerware retail is location, and space is at a premium in big cities. A prime spot in Bombay comes for nothing less than Rs 80 lakh. "Of course," says Ramaraj, "the investment is less elsewhere but so too is the turnover." Kapur also estimates that of Computer Shack's planned investment of Rs 5 crore, the lion's share will be grabbed by Delhi, where property is equally dear. The company is going public soon to raise funds for its expansion.

These proliferating retail outlets are basically removing much of the awe in which the average urbanite holds computers. "People can just walk in and take a look," says Ramaraj. They do: some 85 per cent of the company's custom comes this way. And the pattern of clientele—individuals, small companies, trading houses and entrepreneurs—only proves that the computer shops are the small man's licence to the fast lane. The retail outlets, as Ramaraj puts it, "don't just sell, they have an inbuilt consultancy too".

With all these going for them, the time may not be far off when computer retail outlets are as familiar a feature of the urban landscape as the neighbourhood fast food parlour or video shop.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

Computer City (below); The Abacus (bottom left); and Computer Shack

The time may not be far off when computer retail are as familiar a feature of the urban landscape as the neighbourhood fast food parlour or video shop.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ZUARI AGRO CHEMICALS LIMITED

JAI KISAAN

STATEMENT OF THE CHAIRMAN SHRI K. K. BIRLA AT THE EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING HELD ON JUNE 5, 1986

Shri K. K. Birla

Ladies and Gentlemen:

I have great pleasure in welcoming you to the Eighteenth Annual General Meeting of the Company. You have already received the Annual Report with the audited accounts and the Directors' Report for the year ending December 31, 1985. I seek your permission to take them as read.

I think it would be appropriate to briefly review the performance of the country's economy as a whole before I come to the affairs of your Company.
The country's economy has achieved a durable agricultural and industrial base, with sizeable infrastructural facilities. It is a proud achievement that our economy has, over the years since independence, attained remarkable maturity and potential for growth.

Both the agricultural and industrial sectors have put in a good performance during the last year. The first year of the Seventh Five Year Plan has started on an optimistic note. With good buffer stocks of foodgrains and adequate production and supply of manufactured goods, the economy is geared for sustained growth during the Seventh Plan period. However, the increasing the trade deficit is a matter for concern with rising imports and the slow growth in exports.

In spite of another capricious monsoon, we have had good harvests for the third successive year. The production of foodgrains during 1985-86 is estimated at about 151 million tonnes, which underlines the resilence that Indian agriculture has attained. According to reports, the buffer stocks of foodgrains stand at around 35 million tonnes. Food imports are a thing of the past, and we may emerge, within a few years, as exporters of foodgrains. There are, of course, areas where further effort is needed. There has been insufficient improvement in the production of oilseeds and pulses, and the production of sugarcane also has not been in step with the growing demand for sugar. During the current plan period, corrective measures, I understand, are being taken to overcome these weaknesses in the agricultural sector.

In the industrial sector the performance of the major industries was better compared to the previous year.

Production was stepped up in steel, aluminium, fertilisers, cement, automobile and electronics and other industries. The power situation improved substantially. The buoyancy of the economy was reflected in the capital market which witnessed an unprecedented mobilisation of resources.

These favourable changes in the economic climate have been caused mainly by the pragmatic policies initiated by the Prime Minister, Shri Rajiv Gandhi, and the dynamism and the enthusiasm with which the industrial and business community of the country have responded to these policies.

Coming to the fertiliser industry, I would say that although we have done well we cannot be complacent.
The output of nitrogenous fertilisers is estimated at 4.3 million tonnes in 1985-86, an increase of 8.8% over the previous year and of phosphatic fertilisers 1.4 million tonnes, an increase of 4.4%. Capacity utilisation in the fertiliser industry touched an all-time high – 75% for nitrogenous and 90% for phosphatic fertilisers. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the country has been importing substantial quantities of fertilisers in the last few years. In 1984-85 imports aggregated 3.6 million tonnes of nutrients at a cost exceeding Rs. 1400 crores in foreign exchange. Obviously, one of the significant challenges before the industry is to step up production and complete new projects in time to minimise imports and stem the heavy drain on the country's foreign exchange resources.

The import of fertilisers does have a bright side as it reflects the sustained increase in consumption. According to the consumption projections of the Seventh Plan period, the annual growth rate is expected to be 11%. At the end of the Plan, the consumption would reach 14 million tonnes of nutrients compared to the current level of around nine million tonnes.

I have no doubt that our fertiliser industry, the fourth largest in the world, will courageously meet the challenges that lie ahead both in boosting production and in increasing consumption, particularly in the dryland areas and for crops like oilseeds and pulses.

Coming to the operations of your Company, I am happy to state that in the year under review the overall performance of the Company continued to be highly satisfactory. The financial results of the Company during 1985 showed the gross profit increasing to Rs. 22.08 crores compared to Rs. 21.90 crores in the previous year. The profit before taxation was Rs. 17.27 crores as against Rs. 14.85 crores in 1984.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Similarly, the net profit was higher at Rs. 11.14 crores compared to Rs. 10.48 crores in the previous year.

The plant performance, as you must have seen in the Director's Report, was the best ever achieved by the Company. The capacity utilisation of the Ammonia plant was 95.8 per cent as against 90 per cent in the preceeding year. The NPK plant also registered a higher capacity utilisation at 116 per cent, compared to 106 per cent in the previous year. The Urea plant, however, operated at 86.4 per cent mainly because of the diversion of ammonia to the DAP plant. You will be happy to know that our DAP plant, which was commissioned last year, is operating extremely well. It was creditable that the plant achieved a capacity utilisation of 103.8 per cent during the very first year of operation. During the year we manufactured 210,752 tonnes of Ammonia, 293,783 tonnes of Urea, 174,182 tonnes of NPK and 155,657 tonnes of DAP. These figures bear testimony to the hard and dedicated work put in by our people.

As mentioned in the Directors' Report, our sales scaled a new peak at 584,245 tonnes compared to last year's sales of 528,245 tonnes. However, we were saddled with larger inventories. This was the result of the general glut in fertiliser availability experienced throughout the country due to large scale imports, higher indigenous production and the drought which affected demand. It is hoped that the situation would stabilise with the cutting down of imports by Government and expectations of a good monsoon.

New Projects

Last year I had referred to a number of new projects that are on the anvil. These projects are at various stages of development. Aravali Fertilisers Limited, a company promoted by your Company, was incorporated during the year under review. This company will be responsible for setting up the gas-based fertiliser complex at Sawai Madhopur in Rajasthan. A great deal of spade work has already been done, and I am confident that the project will soon gain momentum.

As regards our Cement project at Mandalgarh in Rajasthan, the Government has issued the Letter of Intent in our favour. This plant will have an annual capacity of one million tonnes. Preliminary work including prospecting has already been initiated. Other areas for diversification include a proposal to acquire a Phosphoric acid carrier which is awaiting Government approval. Also, in the field of high technology, we are pursuing our proposal to set up facilities for the manufacture of Electronic Transmission Equipment in technical collaboration with leaders in this field.

Let me now refer to the Company's successful efforts in environmental conservation. Here, we have set the highest standards of performance. As one of the most efficiently run fertiliser plants in the country, our plant has one of the most effective facilities for pollution control. I would like to assure you that we will continue to maintain a sincere concern for preserving and improving the environment.

We have continued to maintain an excellent safety record in our operations, thanks to the co-operation of the employees and the stringent safety standards followed by the Company. During the last year we won two first prizes awarded by the Goa Government as well as an international award by the National Safety Council, U.S.A.

I would also like to touch briefly on our philosophy of being a socially responsible organisation which is concerned about the well-being of the people in the neighbourhood and mindful of the larger national goals. We have taken up a number of programmes to meet our social responsibilities. These programmes include scholarships to deserving students, aid to educational and cultural organisations, farmers' visits to agricultural Universities and training of farmers in modern methods of agriculture. Last year, we introduced an Award for the most outstanding farmer — "The Krishi Samrat". The first outstanding farmer to be honoured under the scheme was Shri N.M. Chamankar of Sindhudurg district in Maharashtra, who is renowned for his pioneering efforts and contribution to mango cultivation.

As in the last year, I would like to touch on the present pricing system for the fertiliser industry. Whilst the industry is awaiting the announcement of the revised fair retention price, I would like to reiterate the need for the pricing policies to ensure that the industry receives a fair and equitable return on investment provided it works efficiently. It is hoped therefore that GOI's pricing policies will keep as their goal the need to encourage modernisation and growth along with high productivity so that the ambitious targets set for the industry by the Government in the Seventh Five Year Plan will be attainable.

Our industrial relations during the year continued to be cordial. I take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the valued contribution of our employees at all levels. I am grateful for their whole-hearted co-operation and unstinted support. I have no doubt that they will continue to work with the same dedication and spirit of fellowship.

I would also like to express our gratitude to the Government of India and the Government of Goa, Daman and Diu, for their guidance and support. I would like to conclude with an expression of thanks to our technical collaborators, United States Steel Corporation, for their continued co-operation which has been a source of strength to us.

Thank you.

Note: This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When You Want The World And More ....

Subscribe To The NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC!

The world of National Geographic

Travel, exploration, adventure and discovery; the glories of nature, people and places; the past, present and future; science, the stars and beyond ... every month the National Geographic brings the world and all its wonders up close. Further, presents you with 4 beautiful maps of different parts of the world every year — exquisitely printed and complete with a historical record of the region it depicts.

Discover India again ...

The Taj Mahal, the Festival of India, India's folklore, wildlife sanctuaries and railways have all been focussed on and presented in breathtaking colour — capturing all the hues and shades of India's glorious heritage, as only the National Geographic can.

Distributed exclusively by India Book Distributors

India Book Distributors has an exclusive arrangement with the publishers of National Geographic and so each issue is now easily available to the readers all over India. Send in your subscription to India Book Distributors and you will receive your favourite magazine by registered post. Moreover, if you are based in Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta, Madras, Bangalore and Pune, you can have your copies hand-delivered!

Bookstall Price

Rs. 40.00 per issue

Annual Subscription:

Rs. 400.00 for copies delivered by hand within city limits of Bombay, Pune, Bangalore, Delhi, Calcutta and Madras.

Rs. 450.00 for copies sent by registered post.

National Geographic Annual Subscription

India Book Distributors,

107/108, Arcadia, 195, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021.

Yes, I want National Geographic every month. Enclosed is my annual subscription (12 issues):

Rs. 400.00 (for delivery by hand)

Rs. 450.00 (for delivery by regd. post) by

Bank Draft M.O. No. _____ dated _____

Name: _____

Address: _____

_____

All payments should be payable to India Book Distributors, Bombay only.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INCENTIVE/IBD/4028

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Small Cheer

THE RAINS should have brought fresh life to the stock-markets last fortnight. Instead, they seem to have dampened what enthusiasm there was, for share prices tumbled last fortnight on a wide front. But this may have had less to do with the monsoons than with the Government, which had earlier given a boost to equity prices by announcing fresh incentives for industry, lower bank lending rates and some form of amnesty to tax defaulters. This time, its announcements did little to cheer the stock-market, one case being the decision to ban the conversion of non-convertible debentures into shares.

Many shares lost ground because investors who had notched up some gains decided to book their profits by unloading shares. So the lower prices did not really indicate a new bearish phase, despite a sprinkling of unfavourable corporate reports. Hindustan Motors, for instance, reported much lower gross profits and only marginally higher sales, and the company's share dropped by Rs 12 to Rs 40.60 during the fortnight.

Chart by B.K. SHAHMA

Attention last fortnight, was focused on TISCO, which after some suspense, announced that it would be coming out with a bonus issue as well as a rights issue. The company's shares had first gone up to Rs 1,562.50 in excited anticipation of the news, and then slumped to Rs 1,400 because of the delay in the announcement before finally beginning to climb again in frenzied trading after what was in effect a double bonus.

But the upswing in TISCO did not extend to the majority of trading counters. Although a few companies gained higher perches over the fortnight (including both DCM and Escorts, following the final settlement with Swraj Paul), many more reached for lower ground. Among the counters where selling pressure pushed prices down were Bajaj Auto, Brooke Bond, Century Spinning, Colgate, Gujarat State Fertiliser, Indian Organic, ITC, Larsen and Toubro, TELCO and Reliance Industries (which dropped by Rs 33 to Rs 355).

Nevertheless, the medium-term future should logically see share prices wending their way back up the slopes. The monsoons, being better this year, promise plentiful supplies of raw materials for agro-based industries. Following the good performance by the power sector and the railways, the economy is now freer from infrastructural bottlenecks. Coal and steel shortages are now mostly forgotten problems. With substantial fresh investments, facilitated partly by liberalised government policies and stable prices, the economy should permit corporate growth. If this materialises, the stock-markets must eventually reflect this. In short, after six months of indeterminate movements, there is now room for an upswing.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 20.6.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	28.25	1.00 –
Associated Cement	389.00	228.00	274.00	2.00 –
Atlas Copco	92.50	64.00	80.00	nil
Asian Paints	280.00	130.00	245.00	30.00 +
Avery India	146.00	100.00	112.00	6.50 –
Bajaj Auto	3450.00	1950.00	3175.00	175.00 –
Baroda Rayon	490.00	315.00	360.00	nil
Bata India	82.50	54.00	60.00	2.75 –
Bayer	680.00	445.00	530.00	10.00 –
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	69.00	1.00 –
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	48.00	3.25 –
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	105.00	3.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	95.00	nil
Bombay Dyeing	123.00	77.00	98.00	4.00 –
Brooke Bond	96.75	74.00	86.50	2.50 +
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	420.00	10.00 +
Century Spinning	1690.00	790.00	830.00	20.00 –
Chloride India	132.00	86.00	126.00	6.00 +
Citurgia	65.00	42.00	44.50	9.50 –
Colgate	307.50	200.00	270.00	20.00 –
DCM	58.50	32.62	44.50	4.50 +
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	66.50	1.75 –
Elecon	117.50	80.00	112.00	12.00 +
Escorts	111.00	69.00	110.00	7.00 +
Finolex Cables	81.00	36.00	80.00	17.00 +
Food Specialities	327.50	215.00	307.00	3.00 –
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	45.00	2.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	65.00	3.50 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	21.25	24.50	2.00 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	182.00	92.50	173.50	3.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	77.00	2.00 –
Hindustan Lever	166.00	124.00	163.00	8.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	40.60	40.60	12.15 –
Hind. Dorr	560.00	380.00	560.00	75.00 +
IEL	84.50	61.50	68.50	0.25 +
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	10.00 –
Indian Organic	97.00	63.00	75.00	11.00 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	135.00	2.00 –
Indrol	390.00	200.00	350.00	40.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	505.00	360.00	457.50	22.50 +
ITC	76.50	53.00	62.20	4.80 –
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	118.00	2.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	345.00	220.00	330.00	nil
Lakme	195.00	120.00	142.50	2.50 –
Larson & Toubro	204.00	133.00	134.00	2.00 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	58.50	4.50 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	41.00	43.00	9.00 –
Madura Coats	92.00	53.00	57.50	1.50 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	51.00	57.00	2.00 +
Motor Industries	1000.00	605.00	935.00	15.00 +
National Organic	840.00	530.00	790.00	5.00 –
Nirlon	77.00	39.50	42.00	1.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	192.00	111.00	178.00	5.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	48.00	57.00	0.15 +
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	95.00	7.00 –
Ponds	315.00	200.00	300.00	5.00 +
Premier Auto	870.00	555.00	817.50	5.00 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	138.00	1.00 –
Raymond	97.00	72.00	86.00	2.00 +
Reliance Industries	392.00	226.00	355.00	33.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	49.00	56.00	3.00 –
SPIC	184.00	129.50	158.50	4.50 –
Tata Steel	1562.50	1090.00	1480.00	10.00 –
Telco	910.00	575.00	685.00	65.00 –
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	110.00	2.50 –
Wimco	98.00	54.00	64.00	nil

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.7410	8.6610
Austria	Schilling	100	80.2610	79.5916
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.7530	33.7080
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.5030	42.3315
Canada	Dollar	1	9.1109	9.0399
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5187	1.5062
Egypt	Pound	1	15.2330	15.2010
France	Franc	1	1.7685	1.7539
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6153	1.6628
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.6530	1.6030
Iran	Rial	100	15.9220	15.8330
Italy	Lira	100	0.8190	0.8099
Japan	Yen	100	7.5414	7.4738
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7780	0.7700
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.9330	42.9010
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8038	4.7646
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9330	0.9118
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6110	0.6093
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.8034	6.7477
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7430	0.7339
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6722	5.6249
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0883	0.0870
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4432	0.4330
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7481	1.7351
Switzerland	Franc	1	6:8551	6.8013
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.4669	0.4530
Thailand	Baht	100	48.3330	48.2180
UK	Pound	1	18.9681	18.8465
USA	Dollar	1	12.7390	12.6356
UAE	Dirham	1	3.4880	3.4779
USSR	Rouble	1	17.6830	17.6080
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.6116	5.5648

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 23.6.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It takes a lot of growing up to reach the HCL Busybee.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In just one year, the Busybee has single handedly installed over 1550 PCs/PC XTs. In one big company after another. That's more PCs than anyone else.

While everyone has been shouting themselves hoarse about their little geniuses, the HCL Busybee in a short span of 365 days, has quietly managed to instal over 1550 IBM compatible PCs/PC XTs. On the desks of some of the top executives and scientists working in some of the biggest companies and research and educational institutes in the country.

In companies like TELCO, Thermax, BATA, Blowplast, English Electric, Reader's Digest, JCT Mills Ltd., IFFCO, ECIL, GMMCo , Paradeep Phosphates, Indian Railways, HAL, Fenner, Jenson and Nicholson, BHEL, NGEF, The Shriram Group, MICO, Reckitt and Colman, Hindustan Motors, U.S. Aid... to name just a few.

In premier educational and research institutions like IIMs Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Calcutta, Jamna Lal Bajaj Institute, IITs Kharagpur and Madras, CEERI Pilani, ISRO, NAL, Indian Institute of Science, VSSC, BARC and many more. Who have whole heartedly opted for the Busybee.

As much as 40% repeat orders.

What has been so gratifying about the Busybee's success is the extent of repeat orders.

TELCO, starting off with just one trial machine, soon placed repeat orders totalling 28 Busybees in succeeding months. Sundaram Clayton placed repeat orders worth 24 machines. Blowplast repeat orders of 17 machines. HAL wanted 18 more after its initial order. The Department of Space till now has 52 machines and Indian Institute of Science 32. The story was the same with the Shriram Group... and the list goes on.

Repeat orders that account for almost 40% of the total Busybees booked. A fact which shows the trust enjoyed by the Busybee within just one year of its launch.

An amazing 98.9% national uptime.

The reliability of the HCL Busybee is borne out by its maintaining a 98.9% national uptime! Across the country. Setting something of a record for PCs.

A record which is made possible because of HCL's wide network of support infrastructure. With 34 support offices across the length and breadth of the country. And with every second one of its over 800 workforce an engineer, engaged in support functions.

The hard facts about the Busybee.

The HCL Busybee is probably the most powerful and versatile IBM PC compatible available today.

It is the only Bi-lingual PC/PC XT to date. Supporting Devnagri as well as English for word processing. So you can create documents in Devnagri. Or use Devnagri characters with English in the same report or even in the same line!

In a large organisation with multiple departments, the Busybees link in a Local Area Network of upto 64 machines over a distance of 1.2 Kms. Sharing expensive peripherals, communicating and sharing information. Yet maintaining confidentiality with a 2-level password system.

And if your requirement is Multi-terminal, you can add on two additional terminals. Through the industry standard MP/M Operating System—ideal for a data processing environment and with the most powerful COBOL capability, used on the HCL Workhorse II.

Then the Busybee talks to the giants too. Through Mainframe Linkage to systems like Data General, Burroughs, Sperry Univac, or the HCL Workhorse II and Horizon.

Hardware Add-ons like the Mouse, Digitizer and X-Y Plotter make the Busybee the most versatile PC for your Computer Aided Design and Graphic Presentation.

The 8 MHz optional CPU clock time is one of the fastest of all IBM PC compatibles. Its Hard Disk Drive add-on enables the processing of much larger volumes of information. While the Cartridge Tape back-up safeguards against corruption of important data.

The 8" Floppy Drive of the Busybee makes it compatible to earlier generation systems.

The HCL Busybee. Setting the standard for PCs and PCXTs in the country within just one year of its launch. The beginning of the biggest success story of the year.

HCL
BUSYBEE

Arms Communication 210

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONSUMER prices are on the upswing. Money supply is still tight. The foreign trade situation has improved with exports and foreign exchange reserves picking up. The stock exchange is less bullish than before, but gold prices continue to rise.

There have been changes in The Economy Monitor. For areas where data are given monthly, we are now computing deseasonalised growth rates over the last twelve months. For weekly data, the period continues to be six months. All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six or twelve months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
4.6% p.a.

Wholesale prices are well under control, with the trend growth rate under 4.6 per cent. Prices dropped marginally in the last fortnight.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
9.1% p.a.

As usual, consumer prices have risen more than wholesale prices, and the index has in fact shot up by 3 per cent in the last three months.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
12.4% p.a.

Money supply continues to be tight, the trend growth rate having dropped from 13.5 per cent to 12.4 per cent.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.8% p.a.

In contrast, commercial bank credit continues to rise at a faster rate and the trend rate is accelerating.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
–28.8% p.a.
EXPORTS
20.1% p.a.
IMPORTS

Over the year, exports declined by almost 29 per cent while imports rose by 20 per cent. However, after July 1985, exports have picked up.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crore

Current Trend
13.8% p.a.

Though foreign reserves declined from April to May by 1.6 per cent the overall growth trend at 13.8 per cent is very satisfactory.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
9.4% p.a.

A 2% rise in share prices in end-May pulled the trend rate up to 9.4 per cent. But this was far from the high achieved in February.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
9.8% p.a.

Gold is again back in demand. Prices were up by 2% in the first week of June and even higher prices are expected.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in May, 1986

	% Growth
Country Liquor	61.26
Silk Raw	19.12
Ragi	18.04
Bananas	16.56
Mustard Oil	15.93
Coconut Oil	13.2
Copra	11.94
Art Silk & Artificial Yarn	11.36
Jute Textiles	11.27
Solvent Extracted Oil	10.72
Rape & Mustard Seed	9.12
Tea	8.4
Betel-Nuts	8.03
Linseed Oil	5.76
Butter	5.03
Groundnut Seeds	4.3
Arhar	3.67
Gingelly Oil	3.54
Maida	3.21
Meat	3.19
Logs Timber Bamboo	2.87
Ghee	2.75
Groundnut Oilcake	2.3
Dairy Products	2.18
Electricity	2.16
Petroleum Crude & Natural Gas	1.64
Furnace Oil	1.59
Vanaspati	1.54
Rails	1.26
Soda Ash	1.25
Dry Cells	1.2
Diesel Oil	1.2
Bars & Rods	1.15
Aviation Spirit	1.09
Pig Iron	1.08
Semis Billets	1.06
Cashew Nuts	1.04
Petrol	1.03
Tin Containers	1.01
Mining Machinery	0.98
Lubricating Oil	0.97
Skelp	0.96
Steal Structurals	0.94
Woollen Cloth & Woollen Khadi	0.9
Plates & Sheets	0.88
Coal	0.86

Of the 139 series considered, 88 of them with a total weight of 51.672 had a positive growth and 51 of them with a total weight of 34.95 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, May	11774	10964
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, May	541.9	480.3
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, May	2702	2608
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, May	448.9	403.6
Plant Load Factor
Per cent, May	55.2	53.6

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

And suddenly colours begin to sing

Warm, pleasing yellows. Soft, soothing greens. Deep, mystic purples. Colours you've never heard before.

At Colour-Chem we make them sing. In the widest repertoire of shades and hues in the world of pigments and dyes.

In that subtle refinement of tone called quality control.

That constant striving to excel, which is R & D.

And that intimate empathy with the audience which you know as customer service.

You'll recognize Colour-Chem colours. And they'll sing for you. Whether you're in the textile, paints, printing inks, rubber, plastics or leather industry.

Just stay tuned in to Colour-Chem. You can't go wrong.

Colour-Chem

Colour-Chem Limited
194, Churchgate Reclamation,
Bombay 400 020.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This monster lives underground and eats through 30 metres of solid rock per day.

SKF technology helps provide the bite.

Associated Bearing Co Ltd
Hoechst House, Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021

Skefko India Bearing Co Ltd
Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Bldg
Netaji Subhash Rd, Bombay 400 002

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This 'monster' measures upto 1/5th of a kilometre in length and weighs upto 200 tonnes.

It is, in fact, a revolutionary new type of laser-guided mining machine, developed in West Germany and the USA . . . to operate at depths of more than one kilometre below the earth's surface in search of coal.

Naturally, equipment of such gigantic dimensions requires proportionately large components — yet components that can live up to the high-precision needs of laser-guidance technology.

To meet this challenge, the manufacturers called in SKF.

And the result was the largest double-row taper roller bearings we have ever created — with an outer diameter of 2.5 metres, and weighing over 2 tonnes!

It's this kind of technology that has given us the reputation of being the world leaders in bearings.

And it's this same technology that goes into everything we do — whether it's a bearing for an electrical motor or a truck, for a sugar mill or a nuclear power plant.

SKF. Behind every bearing, a world of technology.

SKF

The World's No. 1 Choice

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nothing comes between your feet and comfort

POWER JOGGER

If you've so long regarded jogging to be a chore, now forget it. Power Jogger is comfortable enough to turn jogging into sheer pleasure. And lightweight enough not to tire you when you're jogging.

The twin density sole, effectively absorbs 'road shock' with soft EVA inner layer, while the outer layer is made of special rubber compound for extra grip and ruggedness. The nylon and suede upper, with padded tongue and collar completes the comfort features.

Power Jogger. Born for fitness. Designed for comfort.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE...

CLARION C-BATA J-2

MEXICO86

The Official shoe of World Cup Football 1986 Mexico

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wheels of Fortune

WHEN officials of the Rajasthan Tourism Development Corporation (RTDC) totted up their accounts for 1985-86, they got a pleasant surprise. After four years, The Palace on Wheels—the luxury train that had almost been given up as a bad joke—had finally chugged to a reasonable profit.

The Palace on Wheels: chugging to profits

After disappointing profits of Rs 1.97 lakh in 1982-83 and Rs 2.68 lakh the next year and then a nominal loss, it has now netted Rs 10 lakh. Jointly run by the Railways and the RTDC, it was flagged off in 1982 after rusting saloons of princely states were revamped in a Maharaja version of the Orient Express—to give a week-long replay of Rajasthan's royal past to such as could afford it. At Rs 1,300 per day, few could. Bookings fell until the crash in the wake of the 1984 riots. But the RTDC then did a bit of reorganising and the figure crossed 1,100. Increasingly optimistic, the RTDC has again hiked the fare to Rs 1,500 and the going promises to be smooth now.

House Hunting

WHY ONLY me?" was the agitated response that came from former Rajasthan chief minister Shiv Charan Mathur when he was served notice last fortnight to vacate his government bungalow forthwith. That it was no routine notice was borne out by the letter-head of Deputy Minister Bina Kak, providing silent testimony that yet another punch had been traded in the ongoing political sparring between Mathur and Chief Minister Harideo Joshi. "This is most unexpected," sputtered Mathur. "Apart from the fact that I am entitled to a furnished house as a legislator, the chief minister could at least have spoken to me." Not one to sit quietly, Mathur promptly shot off a pointed rejoinder stating that among the others still occupying official lodgings were former chief minister Jagannath Pahadia, state Lok Dal chief Nathuram Mirdha, state Janata Party chief Kalyan Singh Kalvi and former cabinet minister Narendra Singh Bhatti.

Mathur in his government house: marching orders

SUBHASH SHARMA

Ad Libbing

A FEW years ago, readers in Tamil Nadu had been suprised by an advertisement given by Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran dissociating himself from anything that his nephews—elder brother M.G. Chakrapani's sons—may be doing in his name. They had apparently been accused of taking bribes against a promise of securing arrack licences for someone. The case was referred to an inquiry commission and MGR was duly exonerated. Last fortnight, it was uncannily like history repeating itself when readers opened their papers to find an advertisement from MGR saying that he wasn't amused by the interference of his relatives, including his wife, in government administration. Though MGR's wife, V.N. Janaki, makes no secret of her support of and opposition to Information Minister R.M. Veerappan and AIADMK Propaganda Secretary Jayalalitha, respectively, this was not what had prompted the declaration. It was something as innocuous as the appointment of a police constable on Janaki's recommendation that had triggered off the tantrum—something that his aides say has become a habit after his illness.

MGR: not amused

Mexican Shuffle

ONLY in soccer-crazy West Bengal could it have been allowed to happen without a single cry of 'foul play'. The state's Marxist Government took the highly unusual step last fortnight of ensuring its "participation" in the World Cup soccer festival in Mexico. Under the goal of "gathering experience", a 20-man team was despatched to Mexico as spectators—all, of course, at state expense. But Sports Minister Subhash Chakraborty justified the Rs 4.8-lakh expense on the trip saying that the team members would gather valuable experience and the feel of "participating in a big event". What did not justify the exercise was the motley composition of the team. Of the 20 members, only three—Chunni Goswami, Sailen Manna and Subhas Bhowmick—were former football stars and of them only two, Goswami and Manna, were coaches. The others included three politicians from the CPI(M) and one each from the RSP and the Forward Bloc, apart from Joint Commissioner of Calcutta Police Swarup Mukherjee. Perhaps the Left Front Government wanted to study alternate means of controlling soccer riots other than lathi charges or mounted police assaults.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BISMILLAH KHAN

A MYSTIC UNION

In continuation of the recently-introduced series featuring living legends of Indian art and music, the photo essay this issue focusses on Bismillah Khan, the legendary shehnai maestro.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A STEADY, rhythmic thudding fills the air as hundreds of young Shias who have marched in procession to the ziyarat of the martyred Imam Hussain in Varanasi—a replica of his shrine in Karbala, Iraq—beat their chests and sing a dirge. Bismillah Khan, who is part of this "alam ka juloos", stands at the entrance to the tomb, holding aloft the alam (Hussain's standard) in memory of the slain grandson of Prophet Muhammad. He tries to join in the song but his mouth quivers and he starts to sob openly, wiping his tears with corners of the flag. Veiled women in black weep as the lengthening shadow of a neem tree brings in the evening. "Aya hai karbala mein gharib-ul watan koi," the mourners sing, "sub kuchh ho is jahan mein lekin mere karim, bhai ko zibah hote na dekhe bahen koi (let no sister ever suffer the fate of having to watch her brother slaughtered)."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

On this special day of prayer and mourning, Khan Sahib has already spent two hours at the shrine which includes replicas of the rauzaas (tombs) of Fatima Zehra, the Prophet's daughter, and Hazrat Abbas, Hussain's younger brother. He has visited each site, dressed in a white kurta and pyjama, offered incense and prostrated himself in adulation. As he completes his rounds, stopping finally at the rauzaa of Imam Hussain, he reads out the names of the 72 shaheeds (martyrs) of Karbala, who were butchered in the 7th century A.D. when Hussain refused assent to Yezid's Caliphate. His head bowed, arms stretched out in supplication, Khan Sahib mutters a prayer: "You gave me everything. You gave me your life. Ya Khuda, Ya Rahmatkaar. My tears are the tears of gratitude." When finally, the long evening turns to dusk, he washes his feet and settles down on arthritic knees, swathed in heavy bandages, to two hours of namaaz—a lonely, beatific figure doubled over in pain and ecstasy.

Practicing with chelas in Varanasi; (right) singing Bhairav

"Music, sur, namaaz. It is the same thing. We reach Allah in different ways. A musician can learn. He can play beautifully. But unless he can mix his music with religion, unless he strives to meet God, he will only have kalaa (art) but no assar (mystical union). He will always stand at the edge of the ocean and never reach the heights of purity."

Khan Sahib is soaked in religion. It is his sustaining life-force. But it is this same religion that damns music, condemns it as an act of rape. For the Shias, music is haraam (taboo). But for the man who took the shehnai out of wedding processions and naubatkhaanaas—the shehnai player, traditionally was to be heard and not seen—and who was able to weave patterns of dazzling intricacy into its music as he brought it to the centre-stage of classical respectability, his instrument is also his Quran. Where others see conflict and contradiction between his music and his religion, he sees only a divine unity.

"When the maulvis and maulanas ask me about this, I tell them, sometimes with irritation, that I can't explain it. I feel it. I feel it. If music is haraam, then why has it reached such heights? Why does it make me soar towards heaven? The religion of music is one. All others are different. I tell the maulanas, this is the only haqeeqat (reality). This is the world. My namaaz is the seven shuddh and five komal surs. And if this is haraam, then I say: aur haraam karo, aur haraam karo (if music be a thing of sin, sin on)."

"I was once in an argument with some Shia maulvis in Iraq. They were well versed in their subject and were making several effective arguments about the reasons why music ought to be damned. At first I was left speechless. Then I closed my eyes and began to sing in Raga Bhairav: Allah-hee.... Allah-hee... Allah-hee.... I continued to raise the pitch. I opened my eyes and I asked

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At his daily morning prayers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

them: 'Is this haraam? I'm calling God, I'm thinking of Him, I'm searching for Him. Isn't this namaaz? Why do you call my search haraam?' They fell silent."

Each year, on the eighth day of Muharram, this devotee of the Shia faith who refuses to touch the reed of his shehnai with his lips unless he has offered his namaaz before sunrise, engages himself in his own private drama of religious apostasy. Dressed simply in white, he leads a procession, like a mischievous Pied Piper of rebellion, playing a silver shehnai reserved specially for the occasion. The procession winds its way through Varanasi's Byzantine lanes to the rauzaa of Imam Hussain. Here, just inside the gate, he sits cross-legged on the dusty ground in the fashion of a mendicant street minstrel and plays for hours, weeping copiously all the time, while the audience pitches coins into his lap.

THIS is a simple man. A man of tenderness, a gentle, private man, yet given to unbridled display of emotion. When he laughs, the ground shakes. At 70, he is an immensely handsome man with a princely beard and eyes which glint with boyish mischief, his only "bad habit", he apologises, is smoking Wills cigarettes which he puffs with obvious relish. There is nothing about him that bespeaks his fame—his honorary doctorates, his Padma Vibhushan, his concerts in almost every capital around the world, his dozens of best-selling record albums. On India's first Republic Day ceremony it was Khan Sahib who poured his heart out in Raga Kaafi from Red Fort. On a more pop level, it was Khan Sahib who composed that magic film number 'Dil ka khilauna hai toot gaya' for the film Goonj Uthi Shehnai. He has made money but has spent it just as fast. He supports nearly 100 relatives, including 10 children.

His house in Varanasi, in Sarai Harha, is an ample but decrepit structure. His living-room, which also serves as a guest-room, is sparsely furnished with creaky wooden benches and a large takht on which, at given times of the day, his children perform namaaz, oblivious of guests and visitors. Still in incessant demand as a player he travels by train regularly with his troupe, often by second class. He hates to fly. And when travel arrangements are being made, the house buzzes with activity as instruments are laid out, ancient steel trunks and torn British Airways flight-bags are packed with clothes and lunch-boxes stuffed with rice and samosas. The shehnai-player, whose name is as familiar even to the international jet set as that of Ravi Shanker, travels by cycle-rickshaw. And as he wheels down the city's streets at the head of a caravan of rickshaws, smiling at well-wishers, he looks as happy as a British lord in a Rolls Royce.

Until Bismillah Khan burst upon the centre-stage of Indian music with his strange little instrument at the All-India Music Conference in Calcutta in 1937 at the age of 20, the shehnai was considered an instrument reserved for wedding processions or Hindu religious rituals. His ancestors were court musicians in the princely state of Dumraon in Bihar. His uncle, the late Ali Bux 'Vilayatu', was a shehnai-player attached to Varanasi's Vishwanath Temple. Khan Sahib remembers him as a hard task-master, "who may not have been able to conjure up the rain with his playing but could bring you to tears in a minute. I was never interested in studies. While others were at their books, I used to sneak out and play marbles or blow on Mamu's (uncle's) shehnai. He always knew I would be a shehnai-player".

Even as a devout Shia, Khan Sahib is also a devotee of Saraswati, the Hindu goddess of music. And at the age of 12, he recalls, he received a signal—a peculiarly Hindu signal—that his sadhana (devotion) had been rewarded. He recalls: "Mamu used to do his riyaaz (practice) at the temple of Balaji (an avatar of Vishnu) for 18 years. He told me to do the same thing. I would begin my riyaaz at the mandir at 7 p.m. and end at 11 p.m., during which time I usually played four ragas. After a year-and-a-half, Mamu told me, 'if you see anything, just don't talk about it'. One night as I was playing, deep in meditation, I smelled something. It was an indescribable scent, something like sandalwood and jasmine and incense. I thought it was the aroma of the Ganges. But the scent got more powerful. I opened my eyes—and when I speak about it I still get goose-flesh—when I opened my eyes, there was Balaji standing right next to me, kamandal in hand, exactly as he is pictured. My door was locked from inside. Nobody was allowed to enter when I did my riyaaz. He said, 'play, son'. But I was in a cold sweat. I stopped playing.

Relaxing with a cigarette after a Shehnai session

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"He smiled, and disappeared. I unlocked the door. I thought a faqir may have come in. I took a lantern and searched all the streets. They were empty. I ran home, ate quickly and slept. Mamu had understood what had happened. But he teased me, pretending he knew nothing. But as I blurted out the experience, Mamu slapped me, because he had asked me earlier not to talk about anything that might happen to me. Then he kissed me and asked me to go buy vegetables. Mamu always told me, 'never look back, keep going forward'. Even now I go to Balaji's mandir alone, at night and play all by myself. When I play before others, in my heart I'm still listening to my gurus. In my heart, they clap for me at the appropriate time.

With grandson in Varanasi home

"In music, the sur is a clean thing, it is a pure thing. It cannot be deceived and it cannot deceive anybody. It is like a mirror in which you see the world and in which I can see my own face when I play. When I start playing, the mind wanders here and there and takes me with it. But all the time I am striving for the assar. But when that comes, when the sur clicks, it is like I am unconscious and the heart has taken over. Sometimes I don't understand who is playing. Or I feel that I am playing at a mazaar, or in front of ancient sages. And all I can think of is, 'he mere maalik tu mujhe lele (God, take me away), tu hee nirankaar, tu hee

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar phool aur phal mein (God, You alone are formless, You alone in flower and fruit)'.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I am getting old now. Not in my heart. But in my body. The heart yearns to go on and on but this body sometimes tires and these wretched knees start aching after four hours of playing. And I now have that all-too-human worry. Thirty years ago, I used to think I had conquered or was about to conquer the world. What foolishness! Now I say, Bismillah, you haven't reached anywhere. The world may know and listen to your ragas, but Bismillah, life will soon finish and your yearnings will still remain. This music is still an ocean. I want to cross it.

In mourning in a procession of Shia muslims

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But I have barely reached the shore. I haven't yet even taken a dip in it."

Khan Sahib has not groomed a disciple. He teaches students when he has the time but there is no special heir. Of his six sons—Mahtab, Nayab, Hussein, Famin, Kazim, and Nazim—the youngest, Nazim, plays the tabla. "The days of adaab (old world manners and values) are gone," he says. "Musicians now go to school. They do not do sadhana with gurus. They want instant results. But the great old masters who did their penance—Fayyaz Khan, Abdul Karim Khan, Onkar Nath—died poor. No one knows about their sacrifices. Consider Swami Haridas. He produced Tansen. But no one knows Swami Haridas. They had no time for their own lives. No time for their families, their children. There are very few in this age who can do the real riyaaz. You have to have the ability to wipe yourself out. You have to get up before sunrise on freezing mornings, offer namaaz, go to the mandir, and begin practice. These days musicians want to rise at 10 a.m. to go to music schools.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"But which music school has produced a Fayyaz or an Abdul Karim Khan? I say, leave those schools aur aao maidan mein (and come out into the real battle). But you have to have the discipline and the tenacity. Someone like me can give his time to a student, but the taker has to be willing to take, to wrest that time from his guru. He must find the time for his own tapasya. I remember when I was a boy and often my guru, tired from the day, would retire at 4 a.m., I would be awake. I had been waiting for him. I used to go to his bedroom and begin pressing his tired feet. He would look at me and he would know what I wanted. He would shake off his slumber and come alive. He would give me his shehnai and tell me: 'all right son, start playing'."

—INDERJIT BADHWAR in Varanasi

Weeping copiously in communion with God

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AIDS

Countering the Scare

SUDDENLY, the spectre of AIDS has cast its dreaded shadow over India. Last fortnight, two full-blown cases of AIDS surfaced in Maharashtra hospitals, putting the Government on red alert and highlighting the need to identify and control the disease.

Despite the alarm bells, there was some reassurance in the fact that both the patients had contracted the virus not through sexual contact in India but as a result of blood transfusions in US hospitals. Beharilal Ramchandra Makhija, a 55-year-old Bombay businessman who died on June 9 barely a fortnight after he was admitted to the Jaslok Hospital, had been given blood during coronary bypass surgery in a New York hospital in 1980. A 24-year-old microbiologist from Hyderabad, who was admitted to Pune's Sassoon Hospital showing symptoms of advanced AIDS immediately on his return from the US, is a haemophiliac who had received blood while studying in the US.

However, the two cases have fuelled fears that the killer virus may be stealthily spreading among high-risk groups like prostitutes, eunuchs and homosexuals. Only last month there was a scare when tests on six prostitutes in Madras showed the presence of antibodies meant to fight the AIDS virus in the bloodstream. Since then, 15 of the 2,000 blood samples collected by surveillance centres in Tamil Nadu and Maharashtra have proved to be AIDS positive. The Union Health Ministry is clearly worried over the spread of the disease but with such a small sample it is impossible to establish how far and wide AIDS has taken root.

Now, in one of the most elaborate operations of its kind, the Union Government has asked the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR) to conduct a two-month, nation-wide survey which will analyse 25,000 blood samples from high-risk groups and give some clue as to how seriously AIDS has stricken the country. Already AIDS surveillance centres have been set up in all the states and last fortnight, a special training camp was held at the National Institute for Communicable Diseases (NICD) in New Delhi to familiarise microbiologists from all over the country with the AIDS testing kits.

Justifying the high priority being assigned to AIDS, Dr V. Ramalingaswami, ICMR's bespectacled director-general, said: "AIDS is a killer disease. Of the 26,000 cases reported abroad, 14,000 have proved fatal. We simply cannot sit back and wait for the disease to spread in India. We must take steps to contain the disease before it overwhelms us."

Ironically, even though blood transfusion and haemophiliac patients are only a miniscule 2.5 per cent of the adult AIDS victims in the west, the first two serious cases to surface in India fell under this category. Maharashtra Health Minister Bhai Sawant told the Assembly that all blood banks had been instructed to test donors for AIDS and the Government was considering cancelling licences of private blood banks lacking in such facilities. But medical authorities in New Delhi are well aware of the difficulty in insisting that the 2.50 lakh litres of blood collected by both government and private blood banks in the country every year be screened for AIDS. Just the testing kit for such a massive operation would cost Rs 2 crore, not to mention the trained manpower that would be needed to carry out the tests.

Even though it may be a temporary phenomenon, the news of Beharilal Makhija's death at Jaslok caused a dramatic slump in the number of men visiting Bombay's red-light districts, which are the largest in the country, housing an estimated one lakh common prostitutes and eunuchs. Though a report that two hijras were suffering from advanced symptoms of AIDS proved to be incorrect, Bombay's brothels, with a significant number of foreign and Indian clients, are a major cause of worry for medical authorities. "Ninety-five per cent of our attention has to be given to Bombay," said Maharashtra Health Secretary D.T. Joseph. "There is no legislation to register prostitutes and eunuchs, but now, with the threat of AIDS, we will have to do something."

Doctors have also been insisting that a monitoring campaign in red-light districts can be successful only if prostitution is legalised. "Ninety per cent of the prostitutes suffer from venereal disease," said Dr Ishwarprasad S. Gilada of the J.J. Hospital who has been conducting medi-

DILIP CHAKRAVARTY

Prostitutes in Bombay (right); and eunuchs: potential risks

NAMAS BHOJAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cal camps in these areas for the last three years. "It would hardly be surprising if some of them contract AIDS also. Bombay is the gateway to India, and as expected, the first AIDS death has occurred here. Now the Government must legalise prostitution and make AIDS a notifiable disease if we are to have some check on the disease."

Though the Union Welfare Ministry is considering a proposal to legalise prostitution, concern about the deep-rooted public opinion against such a move has so far effectively stalled any amendment of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act. Nor would a stroke of the pen really help because unless a foolproof system is designed to ensure that prostitutes are properly screened for sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, this may end up like all other governmental legislation—good on paper but a farce in reality.

Meanwhile, the Government is considering other measures for preventing and combating the spread of AIDS in the country. But the first move—to get an AIDS-free certificate for all blood products, like immunoglobulins, that are imported for various tests—is facing several hurdles. The fear is that if the Government insists on such certificates Indians going abroad will also be faced with a similar demand. Right now, there are hardly any facilities in the country for the half million Indians who go abroad every year to undergo AIDS screening tests.

A major problem has been the shortage of AIDS testing kits in the country, and the Government is now importing them from the US at around two dollars a piece. The Elisa test kit, as it is called, went into production only in April last year and, faced with the massive demand from most countries, manufacturers find it difficult to keep up production schedules. Moreover, a photo-chromometer (cost: Rs 1.33 lakh) is also required to complete the initial AIDS-positive test. The Government is planning to allow private hospitals and clinics to import the testing kits and equipment duty free but has so far gone slow on it as a system would have to be worked out where the public is not fleeced by private physicians. Already, private clinics have got onto the AIDS bandwagon and last fortnight a clinic in South Delhi advertised AIDS screening tests. Although the clinic got scores of calls, most people were put off by the cost of the test, a prohibitive Rs 500.

BUT Makhija's case brought home the fact that ignorance about AIDS is as rampant among doctors as the general public. In 1983, three years after the unlucky businessman underwent bypass surgery in New York, he developed (through a fungal infection typical of immunosuppressed patients) low grade fever and started losing weight. The last two symptoms are typical of tuberculosis, and though Makhija was a rich man with the city's top doctors attending on him, for nearly three years he was treated for TB until, totally emaciated and afflicted with dementia, he was admitted to the Jaslok Hospital on May 27, under the care of Dr Lele, a pioneer in nuclear medicine. Since Makhija had failed to respond to TB treatment and tests had shown he did not suffer from cancer, Dr Lele suspected the worst—the first full-blown case of AIDS in the country. Immunology tests at the Tata Cancer Research Centre showed that the ratio of T-4 (helper) cells to T-8 (suppressor) cells, which is normally two is to one, was down to 0.5 to one (the AIDS virus HTLV-III directly attacks the T-4 cells which are the body's main weapon against viral infection). His blood's white cell count was down to 3,000 (against a normal 10,000), lymphocytes to just 300 (against a normal 1,200) and a brain scan showed atrophy of the brain typical of dementia in the final stages of AIDS. Blood tests at the National Institute of Virology, Pune, showed positive for HTLV-III, confirming the diagnosis made days before the patient died. Samples of Makhija's blood have been sent to the Centre for Disease Control in Atlanta to isolate the AIDS virus and efforts are being made to establish whether the Indian virus is similar to the western or African variety.

Coincidentally, two months before Makhija's death, the Maharashtra Government had been activated against the AIDS threat after Rajiv Gandhi, on a visit to Bombay, questioned the State health minister on the Government's AIDS surveillance programme. The prime minister is known to be taking a personal interest in the campaign. The Government has already launched a media campaign to educate people. Both Doordarshan and AIR regularly broadcast warnings against AIDS, Roving Eye did a special TV feature on the disease, and government-issued warning advertisements have begun appearing in newspapers. But so far the efforts have been amateurish and limited.

The Government's campaign has also come in for strong criticism from a section of the medical fraternity. "Government measures are not going to help anybody except produce mass hysteria and apprehension about AIDS," said Dr A.G. Phatak, a senior immunologist in Miraj. Dr Lele also expressed concern that the Government may divert scarce public health resources to the AIDS campaign. "People are dying of TB and malaria for which a cure is easily available, yet public opinion is more bothered about facilities for AIDS for which there is no cure," he observed.

But the appearance of the first cases of AIDS is a grim warning of the difficult task ahead. Scarce resources will have to be diverted to devise an effective anti-AIDS campaign even as medical administrators battle to ensure that lifting the veil on a mysterious and deadly disease does not unleash country-wide hysteria.

—M. RAHMAN with RAJ CHENGAPPA

AIDS test at AIIMS: confused picture

PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEST-TUBE BABIES

Made in India

AN AIR of anxious expectancy surrounds ward 14 of King Edward's Medical (KEM) Hospital in North Bombay. The analogy is apt enough. It is here that the first made-in-India test-tube baby will be born next month to Mani Shyamji Chawda, a pert 23-year-old employee of a local school, now in her eighth month of pregnancy.

The birth of the 'Chawda Baby', as it has been christened by the scientific community, will be celebrated with more than usual enthusiasm, particularly by Dr Indira Hinduja, senior gynaecologist at the KEM, who has been in charge of the project for the last three years in collaboration with the Institute for Research in Reproduction.

In purely medical terms, Dr Hinduja's achievement is hardly an earth-shaking event. Since the dramatic birth of Louise Brown, the world's first test-tube baby, in July 1978, well over 2,000 such babies have been born throughout the world. But the Chawda baby will, when it is born, become the first test-tube baby in India whose conception and birth would have been scientifically documented and accepted as such by the scientific community.

No such acceptance was afforded the team of doctors in Calcutta who announced the birth of India's first test-tube baby in 1978. And the test-tube baby born to Dr Prakash and Nirupma last month in Bangalore has been christened an NRI (non-resident Indian) baby in gynaecological circles since the fertilisation, conception and implantation of the embryo were done in Cambridge, England.

But for Dr Hinduja, the Chawda baby represents her first successful pregnancy and, in the Indian context, more of a social than a medical breakthrough. She had two other test-tube pregnancies. Unfortunately, the second expectant mother, a housewife from a Bombay suburb, aborted after a fall last fortnight. The other expectant mother, a 34-year-old schoolteacher from Goa, is not expecting her baby till much later.

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

Hopeful women at King Edward's Medical Hospital; Indira Hinduja (inset); studies extracted ova

For Maria, as well as the many women crowding Dr Indira Hinduja's office, this is indeed the last exit—out of infertility. The room spills over with women clutching medical reports, their faces mirroring a mixture of hope and desperation. They have come from Dubai, London, Vellore, Chitraput, Hyderabad, Delhi and the suburbs of Bombay, on an anxious pilgrimage to the KEM Hospital. Most of them are in their mid-30s; a few are 40. But their common desperation to conceive and escape the ingrained social stigma of barrenness gives them a common identity.

Obviously, news of the impending birth has spread far and wide—and fast. Dr Hinduja first announced her success at the international meeting on the 'Biological basis of medicine' in Bombay in January this year. Today, over 15 new patients arrive at her clinic every morning, some straight from the railway station. She gets a similar number of letters every day with requests for in-vitro fertilisation and embryo transfer (IVF-ET), the process used in the Chawda case, from all over the country. Between August 1985 and last fortnight, Dr Hinduja has performed nearly 50 IVF's.

All indications are that there could soon be a test-tube baby boom. Madras is scheduled to open an IVF-ET centre in July. In Delhi, Dr Kamal Bakshi of the All India Institute of Medical Sciences is already working on a similar project. In Calcutta, a team of doctors has announced the coming birth of two test-tube babies in November. And a private clinic in Bangalore belonging to Dr Sulochana Gunasheela will, in collaboration with Bangalore University, soon start working on IVF techniques. Dr Gunasheela has no doubts about the demand for test-tube babies. Said she: "I am already receiving enquiries from childless couples. I am sure that once we start there will be such a long queue that I will be unable to cope."

Bombay itself has the most number of projects on stream. Working anonymously but frantically in one of the city's plushest clinics is a team of two doctors who claim to have a patient who is in her fourth month of pregnancy after a successful IVF-ET. But the doctors, who claim to have 1,000 new infertile patients each year, want to remain anonymous for the time being. Other private doctors, including the renowned gynaecologist Dr R.P. Sonawala, have also been working on IVF-ET. Nanavati Hospital plans to start an IVF-ET centre soon, as does Bombay Hospital. The Jaslok Hospital will also probably set up an entire unit. And, once the rate of failure is considerably reduced, private practitioners could well mushroom overnight.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Initially, however, it is only the affluent who will be able to afford the treatment. In KEM Hospital, a patient has to spend almost as much as Rs 1,500 to 2,000 for the first cycle: the patient bears the cost of the injections, tests and hormones. But it is the municipality of Bombay, of which KEM Hospital is a part, and the Institute of Research in Reproduction which bears the brunt of the cost. Privately, the cost of a test-tube baby can be as high as Rs 50,000 according to Bombay gynaecologist Dr C.L. Jhaveri, who will be involved with the Nanavati Hospital IVF unit when it comes up.

But in the context of the cost of having the operation performed abroad, India still works out comparatively cheaper. Rashida Begum, 40, rushed to KEM with her husband, an electrical engineer, from Dubai when she read about Dr Hinduja. Married for 13 years and after going through "fifty doctors and about as many tests", she decided that having a test-tube baby was the only answer. "I know that this is our last chance," she says. A month earlier, two nurses from Kuwait, who had previously worked at KEM Hospital, stopped by to inquire about the possibility of

BANGALORE

The Long Wait

PATIENTS at the St Philomena's Hospital in the heart of Bangalore were startled by a stream of reporters, photographers and sundry visitors into their otherwise quiet corridors last fortnight. The centre of attraction in the missionary hospital was the first 'test-tube' baby born to an Indian couple.

For the couple, H.M. Prakash, 40, and Nirupama, 28, from Hassan district in Karnataka, the birth of the 2.5-kg baby boy was a miracle that put an end to 10 years of agonising waiting for a child. After an unsuccessful operation in Bombay to correct Nirupama's blocked Fallopian tubes, the couple opted for in- vitro fertilisation (IVF-ET). The in-vitro (outside the womb) embryo was conceived and implanted in the mother's womb at Dr Patrick Steptoe's Bourne Hall Clinic—where the world's first test-tube baby Louise Brown was born—near Cambridge in England and the baby was delivered 38 weeks later in Bangalore. Although the in-vitro operation was done abroad, the Bangalore baby was being touted as "India's first test-tube baby" to the amusement of the proud father. Said Prakash, himself a doctor: "I simply can't understand why there is so much publicity."

Prakash, the son of an advocate in Hassan, married a coffee planter's daughter in May 1976 and went off to Arak in Iran where he had become a government doctor a year earlier. Nirupama conceived in the next year but had to be aborted in an Arak hospital because of hyperemisis gravidorm (excessive vomiting in early pregnancy). There was no sign of a child for the next two years and then the couple was shocked to learn from a specialist that the abortion had resulted in some subclinical infection which in turn blocked the uterine ends of both her Fallopian tubes. Prakash realised that it was almost impossible to have a child: any operation to repair the tubes would have a 10 per cent chance of success.

Deccan Herald

Prakash and Nirupama with baby

Prakash brought his wife to Bombay in 1982 where she underwent the Tuboplasty operation by reputed surgeon R.P. Sonawala to open up the Fallopian tubes. It could not be immediately ascertained whether the operation was successful and the couple then spent six tortuous months waiting for confirmation. But an X-ray examination revealed that only minor openings had been made in the tubes. A second surgery is ruled out in such cases. "It was then," recalled Prakash, "that I began the long search for alternatives."

Prakash, from his knowledge of medicine, scooped up the names of all leading medical bodies in the world and wrote to them explaining his wife's case. Almost all of them replied that the only recourse left was to go in for the IVF-ET. The couple chose the Bourne Clinic. After a long wait—due to the demand for test-tube babies—the couple were called by the clinic in 1984 but they could not leave Iran because of that country's war with Iraq. They were called again in August last year and finally flew to London.

After painstaking tests, nine eggs were taken from Nirupama's ovary and were fertilised with Prakash's sperm in the clinic's laboratory. Three fertilised embryos—frozen at minus 273 degrees Centigrade in liquid nitrogen for two days under a method developed by Australian doctors—were implanted in Nirupama's uterus but they died. Meanwhile, two of the remaining six embryos died in the freezing process. Of the four left, two were implanted in Nirupama's womb again in her next cycle. And finally, to the disbelief of even the couple, one embryo survived and Nirupama became pregnant. The cost: £3,350 (Rs. 63,516)

The couple now have one remaining 'quandary': What to do with the two remaining embryos lying in the Bourne Clinic? They can go back to Bourne and have two more babies. Prakash said he is "not very keen" on having more test-tube children. But Nirupama has other views: "I feel as if my son's brothers or sisters are floating in the freezer there and I want to have them," she says.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD in Bangalore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RESEARCH

In Infancy

CREATING life outside the womb by tampering with Nature's birthing process is no longer the medical miracle it was when, in July, 1978, Patrick Steptoe announced the birth of Louise Brown. But the act of adding sperm to a ripe egg in a laboratory dish and after incubation, transferring the developing embryo to the uterus, is still a delicate and partially-understood operation. It was only in the early '60s that researchers were able to fertilise mammalian eggs in a laboratory. Nine years later came baby Brown.

Since then, more successful technology has evolved to extract the eggs from the ovary. Steptoe and others use a laparoscope, but another technique is to use an ultra-sound scanner that shows the mature egg-bearing follicles in the ovary on a TV screen which can then be 'aspirated', or sucked onto a small needle.

The emerging technology of embryo transfer carries basic risks like the development of chromosomal abnormalities during test-tube fertilisation. Wider use of the IVF-ET technique can improve understanding of reproductive biology, genetic diseases and innovate newer methods of contraception. The allure of embryo transfer lies in its potential to rapidly replenish any species on the verge of extinction as well as the genetic quality of the human species.

In India, work on embryo transfers began only in the 1980s. Dr Hinduja began in collaboration with the Institute of Research in Reproduction three years ago. She worked with hamsters and then with human beings. She claims a success rate of 10 to 15 per cent, but is confident of attaining 40 per cent.

Though nearly three thousand test-tube babies have been born the world over, the IVF-ET technique is complicated and the success rate fairly low. Techniques may vary, but the basic principle involves the extraction of a mature egg (oocyte) from a woman's ovary and its fertilisation in a petridish by a sperm. After the embryo develops to the four to eight cell stage, it is transplanted into the woman's uterus. This obviates the need for the embryo to pass through the Fallopian tubes; most candidates are women with blocked tubes and it is so far their only hope.

Several gynaecologists, including Dr Hinduja, are about to experiment with another method, appropriately called GIFT. The egg is aspirated, as in IVF; but the sperm, after being treated, is artificially placed at the ampiciliary end of the tube where fertilisation takes place. The oocyte and sperm in this case meet the normal way, rather than outside the body, in a dish.

—MADHU JAIN with AMARNATH K. MENON

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

their having IVF-ET done.

Test-tube babies are in great demand in India. Despite the galloping population, infertility is quite prevalent. Nearly 10 per cent of Indian couples are sterile, according to Dr Mahindra Watsa of the Family Planning Association of India, while Dr Hinduja puts the incidence of infertility among married couples in India at nearly 20 per cent.

Since test-tube babies are still an infant phenomenon in India, the ethics of it have not even been considered. In a country like India, the distance from test-tube babies to surrogate parents (the rent-a-womb syndrome) is indeed tiny. Asks one gynaecologist: "Who would not want to sell their body for Rs 40,000 in a poor country like India... Moreover, with the IVF method, sexual contact is also avoided." Explains Dr Watsa: "Earlier, if the man was sterile, the woman could be impregnated with donor semen. But if the woman has blocked tubes and the womb is alright, the IVF method is effective. But then there is the ethical question: it could be done with or without the father's sperm. Whose baby would it be then?"

Until now most of the Indian doctors have only been carrying out IVF-ET with couples—but it will not be too long before donors will be involved. The demand for babies is so great and intense that rich couples would go to any lengths to have a baby. Discretion, however, as is the case with artificial insemination, will have to be the rule. Donors have to sign a paper saying that they will not ask for the name of the couple; the couple also has to sign a declaration stating that they will not demand the name of the donor.

Tragically, most of the contenders for IVF-ET have not even considered the possibility of adoption as an alternative. The stigma of infertility might be unbearable, but adoption is even more so. Says Dr Jayshree Patel, a Bombay gynaecologist: "Unfortunately, it is in our culture. People do not adopt children because of our beliefs. Take Karan in the Mahabharata. Or take Hindi movies: the adopted sons always create trouble, they are the bad blood. When a child is to be married, the question of blood comes up because they want to ask about the genesis of the next generation." And, judging by the sudden and unprecedented interest generated by the Chawda baby, the genesis of an increasing number of Indian babies could well be frozen in a test-tube.

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ADMISSION NOTICE

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA & ALL INDIAN UNION STATES— RECOGNISED DIPLOMAS & DEGREES

Applications are invited from employed/unemployed Boys & Girls for the following Engineering, Management and Commerce Correspondence Courses and eligible students for IIT/JEE, M.B.B.S. & M.B.A. Entrance Exams.

ENGINEERING COURSES

1. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): A.M.I.E. (INDIA)-Studentship, Section A & B in Architectural, Chemical, Civil, Electrical, Electronics & Communication, Mechanical, Metallurgical, Mining & Textile Engineering.
2. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): SURVEYOR of the Institution of Surveyors.
3. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): A.M.I.E.T.E. (INDIA) Section A & B in Telecommunication & Electronics Engineering.
4. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): A.M.Ae.S.I. AERONAUTICAL Engineering Studentship, Section A & B.
5. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): A.M.I.M.E. (INDIA) MECHANICAL Engineering Studentship, Section A & B.
6. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): C.E. (U.K.) in Civil, Chemical, Electronics & Radio Engineering, Fuel Engineering, Marine, Mechanical, Production, Naval Architect & Structural Engineering.
7. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): A.M.I.I. CHEM.E. (INDIA) Chemical Engineering Studentship, Section A & B.
8. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): I.I.M. (INDIA)-Metals Engineering Part I & II.
9. GRADUATESHIP (B.E.): Industrial Engineering-Preliminary, Section A & B.

(ALL THE ABOVE COURSES ARE RECOGNISED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA & ALL INDIAN UNION STATES AS EQUIVALENT TO B.E. OR B.TECH. EVEN AFTER PASSING ANY OF THE ABOVE COURSES, STUDENTS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR ADMISSION TO M.E. M. Tech. COURSES OF INDIAN UNIVERSITY).

10. GRADUATESHIP AUTOMOBILE Engineering A.M.I.A.E. Studentship, Section A & B.
11. A.M.I.M.I. (INDIA) Motor Industry: Diploma in Automobile Engineering Part A, B & C.
12. DIPLOMA IN REFRIGERATION AND AIRCONDITIONING Engineering.
13. GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURE ENGINEERING Diploma.
14. DIPLOMA IN DRAUGHTSMAN—CIVIL & MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.
15. GOVERNMENT RECOGNISED STATE BOARD OF TECHNICAL EDUCATION DIPLOMAS in Civil-L.C.E./D.C.E., Mechanical-L.M.E./D.M.E. Electrical-L.E.E./D.E.E. Electronics & Communications Engineering-L.E.C.E./D.E.C.E.
16. C.G.L.I. (LONDON)—CITY & GUILDS OF LONDON INSTITUTE DIPLOMA COURSES in Electrical Engg. Radio, Television and Electronic Engg., Mechanical and Electrical Engg., Mechanical and Production Engg.
17. GOVT OF INDIA RADIO OFFICERS COURSE, C.O.P. Class I & II.

MANAGEMENT/COMMERCE COURSES

1. GRADUATESHIP COURSES OF A.M.I.B.M. PART A & B in Business Management.
2. A.I.B.M. DIPLOMA IN BUSINESS MANAGEMENT.
3. DIPLOMA COURSES in Business & Industrial Management (D.B.I.M.), Personnel Management and Industrial Relations (D.P.M. & I.R.), Purchasing & Material Management (D.P.M.M.), Management Accounting (D.M.A.), Export Marketing Management (D.E.M.M.), Marketing Management (D.M.M.) & DIPLOMA IN HOTEL MANAGEMENT (D.H.M.).
4. COMPANY SECRETARY EXAMINATION Preliminary/Intermediate & Final.
5. I.C.W.A. (INDIA) Preliminary/Intermediate & Final.
6. I.C.M.A. (LONDON) Part I, II, III & IV of Institution of Cost & Management Accounts (London).
7. CHARTERED SECRETARY (LONDON)-Intermediate/Final of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries (London).
8. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT (C.A.) Entrance, Intermediate & Final.
9. GOVERNMENT COMMERCIAL DIPLOMA-(G.C.D.)

IIT/JEE, M.B.B.S. & M.B.A. ENTRANCE

Effective programmed, postal instructions designed to get you through at first appearance depending on your own speed of learning and effort.

ADMISSION QUALIFICATIONS: Matric/S.S.C./H.S.C./10+2/P.U.C./Intermediate/Graduate/Diploma in any Branch of Graduates in Engineering with any subject.

FACILITIES OFFERED: This is the only College in India giving maximum facilities to its students Examination Centres all over India & Abroad, Fully equipped library. Highly qualified and experienced staff, Career guidance, ARRANGEMENT FOR PRACTICALS ALL OVER INDIA. Supply of lessons and FREE BOOKS etc., and SOME OF THE SPECIAL FEATURES. THIS IS ONE OF THE OLDEST & REPUTED COLLEGE IN INDIA & ABROAD WITH THOUSANDS OF INDIAN & FOREIGN STUDENTS. So you start from scratch. LIMITED SEATS GUARANTEED SUCCESS. Foreign Students can also apply for admission.

FOR FULL DETAILED LATEST PROSPECTUS & ADMISSION FORM send Rs. 20/- (TWENTY ONLY) by Money Order or Postal Order or Demand Draft to the Principal

INTERNATIONAL COLLEGE OF CORRESPONDENCE (REGD.)

Kothi No. 17, South Patel Nagar, (Main Patel Road) Near State Bank of India (Post Box No. 6045) New Delhi-110 008 (INDIA)

NOTE: Our College is RECOGNISED & AFFILIATED to The Institution of Business Management and The Institution of Automotive Engineers.

ONE OF THE BIGGEST AND OLDEST CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE IN INDIA

CC-0. Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by S. PREMI

UTTAR PRADESH

Web of Corruption

Kanpur weavers: victims of fraud

THE COOPERATIVE movement in Uttar Pradesh, the sacred cow of India's ambitious development drive, has been milked dry by a long and undistinguished line of unscrupulous politicians. The latest such instance surfaced in the form of a first information report (FIR) filed in the industrial township of Kanpur last month by the CID. It charged Jagdish Awasthy, a sitting Congress(I) Lok Sabha member from Kanpur, and president of the District Cooperative Bank, and half-a-dozen senior officials of the local Industries Department for recommending and releasing loans worth over Rs 4 crore to fictitious cooperative societies of weavers based in the town. A number of arrests were made but Awasthy, the alleged master-mind behind the entire operation, vanished underground.

The crack-down followed on the heels of a flurry of representations from bona fide weavers' societies to the state Government charging that bogus societies floated by criminals and influential politicians were cornering huge amounts of money from cooperative banks, resulting in their being denied loans for purchase of cotton from the market.

The political dust kicked up by their charges prompted Chief Minister Beer Bahadur Singh to order a full-blown police investigation. A preliminary probe revealed that not only were many of the societies bogus but even where they existed, there was no office or a duly elected body.

Investigative officers in the Cooperative Department carried out a summary check of loans drawn from various cooperative banks by societies and found that a staggering Rs 160 crore had been cornered by them as 'loans'. Since it would have been physically impossible to scrutinise all the 3,488 registered societies, it was decided to begin with Kanpur district where 482 societies were registered. Sample checks had pointed to Kanpur societies being involved in a major share of the fraud cases.

"Crores of rupees have been sanctioned for the welfare of 15 lakh weavers. Such fraud and embezzlement is surprising."

BEER BAHADUR SINGH
chief minister, Uttar Pradesh

The scrutiny revealed that a majority of the weavers' societies, which had taken loans from the Kanpur District Cooperative Bank, could not be traced. Even more incredible, in the Kidwainagar suburb, they found a cycle shop, a paan shop, an electronics goods shop and even a restaurant functioning in what were registered as the premises of a cooperative society.

In one case, both the father and the son of one family were holding the post of president and secretary though the rules expressly prohibit blood relations from doing so. Further, the Rs 2.5 lakh, 'lent' to the society for its business activity had been embezzeled and police found hard evidence of political connections.

Cooperative banks in Kanpur alone, it was discovered, had been defrauded of Rs 40 crore and the extent of the fraud was reflected in the 63 FIR's filed later by the investigators. Said Chief Minister Beer Bahadur Singh: "Crores of rupees have been sanctioned for the welfare of 15 lakh weavers. But such fraud and embezzlement is surprising. Unscrupulous persons have taken advantage of the situation." But

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The world's most beautiful floors... Now in India

SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

SPARTEK
Now made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We Canadians have a refreshing approach to life □ We're enterprising. Enthusiastic. Energetic □ And we bring these attitudes to our airline □ We look at every aspect of the business of business travel. From check-in to check-out □ And where we can, we do things a different, better way □ We're succeeding too. We've just won Air Transport World's Passenger Service Award □ We believe that airline travel needs a fresh approach. So when you have the option, opt for Air Canada □ We think you'll enjoy the breath of fresh air we're bringing to flying.

A BREATH OF FRESH AIR

AIR CANADA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now presenting you the product of Computer Aided Technology CAT 1000

CAT – that's Computer Aided Technology; for you :

CAT. It has suddenly changed all the old concepts in TV manufacturing. It ensures that only rugged, well-tested, zero-defect components go into your Solidaire CAT 1000. Everytime. For instance our Digital Colour Analyser. It takes care of colour levels for life-like picture reproduction. And the Central Signal Supply System (CSSS). Its Pattern Generators and Crystal Controlled Modulators are of International Standards which ensure perfect colour balance among the three basic colours (R G B).

Just possess one and see; it'll make your house look beautiful :

CAT 1000. Its sheer presence. With hi-impact polystyrene moulded cabinet, anti-glare screen and concealed controls it's made beautiful, slim, sleek. To grace your decor and display. And with two soft-touch buttons you can increase or decrease the volume. For channel selection, too you've two soft-touch buttons. Plus the stand-by facility, easy band/channel selection controls, illuminated programme display in CAT 1000 make it a TV, you'll be proud to possess.

- Zero-defect components like LOT, SMPS, MOSFET, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs etc from ITT, West Germany
- VCR, Video Games & Home Computer facilities

Cordless Remote Control

CAT 1000
Computer Aided Technology

COLOUR
Solidaire
-that seldom fails!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kanpur is obviously only the tip of the massive fraud iceberg. Janata MLA Ravindra Nath Tiwari charged in the state legislature that such embezzlement was common in societies in Gorakhpur, Varanasi, Azamgarh, Lucknow and other districts. He also alleged a political cover-up. "There is a move to get the case shifted to the Vigilance Department from the CID so that it would take years to complete," he charged.

Ishaq Ahmed, till recently a weaver before quitting his job to drive a cycle rickshaw, alleged that society office-bearers generally cornered all the money. Looms were never bought and documents were falsified to show another society's looms as its own. Lamented Ishaq: "These leaders have used the money to buy tempos or taxis. Some have even bought buses and are running them at a healthy profit, whereas the looms are languishing."

Kidwainagar "offices" of the fraudulent society (top); and the blank forms

Official statements, however, stop short of admitting that there is widespread fraud. Ravi Mathur, director, Handlooms and Textiles, claimed that a three-member committee, which randomly checked some 20 cooperatives, found evidence of irregularities in only one case. Facilities to this society were stopped. "Under the RBI (now NABARD) scheme, banks provide working capital assistance to cooperative societies. A cooperative bank sanctions a cash credit limit in favour of a society and informs the Handlooms and Textiles Directorate. The district cooperative bank then issues a guarantee of up to 90 per cent of the cash credit limit," he explained.

In 1984-85, guarantees amounting to Rs 16.69 crore had been issued in favour of 1,761 societies which included a Rs 3 crore guarantee in favour of UPICA—the apex cooperative body. But when queried about embezzlement, Mathur side-stepped the question by pointing out that checking of societies was underway and the money would be sanctioned only after proper scrutiny.

But there was no denying the damning case set out in the original FIR which states: "The Lakshmi Handloom Co-operative Society, Khapra Mahal...has been registered in connivance with the officials of the Industries Department, Handloom Department and the District Cooperative Bank in Kanpur. The membership is bogus, the office-bearers were not traceable, the address was false and there was no physical evidence of the society's existence. The society has not submitted its monthly progress reports and handloom officials recommended the release of funds despite numerous irregularities. The society secured money from the bank showing false receipts and has even earned rebate on false bills of sale of its products."

In the case of the New Rubi Handloom Cooperative, the FIR states that the society does not exist on the address at which it was supposed to have been registered but that did not prevent the local industries department from providing it with a valid registration certificate and recommending its case for loans.

And evidence of official connivance continues to mount. Loans were sanctioned by the office of the assistant director (handlooms) on application forms which do not give the name of the society but only the secretary's or president's name. In some cases, the amount column has been left blank—the applicant is apparently free to fill in the amount he desires. The same office has also recommended increasing the cash credit limit of Universe Handloom Cooperative Society, Kanpur, on the grounds that its production and turnover were high!

In a belated awakening, the authorities have now issued directives to all field officers to carefully scrutinise loan applications, intensify the drive to recover arrears from defaulting societies, follow NABARD guidelines on cash credit limits and have specimen signatures and photographs of the society office-bearers on the application forms. As an additional precaution, the district magistrate has been authorised to supervise the elections to the executive committee every three years.

State Cooperatives Minister Arun Kumar Singh has promised stern action as the damaging revelations continue to surface. "Action will be taken against the culprits. But political parties are taking advantage of the situation," he says. The last statement, however, sounded hollow in the light of the fact that many CID officers privately told INDIA TODAY that they would prefer the Central Bureau of Investigation to take over the case. As a senior officer remarked: "MP's, MLA's and other politicians are involved in this racket." In that context, a large question mark still hovers over the question of exactly how much of the tangled web of chicanery and corruption will be eventually unravelled.

—S. PREMI in Kanpur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A structural sensation! Conceived, designed and executed by Nagarjuna Coated Tubes.

The Jawaharlal Nehru Indoor Stadium, Cuttack.

India's first 67 meters free span tubular structure built with only 104 tonnes of Superyield flo coat tubes!

View of the Space Frame Structure

Today, the Jawaharlal Nehru Indoor Stadium is a marvel in structural designing. Built to seat 7000 spectators, it has a 67m diameter space dome whose inner crown rests 32m above floor level!

Apart from achieving this extraordinary structural feat, Superyield "35/38" also proved to have several other advantages:

- Saving National steel resources
  Originally, the design had been conceived with conventional sections utilising 320 tonnes of steel. NCT's superyield "35/38" did the same job using just 104 tonnes.
- A cost effective alternative
  Superyield "35/38" flo coat tubes brought down the original project cost by 10%.
- Corrosion resistant and maintenance free
  Manufactured by the flo coat technology — a unique process of triple coating, NCT tubes are completely corrosion resistant.

In just two and a half years since commercial production, NCT has successfully implemented 78 projects with many more on the way. Another such project is a 88 metres free span structure, the largest and the first of its kind in India.

Our list of clients include several private and government organisations using NCT tubes for electrical, structural and general engineering applications. Today we have all the facilities required to meet any specifications.

For your requirements of factory sheds, scaffolding, storage racking systems please write to:

NCT
adds life to metals
Nagarjuna Coated Tubes Limited
41, Nagarjuna Hills, Punjagutta, Hyderabad-500 482

Regional Offices:
• Calcutta 445402, 442887 • New Delhi 5722109
• Madras 415888 • Bombay 2020726, 2023015

Sista's/NCT/44/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the quiet green meadows of Kashmir the only echoes are the hoof-beats of your pony

Kashmir invites you to high altitude adventure. Trek through the mountains on foot or on pony. From Tangmarg to Gulmarg to Khilanmarg and on to Alphathar. Spend nights in the woodlands by the sparkling streams. With campfire and music for company. There are spectacular camping sites. Pahalgam, Aru, Chandanwari, Sehiwas and many more.

Leave your luggage at Srinagar. Collect a rucksack or a sleeping bag. And hit the many exciting trails in the valley of peace and tranquillity.

Visit Kashmir
Discover Paradise

Department of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KAPIL DEV

India's Greatest All-Rounder

THIS TIME there were no hastily-scrawled banners waved aloft in the stands. No frenzied bhangras in front of the balcony. No all-night celebrations in the streets. Instead, Kapil Dev and his team-mates trooped back to their hotel rooms where they had a quiet champagne celebration, confined strictly to the team, and then dispersed to their rooms as if their historic achievement that forenoon was all part of a day's work.

In a sense, their blase attitude to the day's triumph—winning the second successive Test match against England and thus the series—was somehow quite in keeping with the audacious self-assurance and outstanding all-round ability the Indian cricket team has started to display in the traditional five-day game. As a quietly-elated Captain Kapil Dev himself remarked to INDIA TODAY after the heady Headingley victory: "We virtually have a new team."

And, he might have also added, if modesty permitted, a new captain. Gone is the earlier hesitancy and indecision, the lack of forcefulness in leadership, the debilitating personality clashes and above all, the reluctance to go on the offensive that cost India the last series in Australia. Kapil Dev Nikhanj is suddenly a man transformed. After 20 Tests without a win as captain, Kapil broke the hoodoo last fortnight with a virtuoso individual performance—both as captain and player—that effectively silenced his many critics and overjoyed thousands of cricket fans back home who had almost begun to despair of India ever being able to win a Test under his captaincy.

Phographs by PATRICK EAGAR

Says former captain Bishen Singh Bedi: "He has not put a foot wrong so far. He has led from the front, shown a positive approach and impressed me no end by his cool and composed statements after the victory. This is a new Kapil we are seeing." Adds 'Tiger' Pataudi, another ex-captain: "He certainly seems to have become more positive in his approach." Veteran London-based cricket scribe Dicky Rutnagur waxed even more eloquent: "Kapil Dev's long wait for success as captain and particularly the two near-misses in Australia, have toughened him up to lead his team with more than just personal example. He has gained in confidence and authority. Surely, we see the dawn of a new, brilliant era."

And even if the dawn was somewhat obscured by the football fiesta in Mexico and the majesty of Wimbledon, it could hardly detract from the triumph of the Indian cricket team's first series victory abroad in 15 years, including their first-ever win at Lords, the Holy Grail of international cricket. The victory was only the second series win by an Indian team in England. Neither

Champagne time with Dilip Vengsarkar at Headingley; and (right) drawing first blood in the second innings to set up the historic series victory.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

could the fact that England are a demoralised team after their recent blackwash in the West Indies take away from the near-total domination the Indian team exercised in both the Tests played so far. Much of the credit for that must necessarily go to Kapil Dev and his new aggressiveness.

The new approach was in evidence right from the first day of the opening Test at Lords, when Kapil, on winning the toss, decided to send England in to bat rather than play safe. "His decision to send the opposition in at Lords was inspired," says Pataudi. And then, on the fourth day, Kapil gave notice of his intentions to lead by personal example when he ripped the heart out of the English batting with an inspired spell which fetched him four vital wickets, out of which three—Robinson, Gooch and Gower—fell in the space of 19 deliveries. Then, appropriately enough, Kapil blasted the English attack after India, needing 134 runs for a win, had lost five wickets for 78, and in a flourish typical of the "Haryana hurricane", scored the winning run through a majestic six over mid-wicket. His outstanding performance edged out century-maker Dilip Vengsarkar for the man-of-the-match award and re-established his credentials as one of the greatest all-rounders the game has been privileged to see.

That conclusion was confirmed authoritatively in the second Test at Headingley when Kapil harnessed the overcast conditions quite superbly to produce one of the finest spells of seam bowling seen at the historic ground. Swinging the ball prodigiously, almost fast leg-breaks, Kapil bowled with the venom of a King Cobra and had the English batsmen groping and fending like blind men. Unfortunately, however, the Gods of cricketing fortunes were looking the other way this blustery day as Kapil failed to get among the wickets, coming perilously close on innumerable occasions, but lacking the edge of luck. In the event, the only wicket he did take, that of Graham Gooch, turned out to be the best ball of the day. As veteran commentator Henry Blofield appropriately described it: "The ball just exploded in his (Gooch's) face. It was a brute of a ball which only a bowler of Kapil's ability could have produced. Like Malcolm Marshall, Kapil's power and fine action allows him to make the occasional ball lift from surprisingly far up the pitch."

Kapil's magnificient spell seemed to energise the other Indian pacemen, Roger Binny and Madan Lal, to heights they have never achieved before. Binny and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PATRICK EAGAR

Vengsarkar (above) driving Emburey on his way to his record century of the series at Headingley after top-scoring in the first innings.

Madan Lal shatters the stumps to have England reeling in the first innings while Maninder (left) scalps seven to give India victory.

Madan Lal had England sagging against the ropes with some intelligent and accurate bowling, picking up eight of the 10 wickets. Madan, who had been hastily recruited at the last minute from the Lancashire League—he was playing for Ashton-under-Lyne—to replace the injured Chetan Sharma, removed opener Wilf Slack with his second ball of the match, a beauty which swung in late and spread-eagled the stumps. Then Binny took over to completely demolish the England batting with a devastating spell that fetched him his first haul of five wickets in a Test, the last three in just six balls at the cost of three runs, having missed a historic hat trick by the proverbial whisker. Wrote John Woodcock of The Times: "I am ashamed to have written before the series began that runs would seldom have been cheaper for English batsmen than against this Indian attack. Yesterday, as at Lords, this was far from being so."

Few Yorkshiremen at Headingley could recall such an incident-packed day in which 17 wickets tumbled for 209 runs, including five in the Indian second innings for a paltry 70 runs. But the lanky and taciturn Dilip Vengsarkar produced what must rank as one of the finest knocks in Test cricket to notch up his second century after top-scoring for India in the first innings. Playing with sublime grace, Vengsarkar unleashed a dazzling array of silk-lined strokes to frustrate the English attack, unperturbed by the bizarre sight of the Headingley spectators performing the "Human wave", a la Mexico. In the member's pavilion, the septuagenarian Len Hutton, one of the game's all-time greats and former England captain, mused in a typically English understatement: "This chap Vengsarkar, what a fine player he is." Marvelled former English Test star Denis Compton: "His century was one of superb quality. He has a wonderfully correct technique."

But even the supreme majesty of Vengsarkar's innings could not dilute the fact that it was an outstanding team effort that put India in the driving seat. Vengsarkar was aided by some exceptional batting from the pint-sized and acrobatic wicket-keeper Kiran More, surely the find of the tour, a typical run-a-minute assault from Kapil and vital contributions from Binny and Madan Lal. Lamented Robin Marlar of the Sun- day Times: "Only flood or pestilence can save England now."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nothing else could have made a difference to the result on the fourth day as Kapil and Roger Binny once again broke through early to dispatch the early order and then the reed-like Maninder Singh baffled the English batsmen with some top-class spin bowling to skittle England out for 128. It was another inspiring display of razor-sharp fielding by the Indian team, particularly by More who snapped up four catches behind the stumps, and intelligent and accurate bowling. In just 75 minutes of play, Kapil and his men had given England one of its most statistically dramatic defeats in Tests between the two countries. Acknowledged former England captain and chairman of the English selection board, Peter May: "England has been outbowled and outbatted, not in some dusty eastern maidan, but on our own northern cabbage patch."

But more important than winning the series was the fact that the Indian team managed, in one master-stroke, to erase their reputation of being capable of winning only in the one-day variation of the game. Said Kapil: "We were prepared to

INTERVIEW

"I was under pressure"

IN A SPACIOUS flat on a leafy, tree-lined avenue of Maida Vale in west London, India's cricket captain Kapil Dev, having led his side to a landmark series win over England, is nursing a cold and a strained back. He is watching the day's televised Wimbledon matches on an enchanting summer's day. The sprawling apartment is sparsely furnished and Kapil emphasises that it does not belong to him but to a "very dear friend"—Shankar Ramani—a wealthy US-based oil entrepreneur.

As the plush coach carrying the Indian team meanders its way from one enticing English hamlet to another, a familiar sight has been Kapil engrossed in a game of chess—usually with Srikkanth or Maninder. "Kaps", as he is known to his buddies, has gradually emerged as one of the country's most popular captains. In a lengthy interview to INDIA TODAY London Correspondent RAMESH CHANDRAN, Kapil spoke about his trail-blazing career, the controversies he has had to endure and his ambitions. Excerpts:

Q. Twenty Tests at a trot without a win—that must have been mortifying. How confident were you here?

A. Although we did not win any Test, the Indian team recently has not done too badly. We dominated the series in Australia and it was due to bad weather we couldn't win two of the Tests. I thought we played extraordinary cricket there. Even against the West Indies, who are the top team at this stage, we didn't do as badly as some others. However, winning is vital for the team. Against England we were prepared to play positive cricket.

Q. There must have been some pressure on you to win something here.

A. Yes, there was. People expected a great deal from us. We were winning one-day matches but not Test matches. So the pressure was building up on me as well as on the team. I can now say a win does make so such difference, and to think that at one stage I used to think winning is not everything.

BHAWAN SINGH

Q. Did you work out any form of strategy for the English tour?

A. That we used to do in other Tests too. The difference here is that we had to exploit the special English conditions which we did perfectly and we needed that little bit of luck which we lacked in Sri Lanka and in Australia. The other plus point was the emergence of our spinners. In the past few years I have seen our spinners were on the decline. Now we have these new boys who are improving with every match. In fact, we virtually have a new team.

Q. To what precisely do you attribute the success of Chetan Sharma, Binny and Maninder in this tour?

A. Several things, I think. First, there were the conditions. Then their entire approach to the game is changing. Most of these new boys now realise that cricket is not just a fun game. They have developed a more professional attitude. There is more money in the game and then there is the accompanying publicity. The attitude of today's youngsters like Chetan and Maninder has changed from what it used to be when I started.

Q. They are no more nice guys?

A. They have the killer instinct and I am delighted to see it. We—Indian sportsmen—have lacked this in the past. This current Indian team will fight to the last minute to win. I give these younger players a lot of credit. And I am also pleased to see more youngsters coming forward to be seam bowlers.

Q. England seem a demoralised side after the blackwash in the West Indies and the chopping and changing of the team. In that context how high would you rate your victory here?

A. I always find that the English team is very good in England. They can use the wicket and exploit the conditions better than anybody else. But they did have

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

play positive cricket. People were expecting a great deal from us. We were winning one-day matches but not the Tests. So the pressure was building up on me as well as the rest of the team."

Kapil will also be the first to admit that the mounting pressures were what transformed his approach to the game and marked his coming of age as a captain. "This is not the somewhat restless and indecisive Kapil we have seen after the first World Cup win," says Bishen Bedi. Kapil's performance in England showed that, however belatedly, he has now matured considerably as a leader who is capable of earning the undivided loyalty of his team-mates, unlike earlier where rifts in the Indian camp were regular media fodder.

According to insiders, Kapil has acquired a new determination and an iron will to win. At Lords, he adopted a new strategy of consulting the entire team on whether or not he should put England in to bat first. He also seems to have finally buried the hatchet with Gavaskar as far as their long-running differences are concerned, another sign of his emerging maturity. "I am very proud of him. He is doing a wonderful job," says Desh Prem quite a few players under tremendous pressure trying to retain their places. But I would rate our win highly because it is also a reflection on our bowlers like Maninder and Shastri, who have matured. I still don't say they are the best but they are gaining confidence with each Test. I won't say we are the best or even second best. However, this Indian side will figure high because it is a well-balanced team. And we have a great batting line-up. Our bowlers are rapidly improving.

Q. Have the problems between you and Gavaskar been settled?

A. There is no problem. There was never any problem. At least, according to me, Sunil and I had never any disputes. We have never had any problems which could have harmed Indian cricket or our own performances. Now that we have won the series, why doesn't the press raise questions about team spirit? Does this spirit exist only when we win matches? Tell me, what is this team spirit? I think the Indian press has put so much pressure on both of us without any reason.

Q. Then why don't you set the record straight about the latest controversy regarding your book and the chapter on Gavaskar which have certain unflattering references on him? Was it printed without your permission?

A. Yes. It was printed without my permission.

Q. So are you going to sue the publishers and the co-author?

A. My lawyers are looking into it. There will be legal action but I can't say anything more since I am here in England. I will have a better idea once I get back. But I want to clear this once and for all. There is no dispute between Sunil and I. I wish the media would stop talking about this team spirit. We give a 100 per cent on the field. And you can't win all the time. You win some, you lose some. And if you try hard enough, you will win sometime. It is no point blaming lack of spirit amongst the players.

Q. Do you have personal goals to attain like most cricketers seem to have?

A. It depends whether I am playing as a bowler or a captain. I must see what's best for the team. And it depends on luck. Often you bowl well and never get any wickets. At other times, you bowl rubbish and get a wicket—a short-pitched ball which ought to have gone to the boundary results in a catch at mid-wicket. And we can't expect the bowler to have all the luck. The bastmen will have some of it too.

> "They have the killer instinct. We have lacked this in the past. This team will fight to the last minute to win. I give these younger players a lot of credit."

Q. But surely you have some personal ambitions. Three hundred Test wickets to begin with.

A. Yes, I am certainly keen to get 300 wickets. Wishing to achieve a personal landmark is a great motivating factor.

Q. And as a batsman.

A. I wish I had got more centuries. I am batting well now. When I go from the game, if I have got 10 hundreds, I'd feel superb. I know certain people say I ought to be more defensive in my batting. Why should I change my natural technique? But of course, it does depend on the situation your team is in.

Q. On comparing yourself with Botham, Hadlee and Imran Khan—three other great all-rounders, where would you place yourself?

A. I don't like to compare but I think each of them in their own way is a great player. Look at their cricketing qualities and their record. They have done so well. Since they don't play together for the same team and the conditions vary from one series to another, these comparisons are difficult.

Q. Money seems to have been on top of cricketers' priority lists not so long ago, rather than winning. Has this changed?

A. Well, that's not so. Every player wants to do his best for his country. And there is nothing wrong if players are well paid. For this, I would credit the media who have done a great deal for the game.

Q. Besides cricket, you do have flourishing business interests, don't you?

A. Well, my family takes care of our timber and hotel interests. My elder two brothers Ramesh Nikhanj and Bharat Bhushan Nikhanj look after it. The 15-room hotel in Chandigarh— "Kapil" is doing okay.

Q. What do you do with your spare time?

A. Well, the last few weeks I have been watching the football World Cup. But my interest has waned after my favourite team Brazil lost to France. Usually, I relax with my wife Romi. She often gets lonely when I am away playing cricket. We are given a house in Worcester when I am playing there but Romi accompanies me everywhere. I feel better that way. She is only now beginning to understand the game. I used to cook a bit, but over the years, Romi has become an excellent cook. She enjoys it. I eat all sorts of food—Chinese, Continental—foodwise, you name it, I have tried it. We do try to catch the odd play or movie. I watch a bit of video but have never seen a Hindi film in its entirety. Basically, our evenings are what Romi wishes to do. She reads a lot more than me. I catch up with news of India through magazines and dailies. I used to play squash till the doctor's advice forced me to give it up. I enjoy swimming and a bit of golf if I can find the time.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

THE ALL-ROUNDER LEAGUE

	Kapil Dev	Ian Botham	R. Hadlee	Imran Khan
TESTS	76	84	63	57
RUNS	3106	4577	2304	2140
AVERAGE	29.86	34.67	25.60	30.14
WICKETS	289	354	315	264
AVERAGE	28.48	27.06	22.63	22.18
STRIKE RATE	3.80	4.21	5.00	4.63

Azad, the legendary cricket coach from Chandigarh, where Kapil was born. He had first spotted the shy but sturdy teenager, tall for his age, who used to hang around the city's sprawling stadium that has been the nursery for such cricketing luminaries as Chetan Sharma, Ashok Malhotra and Yog Raj Singh. That was in the early '70s when Kapil was a student at the DAV High School, an institute with a well-earned reputation for sports.

RECALLS Azad: "I tested him out on his dedication to the game and whether he was really serious. I have always been on the lookout for strong, sturdy players who could be moulded into medium pacers and Kapil proved that he was eager to learn." Further encouragement came from his mother, Raj Nikhanj, of typical Punjabi stock (Kapil's father died some years ago), who watched and nurtured her son's growing involvement in cricket with maternal pride. Says she: "I was not worried when Kapil started spending more and more time at the playing fields. Kapil was a talented boy and everybody said so. After we migrated from Pakistan, he developed a strong sense of adventure. So we let him do what he wanted. At least he wasn't loitering around the coffee shops like other young boys."

Reminisces Raj Singh, manager of the current Indian team in England: "I recall the time when, way back in 1978, we took a Rajasthan sports club team to Kenya on a tour and I got a call from a Haryana lad pleading to come along. Kapil was a totally unknown commodity then. But he performed excellently."

Kapil's record-breaking performances in the last seven years have made him the leading contender for the title of the best all-rounder in the game today.

Kapil learnt early in his cricketing life to take disappointments in his stride. He was bitterly upset when all his cricketing mates were inducted into the Haryana team for the zonal matches in 1974 and he was left out. In the event, however, he didn't have to wait long. He got his first major chance in the 1975-76 season when he made his first class debut for Haryana against Punjab at Rohtak, and, typically, he grabbed it with both hands. He took six for 39 in the first innings and scored 26 quick-fire runs, remaining not out. Since then, as the cliche goes, he has never looked back.

The day he was selected for the Indian team in the match at Faisalabad against Pakistan in 1978, he quit his undergraduate studies, supremely confident that from then on, cricket was to be his career. He was then 19 years old. In the space of the next seven years, he was to inject a new and almost forgotten element to the Indian cricket team: an opening pace bowler of genuine class and speed, something that had not been seen in Indian cricket since the days of Amar Singh and Nissar. Says Azad: "He developed one major trait very early in his career—observing the faults of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRENIK SETT

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Kapil's stupendous knock against Zimbabwe powered India to a historic win in the Prudential Cup at Lords, but a Test victory still eluded his grasp.

men and being able to exploit them."

In his second year (1979) itself as a professional cricketer, Kapil broke the record for the most number of wickets in a calendar year (see chart). His bag of 32 wickets in the 1979-80 series against Pakistan was another record for the highest wicket aggregate for India against Pakistan, surpassing the great Vinoo Mankad's performance in 1952-53. In January 1980, he became the youngest-ever player (21 years and 25 days) to complete a tally of 100 wickets in Tests. In a mere two days later, he also became the youngest player to score 1,000 runs in Test cricket.

By virtue of that feat, he also set up the world record for the coveted 'double' (100 wickets and 1,000 runs) by achieving that landmark in the shortest time—one year and 108 days—in the history of the game, 267 days faster than England all-rounder Ian Botham, alongside whom he was now being bracketed. And, as if that were not enough, by scoring 126 not out (reaching his century with a typically towering sixer) in 222 minutes against the West Indies at New Delhi in 1978-79, he became the youngest Indian batsman to score a test century—20 years and 21 days. And, in grabbing his 200th wicket at Port of Spain against the West Indies in 1983, in his 50th test, Kapil, at 24, became the youngest in cricket history to complete the second 'double' of 2,000 runs and 200 wickets. His tally of 29 wickets against the West Indies established a new series record for the highest wicket aggregate in a rubber against the West Indies. His bowling figures of nine for 83 against the West Indies also represented the best by any player in an India-West Indies encounter and the best by any captain in Test history.

THE PREVIOUS year, Kapil had already given dramatic notice of his abilities as an all-rounder when he scored 292 runs in four innings against England at an astonishing average of 73.00, including field-scattering innings of 89 runs in 78 minutes off 55 balls with 13 fours and three sixes at Lords, 65 in 77 minutes off 55 balls at Manchester and 97 off 93 balls at the Oval. His tally of 289 wickets after the Headingley Test last fortnight makes him by far the highest wicket-taker in Indian Test history, surpassing Bishen Bedi's 266 wickets and making him the eighth highest wicket-taker in 109 years of Test cricket. His tally of five or more wickets in 19 innings is also the highest for any Indian bowler. Right now, Kapil is poised on the edge of yet another milestone—just 11 more wickets away from becoming the second cricketer in test history to achieve the rare triple 'double', 3,000 runs (in Australia in the 1985-86 series) and 300 wickets. Only Ian Botham has done this so far.

Kapil's remarkable career has, however, not been without its controversies—and its downs. As a player, he was undoubtedly world class. But his capacity to captain India was always in serious doubt ever since Gavaskar was removed from the top job after a disastrous series in Pakistan. Immediately after taking over, Kapil was accused of promoting his Haryana team-mates and ignoring the claims of other, better qualified players. His highly individualistic attitude and his lacklustre approach as captain led to his being ignominiously replaced at the helm by Gavaskar. In fact, his open rift with Gavaskar was often cited as a major cause for India's below par performances in Tests. Matters came to a head during the 1984 series against England when he played some unforgivably irresponsible strokes and was dropped, at the stubborn insistence of Gavaskar, for the Ahmedabad test for disciplinary reasons.

His absence marred his unbroken run

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as a member of the Indian team and also revealed the streak of immaturity then prevalent in Kapil. Immediately after being dropped, he rushed back to Chandigarh and held a press conference to announce that he was going to campaign for the local Congress(I) Lok Sabha candidate, Jagannath Kaushal, then Union law minister. Shortly after, he was reinstated as Indian captain.

But in subsequent series, he showed that he was still far from being captain material, especially in Sri Lanka, the youngest Test-playing nation, where Kapil's defensive tactics lost India a Test they had in the bag. The same defensive attitude cost India the Test series in Australia earlier this year and seemed to only confirm the fears that there was a jinx on India's Test-winning abilities under Kapil. His only notable triumphs were in the one-day arena, where India registered a historic triumph at Lords in the Prudential World Cup. There Kapil undoubtedly played a major role, most notably with his stupendous and exhilarating 175 not out against Zimbabwe at Turnbridge Wells, the highest individual score ever registered in the Prudential Cup.

Last year, Kapil made his debut as an author of sorts when he produced his autobiography ghost-written by Vinay Verma, an Indian settled in Australia, titled By God's Decree. Patently the work of Verma, it gave few insights into the man or his character, except for reaffirming his deeply religious nature and his absolute faith in God's guidance of his destiny. "He leaves everything to God," says Azad. "He always says that God sees all and will do justice."

At 28, Kapil is, after Gavaskar, probably the richest Indian cricketer on the Test scene. The Nikhanj family run a thriving timber business in Chandigarh, with his mother as the presiding deity. In 1983, Kapil opened a Rs 60 lakh 15-room Hotel Kapil in the city complete with an 'Oval' restaurant and a 'Sixer' bar. But the main attraction for the hotel's clientele is the fact that it is Kapil Dev's hotel. He also has considerable earnings from the many advertising appearances he makes each year and from his regular county cricket contract in England. As captain, he is reputed to earn close to Rs 1 lakh per Test match.

Though the hotel and the timber business are run by Kapil's two elder brothers, he himself spends most of his time in the city when he is not on Test duty or playing county cricket in England. He still goes to his old stamping grounds at the cricket stadium and obviously laps up the adulation he gets from young cricket fans, handing out cricket bats and kits to promising youngsters and sitting through local matches or holding court at the family's sprawling house in the city with his comely wife Romi constantly at his side.

But obviously, Kapil has reached a stage where he has started to learn from his mistakes and also handle the pressures of captaincy. His performance in England marks his maturity as a leader and he is now obviously much more of a team man than at any stage of his chequered career. Says Raj Singh: "Indian cricket has gained so much from this gifted personality. Today, he is one of the game's greatest all-rounders and as a captain, he has developed a bowler's mind and a bowler's heart. Like Bedi, he encourages other bowlers and leads by example. We need Kapil around for many more years. He has gained in confidence and is now a real leader."

Kapil is undoubtedly now in supreme command of the Indian team—and his own God-given gifts. In cricketing career-graphs, the best years of a player are between 28 and 31 and with Kapil six months short of his 28th birthday, he is almost certain to finally confirm his credentials as the best all-rounder in the game today.

—DILIP BOBB with RAMESH CHANDRA in Heading

Kapil, flanked by his mother and former coach Azad, both of whom played a major role in his formative cricketing career; and (below) with his wife Romi, a constant companion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEYVELI LIGNITE

3,990 MW of power to trigger off industrial production of over Rs. 12,000 crores.

Within ten years, Neyveli Lignite is slated to invest over Rs. 6000 crores in expansion and diversification. This will raise its lignite capacity from 6.5 million to 32 million tonnes a year and increase its thermal power generation from 600 MW to 3990 MW, leading to a manifold increase in profits.

Such massive generation of power will also trigger off industrial production worth over Rs. 12,000 crores, imparting a great fillip to the national economy.

The saga of Neyveli Lignite — from pioneering the use of lignite to emerging as the most dependable supplier of power — is one of dynamic and sustained growth. The only integrated industrial complex, mining lignite, producing power, fertilizers, lignite coke and chemicals, Neyveli Lignite has grown into a giant Corporation in three decades. The nation can well feel proud of Neyveli Lignite's progress.

To partly meet the cost of expansion, the Corporation will soon issue fully secured bonds. Neyveli Lignite invites all our countrymen to participate in its nation-building programme.

NEYVELI LIGNITE CORPORATION LTD.

(A Govt. of India Enterprise) Registered Office: Block 1, Neyveli 607801, South Arcot Dist. Tamil Nadu.

You can't go wrong with Neyveli Bonds

ISSUE OPENS ON 14TH JULY 1986

BOTH FOR NON-RESIDENT INDIANS AND INDIAN PUBLIC

Managers to the Issue:

CANARA BANK
Merchant Banking Division
(Madras Bureau)
563/1, Anna Salai,
Teynampet, Madras 600 018.

Central Bank of India
Merchant Banking Division
159, Greams Road
Madras 600 006

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Roots

Sikh Separatism: The Politics of Faith
by RAJIV KAPOOR
Allen & Unwin
Price: £10; Pages: 175

ONE OF the very unfortunate side-effects of the Punjab crisis is that it has spawned a whole generation of Punjab experts whose memories go back no further than five years. Many of these experts are actually journalists who have written learned treatises on the Punjab problem after the unforgettable experience of two meetings with Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale. The result has been a surfeit of illiterate, unresearched books on the Punjab problem which crowd out virtually all other subjects in the political sections of bookshops and libraries.

Naturally, this has caused a certain amount of reader fatigue and if, for this reason, Rajiv Kapoor's book were to attract fewer readers than it otherwise would have, it would be most tragic since it is possibly the most important book on Punjab to have been written in the past few years.

Kapoor's book is important because it is a book with a memory. It begins with the birth of Sikh communal consciousness towards the end of the last century and traces its evolution into a separate identity through the rise of a Singh Sabha movement, the creation of a Tat (true) Khalsa, then on to the gurudwara agitation and its convergence with the national movement and finally the creation of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) through the Gurudwara Act of 1925.

The significance of the book lies in the fact that it is a clinical and unemotional analysis of the events that led up to the legislation that, for the first time, institutionalised a separate Sikh identity. Most other writers on this period of Punjabi history tend to lay the blame on either the militancy of the Sikhs or on the Arya Samaj for spearheading the Shuddhi movement which heightened Sikh fears of absorption into the vast Hindu fold, or on the British for having insisted on Khalsas rather than Sikhs in the army. Kapoor takes no sides, merely stating what happened.

As he told INDIA TODAY: "My interest was in the structure of power that was created (by the Gurudwara Act) and which is still relevant. And in creating that structure, the Akali Dal argued for the preservation of a separate Sikh communal identity which has pushed it further and further towards a political stance that it has perhaps not intended to take."

Kapoor's thesis is that the events of the past few years were an inevitable consequence of the kind of political stance which the Akali Dal found itself being forced to take, once a separate Sikh communal identity was established. Ironically, when Kapoor conceived the book, the Akalis were in power in Punjab and there were no signs yet of the explosions that were about to occur.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Kapoor: useful contribution

"I became interested in the Gurudwara Act" says Kapoor, "while I was doing research in Oxford. My subject was Punjab politics and when examining the Gurudwara Act, it suddenly came to me that something very significant had happened and that its consequences had not been fully understood. I started writing the book in 1980 and when the agitation began the following year, it only confirmed my initial interest."

Kapoor's thought-provoking book is basically about the convulsive Sikh agitation in the '20s in which some 300,000 Sikhs were arrested, 400 lost their lives and 2,000 were wounded before the Gurudwara Act finally came into being in 1925 and from which came the SGPC. From the very beginning of the agitation, the SGPC was used by the Akali Dal, which has always controlled it, as a powerful political tool even if it was in fact meant to be a strictly religious body. Said Kapoor: "Due to the close historical evolution of the SGPC and the Akali Dal, Akali leaders did not hesitate to employ the SGPC cadre of preachers and missionary workers for Akali campaigns and considered such tactics as normal and justified." One senior Akali Dal leader explained the use of the SGPC's religious preachers stating: "It does not make any difference if the preachers engage in political work. The Akali Dal and the preachers say the same thing."

What is fascinating about Kapoor's book is the fact that it shows, through a consistent and detailed analysis of earlier Akali agitations, how little has been the degree of change in Akali politics, not only where strategy and tactics are concerned, but even in their demands. Not only have the arguments over the right to wear a kirpan and its length been going on since the very beginning, but even the demand for Khalistan came much earlier than either Bhindranwale or Jagjit Singh Chauhan.

As Kapoor points out: "In a memorandum to the Cabinet mission, Tara Singh stated that the Akali Dal preferred a united India since the creation of Pakistan would divide the Sikh community. However, if Pakistan was to be formed, the Sikhs would insist on a separate Sikh state, with the right to federate with either India or Pakistan. The objective of a separate Sikh state of Sikhistan or Khalistan was officially adopted by the Akali Dal in March 1946."

If Kapoor's book has a fault it lies in the fact that when he comes to Bhindranwale, he treats him also as an inevitable consequence of Akali politics. Queried, he said that he had avoided going into the allegations that he was a creation of the Congress(I), only because there was very little evidence to support this. Also, he added, the book is essentially about a structure of power and not about individuals.

Sikh separatism, despite its saffron and blue cover, is not likely to be a popular book with Sikhs in the Punjab, but it is essential reading for anybody who really wants to understand what has gone wrong with Akali politics and the hidden dangers of the use of religion as a political weapon.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Happy Landings are ur home... just good wishes an

Rain or shine, foggy winter or sunny summer, aircrafts don't stop landing. And, while airborne all you do is keep your seat in an upright position for landing, the pilot has his hands full.

Because a slight miscalculation in the descent rate can result in Hard Landing jolting you out of your upright seat. Or, a late touchdown making the aircraft overshoot the runway.

Happy Landings need help.

GCEL's Navigational Aids

At GCEL, we have developed a hi-sensitive Instrument Landing System, as part of our Navigational Aids. To guide aircrafts to happy landings, whatever maybe the weather conditions. And however bad the visibility is. Strong, even VHF signals reaching across to provide the pilot with azimuth and elevation guidance. So it's Happy Landings anytime. Also Direction Finders. To ensure safe landings in remote, narrow airports. For passenger and Air Force aircrafts.

The GCEL-built Instrument Landing System is in successful, happy operation at India's major National Airports. Designe GCEL. According requirements. Because at GCEL we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.

Instrument Landing System

GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.

Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:29

Paint ourites

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Recovering from heart-break, yoga and seclusion, Rekha is all set and raring to play a glamourised, gun-toting Grande Dame of the Ravines—something of a Putlibai-Phoolan Devi combine which will have you on the edge of your seat. The film, directed by Mohan Sehgal and titled in the manner of all good dacoit films—Kasam Suhaag Ki—will have none of the jiggles, wiggles and provocative hip-swinging the actress is famous for. Instead, for a change, she will be seen, to the boisterous delight of the front rows, hurling oaths like a trooper, spilling gore and swearing vengeance. The role—a kind of female replay of her former co-star's famous antics—is the first such in the accomplished actress' career and naturally Rekha is all excited and enthusiastic about it. The motto obviously being: if you can't get him, ape him.

◆ The turban sat regal and imposing on the forbidding brow when our Lord of the Manor of Butley was at last presented to the Queen Mother in London last fortnight. For Iqbal Singh, 56, the first Sikh lord of England, it was a dream come true. A dream that Singh had nurtured ever since he came to England to study medicine 30 years ago and stayed on. A dream for which the wealthy property developer paid an unspecified—but no doubt astronomical—price when he bought the Lord of the Manor title in Suffolk last year and joined the snooty ranks of British aristocracy. Another feather in the turban came with the patronage of the Domesday National Committee, set up to organise the 900th anniversary celebrations of the Domesday Book—a historical survey dating back to William the Conquerer. "The title has changed my life. And I enjoy the accompanying fame," said the Lord, beaming at his blue-blood transfusion, as the world press queued up outside his Wimbledon manor. "I love the royal family, and my next big day is the Domesday Gala Ball, to be attended by the Prince and the Princess of Wales in July."

Nandy: inviting trouble

Singh: snob story

◆ "Shocking!", The Illustrated Weekly of India had screamed while publishing "the strange escapades of J.B.Patnaik, Orissa's chief minister". Weekly editor Pritish Nandy now finds himself facing a Rs 1 crore law suit but remains undaunted. "I don't care, I have enough to crucify Patnaik politically," the goateed poet-editor declared. Meanwhile, Nandy has broken new ground by interviewing and putting on the Weekly cover the magazine's proprietor, Ashok Jain. "There was an internal war in the organisation, and nothing is beyond the pen of a journalist," Nandy said in justification. But this is one story for which he won't get sued.

Amritraj: two love

◆ It was a veritable racket that he was involved with—until they discovered that Vijay Amritraj's love for tennis wasn't his only addiction. His courtship with the film industry soon had him performing on different sets, most notably in the James Bond film, Octopussy. Now, the darkly attractive tennis star, living in the US with wife and two-year-old kid, is playing a bumbling, golden-hearted Indian cop on temporary assignment with the Los Angeles police department in another Hollywood production called The Last Precinct. Amritraj—who's called Alphabet in the film because of clumsy English—has all his co-actresses bowled over by his dark looks, disarming manner and juicy gossip. Amritraj thinks he's "very lucky" and is thrilled. "Maybe I didn't have the little bit of extra luck you need to win a Wimbledon, but overall I've always had the breaks. With this new game, he is certain to add considerably to his net earnings.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

o love

e, Nandy ground by putting on over the tor, Ashok an internal sation, and the pen of a said in jusis one story
't get sued.

able racket ved with—vered that ove for ten-
y addiction.
h the film
d him per-nt sets, most ames Bond
Now, the tennis star, ith wife and is playing a
-hearted In-rary assign-os Angeles
t in another ction called Amritraj—nabet in the clumsy En-co-actresses
s dark looks, er and juicy thinks he's l is thrilled.
ave the little you need to
, but overall the breaks.
game, he is nsiderably t

AMMED ASLAM

"Superlac changed the look of our home...

...and that's not all that changed!"

It was incredible! The dreary walls suddenly looked so cheerful. The rough, patchy surface took on a silky new smoothness. And I had 44 shades to choose from. New Marigold. Hot Chocolate. What's more, I needed just a little soap and water to keep the walls spotlessly clean.

"And you won't believe what Superlac did to my husband. He was a changed man. Buying paintings. Pulling down old curtains. Doing up the flat. So proud of his good looking home."

That's the wonder of Superlac. An extraordinary wall paint made by one of the leading paint companies in the country today. Shalimar Paints.

Try Superlac. And watch your world change!

SUPERLAC
Acrylic Plastic Emulsion

Shalimar Paints
Wall time favourites

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You just can't beat a BAJAJ

The scooter that carries the entire population of an average Indian city – over 4 million people

Which Indian scooter can claim the privilege of carrying so many people? Only Bajaj. Because only Bajaj has nearly 2 million scooters on the road today. Considering 2 persons per Bajaj makes it 4 million people.

Which makes Bajaj the most popular scooter in the country with more scooters on the road than all the others put together!

Yes, Bajaj is India's first choice in scooters.

Ask any of those 2 million Bajaj owners and they'll tell you:

You just can't beat a Bajaj!

bajaj auto

Akurdi, Pune 411 035

Value for money, for years

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12900
12899
12898
12897

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How much are you worth?

The latest Pay Commission has given government servants a lopsided bonanza: huge hand-outs to some and none at all to others. But all salary-earners in the country find themselves fighting a constant battle to keep pace with inflation.

COVER STORY 70

Quest for Peace

The Mizoram accord between the Centre and rebel leader Laldenga promises to finally bring peace to the troubled state. The prime minister seems determined to ensure its success, judging by his four-day visit to the state last fortnight. But many hurdles still remain.

CURRENT EVENTS 26

Fading Glitter

Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran's once indestructible image has taken a heavy battering. His illness and his personal quirks have robbed him of the charisma that ensured his survival in office. For the first time, MGR looks vulnerable.

SPECIAL REPORT 62

Turbulent Times

The Foreign Office is facing major problems. Once considered the elite bureaucratic corps, it is now hamstrung by a succession of changes at the top, external interference, politicisation of the service and an increasingly reduced role in policy making.

SPECIAL FEATURE 86

The Business Blacklist

The Finance Ministry last month decided to blacklist 21 leading business houses which had Central excise dues of over Rs 5 crore each. Though many have gone to court, the Government has decided to deny them licences, loans and other sanctions.

BUSINESS 94

The New-wave Saga

Few television serials have elicited such an emotional response from viewers as the slickly-produced Buniyaad. Its authentic portrayal of pre-partition days, through the travails of a family, contains all the elements of nostalgia, pathos and passion. A report.

TELEVISION 146

CONTENTS

OPINIONS TODAY 3
COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
CURRENT EVENTS
Mizoram: Quest for Peace 26
Jagjivan Ram: A Disputed Legacy 31
Punjab: Militant Poses 37
Terrorism: Turning the Tide 38
Karnataka: Shuffle Bungle 40
Rajasthan: Land Plot 49
West Bengal: Pranab's Ploy 53
Bihar: Letter Bombs 55
Gujarat: Wall of Suspicion 61
SPECIAL REPORT
MGR: Fading Glitter 62
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Gundu Rao:
"I feel suffocated in the party" 66
COVER STORY
Salaries: How much are you worth? 70
STATENOTES 85
SPECIAL FEATURE
The Foreign Office:
Turbulent Times 86
TRADEWINDS 93
BUSINESS
Excise: The Business Blacklist 94
GTC Probe: The Smoke Rings 96
Jharia Coalfields: Ordeal by Fire 98
Hindustan Ciba-Geigy:
Brand Bother 99
Tata's: Twin Troubles 100
Textile Policy: Warped Progress 105
The Markets: Marking Time 112
The Economy Monitor 117
INVESTIGATION
Thakkar Commission:
Appointment with Death 118
LETTER FROM LONDON
UK: Thatcherism in Retreat 122
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: Peace Talk 124
MEDIA
Newspaper Industry: Stop Press 129
CRIME
Uttar Pradesh:
The Dadua Manhunt 130
Travel Fraud:
Passport to Easy Money 134
SPORT
Ramesh Krishnan: Serving Notice 136
SCIENCE
National Biogas Project:
Raising a Stink 138
BOOKS
Theatre of the Past 143
TELEVISION
Buniyaad: The New-wave Saga 146
CINEMA
On Wings of Fire: Unholy Furore 150
Radio Advertising: Making Waves 151
HEALTH
Gujarat: Planning for Fraud 154
LIVING
Singles Fellowship:
A Singular Success 156
EYE-CATCHERS 160

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIMACHAL ECSTASY

It's worth trekking many a mile for...

Himachal. The trekker's paradise that takes you to new vistas of adventure...enchanting terrain...exciting sports — high altitude golf, snow skiing, angling, hang gliding...and more.

For information please contact H.P. Tourist Offices at:

New Delhi: Chandralok Bldg., 36, Janpath, Tel: 345320, 352104; 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, Tel: 344764.
Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Tel: 219191/284.
Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Tel: 446867.
Madras: 28, Commander-in-Chief Road, Tel: 472966.
Chandigarh: S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Tel: 26494.
Simla: The Mall, Tel: 3311; Panchayat Bhavan, Cart Road, Tel: 4589

For any complaint write or contact:
The Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Simla-171 001, Tel: 2028, 3136.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Who should be the next President? You decide.

Is R.Venkataraman your idea of a good Presidential contender? Is Field Marshal Manekshaw? What about Justice P. N. Bhagwati, Morarji Desai, Narasimha Rao, Arjun Singh, Zail Singh, Kamalapati Tripathi?

The second of the Opinions Today polls gives you your chance to decide.

Your task–to rank the 8 names above, in order of their ability to be India's head of state.

Thus when you finish, each name will carry a number from 1 to 8 in the box beside it. Since this is a ranking, and not a grading system, no two persons can have the same rank.

Explain your first choice.

Once you have finished your rankings, the next step is to explain the reasons for your No. 1 ranking.

That is, if you think that 'X' is the most worthy Presidential prospect, then in not more than 50 words, you have to tell us why you think so.

The entries will be evaluated by computer to determine the national average.

An entry that ties in closely with this average will make you a contender for the various awards associated with this series of polls.

An entry form and a list of rules and regulations are at the back of this page.

Who should next occupy the highest office in the land?

We, as members of the public, will not decide that.

But we can express our opinion to those who will.

This poll is your chance to do so.

The awards.

For this poll.

First : Weston Colour TV and VCR, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.

Second : Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Third : Weston 2-in-1, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.

Consolation : Annual subscriptions to INDIA TODAY.

Across six polls.

First : Return First Class air tickets for two to Los Angeles, courtesy PAN AM.

Second : A specially commissioned painting (30" x 40") by M.F. HUSAIN.

Third : PC Junior computer with printer, courtesy EIKO COMPUTERS.

Consolation : The World and its People–a 27 volume set.

Turn overleaf to express your opinion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Rules and regulations.

Since the entry forms will be processed by computer, it is important that you follow these procedures carefully. Incorrect or incomplete entries will be rendered invalid.

1. You can voice your opinion only through a valid entry form, such as the one below.
2. In case you have difficulty in obtaining the entry form, please mail a stamped, self-addressed envelope marked 'Opinions Today' to us at INDIA TODAY, 316 Competent House, F-14 Connaught Place, New Delhi-110 001.
3. An individual can send in only one entry form per poll.
4. The entries will be evaluated by means of a software package, specially designed by Tata Consultancy Services. The package will be run on a Burroughs B 6900 mainframe.
5. Important : while filling in this entry form, please ensure that you leave one square blank between the various units in your name and address.
6. All the eight options in each poll have to be ranked from 1 to 8. No two options can have the same ranking.
7. The name should start with the family name, followed by the first name.
8. Also ensure that you enter your first two or three initials in the space provided.
9. The date of birth should start with the date (two digits), followed by the month (two digits) and the year (again two digits). For example, if your date of birth is February 9, 1956, it should be entered as 090256.
10. Please tick the appropriate square, for other details such as sex, education, occupation.
11. In your address, please also give the pin-code number.
12. Please ensure that you fill in your particulars consistently across all subsequent polls.
13. In every capsule, you will have to explain the reasons, in not more than 50 words, for your No. 1 ranking. This is the 'tie-breaker'. Be sure to write the tie-breaker. You can miss out on the big awards if you don't. However, if your entry ties in with the national average, you will still be entitled to receive consolation prizes.
14. The entries will be evaluated by a panel of judges.
15. The results will be published in the forthcoming issues of India Today. The winners will also be notified seperately by post.
16. Employees (and their relatives) of Living Media India Pvt. Ltd., its associate companies, Tata Consultancy Services, and Interface Communications Pvt. Ltd., are not eligible to participate in this opinion poll.
17. The decision of the judges will be final and binding.
18. ALL ENTRIES MUST REACH LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD., P.O. BOX NO. 29, N.D.H.O. NEW DELHI-110 001, BY THE LAST DATE INDICATED ON THE ENTRY FORM.

ENTRY FORM:2

Please fill in BLOCK CAPITALS

NAME : Mr./Mrs./Ms. _____ Surname _____ First Name

DATE OF BIRTH: D D M M Y Y SEX : M [1] F [2] INITIALS : _____

EDUCATION : Professional [1] Post-graduate [2] Graduate [3] Matriculate [4] Others [5]

OCCUPATION : Service [1] Business [2] Housewife [3] Student [4] Others [5]

ADDRESS : _____

CITY _____ Pin-code _____

Have you participated in the previous Opinions Today poll? Yes [1] No [2]

OPTION NO.	PERSONALITIES	RANKING
1.	JUSTICE P.N. BHAGWATI
2.	MORARJI DESAI
3.	FIELD MARSHAL SAM MANEKSHAW
4.	NARASIMHA RAO
5.	ARJUN SINGH
6.	ZAIL SINGH
7.	KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI
8.	R. VENKATARAMAN

Please give reasons for your No. 1 ranking _____

Signature of participant : _____

Your opinion must reach us by 4.8.1986.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 14
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JULY 16-31, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN, PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN, SURYA GANGADHARAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312093, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● EAGUN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188.477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448. 579037. 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD. CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398. 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA
● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

ALL-ROUNDER NONPAREIL

I commend your fine cover story on Kapil Dev ("India's Greatest All-Rounder", July 15). Now that he has got over the early hesitancy, indecision and lack of forcefulness in leadership, he should now be poised to lead India's cricketers to great heights. We look forward to further dazzling exploits and good examples from our heroes in sports.

Bangalore G.S. CHANDY

■ The cover story on Kapil Dev was excellently presented. It contained valuable comments of cricket experts and interesting statistics. The small mistake it made was that Kapil was not dropped for the Ahmedabad Test since England never played any Test at Ahmedabad during the 1984 series. The disciplinary action was taken due to his rash and irresponsible innings in the Delhi Test.

Chandigarh V.K. CHAWLA

■ Indian cricket has at last found a very reliable skipper for its team in Kapil Dev for many years to come. Kapil has proved his mettle as a captain by leading his team to victory in the first two Tests against England, thus shattering the myth that India cannot win Test matches under his captaincy. Kapil is, in fact, an all-rounder nonpareil in India and one of the very best players of the game. Being a very modest person, Kapil Dev imbibes the spirit of camaraderie with his team-mates. To put it succinctly, the Indian cricket team without Kapil Dev now is actually like Paris without the Eiffel Tower.

Bangalore K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ Kapil Dev is truly 'India's greatest all-rounder'. It has been champagne all the way in English conditions, but Binny and Sharma cannot be expected to slice through batting orders, especially in Indian conditions. Our team will soon need fresh blood. Cricket mania in India has surely generated money. Is it being used to unearth and coach young cricketing talent?

Bangalore VINOD KUMAR B.

■ Your cover story was most apt at the moment of glory for India, beating the British in Britain at their game. However, the write-up was quite disappointing and lacked the adequate thought and research for which INDIA TODAY is different from others in the stands. It was also surprising that the name of V.M. Mankad never featured in your write-up. Mankad's Test records do not fall short of those attained by Kapil Dev, when extrapolated to the 77 Tests that Kapil has played. Mankad's statistics are as follows: Tests 44, Runs 2,016, Wickets 142, Centuries 5, Double Century 1. Though Kapil and his men must be praised for their achievement, beating a morally battered English side should not give us unnecessary pride, as we will start expecting nothing less than winning from Kapil, which could be very unhealthy for the game in our country.

New Delhi DR S.M. SHIVAPRASAD

TEACHING AIDS

The propaganda on television about AIDS ("Countering the Scare", July 15) has created the belief that AIDS is widespread in India when, in fact, not a single documented case of AIDS originating in India has yet occurred. A handful of prostitutes have been found seropositive, which is a quite different thing. I have seen worried parents rushing two-year-olds with ordinary sore-throats to the hospital fearing that they have AIDS. The television propaganda should be restricted to teaching people how to avoid getting AIDS (by avoiding homosexuality, promiscuity, etc). Education about its symptoms and diagnostic facilities should be focused on doctors and not on the clueless lay public.

New Delhi DR RAJIV BAJAJ

ACCORD DISCORD

Your editorial ("Save the Accord", July 15) was balanced and comprehensive, particularly your advice to form voluntary organisations for building up mutual confidence. One measure may be to form village or mohalla committees in Punjab to protect residents against terrorist acts, in collaboration with the security forces. If the Sikhs can show by

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KHODAY DISTILLERIES

When profits leap ahead by the barrelful what's sure to pour out is promising returns.

FINANCIAL HIGHLIGHTS

	Year ended (Rupees in lakhs)
	30.6.82	30.6.83	30.6.84	30.6.85
Gross Revenue	989.78	1451.40	1492.59	1504.62
Profit Before Tax	285.64	393.21	380.88	252.00
Profit After Tax	84.84	120.13	146.88	122.00
Gross Block	255.58	295.85	398.89	469.14
Equity Capital	5.00	5.00	5.00	5.00*
Reserves & Surplus	451.14	571.31	718.18	839.14*
Net worth per share of Rs. 10	912.28	1152.62	1446.36	1688.28

* Capital is since raised to Rs. 360 lakhs by further issue of Rs. 10 lakhs and Bonus issue of Rs. 345 lakhs by capitalisation. Residual Reserves, after this capitalisation amounted to Rs. 494.14 lakhs

For the eight-month period ended 28.2.1986, the turnover was Rs. 1574.44 lakhs netting profit before tax of Rs. 380.57 lakhs. Turnover for the current year ending 30.6.86, is estimated at over Rs. 2000 lakhs and expected to yield net earnings of about Rs. 200 lakhs after taxation.

Lead Managed by
CANARA BANK
Merchant Banking Division
Bombay

Managed by

CORPORATION BANK
Merchant Banking Division
Bombay

V.B. DESAI FINANCIAL SERVICES LIMITED
Bombay

VIJAYA BANK
Merchant Banking Division
Bombay

20th Century Finance Corporation Limited
Merchant Banking Division
Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Issue of 24,00,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10 each for cash at a premium of Rs. 10 per share with 4,80,000 – 15% Secured Redeemable Non-Convertible Debentures of Rs. 100 each for cash at par

Khoday Distilleries Ltd. (KDL) is the star performer of the dynamic, Bangalore-based Khoday Group. Today the group commands an annual turnover of Rs. 70 crores and has distinguished itself in a diverse spectrum of activities ranging from distilleries, breweries, glass-bottle manufacture, engineering/civil construction, electronics, hotels, travel, to beverages, stationery and watches. Khodays IMFL's have a hi-flying reputation for quality.
The international quality standards of Khodays Liquors has won global recognition. The Company's products have bagged 'Gold Medals' at La Monde selection, held at Luxemburg, Rome, Geneva and International Wine and Spirits Competition in U.K. At La Monde Selection, Lisbon, in 1985, Khodays walked away with a tally of 14 Gold Medals.

KDL successfully commissioned malt-distilling operations in 1965 under technical guidance from renowned Scottish distillery experts and today manufactures some of India's leading brands of IMFL Sprawled over 160 lush acres, Khoday Distilleries houses some of the world's finest distilling equipment. Backed by ultra-modern in-house research facilities, the quality conscious Khoday's distill liquors to international standards. These have earned tremendous brand loyalty and leadership in their class.

Never resting on its achievements, KDL has diversified into electronics and engineering. The electronics division manufactures sophisticated equipment for geo-physical investigation, while the engineering division fabricates product engineering items and equipment for distilleries, dairies, breweries and pharmaceuticals. The engineering division is currently executing a contract for erection of 600 HIG houses for the Bangalore Development Authority.

To capitalise on the galloping demand for its products from the domestic and overseas markets, KDL is today poised for rapid growth. The turnover of KDL increased from Rs. 990 lakhs in 1982 to nearly Rs. 1500 lakhs in 1985. KDL with its established product image and well developed marketing network together with the implementation of the schemes on hand is well positioned to take advantage of the growing demand. The turnover is expected to reach Rs. 2700 lakhs by 1986-87 and touch Rs. 4000 lakhs by 1987-88. Based on this and the current performance, the Directors are of the opinion that the Company will be in a position to pay dividend of 20% (prorata) for the year ending 30.6.1987 on the increased capital, barring unforeseen circumstances.

"KDL is now going public" offering Equity Shares linked with Non-Convertible Debentures in the proportion of 20 Debentures for every 100 Equity Shares. Be sure to make it a part of your portfolio.

Issue Opens for Non-Resident Indians: 19th July 1986
Indian Public: 28th July 1986

HIGHLIGHTS

- Bonus entitlement within two years
- Established profitable Company with large reserves
- Assured 20% dividend (pro-rata) for year ending 30th June 1987.
- Manufacturers of popular brands of IMFL with diversified activities in Engineering and Constructions
- Assured Market and well developed countrywide marketing network
- 15% interest on Debentures – option of Cumulative and Non-Cumulative Interest Schemes to the investors
- Easy Liquidity – Listing on Bangalore and Bombay Stock Exchanges

Khoday Distilleries Limited

Administrative Office: Khoday House 26/2 Sankey Road Cross, Golf Links, Bangalore 560 001.

Growth through Diversification

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

word, deed and thought, that they shall have no truck with terrorism, it will be shorn of its communal trappings and lose its most dangerous teeth.

New Delhi — BRIGADIER J.S. BAWA (RETD)

CORRECTION TIMES

In your article ("The Times of India: Changing Face", June 30), Ashok Jain is wrong in saying that there are two winners of the Magasaysay award for journalism in India. The earlier recipients were Amitava Choudhury, B.G. Verghese and Gour Kishore Ghosh.

Durgapur, Birbhum — SOMENATH ROY, Q.A. RAQUIB

STARRY INVASION

The cover story ("Invasion of the Starlings", June 30), was a true portrayal of the dilemma that the cine-world is undergoing. Miles away from realism, the stereotyped mini-parade of the starlets stinks of glamour and a world of fantasy which tends to leave the common man in utter bewilderment. The film world has reached a dead-end. It is high time we abandon this world of illusions and seek fresher arenas of aesthetic art and culture. There is need to usher in a film world with a brighter perspective and more acceptability.

Gurgaon — ANITA YADAV

■ While some may fault you for so prominently displaying the new starlings and devoting so much space to them, I for one do not. Though there may be any number of magazines dedicated to the breed, still the cinema and its concomitants have become a part of everyday life in India. So what if INDIA TODAY does its bit by this variety? It is a refreshing change from the numerous pages devoted to our politicians.

As for the actresses, though they have shown a penchant for stripping, they are only stripping the cinema-goers of their hypocrisy. For they, while overtly showing themselves as being scandalised, actually lap it all up.

Bangalore — ANSELM BRITO

■ It would have been possible to convey the story without the crudely titillating photographs of women in provocative dresses. If INDIA TODAY thought this "invasion" worthy of such coverage, there are slightly more decent ways of reporting. The array of revealing photographs seems like a strategy to boost up sales. You have faithfully followed the tradition of objectifying women for economic gains.

Baroda — BINA SRINIVASAN

DAMNING EXPOSE

Congratulations for exposing these tension-creating politicians! Your editorial comment ("These Damn Politicians", June 30) should at least make them conscious of their abominable deeds. The reason behind their imprudent acts is that most of them are either frustrated or have lost hope of retaining power. Thus they attempt to embarrass their rivals at the helm. More distressing is the fact that the press, the most effective voice of the public, instead of condemning these so-called politicians, sometimes even joins hands with them.

Cuttack — ASHOK KUMAR SARANGI

■ It was indeed a well-timed editorial. As a matter of fact, it is only a handful of politicians who pollute the otherwise peaceful atmosphere in the country. It will be a great service to the country if editors write in a similar way so that people at large may start thinking how far it is advisable to back these vultures in their pursuit of self-interest.

Calcutta — B.R. NAYAK

PAPER TIGER

Your interview with V. Prabakaran ("Profile of a Tiger", June 30) is excellent. India should desist from a policy of involvement or protection to Sri Lanka terrorists like Prabakaran and his gang of armed mercenaries. When India is facing similar demands by Punjab secessionists and is condemning their training by Pakistan, the same logic should be applied to Sri Lankan terrorists.

Kolhapur — TATYA TENDULKAR

■ It is astonishing to note that a reputed magazine like INDIA TODAY could fall into a plot by Prabakaran to secure publicity in India. You should at least have analysed his strength by talking to a few others instead of giving your readers the impression that he is the only answer to those who want Tamil Eelam, which is definitely not the case. It is just that he has a well organised public relations set-up and enjoys a good rapport with the AIADMK Government. It is high time the Tamil Nadu Government rids itself of its obsession with the Sri Lanka issue and pays attention to its near-standstill administration.

Madras — K.S. SEKAR

FEAR IS THE KEY

The article ("The Grip of Fear", June 30) is really a timely eye-opener on the unstable situation in Punjab. All right-thinking citizens have become the victims of terrorists who have taken the state by storm. The unabated violence in Punjab has completely paralysed normal day to day life in the state. If this alarming situation is not stalled immediately, the very security and unity and integrity of the country will be at stake. However I think the best and only solution to tackle this deteriorating situation is to impose President's rule in Punjab and to defer the transfer of Chandigarh for the present.

Baroda — T. BHAMBHANI

■ The migration of Hindus must be stopped at all costs if a total breakdown of the economic and social structure in Punjab is to be avoided. But at the same time, the Government should try and do something about the scores of Sikh families who have migrated to the state of Punjab after the November riots from other parts of the country, especially since the migration seems to be continuing. According to the deputy commissioner of Ludhiana, there are around 26,000 registered Sikh families who have migrated to Punjab at the moment. Should not the governments of the states from where the migration has taken place take steps to instil confidence among the Sikhs so that they don't migrate?

Ludhiana — NAVNEET WADHWA

TALL CLAIMS

This letter is in response to F.H.J. Taleyarkhan ("Everest Expedition: Peak of Endurance", December 15, 1985) who claims that Brigadier Jagjit Singh who led the Indian Army Mountaineering Expedition has not participated in any major Himalayan mountaineering venture for the last 10 years. This is not at all true as Brigadier Jagjit Singh participated in numerous expeditions. These include expeditions to the famous Nanda-Devi (1976), Khardungla, Saserla, Kara Koram and Changla (1977-79), Saser Kangri (1979) and Trishul (1981). Not only these, Jagjit Singh has also led a number of succesful National Cadet Corps expeditions. In particular, he led the successful IMA Golden Jubilee expedition to Kamet peak and Abi Gamin in the year 1982.

Chandigarh — PARAMJEET

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

State-sponsored Absenteeism

THERE is something seriously wrong with the work culture in any society which thinks that the way to celebrate, mourn, worship, protest or commemorate is to stop work for a whole day (or days). A politician dies, and because it is a week-end the next day is declared a government and school holiday. Rabindranath Tagore's 125th birth anniversary comes around and once again the Government declares a holiday. There is a victory on the sports field, or some particular group of politicians or trade unions wants to protest over some issue, and a city, state or the whole country is held to ransom and asked to stop work. Often, those who wish to work anyway are coerced into submission.

It is no disrespect to Mr Jagjivan Ram—a political stalwart with an illustrious innings—to suggest that the country could have mourned his passing without closing down offices and schools, and without the ludicrous hypocrisy of substituting the broadcasting of running commentary on a cricket match in England with half-hourly updates from the cricket ground. For those keen on sport, these are irritants. For those seeking escape from offices, such state-ordained holidays legitimise a joyous absence from office. Either way, the Government's purpose is defeated—unless, of course, the objective from the start was to gain political mileage. This was probably the case in Jagjivan Ram's instance, and certainly so on Tagore's birth anniversary. Such motivations make the decision to pull down shutters even more indefensible.

There are civilised ways of mourning or taking note of special occasions without affecting normal, everyday life. Flags fly at half-mast, moments of silence are observed, there are gun salutes. Those who wish to pay personal homage can do so outside working hours. Except in the case of presidents and prime ministers, such mourners can usually be counted in their hundreds or thousands, and there is no call to send everybody packing on their account.

Then, there are the inconsistencies. Last fortnight, a former minister's death was cause for a government holiday; three days later, a sitting minister died but only his ministry closed. When Mrs Gandhi was assassinated, the country's cricket team in Pakistan abandoned a one-day cricket match and the rest of the tour. Understandably, perhaps. But when President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed died in 1977, a Test match in Bombay was stopped for no more than two minutes of silence. Mrs Gandhi may have been a political colossus, but what is the degree of respect due to the head of state?

Even without such unplanned holidays, government servants can legitimately take off every second day of the year (given the two-day week-end, the plethora of normal public and 'restricted' holidays, plus the annual quota of earned, casual and sick leave, not to mention half-pay leave and other such anachronisms). Clearly, therefore, the effort should be to avoid all but the most essential closure of public offices. Politicians who are heedless of this—and unmindful of the problems caused to ordinary citizens who might need to draw money urgently from banks, get a foreign exchange permit, collect some bit of documentation from a government office or merely keep an appointment—should ask themselves how many other countries in the world have the same profligate attitude to working days.

The problem with state-sponsored absenteeism goes beyond the days of official mourning. Those countries that have five-day weeks do not have the plethora of public holidays that this country does. Many of these are religious occasions on which only the practitioners of the concerned religion should be allowed to stay away from work. Why should the entire country shut down to mark the birth anniversary of someone who is a religious figure for 2 or 3 per cent of the population? If all Saturdays have been declared government holidays, surely it should be possible to reduce the number of days permitted as casual leave. In any case, most people do not seem to need so much casual leave, because it is an annual ritual for people in offices to try and exhaust their quota of unavailed leave when the year-end approaches. And while a month's earned leave is routine here, most countries in even the developed West keep this down to two or three weeks. Even when the five-day week is abandoned—as happened recently in Andhra Pradesh—the working day is kept down to six hours, with every second Saturday of the month a full holiday. That makes for something like a 35-hour week: a luxury that, once again, even the affluent countries do not feel they can afford.

No people get anywhere except by the sweat of their own brows. The post-war successes in Germany, Japan, Korea, Taiwan and any of a dozen other examples bear eloquent testimony to this. By the same token, numerous economies in Europe are now on the decline because of the onset of a decadent culture that does not place a premium on hard work, with the state often dishing out doles to those who are simply too lazy to enter the job market. As a poor country that has a long way to go before it can reach any level of economic well-being, India should be particularly mindful of the importance of the work ethic. State-sponsored cavalierness to work simply has no place in India's time and situation, especially so when the Government claims to be one that works faster.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IF WE HADN'T SPENT SO MUCH MONEY ON PRODUCT RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, INNOVATON, WE COULD HAVE SPARED A FEW MILLIONS FOR ADVERTISING.

Mudra-D-HRL-2592

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But probably wouldn't have had much to tell, though.

Except, we're in Industrial Belts. Because without all that R&D we wouldn't have been the first in India to make Polyester Cord reinforced V—Belts.

Or, the first to make Synthetic Fabric reinforced Conveyor Belts.

Or, the first to make Heat Resistant Special Belts for Steel and Cement industries.

Or, the first to export to USSR.

Or, the first to bring in the State-of-the-art knowhow in raw-edge V—Belt manufacture.

To offer you a moped belt that's guaranteed for 12000 km.*

At Hilton Rubbers, we do it first. And then talk. Or advertise.

HILTON Industrial Belts.

We do it first.

* 45,000 Km to 50,000 Km for Auto-Belt.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sleepy Seminar

● You can lead senior bureaucrats to the trough of modern management but you cannot get them to drink. Or at least that's the moral from the management seminar held in Delhi last month. The confabulation was billed as a biggie. A special film show—with the blessings and encouragement of the Prime Minister's Secretariat—had been arranged at North Block. It was supposed to be a training film on aggressive management techniques which are now a part and parcel of refresher courses being doled out to government officials to equip them to deal with and fit into "the Government that works faster." Secretaries, additional secretaries and joint secretaries were encouraged to take time off their busy schedules and attend the show. But what they saw on the screen made them wish that they had not lapped up the sales line so glibly. The film was a B-grade business production meant for American salesmen starting out in life. It consisted of a junior American salesman making a pitch for a product in front of his managers. Within minutes pipe-smoking secretaries mumbling pejoratives under their breath began walking out. By the time the hour-long show ended, all who remained in the room were a few sleepy junior secretaries, who could not muster enough courage to stage a walk-out, and a snoring projectionist.

Sten Stun

● A security guard dogging the footsteps of Buta Singh's son at the Air Force Bal Bharati School had been a familiar sight ever since the father was declared tankhaiya by the Sikh head priests. But keeping the sensitivity of children in mind, the bodyguard stayed in the background and kept his pistol discreetly in its holster. The new school session that started last fortnight however, saw a dramatic change. The boy entered the school with a menacing looking bodyguard brandishing a Sten-gun who accompanied him everywhere he went, parking himself resolutely outside each class the boy attended, and following him even to the canteen, totally oblivious to the nervous glances of the other students. The new charge assumed by father Buta Singh as Cabinet Minister for Home Affairs obviously qualifies the son for a higher degree of protection, notwithstanding the sensation it is creating in the school.

Paying Up

● If this is the season for talking about salaries and payscales, this tale from the corridors of North Block takes the cake. It seems that when Julio Francis Ribeiro, the Bombay super-cop willingly agreed to give up his job as special secretary in the Union Home Ministry to be the director-general of police in Punjab, he was told that along with a drop in rank he will have to accept a drop in his pay-check as well. As a secretary his salary was Rs 3,500 per month but a director-general of police can be given no more than Rs 3,250. Ribeiro cried foul and in the nonchalant drawl that has by now become so familiar in the Home Ministry, told the Government that he would have none of it. The financial wizards in the Ministry came up with an instant solution—offering him Rs 250 a month as personal pay, a proposition which only got Ribeiro madder. He went up to the minister and said that he would either have Rs 3,500 as basic salary or go to Punjab on a token salary of one rupee a month. The bureaucracy, cocooned in self-spun red-tape, realised that they were up against a different sort of policeman; wheels turned within wheels and a new notification was issued, allowing Ribeiro to retain his salary as a one-time exception to the rule. Who says the steel-frame can't bend under a little pressure, exerted, of course, at the right time and with the right elan?

Fancy Flights

● For all those hapless passengers on Indian Airlines flights who have been subjected to rude, indifferent or sloppy service by cabin stewardesses who aren't even easy on the eye, there is fresh hope on the horizon: former film actress Jaya Bachchan, wife of Congress(I) MP Amitabh Bachchan, and former foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari's wife have been nominated to the panel that will interview and recruit fresh air hostesses. What the two well-connected ladies know of the requisites that make for good air hostesses is, of course, another matter. But who knows? The two may bring a breath of fresh air to the airconditioned cabins of Indian Airlines' fleet of Airbuses, Boeings and the lesser aircrafts. They might even produce people with the best possible combination of starlet beauty and diplomatic niceties, and make air travel a nice, cosy affair.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The fourth in a series of originals by Satish Gujral.
Created exclusively for Rajdoot Paints.

The emotion of colour . . .

Colour has its own moods, its own emotion, which envelopes both, the artist and the viewer. The artist paints, the viewer responds.

Here Rajdoot Paints brings you the emotion of colour — from your world of colour, which Rajdoot, now one of India's finest paint companies, is helping shape in its own different way.

The world of colour,
The world of Rajdoot.

Rajdoot® PAINTS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rajdoot Paints Limited

OK ICARUS. 002.86

Digitized by Sarayu Trust and eGangotri

Featuring Ms. Parsis Khambatta in Vogue Maxi-Worth Cotton Crêpe

Kangri

Product of the
Vareli Group of Industries
in association with Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat.

VARELI
FABRICS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A pollutant free environment from an industrialised area ?

MAA(S) SIV 2B 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Making the green belt greener and wider

South India Viscose along with the Tamil Nadu Government initiated and supported the afforestation of 35,000 hectares of denuded scrubland. Eucalyptii and wattle saplings were planted on the steep slopes of the Nilgiris and in Kodaikanal. In a span of 25 years the undulating slopes were transformed into verdant plantations. The plantations have increased the green belt, purifying the atmosphere and attracting rain to these areas.

Breathing new life into the environment

It is not only the air and water that South India Viscose has kept free of pollutants. Soil is regenerated with the accumulation of organic matter. Nitrogenous and phosphatic returns to the soil improve. South India Viscose's soil conservation efforts have prevented soil and moisture loss, and have helped preserve nature.

Pure clean water in rivers and streams

South India Viscose has a sophisticated 3 stage effluent treatment unit. Effluent goes through primary, chemical and biological treatment. It is then passed through a shallomatic screen to retain solid and fibrous matter. When the treated effluent finally leaves the reservoir, it is as safe as nature meant it to be.

South India Viscose doesn't think it's too much of a task

South India Viscose is constantly aware of the magnitude of its dependence on nature. It has, and will always endeavour to give man an environment he can be proud of.

SOUTH INDIA VISCOSE LTD.
Post Box No. 3780, Rose Bed,
334, Avanashi Road, Coimbatore-641 018.

South India Viscose prepares the soil for a beautiful environment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

The Times of India

● It is daylight robbery. I see it as a victory for dishonesty. I have been raped.

■ SWRAJ PAUL on the settlement over the transfer of shares to Escorts.

● I cannot definitely say she (Benazir Bhutto) has financial backing from India. But I know Russian money is flowing into Pakistan...the interests of India and the Soviets converge in destabilising Pakistan. What do they find? Benazir Bhutto.

■ ZIA UL-HAQ, Pakistan president, in Newsweek

● If not living within one's means and taking recourse to either overdrafts or newly-printed currency notes is considered as profligacy, then in the recent period, the Government in New Delhi has been much more profligate than the states.

■ ASHOK MITRA in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● Certainly certain countries which wanted to destabilise India were helping us. And in that context "foreign powers" has the right connotation.

■ LALDENGA in The Telegraph

● Whether it is a Congress(I) or Akali Government in Punjab, why should the third-lowest president of the Congress(I) meddle in Punjab affairs? What is the tuk in it?

■ GURCHARAN SINGH TOHRA in Current

● The joke of keeping MGR as chief minister of Tamil Nadu has gone too far. Arguments before the high court have revealed that his nomination papers carry only his thumb impression—a facility extended only to the illiterate.

■ Editorial in The Statesman

● I don't want The Times to be a Woolworth or a Selfridges. I want it to be a Harrods.

■ GIRILAL JAIN in the Sunday Observer

● I don't foist anybody. To be frank, I cannot. Everybody has to be elected right from the bottom. I'll not help my son in any way. In fact, I have all along been discouraging him. The DMK is not the Congress(I).

■ M. KARUNANIDHI in Weekend Review

● We do not suffer from the handicaps of the common man. We can speak in English, Hindi, Kannada, Marathi and maybe other languages, but the common man knows only the mother tongue.

■ RAMAKRISHNA HEGDE on the linguistic reorganisation of states in Sunday

● Srikkanth, of course is Srikkanth. He comes down with his blinks, winks, sniffs and smiles and shrugs. It is quite an experience batting with him.

■ SUNIL GAVASKAR in The Hindu

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONFESSIONS

of a Housewife

"I now know my miya's weakness (no it's not what you think!) just hot home-cooked food!! And with the Eagle Hotline Tiffin Carrier I've made him more than happy.

Mention hot parathas and watch him melt, talk about steaming pulao and you've got him eating right out of your hands.

So you can well imagine, what his haalat was when the Eagle Hotline served him all his favourites - steaming hot and fresh right on his office desk for lunch - hours after they were packed. (And what a relief it was from eating stale unpalatable restaurant and cold dabba food).

Matter of fact, the miya carries the Hotline to office himself - yaane ki, I even save on dabbawala kharcha - so the paisa saved in six months makes the Hotline completely COST-FREE!

And here's a word of advice to all my housewife sahelis. Cook in the morning - fill each dish hot to the brim in the Hotline (don't worry - he'll eat it all!) and then wait and watch for rave reviews at night, like I do!!"

Part of the virtually unbreakable Eagle Thermoware range, the Eagle Hotline Tiffin Carrier comes in a variety of designs and sizes with sturdy kunststoff/metal bodies - complete with spill-proof stainless steel/aluminium tiffins. And whichever Eagle Hotline you choose, you can be sure it will work as good as it looks - indoors or outdoors.

SUPER HOTLINE NO. 8
2500 ml.
ECONOMY HOTLINE NO. 8
2500 ml.
SUPER HOTLINE NO. 10
4800 ml.
Also available in Size No. 4 (1250 ml.) and Size No. 16 (8000 ml.)

Note: Only Eagle Thermoware is insulated with patented polyurethane poly-insulux, hence these products may be imitated but can never be duplicated.

For best temperature retention fill to capacity.

EAGLE FLASK PVT. LTD.
Talegaon 410 507 Dist. Pune (Maharashtra)
Grams: 'EAGLEFLASK' Pune 410 507 Tel. 321-5, Tlx: 0145-296 EGLE-IN Bombay Tel: 322096/97 Tlx: 011-73297 EGLE-IN Offices: Delhi 3315066/263561
* Calcutta 267350 * Bangalore 223299
* Madras 24270 * Hyderabad 67088
* Ahmedabad 399028 * Ranchi 27840
* Indore 64356 * Chandigarh * Kanpur * Trichur

There's a lot you can do with Eagle.

DART/EF/1466

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you've seen our current flht
we were the natical

Forgive our presumption but we're so excited about our new flight schedules from India that we simply got carried away. Of course all roads (and flight paths) still lead to Rome. Six times a week. But after Rome .... the world is our oyster. Not only can we fly you all over Italy, but our European network, especially to all the key cities, is amazingly efficient. And while we fly from Bombay and Delhi six times a week to Rome, each one conveniently connects, almost immediately, with on-going flights to such cities as London, New York and Toronto. And flht schedules, you might think tical carrier of India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

it's just as convenient to go East .... with nonstop flights to Tokyo and Hong Kong, as well as Singapore, Melbourne and Sydney.
On the other hand, because we are the national airline of Italy, and not India, we can offer you an unforgettable "Intermezzo Italia" experience whenever you come to Italy.
Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent today.

Alitalia

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

daCunha/ALT/31/B

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The all-season runner

POWER JOGGER

Once you're hooked on jogging, you'll do it day in, day out. Come rain. Come sunshine.

Naturally, you need a running mate that will keep you company round the year.

Power Jogger, for instance. Jogger has a lightweight synthetic suede and nylon top that washes easily and virtually maintains itself. And the shock-absorbant sole sports a rugged grip that will keep you on sure ground on any kind of surface.

Power Jogger. Impervious to weather conditions, just as you are.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE...

CLARION C BATA J-3

MEXICO86

POWER.—The official shoe of World Cup Football 1986 Mexico

Available at select Bata & POWER stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HEIR RAISING

■ The current cold war between the Bihar Police and the Bihar Engineering Services would be considered serious enough were its origins not so ludicrous. The first broadside was fired when a police posse raided the residence of an engineer, S.N. Srivastava, on the premise that he was in possession of "property" allegedly stolen from Inspector General of Police J.S. Mehta. The plot thickened when it was discovered that Mehta and Srivastava are in fact neighbours. And the 'search' lasted well over 90 minutes, during which Srivastava's 90-year-old father was manhandled and one of his arms fractured.

But that was the only serious element in what turned out to be a childish farce. Reporters converged on the local police station to examine the first information report filed by Mehta and get an idea of exactly how valuable was his stolen 'property' since the search at Srivastava's house had proved futile. On paper, the property in question was hardly notable. Mehta had ordered the search because he suspected Srivastava's teenaged son of stealing his daughter's school notes! For the city's amused citizens, that was literally a turn up for the books.

FAKE FACTS

■ Mention Ranchi, and most people will conjure up a mental image of the city's one dubious claim to fame—its lunatic asylum. Now, it would appear that many of its inmates are finding alternative accommodation in the city's police force. Under considerable psychological pressure from the public for its failure to curb spiralling lawlessness, the Ranchi police resorted to an act of sheer lunacy. A senior police officer rang up local newspaper offices late on a Sunday night to proudly announce that two "notorious criminals" had just been killed in an encounter at a city park.

The officer claimed that the two criminals had been lurking in the park with the intent of robbery when the police, conveniently enough, received an anonymous phone call tipping them off. However, a sceptical press interviewed an 'accomplice' arrested during the alleged "shoot-out", who stated that the three of them were picked up from a slum where they lived and forcibly taken to the park. Slum dwellers also confirmed that the two hardly figured in the Al Capone bracket as the police were loudly proclaiming.

GANGING UP

■ The phrase, as thick as thieves, has never been more aptly applicable than to two rival underworld gangs in Meghalaya, especially if the word 'thick' represents that part of the anatomy which rests on the neck. So bitter was the rivalry, that both groups had informers in each other's camps. Thus, when one of the gangs recently robbed a businessman and escaped with a fair amount of bounty, the other gang came to know of their success and exactly where and when the proceeds were going to be divided up and set out to rob the robbers.

They arrived, masked, at the meeting point and caught their rivals with their pants down. Grabbing the booty, they stole away but even with the masks, the robbers knew exactly who the robbers were and hit upon a way to get even. The gang leader called the local police and named those responsible, complete with descriptions and dresses. The culprits were duly rounded up and the booty recovered except for one thing—the items matched precisely the list of goods submitted to the police a day earlier by the businessman who had been robbed. Both gangs are now lodged in the local jail, their rivalry temporarily confined.

STAR TRIPS

■ Bombay's film industry, hard hit by video pirates, has been desperately looking for ways to curb the baddies. They tried forming themselves into vigilante groups and raided video parlours but discovered that such public-spirited crusades didn't quite work the way it does in the movies. But, now their stars seem to be looking up, thanks to a private Delhi-based company that has approached the Indian Motion Picture Producer's Association (IMPPA) with a script that seems tailored for success.

The company has, on behalf of the IMPPA, announced that anyone who gives them information leading to the recovery of a reasonable number of pirated video films will be rewarded with a free, all-expenses-paid trip to Bombay and a conducted tour of the city's film studios and personal meetings with the stars. It is, of course, no coincidence that the scheme was announced on the eve of the release of a film starring a lanky actor who is married to a former actress, whose father is a well-known poet, who now lives in Delhi and also happens to be an MP. No prizes for the correct answer.

—Compiled by DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New HALDA Calculators

Making the most of your money

If you've been waiting for a Calculator that's compact, accurate and quite simply remarkable in cost – performance – then the waiting is over.

The House of Rayala, that brought you quality Halda Typewriters now brings you quality Halda Calculators.

Elegant. Sleek. And very economical. In an easy to operate range that includes models from the Pocket to the Printout Desk Top and Scientific Calculators. With the Halda stamp of reliability.

Halda Calculators – A business decision you'll be proud of for years to come.

Desk top | Solar desk top | Scientific | Pocket

RC HC 1 2417

HALDA

From quality Electronic Typewriters to quality Electronic Calculators.

Head Office : RAYALA CORPORATION PVT. LTD., 36 Mount Road, Guindy, Madras 600 032. Tel Nos. 414744/418443

Branches : PHONES : • Ahmedabad 23802 • Vadodara 558599 • Bangalore 571654 • Bhubaneshwar 51656 • Bombay 4128241/4128292 • Calcutta 270292 • Coimbatore 34936 • Cochin 352946/353729 • Delhi 6410492 • Lucknow 43304 • Madras 81730/810222 • Pune 68159 • Secunderabad 820480 • Vishakapatnam 65511

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHAIRMAN'S SPEECH

UNITED INDUSTRIAL BANK LIMITED

STATEMENT BY
SHRI J.N. BISWAS
CHAIRMAN
UNITED INDUSTRIAL BANK LTD.
AT THE FORTY-SIXTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING
OF THE BANK
HELD IN CALCUTTA
ON JUNE 27, 1986.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to welcome you to the 46th Annual General Meeting of our Bank. I presume all of you have received a copy of the Annual Report and Accounts for the year ended 1985.

The economic scene of our country to-day is one of hope and optimism. The Sixth Five Year Plan's target rate of growth of 5.2% was fully achieved. This could be done mainly because of good agricultural production and rapid growth of services sector. Though during the Sixth Plan period the overall growth rate of industrial production was somewhat below target, the industrial scenario appeared to be brighter and more promising in the first year of the Seventh Plan mainly due to liberal and progressive industrial policy of the Central Government.

In tune with the improving industrial climate in the country, the economic situation in West Bengal, where major part of our activities is concentrated, also started showing signs of revival. It will be the task of the banking sector to correctly identify and provide suitable assistance to the emerging class of professional entrepreneurs who are entering new fields like electronics, telecommunication, chemicals and plastic technology so that this part of the country can stage an industrial revival.

The performance of the Bank has been appropriately brought out in the Annual Report. During the year under review the Bank has crossed the deposits of Rs. 200.00 crores mark having a total deposit of Rs. 203.00 crores by the end of 1985. During the last 5 years the growth of the deposits of the Bank has been as much as 128% rising from Rs. 89.00 crores in 1980 to Rs. 203.00 crores in 1985, the growth rate being well above the national average. More than 50% of the total incremental deposits has been mobilised through our rural and semi-urban branches during the year under review.

The advances of the Bank during the year also increased by Rs.14.00 crores and the credit-deposit ratio at the end of the year stood at 60.5%. During the last 5 years the advances increased from Rs. 54.00 crores at the beginning of 1981 to Rs. 123.00 crores in 1985. The credit expansion has, therefore, been 128% during the last 5 years.

With the industrial growth visualised in the Seventh Five Year Plan, supported by progressive industrial and fiscal policies, the pace and pattern of growth will change. We are making concentrated efforts to improve profitability of the Bank and, with structural adjustment accompanied by preference to foreign exchange business and Merchant Banking, we hope to improve the earning ratio gradually. Our added attention to increase the foreign exchange business is highlighted by the fact that in the year 1985, the turnover of our foreign exchange business amounted to Rs. 68.00 crores as compared to Rs. 47.00 crores in 1984. This helped us in a big way to increase our earnings.

We are conscious of our role to play in improving the lot of weaker sections of the community and our advances to priority sectors have increased from Rs. 29.33 crores at the end of 1984 to Rs. 32.91 crores at the end of 1985.

The strength of the Bank is its people. Proper development of human resources has also been engaging the attention of the Bank management. Training programmes are being designed to groom the staff in various disciplines and prepare them to meet the present day challenges. During the year 1985, 124 employees were trained at the Bank's own Staff Training College. The Bank also utilised the training facilities offered by Reserve Bank of India, National Institute of Bank Management and such other Institutions.

In the perspective of what I have said so far, 1985 was treated as a year of consolidation. Our corporate objective and policy of consolidation essentially aimed at improvement of loan assets, strengthening the system of internal control measures and improvement in the profitability through cost effectiveness.

'Reconstruction and Counselling' cell has been set up in the Central Office to monitor the functioning of the assisted sick units. We have also started assessing the quality of individual advances through classification of our advances into different categories with a 'health code' assigned to each borrowal account.

Banking is a "service" industry. Therefore we are keen to provide the best possible service to our customers. With this end in view, we have created a special cell to look into the grievances of the customers.

We welcome the appointment of the high powered 'National Finance and Credit Council' by the Reserve Bank of India for taking overall views of the flow of finance and credit to industry, agriculture and trade.

I take the opportunity of making some suggestions which are as follows:—

a) All scheduled Banks may be allowed the privilege of having 'Currency Chests'. It is a well known fact that remittances of funds is becoming more and more difficult and this effects profitability of the Banks.

b) In the process of recovery of sticky advances, Banks have to take recourse to legal action. Such legal proceedings under the present system are a long drawn process. It is felt that if the Government considers setting up separate Cells in the District as well as High Court level, speedy disposal of bank cases may be possible.

c) The Government may also consider the feasibility of suitable statutory provision in the line with the provisions extended to all India or State level Financial Institutions to enforce charged securities for recovery of Bank's dues. Suitable amendments may also be considered in the Law of Limitation to extend the period of validity of documents executed by the borrowers in favour of the Banks.

In 1986, the Bank faces a big challenge and it should be our duty to take it up in right earnest. With cooperation from the members of the staff, it will be possible to overcome the hurdles and discharge our social obligations to the community, especially to the poor and neglected sections of the society. I am quite confident that, with the goodwill of everybody associated with the Bank, we shall forge ahead from strength to strength and play a laudable role in our assisting the process of planned development of the country.

Let me now place on record my appreciation to all members of the staff, our constituents, the Government of India, the Government of West Bengal, the Reserve Bank of India, members of the Board of Directors and to you—our valued shareholders.

Thank you.

Note: This does not purport to be the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

MIZORAM

Quest for Peace

IN THE house of India there lives an unhappy man. His name is Mizo," wrote Laldenga, the Mizo leader, more than a decade ago. But last fortnight the Mizo emotion could not have been more different. Twenty years of war between the Mizos and the Indian Government had been ended by a peace accord, Laldenga had returned to his ancestral hills and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had brought to the Mizos the goodwill of the nation through his 72-hour tour of the Union territory.

It was a fortnight of celebrations that had begun with the signing of the Mizo accord on June 30—flashed to the Union territory on Doordarshan's national network. "It was like an armistice for us," recalls Bualaranga, a bookseller who had been in the underground till 1971. The next day, Aizawl and the surrounding villages resounded to the sound of bursting crackers and jubilant singing."

The most spectacular celebrations, of course, were reserved for Laldenga. There were cheers when Laldenga recounted how his party, the Mizo National Front (MNF), had negotiated to ensure that their beloved land got special status; Laldenga himself was to be the chief minister of an interim government.

"People are happy not only because Laldenga has returned but also because peace has returned," says Liangunga Ngente, headmaster of a school in Kolasib village. Indeed, the euphoria showed little sign of abatement even as Laldenga returned to London briefly, and Rajiv Gandhi arrived to felicitate Mizoram and its 4.9 lakh people in the celebrations.

More important than the surface goodwill generated by the prime minister's tour is the fact that the mood in Mizoram has undergone a dramatic change.

"Welcome Rajiv Gandhi, apostle of peace" and "We have confidence in Rajiv", proclaimed hundreds of posters by the highways, stuck on houses, boards and even the rocky hillsides. Aizawl's populace trooped out in droves to hear Rajiv Gandhi's translated speech on the "dawn of peace" in Mizoram and how the first step would be the surrender of arms by the MNF guerrillas. "There can be no slowing down of this process or any compromise on this," he declared, adding that "only after this could statehood be granted to Mizoram along with the expansion of the Assembly to 40 members, the introduction of Mizo as an official Indian language and ultimately the revival of Mizo economy worn by years of strife."

But more important than the surface goodwill generated by the prime minister's tour is the fact that the mood in Mizoram has undergone a dramatic change. The bloody battles of the past two decades seem to have vanished. Former home minister Rualchhina, is expected to start bringing out the former rebels from July 24. They will first arrive at two camps at the Indo-Bangladesh border—Parva near the main MNF headquarters and Marpara near the MNF tactical headquarters—and from there, after surrendering their arms and ammunition, go to the rehabilitation centre being constructed at Luangmual on the outskirts of Aizawl.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mizos welcome Rajiv and Sonia in Kawnpui (left); and Laldenga meeting MNA men at Turial: confetti time

SAYS 31-year-old Mizo National Army (MNA) lieutenant Anthony Vanlaltluanga: "In Mizoram, peace will be complete and nobody will continue fighting from the jungles like in Nagaland because in the MNF we all accept our president Laldenga's leadership." In Mizoram, all MNF members, loyal to Laldenga remained underground while his rivals either surrendered or negotiated a pardon from the Government. The 750-odd MNA guerrillas, who remain in Bangladesh, also appear to have realised the futility of battling indefinitely against a vastly superior and better equipped foe. "This kind of struggle, leading to suffering and ill health compelled us to seek a solution," admits Rualchhina. "Since armed struggle alone could not achieve our aims it is better to get freedom through non-violent means," he adds.

MNF leaders like Rualchhina have come around to accepting the right to free speech, to political activity and to travel freely around the country, which to them constitute "one kind of freedom". The other kind of freedom, they explain, is to live without fear of being swamped by cultures and people alien to the Mizos—a freedom the accord specifically provides for. The inner-line regulation for restricting entry of outsiders into Mizoram will be retained after the accord is implemented.

The Centre had made it incumbent upon the MNF to first prove its bonafides by laying down arms. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, as Laldenga himself pointed out, did not personally sign the accord, as the MNF is still an outlawed party. The Mizo accord also does not specifically confer general amnesty on MNA guerrillas; it also does not state anything about handing over power to Laldenga—the agreements are tacit and dependent on MNF actions.

That the Government would come down with "extremely heavy hands" in the event of fresh MNF violence was a message the prime minister repeatedly hammered home in his speeches. The point stressed also in the preamble of the accord is that the Centre agreed to negotiate with Laldenga because he agreed to fulfil the basic conditions of ending violence and to accept the Constitution.

Rajiv Gandhi has also kept his political options in Mizoram open by deliberately ensuring that the Mizoram unit of his party does not go the Assam Congress(I) way. "At one time we were afraid that Rajiv would ditch us in Mizoram like he did in Assam," confides a Congress(I) MLA. "But now we are confident he will not." The party high command made sure its state unit remained in the reckoning by consistently refusing to accede to Laldenga's demand for a total transfer of power to the MNF. It was therefore agreed that although Laldenga would be appointed chief minister, his nine-member interim government would contain five Congress(I) ministers, including the present Chief Minister Lalthanhawla, who would be appointed deputy chief minister.

The accord's critics believe that Laldenga in power will mean a turbulent Mizoram. Already, he has raised a storm by demanding a greater Mizoram.

The only hurdle was Chief Minister Lalthanhawla, who unexpectedly announced on July 6 that he did not want to be the deputy chief minister. But Union Home Minister Buta Singh is reported to have forced Lalthanhawla to reconsider his decision. The chief minister's sudden change of mind, Congress(I) insiders disclosed, was because of Laldenga's refusal to give Congress(I) the three key portfolios of home, public works and education.

Lalthanhawla, who made no secret of his displeasure had publicly objected to Laldenga's insinuation that the last assembly elections, in which the Congress(I) came to power, was a sham. A furious Lalthanhwala came out against Laldenga in a press conference, accusing the MNF leader of harbouring anti-national sentiments.

The Congress(I) would easily win the next assembly elections, the outgoing chief minister declared. Over the last 12 years, Lalthanhawla claimed, his party had won over different political groups. Besides, the furious chief minister remarked: "His party had signed the accord not for Mister Laldenga but for the sake of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When your husband has shifted to calculators, copiers and computers it shouldn't be difficult to get you a persuading him computerised washing machine.

Introducing the

SAVIOR AX 101

The fully automatic, computerised washing machine.

You too are short of time. And unlike your husband, you have to put up with irregular domestic help. And with constant complaints from everyone in the family that the clothes aren't washed well enough or often enough. You've probably got what was called a washing machine too, but it's hardly any help, if you've got to be there all the time with it.

Now you can shift to computers. Take a look at the SAVIOR AX 101 today. India's fully indigenous, fully automatic washing machine and the only one designed for Indian conditions – voltage fluctuations, variable water pressures etc. And it's specially designed to give you superb washing quality with Indian detergents.

The Savior AX 101 gives you a choice of 36 programmes. All you do is turn three knobs to select the programme. And the computerised Savior will do the rest automatically. It fills, heats, washes and then rinses. All you have to do is squeeze the clothes and put them out to dry.

The Savior AX 101 has an incredible range of built-in safety features too. Like the Wash Load/Heat Equation LED indicator that indicates the suitability of the wash load to the heat setting you've given and allow you to correct it. Thereby saving possible damage to expensive garments. Yes, the SAVIOR AX 101 is the only machine in the country that takes so much care of you and your clothes.

Come, get yourself your SAVIOR today. It will make washing a delightful, push-button experience.

Available in Delhi, Chandigarh, Kanpur, Jaipur, Bombay, Pune, Ahmedabad, Madras and Bangalore.
Soon in other cities too!

Indian Gas Cylinders
14/1, Mathura Road, Faridabad, 121003.
Phone : 82-5561 – 63.

SAVIOR AX 101
Washing can never be the same again.

meadhyam

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Mizos and the country."

Lalthanhawla's ruffled feathers were smoothed by the prime minister, who missed no chance to point out the sacrifices Lalthanhawla and his party colleagues had made for ensuring peace. The Congress(I)'s image was further boosted by Rajiv's reiterations on peace being the direct fulfilment of his party's 1984 assembly election promise.

Whether all this bolstering will prevent an MNF victory in the next assembly elections is the question uppermost in the minds of Mizoram politicians. "Laldenga might be a legend but fighting an election is another thing," says former MNF member Bualranga. In Selling village, an astute labour Khuang Dawal says: "We once voted for Brigadier Sailo because he promised peace in Mizoram. When he could not bring peace we voted for the Congress but this time I will have to hear them all to decide whom I will vote for." Intelligence sources estimate that none of the three contenders for power appears to be in a position to get a majority.

The accord's critics believe that Laldenga in power will mean a turbulent Mizoram. Already, it is pointed out, the MNF leader has raised a storm by demanding a greater Mizoram. For the Mizos who believe that their land was arbitrarily divided into three sections by the British—with parts going to Burma, East Bengal and Assam—way back in 1889, the greater Mizoram issue has powerful emotional undertones.

But equally emotional can be the question of Mizo lands now with the states of Assam, Manipur, and Tripura. And the question uppermost in the minds of Mizoram's bureaucrats is whether the laying down of arms will not herald another kind of disquiet in this hilly land to which peace has finally come after a wait of two decades.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Mizoram

LALDENGA

Living Legend

FEW PEOPLE become legends in their lifetime: Laldenga, the 60-year-old Mizo leader is one in Mizoram. When he returned to Aizawl on July 5, after signing the peace accord with the Centre, tens of thousands of Mizos lined the streets, singing panegyrics recounting the years of strife, and hoping that he would take their land to glory and progress. Many Mizo National Army (MNA) volunteers, most of whom had never seen their leader, donned their uniforms as a mark of respect.

Laldenga had left Mizoram in 1966, moving into what was then East Pakistan to orchestrate the battle in the jungles of Mizoram, which was then Lushai Hills, a part of Assam. Though Laldenga had to move to Karachi after 1971, he remained the unchallenged leader of the Mizo National Front—which he founded on October 22, 1961—and its armed wing, the MNA. But after five years of attempting to influence events in Mizoram from Pakistan, he was ready to negotiate for peace.

Most Mizos today do not care that Laldenga's promise of a sovereign Mizoram has not been fulfilled. Laldenga too is content with statehood and a special status that will ensure that outsiders do not swamp the tiny 21,000 sq km Union territory, although in 1965 he had told the then prime minister Lal Bahadur Shastri that Mizoram could never be a part of India. To him, peace is obviously more important than sovereignity, as he told Principal Correspondent INDRANIL BANERJIE last fortnight in an exclusive interview. Excerpts:

Q. How does it feel to be back in Mizoram after your long exile?

A. Well, a home-coming is always good. There has never been as big a gathering in the history of Mizoram as there was to greet me.

Q. How valid are the fears that all MNF guerrillas might not want to come overground and accept the accord?

PRASHANT PANJIAR

A. All these fears are only in Indian newspapers. All MNF supporters have spontaneously welcomed the accord. I can assure you there will not be a single man remaining in the jungles after the accord is implemented.

Q. How could you settle for statehood when you had been fighting for sovereignity?

A. Our fight was against the domination of the Mizos by the Government of India. Today we have signed an accord that gives special status to Mizoram. We always wanted a political settlement of the Mizo problem but we were forced into violence. How long could my people fight the army?

Q. Why does Lalthanhawla seem unhappy with the accord?

A. I don't know how he feels. But in any case, now I read that he has been persuaded by the home minister to take part in the interim government.

Q. Didn't you ask Lalthanhawla what his problem is?

A. I had dinner with Lalthanhawla but we did not talk about all this. After all, when one is in power it is not easy to step down. What Lalthanhawla did was a very noble step for peace in Mizoram.

Q. Don't you expect opposition from Brigadier Sailo and his People's Conference?

A. I have not met Sailo; but he will pose no problem. He is a spent force.

Q. Your remarks about a greater Mizoram have caused great consternation. Why did you raise the issue?

A. We have never abandoned the demand for a greater Mizoram but it was kept in abeyance for the agreement. Article 3 of the Constitution says that all affected states have to be consulted in any boundary dispute. If we had taken up the greater Mizoram issue with the three states—Manipur, Tripura and Assam—we would never have managed to reach an agreement with the Centre.

Q. Do you anticipate any problem in the accord's implementation?

A. I don't think there will be any problems. I hope the implementation will go smooth as silk and (this accord will) not end up like the Punjab and Assam accords.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

20 million years ago, nature laid the foundation for Asia's largest mine-based integrated industrial complex. At Neyveli.

Holding 95% of India's Lignite, Neyveli is today, the source of abundant Power, Fertilizers and Chemicals.

HOW IT ALL BEGAN...

Millions of years ago, dense primeval forests covered vast areas around Neyveli. Through eons of ecological changes, these forests got buried and transformed into lignite.

THE BROWN DIAMOND...

Known as "Brown Diamond", lignite is a younger member of the coal family.

In 1956, Neyveli Lignite Corporation Ltd. was established to mine lignite through a highly mechanised continuous mining system using Bucket Wheel Excavators. To exploit an estimated reserve of 3,300 million tonnes — a vital input for electrical energy.

ON THE ROAD TO SUCCESS...

NLC's First Thermal Power Station was set up with an installed capacity of 600 MW — fed by Mine I, producing 3.5 million tonnes of lignite per annum.

With construction already under way for Mine II and Thermal Power Station II, power generation will soon go upto 2070 MW. Before the turn of the century, lignite mining will multiply 5 fold (32 MT per annum) and Power generation more than 6 fold (3990 MW).

It also manufactures LECO — carbonised lignite coke — feeding industries, replacing coal and furnace oil. Neyveli's Urea is a boon to farmers.

EXCELLENCE — A WAY OF LIFE:

Winning an uninterrupted stream of awards every year, in every field, NLC is much more than just a Company, Corporation or an Institution.

It is a way of life, of an inspired community of 20,000 people, who, besides making NLC one of the Top Ten Public Sector Undertakings in performance and profits, leave their indelible mark on the entire nation.

admas/NLC/073

NEYVELI LIGNITE CORPORATION LTD.
A Government of India Enterprise
NEYVELI 607 801 ■ TAMIL NADU

NLC — GROWING POWER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAGJIVAN RAM

A Disputed Legacy

JAGJIVAN Ram's life was as eventful and chequered as any successful politician's can be: an almost unbroken record in office from 1946 till 1979, heady political drama when he quit the Congress(I) in 1977, an admirable track record in several key ministries, a rare degree of respect from the bureaucrats he worked with, and the mantle of India's most famous Harijan since B.R.Ambedkar. If his last years saw a stalwart in decline, troubled by family squabbles, his death too was far from peaceful: unseemly controversies followed his body from the hospital to his home and to his funeral pyre in Bihar.

The growing split in the family of Babuji, as Ram was widely known—between his daughter Meera Kumar and his granddaughter Maydhaavi Qirti—burst into the open, the Government's Principal Information Officer, Ram Mohan Rao, was sent home under a cloud and Lok Dal leader Ram Bilas Paswan opened a potential pandora's box by questioning the date of death.

It started at Delhi airport early in the morning of July 4 when assorted VIP's, assembled to see Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi off to Mauritius, were startled to see Gandhi's cavalcade head out of the airport no sooner than it arrived. Gandhi had barely alighted from his car when his cousin and security in-charge, Gautam Kaul, whispered something into his ear to set Gandhi off again.

Puzzled reporters button-holed Rao who, after confirming it from an as yet unnamed cabinet minister, told them that Ram had died. AIR put the news out in its 6 a.m. bulletin and the news agencies followed suit. AIR corrected itself soon after, as did the agencies, and a day later Rao was sent on leave.

There was no official comment on how the blunder happened. Some blamed the staff of Saroj Khaparde, Union minister of state for health and minister-in-attendance for Ram, who was to have been taken to London the previous evening, but Khaparde denied this. C.P.Bahl, additional medical superintendent of Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital, maintained that the hospital had not given the information: "How could we? His cardiac functions only stopped at 10.20 a.m. on July 6." Kaul also declined to comment.

Paswan and people close to Qirti, the 26-year-old daughter of the late Suresh Ram, had a simple explanation for the faux pas. Said Paswan, issuing a statement demanding an official inquiry into Ram's death: "Babuji definitely died on the morning of July 4: there is no other explanation for Rajiv delaying his departure and rushing to the hospital. All of us who saw his body at his home on July 6 were surprised by the unusual amount of swelling on his face."

Sources close to Qirti quoted hospital doctors as telling them on July 4 that

His death was far from peaceful: unseemly controversies followed his body from the hospital to his home and all the way to his funeral pyre in Bihar.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ram had "collapsed" the previous night. When Qirti had gone to see him on July 4 she was shocked to see her grandfather with cotton wool over his eyes and fingers. She tried to touch him but Meera Kumar, who was sitting there, stopped her. Said Qirti: "The last I saw my grandfather alive was on July 3."

Meera Kumar, who took premature retirement from the Indian Foreign Service to contest and win a parliamentary by-election from Bijnore on the Congress(I) ticket, was not available for comment. But Bahl maintained that while it was true that Ram had been put on artificial respiration on the night of July 3-4, Ram's heart had stopped beating only on the morning of July 6.

Most people, disinclined to credit the Government with Machiavellian designs, tended to look askance at Paswan's sensational assertion, but the Lok Dal general secretary argued that there were perfectly logical reasons for this: while Gandhi did not want to postpone his already rescheduled trip, he did not want to miss out on the political advantage to be gained from honouring Ram in his death either. Said Paswan: "The whole thing was a farce calculated to impress the Harijan voter."

After Ram's death, the Government pulled out all the stops, declaring three-day state mourning (normally reserved for a head of state or government who dies out of office) plus an official holiday, and a funeral with full state honours. AIR and Doordarshan cancelled their scheduled programmes. These were replaced by bhajans and miles of tributes by leaders of the ruling party. At Patna, his body was taken to the local Congress(I) office.

Before that, a furious battle raged at Ram's house about the site for Ram's funeral. His widow, Indrani, and Meera Kumar insisted that Ram's body should be taken to Chhandwa, his village 3 km from Arrah, because Ram had apparently desired this in his will. But Qirti and other vocal supporters of the Congress(J) insisted that considering Ram's stature his funeral should take place in Delhi so that a samadhi could be built on a site near that of Gandhi, Nehru, Shastri and Indira Gandhi.

Thus, even as Ram's body lay in his house, with mourners filing past, over 100 Congress(J) workers led by Qirti were raising slogans outside. Seeing that her aunt, being a Congress(I) MP, was likely to have her way, Qirti and her supporters submitted a memorandum to the prime minister and president. Rajiv did not meet them personally but Zail Singh did and heard them out.

THERE was further drama before Ram's body was taken to Patna. After spending the whole night outside the house, Qirti—who has not been allowed inside Ram's house since she was thrown out in late May—and 76 Congress(J) workers tried to physically prevent the body from being taken away. They were promptly arrested. Qirti then rushed to the airport to try and join 30 of her relatives accompanying the body in a special aircraft to Patna, but was disallowed by security personnel because her name was not on the list they had been provided.

Even as the VVIP's were winging their way to Patna, another controversy was raging in Chhandwa when it was suddenly announced that Ram's last rites would be performed there. The confusion was about whether Ram was to be cremated or buried. His relatives and the villagers wanted him to be buried: like his father, and according to the rituals of the Sheonaraini system of the Kabir Panth of which Ram was a member. But Meera Kumar and other members of the family wanted Ram to be cremated. Both a grave and a pyre were kept ready. Ultimately, Meera Kumar settled the issue a few minutes before Gandhi landed in a helicopter.

Qirti was still en route to Chhandwa—her Patna flight was late by three hours and landed minutes after the funeral was over—but others were present to voice their protest against the decision. Said Bihar's Minister for Jails, Mahabir Paswan, who was close to Ram: "This (the cremation) was against the wishes of Babuji." Lamented Qirti, who reached Chhandwa only after it was over: "My grandfather had made me perform the last rites of my father and had told me then that I should do the same for him. But Meera Kumar and others are determined to see that I don't have any role in my family."

RANJAN BASU

"Meera Kumar and others are determined to see that I don't have any kind of role in my own family."

MAYDHAAVI QIRTI
Ram's grand-daughter

The "ritual" controversy apart, opposition circles in Bihar alleged that Ram's funeral was performed at Chhandwa instead of Delhi to belittle him even in death. "Babuji remained a Harijan and untouchable even after his death," said Devender Prasad Yadav, an opposition MLC. Gandhi tried to appease their anger by announcing that a memorial to Ram would be erected in Chhandwa.

The real battle, of course, is for the right to be called Jagjivan Ram's political heir, or heiress. Qirti has fired the first salvo by declaring that she would contest the by-election to Sasaram on the Congress(J) ticket. Meera Kumar's masters in the Congress(I) cannot be viewing this with any composure. Her swift absorption in the Congress(I) was obviously on the assumption that she would be seen as Ram's political successor and bring the 2 to 3 per cent votes he commanded to the Congress(I). Any increase in the popularity of the Congress(J) is a possible political challenge in parts of the country.

But what eventually could dwarf everything is the battle for Ram's estate—believed to be outsized, and the tussle for it is bound to reach the courts unless the family stops feuding, which seems unlikely considering the high stakes involved—political and financial. Ram's twilight years were of increasing sadness, but even after his death his soul is not destined to rest in peace.

—AJAY KUMAR with FARZAND AHMED in Chhandwa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New tyres for your Maruti?

Get the tyres that Maruti chose first

MRF NYLON TYRES

Among all car tyres in India, MRF NYLON TYRES were the first tyres chosen by Maruti – for which nothing but the best will do.

Today, more Marutis run on MRF TYRES than on any other tyre.

So when you need new tyres for your Maruti, why take any risks: Stay with MRF NYLON TYRES.

The makers of the Maruti know what's best for your car.

Over 40% of all Marutis on the road today are on MRF Nylon Tyres

MRF TYRES
Tyres with Muscle

MRF TYRES are made in technical collaboration with the BF Goodrich Company of USA.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS M MRF NCT 45 2418

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One of the things about Bangalore is that it's always in bloom — season after season. Anything that takes seed here grows. And that holds good for the seeds of enterprise as well... making Bangalore the fastest growing metropolis in India.

With a fantastic growth rate of 76.1% over the last decade, Bangalore has shot ahead of even Delhi, Bombay and Calcutta. And when people call it the new Mecca for industrialists, you can see what they mean.

The corporate giants are moving south to make Bangalore their base. Take for instance Brooke Bond, Madura Coats, McDowell, and Lipton who have already made the move. Another indication of investment flowing in is the growing number of hotels from the largest hotel chains of the country. ITDC's Hotel Ashok, Welcomgroup Windsor Manor, Holiday Inn, West End and Taj Residency of the Taj Group.

So, who's been part of this growth story?

In the growth story of any city, its newspaper institutions play a highly critical role. Not just in news reporting. Or in the reflection of views. Importantly, it's in giving talent and enterprise the wide audience it deserves. For public interaction. And support. Also to give readers a fair and accurate picture of developments.

It's a responsibility The Deccan Herald Group has lived up to in more ways than one. The Group, Bangalore's oldest publishing house, brings out four No. 1 publications. Deccan Herald, the mainline English daily. Prajavani, the most popular Kannada daily. Sudha, the complete Kannada family weekly. And Mayura the most widely read Kannada monthly.

The 'listening post' — world-wide

The Deccan Herald Group tunes in to the world through a network of strategically based correspondents covering the US, the UK, Europe, the Middle East, Bangladesh, South East Asia and the UN.

It also widens its canvas with news and feature arrangements, with the Washington Post, the Financial Times, the Los Angeles Times, Asia Features and Gemini.

ANYTHING GROWS BEAUTIFULLY IN THE GARDEN CITY

THAT'S WHY BANGALORE IS THE FASTEST GROWING CITY IN INDIA

Graph indicates the Reach of THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP of publications in Karnataka in their respective categories. (Deccan Herald reaches 76.3% of all adults reachable through English dailies.) Source: NRS III

PML-1879-B

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The nerve centre links up with the national network

The Group's Head Quarters in Bangalore is a hive of activity. Buzzing with news stories from all over. Right from up-to-the-minute despatches sent in by its fully staffed news bureau in Delhi, reports from correspondents in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and other state capitals, to news in the pipeline from the national news agencies. All this, co-ordinated by a large bureau of staff reporters in Bangalore.

When a newspaper becomes an 'institution'

What started off as a small newspaper in 1948, is the largest, most modern publishing house in Karnataka... among the foremost newspaper houses in the country. With sophisticated facilities in design, layout, photosetting and offset colour printing.

All of which means unparalleled state-wide influence. 'EXCELLENT COVERAGE' in other words. To readers it means news. And to advertisers, it means readers.

THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP

75 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Trust and eGangotri

SHOULD YOU IMPORT

WHAT WE EXPORT

High Speed Steel users— Stop import-what we export

British India Steels Limited has bagged a prestigious order from UK for exporting M3/2 grade High Speed Steel Powder. With this new milestone British India Steels Limited, today, is a name to reckon with the world's leading manufacturers of High Speed Steel by Powder Metallurgy route like Mitsubishi of Japan to name one and has made its place among the very few companies who supply to the advanced countries.

Today—BISL is geared to supply High Speed Steel billets, bars, squares and preforms to meet the domestic requirements.

For your requirements contact—

BRITISH INDIA STEELS LTD.

Hasubhai Chambers, Sheth Mangaldas Road
Ellis Bridge, Ahmedabad 380 006
Phone: 78169, Tlx : 0121 343 SKET IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Adsystems BISL-3/86

Will you still import?

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Militant Poses

BARNALA is a traitor. He is a tyrant worse than the Moghuls. Even Mrs Gandhi's despotic regime pales before his misdeeds. At the behest of the Centre, he is finishing the Sikh youth and attacking the Sikh holy shrines. Neither God nor Sikhs shall pardon him." This is no Punjab extremist spouting venom. It is former chief minister Prakash Singh Badal, speaking at last fortnight's convention of the breakaway Akali Dal that chose him as its president. And all the others—Gurcharan Singh Tohra, Sukhjinder Singh, Prem Singh Lalpura and Surjan Singh Thekedar—raise the same battle cries against Barnala.

Five months ago, these leaders had vowed to fight foreign-inspired terrorism and separatism. Shockingly, but predictably, the Badal faction has now shifted to a stand of straight and total confrontation: Sikhs versus the Centre.

"We shall not allow Sikh interests to be bargained away by power brokers," declares Tohra as he praises the brave deeds of Mrs Gandhi's killers, Beant Singh and Satwant Singh. But it is Badal, once the most moderate of Akalis, to bring up the climax by declaring: "The Delhi darbar is out to finish the Sikhs. We must fight back." He does not mention Punjabis, only the Sikhs and turns down any compromise on Chandigarh.

If the speeches leave anything unsaid, the resolutions fill the gap. "The Sikhs are convinced that the Anandpur Sahib resolution is a panacea for all ills. There is no accommodation of our view that Sikhs are a separate cultural and religious entity in India...The massacre of Sikhs and the repression has fortified our belief," says one resolution.

Fuelled by personal ambitions, the Akalis have a distressing capacity to split. Right now there are six Akali Dals. "Akali splits are ruinous to the peasants, whom they claim to champion," says Punjabi writer Sant Singh Sekhon.

But for Punjab as a whole, the split has even more ominous overtones. The Badal faction has made it clear that its sympathies lie with the militants. Declared Badal at the convention: "I shall go to each Sikh youth's house killed by the security forces, visit Sikhs detained in jails. We shall do everything possible to stop the massacre of Sikh youth."

Within a week, he joined his party colleagues Kuldip Singh Wadala and Sukhjinder Singh in the Damdami Taksal-and-AISSF-sponsored 'Antim Ardas' of Balbir Singh and Ajitpal Singh at Raipur village in Hoshiarpur. The two had been killed in an encounter with the police in Jalandhar. Barnala had called them "dreaded terrorists" but the Raipur congregation called them martyrs.

The Badal camp's militant posture, though attracting the Sikh peasantry, is yet to convince the militant leadership. "We know their real fight is for power and not the Sikh cause. They shall have to prove their worth," warned Kuldip Singh Malli, an AISSF leader at Phagwara. Now the AISSF and the Taksal are pressing them to resign from the Assembly to prove their bona fides.

In Chandigarh, Barnala minced no words in retaliation against the Badal faction's diatribes: "They are now clearly supporting efforts to disrupt national unity, build terrorism and the forces of secession. They want to destroy the Dal, create conditions of military rule and destabilise Punjab. They are providing political cover to the heinous designs of foreign powers." Referring to the killing of "innocent Sikh youth" by branding them as Naxalites in Badal's days in power, Barnala added: "Today, a devil is turning into a champion of civil liberties. His only problem is that he is not the chief minister." Barnala's strategy is clear: to isolate the Badal Akali Dal through a campaign that they are supporters of terrorism and secession.

For the moment at least, Barnala seems to be winning the battle of wits. Badal had claimed that two-thirds of the 440 delegates that make up the full general house of the Akali Dal would attend the Anandpur Sahib convention, but barely 100 turned up. So no separate 'delegates session' was held to elect him leader: the 6,000-odd Akalis who attended chose him the president. And as long as Barnala is in power, it may be difficult for Badal or Tohra to muster greater support for their militancy.

—GOBIND THUKRAL in Anandpur Sahib

Tohra at Anandpur Sahib congregation

"Barnala is a traitor. At the behest of the Centre, he is finishing the Sikh youth and attacking the Sikh shrines. Neither God nor Sikhs shall pardon him."

PRAKASH SINGH BADAL
former chief minister

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TERRORISM

Turning the Tide

FINALLY, the concerted offensive launched by the police and the paramilitary forces against Punjab's terrorists seems to be yielding results. In the last fortnight alone, the security forces killed a dozen hardcore terrorists, raided 17 major hide-outs in the trouble-torn districts of Amritsar and Gurdaspur, and captured over a hundred extremists, including a dozen hardcore elements. They have now eliminated 10 of the 38 top-ranking terrorists who figure on the police 'hit list'. These breakthroughs suggest that the security forces, long on the receiving end in Punjab, could have arrested the tide.

Says Punjab police chief Julio F. Ribeiro, exuding a new-found confidence that is just about beginning to be shared down the line: "We have succeeded in drawing them out and engaging them in encounters. Our combing operations are resulting either in elimination or arrest of some of the front-ranking terrorists." The morale of the security forces is definitely higher than before. But intelligence sources caution against any impression that the tide has turned against the terrorists.

Between March and July 10, the police have killed 36 hardcore terrorists: 20 in Amritsar, eight in Gurdaspur, six in Jalandhar and two in Ludhiana, besides arresting over 600 of them. The police also claim to have solved 290 terrorist killings, including the one in Jalandhar in which six police officials were killed and four terrorists freed from court premises, the Krishna Nagar massacre of 11 people in Amritsar, the killing of nine Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS) workers in Ludhiana, and of four government schoolteachers in Guru Ki Wadali village in the district of Amritsar

The arms seized from the terrorists give an idea of the fire-power confronting the security forces: 120 revolvers, 14 Sten gun carbines, 23 rifles and 10 HE-36 grenades, besides 2,000 cartridges. "We are wrongly maligned by the public and the politicians alike without any critical appraisal of our total achievement," says Puran Chand Dogra, the Jalandhar Range deputy inspector-general (DIG).

It all began late last month when, during an hour-long encounter at Kali Bahmni village near Batala, the police killed Ranjit Singh, the self-styled chief of the 'Khalistan Armed Forces', who carried a reward of Rs 1 lakh on his head, and two other front-line terrorists, Gurmej Singh, alias Geja who carried a similar reward, and Makhan Singh Chhit. "These three terrorists had struck terror in the Batala sub-division and were responsible for over two dozen incidents of violence," said Gurdaspur police chief J.P. Birdi.

The face-off was an example of the superior kind of intelligence now reaching the Punjab police. Reliable sources told the DIG of the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF), Inderjit Singh Sandhu, and Additional DIG A.A.Siddiqui that the Ranjit Singh gang was plotting a fresh crime near a tubewell in Kali Bahmni village. The security forces rushed to the village, threw three concentric rings around it and told the terrorists to surrender. They didn't, and died in the shoot-out that followed.

Avtar Singh (left) acting chief of the Babbar Khalsa; and Ranjit Singh killed in an encounter near Batala

A week later, the security forces notched up another success when they eliminated a gang of five terrorists led by Balbir Singh Billa, who too carried a reward of Rs 1 lakh. The gang is suspected to have killed 20 people, including a constable, in the last three months, mostly in the Tarn Taran sub-division of Amritsar district. It had killed six people, including a Communist Party of India (CPI) worker who had organised a protest march against the terrorists.

The police then averted a major catastrophe in Putlighar Chowk, an industrial suburb of Amritsar, with the arrest of Avtar Singh, the acting chief of the Babbar Khalsa. Described as a "devilish killer" by S.S.Virk, DIG in the CRPF, Avtar Singh was planning a communal carnage in Putlighar Chowk. The terrorist, who used to travel in a car disguised as a railway police officer and who has been known to commit several murders and robberies in a day, was the leader of the gang that killed 11 people in Amritsar's Krishna Nagar.

The raid on Avtar Singh's hide-out was led by Virk himself. The security forces had earlier raided three of his hide-outs in Amritsar and Tarn Taran and collected firm evidence that he was hiding in Putlighar Chowk. When Virk took the terrorist by surprise, the killer of at least 20 people offered no resistance at all, even though Virk had only a small contingent of policemen with him.

The last of the 'list of 38' to fall last fortnight was Balbir Singh, who carried a reward of Rs 50,000. Along with his associate Jeetpal Singh, Balbir Singh had gone on a scooter to Model Town in Jalandhar to kill Punjab Qaumi Ekta leader Baldev Krishan Khullar. Khullar was not in but when the terrorists opened fire at Khullar's shop, his gunman returned the fire. Two constables of the Punjab police, who happened to be pass-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Security check by armed police in Tarn Taran: new confidence

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"Our combing operations are resulting either in elimination or arrest of some of the front-ranking terrorists."

JULIO F. RIBEIRO
Punjab police chief

ing by, also joined the gunman in the counter-attack. Balbir Singh died on the spot while his associate died later. In earlier times, neither the gunman nor the policemen would have dared to return the fire.

That day turned out to be the best Punjab's security forces have had in recent times. Six terrorists, who had set fire to a flour mill, were arrested in Gurdaspur. Four more were captured near Sidhwan-Biharipur road. Hira Singh, alias Sukhwant Singh alias Sukha, who tried to escape from the custody of the CRPF, was killed near Beas in Amritsar. Ten Sikh youth surrendered to the Border Security Force (BSF) near Dera Baba Nanak after crossing over from Pakistan.

But the major police catch which has raised a lot of controversy was the arrest of Harinder Singh Kahlon, convenor of the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF). He was arrested from his village, Dakoha, in Jalandhar district. But though he carried a reward of Rs 1 lakh, he is not involved in any terrorist crime and was wanted on a sedition charge and for inciting a mob. For five months now he has been a nightmare for the police: holding press conferences, addressing congregations and meeting prominent people.

Informed political circles, however, say that there is more than meets the eye in Kahlon's arrest. The Centre is said to be keen to hold talks with him. "Kahlon will soon be shifted from Amritsar to a place near Delhi where he will be available for meetings with bigwigs," said an Akali minister who did not want to be identified.

SUCH political issues are far from the mind of Ribeiro, who has quickly distributed award money and promotions to his valiant officials and is currently working on plans to further improve the cohesion between the Punjab police, the CRPF and the BSF, all three of which he heads in the state. "Minor differences have been removed but we shall keep up the offensive till we capture the last terrorist," he asserted.

The reorganisation and augmentation of the security forces have contributed greatly to their recent success. The two worst-affected districts of Amritsar and Gurdaspur have been split between the CRPF and the BSF, respectively, with Punjab police to assist them. Further, each sub-division has been divided into three sectors with a committee of three—comprising one officer of the Punjab police, one of the paramilitary force and one intelligence officer—in charge of each sector. Besides, 16 more companies of security forces—taking their total to 70—have been deployed in the two districts in the last two months. The result of this show of strength and their coordinated use, says an intelligence officer in Amritsar, is that the quality of intelligence has improved dramatically as also the credibility of the security forces.

But the forces continue to face several major hurdles. There is little attempt to isolate the militants and terrorists. On the contrary, the Badal Akali Dal calls every encounter fake and is planning public protests against them. More importantly, over two dozen top-ranking terrorist leaders are still at large. Warns a senior intelligence officer: "The present lull is temporary. Those terrorist leaders, who have the backing of Pakistan, will not let their ranks get demoralised. Again, the first rankers who were trained in sabotage and the killing of VIP's, have not come into action. When they do, there could be another upsurge in terrorist violence."

The security forces know that they cannot afford to be complacent. For one, their success has not been without a personal price to pay. Since September 1985, 28 police officials have fallen to the bullets of terrorists. They know that the war against terrorism will be long and bloody but at least they have started winning a few battles.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Shuffle Bungle

KARNATAKA'S shrewd Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde was finally trapped in his own political web last fortnight. The reshuffle of the ministry—in the pipeline since February—had been billed as an exercise that would cleanse the state Janata Party's body politic of all its ailments, take Hegde's popularity to an all-time high and give the people a government that will finally work more and talk less. Instead, the reshuffle turned out to be a comic opera that left its performers unhappy and the audience bored, and afflicted the party with an unprecedented bout of dissension. Though Hegde was compelled to put off the final reorganisation of the ministry for four months, he still claimed that the operation had been a success since the patient was still "hale and hearty". But a minister close to Hegde summed it up more aptly: "It was a Hegde-type political gimmick but without the Hegde-type finesse."

The exercise was totally off the mark, both in content and style. Instead of sacking more of his cabinet-rank ministers, many of whom are inefficient, he chose the ministers of state as the proverbial scapegoats. While only three out of 14 Cabinet ministers were dropped, 14 out of 15 junior ministers—including the efficient and the inefficient, the humble and the arrogant—were shown the door. Said one of the dropped ministers of state: "If Hegde was really interested in improving the image of his government he should have asked the senior ministers to quit. We were just implementing the directives of our seniors."

The ministers who have been dropped feel that Hegde has not followed any guideline in pruning his team from 30 to 16. In Hegde's previous council of ministers, nine of the 15 were definitely lacklustre but six of them were retained. These include Home Minister B.Rachaiah, who even his dropped colleagues say has been totally ineffective in arresting the decline in the law and order situation. Surprisingly again, though G.Basavanappa did very well with the food department, in the reshuffle his portfolio was changed to social welfare.

Even the buildup to the reshuffle was hackneyed, predictable and clumsy. First an orchestrated campaign was started by some MLA's requesting the chief minister to improve the Government's image, culminating in a memorandum signed by 91 of 139 MLA's saying cryptically: "The functioning of some ministers is not up to the expectations of the people of Karnataka." Hegde then wrote to them individually asking them to identify the 'bad' ministers and suggest replacements. But they wrote back to say that this was the prerogative of the chief minister. Hegde then held prolonged meetings with legislators and cabinet colleagues, to realise that removing only some ministers would label them "inefficient".

So, in a repeat of what happened two years ago, the entire council of ministers of 33 was persuaded to give in their resignation. Hegde-loyalist Jeevraj Alva was chosen to administer the pill to the junior ministers. They were called en masse to Alva's residence and told that they would be bearing the brunt of the coming reorganisation. Three of the ministers questioned Alva, and furiously, as to why they were being singled out, but when the realisation dawned that Alva was merely being his master's voice, they kept quiet.

Ramakrishna Hegde: off the mark

BHAWAN SINGH

RETAINED

S.R. Bommai

B. Rachaiah

J.H. Patel

Deve Gowda

Hegde then proceeded to announce that none of the ministers had been "dropped", they had all "opted out" so that they could work for the party for the November zilla parishad and mandal panchayat elections. Explained Hegde: "The cabinet has been reshuffled to draft junior ministers for party work. As for the administration, I am experimenting with a small team."

But nobody believed Hegde, and the ministers dropped were soon at pains to publicly defend themselves and their record in office. Said B.Somasekhar, ex-minister of state for horticulture: "I was not inefficient. I doubled the department's farm revenue and had prepared a unique scheme to plant coconut trees on banks of all irrigation canals and give them over to the landless. When everything was ready, I was dropped." Many of the dropped ministers also felt that they could have been far more effective in the local elections had they continued to wield ministerial power.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The ire of the junior ministers even spilled over in the lunch that Hegde hosted for all the ministers, both the dropped and the retained. When M.P.Prakash, a no-nonsense minister who had made a mark in the Agriculture Ministry, stood up to ask why only junior ministers were axed and the senior ones spared, five others joined in. Hegde clarified that the decision had been taken in consultation with the party president and other senior leaders. But H.D.Deve Gowda, irrigation minister and a senior leader of the party, denied that he had had anything to do with the wholesale pruning of junior ministers. He said Hegde had indicated to him that he would be reducing the ministry's size to 16 but added: "I didn't know that this was how it was going to be done."

Deve Gowda, in fact, has particular reason to be unhappy with the whole exercise. Hegde has long wanted to prune the lobbies of the dominant Vokkaliga and Lingayat castes and in cutting his team almost by half, he saw a godsent opportunity to carry out his plan, though only partly. In keeping with the style of the whole operation, the caste leaders, Revenue Minister S.R.Bommai—of Lingayats—and Deve Gowda, were not touched but five of the latter's men were axed. The Lingayat lobby was spared because it is hopelessly divided among various factions. Hegde tried to appear evenhanded and impartial by also dropping his own loyalists like Jeevraj Alva and P.G.R. Scindia, but Deve Gowda and his men were not convinced and are today even more bitter than ever.

The process to clip the wings of the Vokkaligas and the Lingayats began last year when Hegde demoted both Bommai and Deve Gowda from being number one and number three and replaced them with Rachaiah, a Harijan, and Rural Development Minister Abdul Nazir Sab. Bommai, lacking support in the ministry, was soon resigned to his demotion but Deve Gowda continued to privately complain that he was being isolated and accused Hegde of using Alva, another Vokkaliga, to counter his influence in the community. After this reshuffle, Deve Gowda himself offered no comment but H.L.Thimme Gowda, a confidant and former health minister, said cryptically: "If NTR goes, there is no Telugu Desam but if Hegde goes the Janata Party will still be there." Thimme Gowda declined to elaborate but it is clear that the Deve Gowda camp is not prepared to accept Hegde as the unquestioned leader of the Karnataka Janata Party.

WORSE still for Hegde, even MLA's and ministers from the backward classes were just as upset by the reshuffle. They have always felt that they have been the real victims of the Vokkaliga-Lingayat power game being fought in the Janata Party since 1983. Even when the 91 MLA's submitted their memorandum in March, ministers from the backward classes felt that they were the real targets of the petitioners, though 25 of the signatories belonged to the backward and scheduled castes.

Echoing the sentiments of the backward communities, former Education Minister, M.Raghupathy, one of the three Cabinet-rank ministers to be dropped, shot off an angry eight-page letter to Hegde accusing the Government of adopting "double standards" in implementing the party's oft-repeated election promises with regard to the backward classes and of "compromising" with the Vokkaligas and Lingayats.

In fact, the dropping of Raghupathy was a consolation to Bommai and Deve Gowda. While Raghupathy was in Europe with his film actress-turned-politician wife Arathi for a fortnight-long honeymoon, both the leaders had been pressurising Hegde to drop him. Their complaint against him was that he was "arrogant" and had pushed through some populist schemes like supplying free textbooks, uniforms and extending financial concessions to backward classes' institutions without "proper discussion" in the Cabinet.

Hegde does not concede that his government's performance is on the slide. Argued he: "If that was the case, the recent Congress(I) agitation would not have flopped and the Janata Party would not have won all the four council seats in the elections." That may be so, but he still faces major problems with his ministry and partymen. To start with, how to improve the performance of his ministry now that he is saddled with many lacklustre senior ministers and deprived of many of the efficient junior ministers.

He is also likely to run into trouble in distributing party work among the ministers who have been dropped. Raghupathy has already hinted that unless he is given some "responsible" assignment, he will do something that could greatly embarrass Hegde. Hegde might not face any threat of being toppled by the Congress (I) but trouble is in store within the party. Notwithstanding the comfortable majority his government enjoys in the Assembly, Hegde will have to continue to walk the tightrope. But if he does not show a greater finesse when he next reorganises his ministry, he could slip and fall.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

NEW FACES

Krishna Reddy

B.P. Anwari

H.T. Krishnappa

DROPPED

M. Raghupathy

Jeevraj Alva

M.P. Prakash

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDONET, India's first commercial multi-city information network has gone on line with IBM 4361 computers at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras. ONGC, Geological Survey of India, Hi-Tech Consultants, SAIL and Bangalore Development Authority, to mention just a few, are already its subscribers and reaping its benefits.

Isn't it time you plugged into it too?

INDONET. It's not only going to change the way people think about computers and what can be done with them, it's going to change the way you think about your company and the way it operates. It's going to tone up and bring far greater efficiency to every aspect of your operations. Improve cash flow, raise productivity, performance and profits by giving you continuous, up-to-date and accurate information and far greater control over your company's operations.

What does INDONET offer you?

INDONET gives you state-of-the-art computing power, the latest IBM (and non-IBM) operating software and a wide variety of sophisticated application packages together with a multi-city information network. All of them at a reasonable price.

Apart from the IBM 4361s at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, INDONET has a Robotron 1055 system at Hyderabad and a PDP 11/44 at Delhi. Cluster controllers also link Pune, Ahmedabad and Bangalore to the network.

How can you use INDONET?

Because INDONET is a network, you can access any of INDONET's computers — no matter where they are located — simply through a terminal from your office or through any system you are currently using. A dedicated telecommunication line will link your terminal to the network. Of course, if you prefer, you can come to any of CMC's computer centres and use the computers directly.

Does INDONET's software match its contemporary hardware?

While INDONET offers a wide range of standard inventory and other application packages, its major strengths are in specialized software for Management Information Systems (MIS) and Decision Support Systems (DSS). Designed as invaluable aids to complex decision making, control and problem solving, what these packages do is to allow you to see problems as well as solutions from different perspectives by offering you alternate scenarios. And the truly marvellous thing about INDONET is that any of its packages can be used from anywhere in the network.

INDONET's utilities and application software include:

* VM/CMS: operating system which allows several users to use real time machine resources simultaneously.
* CICS: powerful transaction processing system which runs under DOS/VSE.
* DL/1: hierarchical data base management package.
* SQL: relational data base management package.
* PROJACS: project analysis and control system for planning new projects, resource allocation, PERT/CPM.
* MPSX: mathematical programming system for production and capital investment planning, product mix decisions, etc.
* INDO GKS: Graphical Kernel System for 2-D and 3-D computer graphics.

What kind of users stand to gain from INDONET?

* Any company which needs state-of-the-art computing facilities with the latest IBM software can get these through INDONET without having to make large capital investments.
* Any organisation with multi-city operations. For instance, consumer perishable, durable and heavy industries having national distribution systems and factories and offices in different parts of the country. Service industries like transportation and insurance. Financial institutions like banks and chit funds. Marketing organisations. Mining industries.
* One other industry that will find INDONET a boon is the software industry. Software export houses can now work on the latest IBM systems and design software for the largest software market in the world — IBM and IBM-compatible system users. CMC offers a special 10% discount on all software export work done on INDONET.

Come over to CMC and get a first hand feel of what INDONET can do for you. Once you are hooked on to INDONET you will wonder how your company ever managed without it.

INDONET. Get hooked on it.

For further information, please contact the Divisional Manager (Systems) at:

CMC Limited
(A Government of India Enterprise)

F-14, Maker Towers, Cuffe Parade, Bombay-400 005. Phone 219186

28, Camac Street, Calcutta-700 016. Phone 432444

A-5, Ring Road, NDSE Part I, New Delhi-110 049. Phone 618189

Seethakathi Chambers, 688 Anna Salai, Madras-600 006. Phone 812385

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MLS:CMC:143:86 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GURBRINDER BRAR

Capital Target

ON THE morning of July 5, newspaper headlines gave residents of the capital something to worry about. In bold, screaming type, the dailies announced that Sikh terrorists had attacked the Lodhi Estate house of Gurbrinder Kaur Brar, Punjab Congress(I) veteran and the leader of the Opposition in the state Assembly, killing one of her guards and wounding another. Among the impressive list of VIP's to have visited her house was Lt-Governor H.L. Kapur who stated that the attack had finally confirmed recent fears that several Punjab extremists had entered the capital. He added for effect: "This is the terrorists' way of showing their presence. They may not have been after any particular target."

A couple of days later there were plenty of red faces in the Union territory administration and in the police headquarters where the incident was being discussed in hushed tones. But there was also a feeling of relief that Punjab extremists were not behind the outrage. Investigation had revealed the startling fact that Mukhtiar Singh, more an odd-job man than a guard at Mrs Brar's house had indeed been shot by none else than Inder Pal Singh her Delhi Armed Police gunman. Even more startling was the discovery that the bullet lodged in Inder Pal Singh's thigh had been fired from his own pistol. There was no evidence of any other bullets having been fired. No footprints were picked up from the loose soil in the backyard of the house where the incident had taken place. And police dogs confirmed that no outsider had come in even from the direction of the next bungalow, belonging to Congress(I) MP Murli Deora along which the fence was broken.

All this adds up to a curious picture. Two guards, one dead and one wounded, found lying barely three paces away from each other in a huge blotch of blood. Five empty bullet shells—each one confirmed by ballistics experts to be from Inder Pal's Belgian-made Fabrique Nationale 9 mm automatic--recovered from the spot. Three bullet holes in a wall and one that pierced the air-conditioner in the Premier Padmini car parked next to the wall. It was obvious that all the bullets had been fired from the same pistol. But who had fired these and why?

RAMINDER SINGH

MOHAMMED AKBAR Patriot

Gurbrinder Brar (top); and policemen looking for clues

Inder Pal Singh, recovering in a ward of the Ram Manohar Lohia hospital after surgery still sticks to his initial version that, while on a patrol in the dark kitchen-garden area in the backyard he saw three intruders, two Sikhs and one clean-shaven who began to fire at him. He took position and fired back and does not remember anything else. Police officers, however, have no faith in his version and are working along two theories on the basic presumption that his own injury is self-inflicted. "The bullet has hit his inner thigh and travelled downwards taking a vertical course," says B.K. Gupta, deputy commissioner of police, New Delhi, implying that only he himself could have fired at his leg in that fashion. Besides, he points out there is very heavy tattooing round the bullet's entry point confirming that it had been fired at point-blank range.

The first theory is that Mukhtiar Singh, who had returned after a month's leave on that very day, tried to surprise Inder Pal by perhaps thumping him on the back or shouting at him from behind while he was patrolling the dark area next to the servants' quarters where Mukhtiar lived. "It really could have been a sick joke. Our gunmen are trained and instructed to fire back at the first sign of danger which is what Inder Pal could have done in such a situation," says Gautam Kaul, additional commissioner of police incharge of VIP security in the capital. According to this theory, on realising his mistake Inder Pal may have shot himself in the thigh and begun shouting that the extremists had come. At the same time he may have shot two more bullets in the wall to confuse the investigators. Mrs Brar and her family members confirm that they first heard the two shots and then, after a few seconds, three more, before they all left their dinner on the table and locked themselves inside one of the bedrooms.

Yet, it is not being dismissed as an accident. The police are investigating into the antecedents of both the guards to see if they had any enmity and the possibility that Mukhtiar Singh could have been victim of premeditated murder is not being ruled out. "For the moment we are keeping our minds open and waiting for all the forensic reports," says DCP Gupta.

In any case the weird discoveries in the case will set at rest the fears that Punjab extremists were prowling in Delhi openly challenging sentries in the most highly protected areas. Yet the incident underlines an equally worrying situation: there are too many guns in the hands that are trigger-happy.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ABU DHABI • AMMAN • ATHENS • BAHRAIN • BANGKOK • BOMBAY • CAIRO • COLOMBO • DELHI • DHAHRAN • DHAKA • DOHA • DUBAI • FRANKFURT • HONG KONG
ISTANBUL • JEDDAH • KARACHI • KHARTOUM • KUWAIT • LARNACA • LONDON • MANILA • MUSCAT • PARIS • RAS AL KHAIMAH • RIYADH • SALALAH • SANAA • SHARJAH • TUNIS

EVERY 6 MINUTES, A GOLDEN FALCON REMINDS THE WORLD.

That's how often one of Gulf Air's aircraft takes off or lands, somewhere within our ever widening International network.

Our Golden Falcons are carrying a reputation for quality, service and punctuality further and further afield.

That's why more and more business travellers choose Gulf Air as their number one airline.

They're getting to know our wide choice of International cuisine. Honoured by 'La Chaine des Rôtisseurs'.

From complimentary refreshments (served throughout Europe-Gulf flights) to our wide, comfortable seats, Gulf Air offers executive passengers the sort of hospitality they never forget.

It makes a world of difference.

طيران الخليج
GULF AIR
GOLDEN FALCON SERVICE

ONCE FLOWN. NEVER FORGOTTEN.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT YOUR TRAVEL AGENT OR GULF AIR, BOMBAY: PHONE: 2021777 /2021441 /2021626 /2026727.
DELHI: PHONE: 312914 /344293. MADRAS: PHONE: 87872 /87650.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE WELL WISHER

That's IPCL – caring for the environment, the economy and the people. Aiding industrial progress, at the same time, preserving the ecology and improving aesthetics. A Rs. 25 crore facility for round the clock monitoring of the environment and pollution control. A mini forest. An experimental farm using treated waste water. A living museum of trees. A lake cum-bird-sanctuary. Symbolic of our concern for preserving harmony in nature. Marble sculptures, murals and paintings by young artists – an effort at improving aesthetics. All within close vicinity of our manufacturing complex.

An involvement in modernising agricultural practices and promoting afforestation programmes through the use of plastics in water management, drip irrigation, mulching, nursery bags and food produce packaging.

That's not all. A special concern for small customers. Providing direct and indirect employment for 500,000 and reaching out to the farthest corners of the country, with raw materials for industry at uniform prices.

Caring for employees and our neighbourhood. An investment of Rs. 25 crores in safety measures a modern disaster management plan and continuous safety audit.

A harmonious work environment for employees. The results are evident – seventeen years of no production loss due to industrial unrest.

All part of being a Well Wisher.

Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Limited. (A Government of India Undertaking)
P.O. Petrochemicals 391 346. Dist. Vadodara.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Shilpi IPCL 2/88

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SANDTEX MATT*

The Shell Of Protection

Specially created for exteriors, SANDTEX MATT*'s UNIQUE formulation of the finest pigments and special additives, makes it the LONGEST lasting decorative finish in India.

In a wide range of 30 exquisite colours, Sandtex Matt* is available in 3 easy to use sizes of 1 litre, 4 litres and 20 litres.

* Manufactured under licence from Blue Circle Industries Ltd. U.K.

Manufactured by:
Snowcem India Ltd.
A Killick Subsidiary

Sole Selling Agents
KILLICK NIXON LTD.,
Bombay, Ahmedabad Bangalore, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi, Secunderabad, Cochin, Jaipur, Kanpur, Gauhati, Indore, Kota, Mangalore, Patna, Pune, Thane & Visakhapatnam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Land Plot

NORMALLY, the suspension of an official as junior as an assistant registrar of cooperative societies would have passed unnoticed. But last month's suspension of Suresh Charan by Rajasthan Cooperative Minister Ram Deo Singh, aroused public ire in Jodhpur, the state's second largest city. Charan had incurred Singh's wrath as 24 hours before his suspension, he had been responsible for suspending the executive members of a Jodhpur Cooperative society.

And Singh's compulsions were evident: the Naveen Griha Nirman Sahakari Samiti, the cooperative society which Charan had tried to discipline, had laid claims to 1.80 lakh square yards of prime land in the city whose market value today would be over Rs 4 crore. Ostensibly formed to provide houses to scheduled castes and tribes, plots have instead been allotted to a sitting legislator, a former minister, doctors, advocates, lecturers, relatives of an IAS officer and a judicial officer. Within days of Charan's suspension, Singh stayed his order suspending the executive committee although the society's office-bearers have been charged with offences ranging from violating its own by-laws to fraud and forgery.

The land in question was sold in November 1971 by a company acting on behalf of the former ruler of Jodhpur, Gaj Singh, to Jai Marwar Co Pvt Ltd, for a mere Rs 9.60 lakh. During the Emergency, the Government tried to take possession of the land as its records showed that it had been government-owned agricultural land since 1882. Jai Marwar won a favourable decision in the lower court. The state Government appealed to the high court, where the matter still rests.

When the Urban Land (Ceiling and Regulation) Act came into force in 1976 restricting land holdings in towns—in Jodhpur the maximum permissible limit was 1,500 square metres—Jai Marwar sought exemption from the new act on the plea that the land was intended for housing the poor.

In May 1981, five years after the act had come into force, the Naveen Griha Nirman Sahakari Samiti, registered as a cooperative society in 1970, while filing its returns claimed that the disputed land had been bought by the samiti from Jai Marwar as early as October 1974. This was an incredible claim, particularly as it came from a cooperative society which, like several others across the state, had seemed defunct for a decade. A number of peculiar facts soon emerged:

► The stamp paper with the sale deed was in the name of Naveen Rai Dangi, a director of the State Bank of Bikaner and Jaipur. The stamp paper is bought by the buyer or seller. Dangi was neither.

► In 1979, Jai Marwar was writing to the authorities as if it still owned the land.

Charan had incurred Singh's wrath because he had himself suspended the executive members of a cooperative society in Jodhpur.

Ram Deo Singh

Suresh Charan

The disputed land claimed by the samiti

► Though the samiti claimed to have bought the land for Rs 24.45 lakh, its bank balance over the years has been a few hundred rupees.

When the Government decided to get the matter reviewed by a senior officer, the samiti got a court order directing that the sale deed of the land should be registered in its name but the status quo should be maintained with regard to everything else. For the samiti, however, this was open sesame and it soon started collecting money from buyers of plots. Soon, complaints started flooding the Cooperative Department.

Charan, who had come to Jodhpur in September 1985, filed a police complaint on March 11, 1986 against the directors of Jai Marwar Co, Naveen Dangi and the president of the samiti, and Kundanmal Jain, a businessman, accusing them of fraud and forgery. In May, he issued notices indicating his intention to dissolve 159 of Jodhpur's 1,400 cooperatives for not submitting their accounts for several years. This upset many local interests. On June 11, 1986, Charan issued an order dismissing the executive committee of the Samiti and appointing a government administrator. Charan was suspended because the state Government suddenly found substance in a charge of corruption levied five months earlier against Charan.

Singh claims the suspension's timing is a mere coincidence. He also says his fiat staying Charan's order was in response to an affidavit filed by the executive committee of the samiti that it had received no warning from Charan before it was suspended. Yet Singh also admitted that he had not even read Charan's order before he issued his diktat! If the minister had not been in such a rush to wrong a right—he issued the order personally—he would have found that Charan had issued notices to the samiti on March 24 and April 28.

The cooperative sector in the state is already in disrepute because of the scandals that keep surfacing from time to time. And the Charan case is just one more prime example of the kind of wrong-doing that brings no credit to Ram Deo Singh or his department. But the stormy reaction to the Charan case does indicate that this time at least, Chief Minister Harideo Joshi will have to intervene—if he has any concern for the reputation of his Government.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Jodhpur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Let's face it. This is the re behind most of today's te

Almost anyone can enter the television market today.

All you have to do is take a trip down to the Far East. Strike a deal with a TV kit manufacturer — and you're in business.

The business of 'screwdriver technology'.

Think about it.

Would you put your money on a TV set that has been screwed together by people who know very little about what they're putting together?

Or, would you rather put your trust in a TV that has been designed and perfected in India for Indian conditions? A TV set which until date is owned by over 3 lakh families in India?

A TV set like EC-TV.

EC-TV is not just another TV set.

Over the last 15 years, ECIL, the people who pioneered television technology in India, have perfected a range of Colour and Black-and-White TVs which will give you years and years of trouble-free service.

Every part, every circuit, every component is made to match — to form a fully integrated marvel in electronic technology.

So you get pictures that are perfect.

Sound that is superb.

And performance that will never let you down.

What's more, every EC-TV is backed by the most efficient and wide service network in the country.

30 exclusive EC-TV centres.
400 dedicated dealers.

So service is just a simple phone call away.

To find out more of what we have to offer, visit your EC-TV dealer.

You'll be happy to discover that EC-TV can — and will deliver.

सत्य ECtv Showrooms: Ahmedabad Ph: 76304. Bangalore Ph: 258620, 28192, 70649. Bombay Ph: 4302734, 4300034. Calcutta Ph: 459669, 459357. Nagpur Ph: 45756. New Delhi Ph: 527360, 771050. Panipat. Pune Ph: 32588, 33062. Raipur Ph: 24772. Vijaywada Ph: 64629.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

real technology televisions.

ECtv

It's what every TV tries to be.

Chandigarh Ph: 31113. Hyderabad Ph: 232685, 233248. Indore Ph: 36695. Jaipur Ph: 69604, Kanpur Ph: 248169. Lucknow Ph: 42683, 45906. Madras Ph: 451721, 450749.

Karishma EC 1 2337

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

E X C E L L E N C E

THE HALLMARK

Three companies united by a common committment to EXCELLENCE
have now pooled their experience and resources to forge a stronger, more dynamic company.

Shree Digvijaya Woollen Mills Ltd.

The Oriental Carpet Manufacturers (I) Ltd.

Universal Electrics Ltd.

have merged and are now known by their new name which embodies their corporate philosophy of constantly striving for EXCELLENCE
in everything they do.

V·X·L
INDIA LTD.

WE EXCEL

DIGJAM UE OCM

AJAX VXL C 86-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Pranab's Ploy

FOR THE first time in nearly three decades in politics, West Bengal's politically savvy populace is giving the 51-year-old Pranab Mukherjee a hearing. Reviled mercilessly by his political opponents as the man who could not win even a municipal election, the diminutive former No. 2 in Mrs Gandhi's cabinet has been drawing increasingly larger and appreciative audiences at the 107 meetings he has addressed in 10 districts of the state after his return to a rousing welcome at Howrah Station in early May.

Travelling in a Maruti van, followed by a jeep-load of supporters, Mukherjee has been preaching the gospel that the end of the Congress(I) is near and single-mindedly pursuing his two immediate objectives: explaining the reasons for his expulsion and consolidating his support among the state's 35 per cent committed Congress voters.

Shrewdly, he does not pose the issue as one affecting him personally. "The destruction of the Congress (I) is a matter of concern for the entire country," he declared to crowds huddled in a wet field in Barasat town last fortnight. And added: "I supported Indira for the ideals she stood for but Rajiv Gandhi threw me out because I challenged his decisions to reverse Mrs Gandhi's policies, because I disagreed with his style of functioning which is destroying the Congress (I)." Next month Mukherjee plans to cover all the state's 16 districts—making him the most widely travelled politician in West Bengal's recent history.

Mukherjee's assault on the Congress(I) received an unexpected boost last month when Sisir Bose, Congress(I) MLA and nephew of Netaji Subhash Chandra Bose, roundly lambasted the party and declared his open support for Mukherjee. Along with Ananda Mohan Biswas and Samar Mukherjee—who have always been with the expelled leader—three out of the Congress(I)'s 54 MLA's are now with Mukherjee. "But," claimed Bose, "50 per cent of the party machinery—which means district office-bearers and workers—is already with us. Soon 75 per cent will be in our control. And the remaining 25 per cent we do not want." The proposed mid-August convention of state-level Congress workers will be the first test of Bose's boastful claim.

JAYANTA SHAW

Mukherjee has been preaching the gospel that the end of the Congress(I) is near and is consolidating his support among the state's 35 per cent committed Congress voters.

Bose had first met Mukherjee in early May but the two did not get together till, in response to newsmen's queries about the reason for the party's debacle in the municipal elections last month, Bose stunned his partymen by blaming Rajiv Gandhi's leadership and policies for it. Said Bose: "Rajiv Gandhi's manner of functioning has become disastrous for the party organisation as the state-level leadership is not allowed any initiative in any manner." State party chief P.R. Das Munshi scurried to Bose to confirm if he had been rightly quoted. After Bose accepted responsibility for the statements, it was decided that Munshi would acquaint the high command with Bose's criticism and the two would meet again.

But a couple of days later when Das Munshi sent him a stiff letter virtually amounting to a show-cause notice, an enraged Bose sent back an even stiffer letter reiterating his right to freely criticise the party since it was "being run arbitrarily and undemocratically". Further, said Bose, Das Munshi, as an "undemocratically appointed ad hoc president of a PCC" had no right to question him. Later Bose agreed to join Mukherjee's campaign against the party's Central leadership.

In Delhi later, to meet leaders of opposition parties, Bose maintained that his outburst was not really sudden. He had said much the same thing at a stormy meeting of the Congress(I) Legislature Party in April where more than 35 MLA's had threatened to resign from the party in protest against the arbitrary functioning of Das Munshi. His impatience at the "feudal" manner in which the party was being run was building up—letters to Rajiv Gandhi were unanswered, Arjun Singh was inaccessible—and the defeat in the municipal elections came as the last straw. Now, Bose is going the whole hog with Mukherjee and says contemptuously: "What is known as the Rajiv Congress will soon become irrelevant."

The state party leadership, stupefied at the turn of events, could not even resolve to expel Bose or the other two MLA's who were openly working for

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Switch to safety!

FET.

India's only electrical tubing tailor made for electrical applications.

Major electricity boards, NTPC and large industrial establishments like Genelec, Bajaj, Philips, Best & Crompton have already switched over to FET.

FET is a light weight, high safety flo coat electrical tubing specially manufactured by the world famous Flo Coat Process, for power distribution in electrical installations, multi-storeyed buildings, hotels, factories and houses.

Superior corrosion resistance
FET is a triple coated flo coat tube with continuous in-line hot dip galvanising and chromate and polymer coatings giving a triple barrier against corrosion.
The interior (I.D.) is given a specially formulated proprietary coating to make wire pulling easier.

Prevents short circuiting
ISO Metric parallel threaded profiles in FET offer efficient electrical continuity.
FET conforms to short circuit test, arc test and flame propagation test, etc.

Greater durability and versatility
The Flo Coat Process enhances tube strength retaining the ductility to facilitate easier manipulation.

The complete package
FET comes with matching galvanised fittings such as junction boxes, inspection elbows, bends and tees, etc. All fittings conform to IS 2667, BS 4568 Part II.

World renowned back-up
The Flo Coat Process was developed and patented world wide by Allied Tube and Conduit Corporation, USA. Apart from a company in Japan, Nagarjuna Coated Tubes is the only other company in Asia to win their prestigious collaboration.

World standards in quality and performance
FET conforms to National and International standards:
The Rural Electrification Code
IS 9537 Part I & Part II
BS 4568 Part I
IEC 614
UL — Underwriter's Laboratory — 1242
National Electric Code — USA
With credentials like that it is easy to see why MSEB, APSEB, MPEB, OSEB, GEB, NTPC and others consider FET ideal for applications like electrical distribution, electrical tubing, service connection brackets, street light fittings, AB switch handles, etc.
And here's some more reassuring news: For all its unique advantages, FET works out far more economical too!

Head Office:
41 Nagarjuna Hills, Panjagutta, Hyderabad 500 482
Tel: 223524/220147

Regional Offices:

Bangalore	: 578420/563832
Bombay	: 2023015/2020726
Calcutta	: 445402/442887
Madras	: 415888
New Delhi	: 604773

NCT adds life to metals

Nagarjuna Coated Tubes Limited

Contact your dealer or write to us directly.

Sista's/NCT/101/R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mukherjee. Instead, Das Munshi announced that he would tour the districts to clear the "confusion" among partymen caused by Mukherjee's "deliberate lies". Scoffing at Mukherjee's claims of increasing support, Das Munshi said: "Even if he was still the No. 2 man in the Union Government he cannot become an alternative to the Congress(I) in his own district of Birbhum." Alleged PCC(I) Executive Member Saugata Roy: "Pranab is working for the CPI(M). The Marxists are packing his meeting with their cadre."

Though there was no direct evidence to support Roy's charge, Mukherjee's diatribes have certainly gone to the CPI(M)'s advantage. The CPI(M), on its part, has aided Mukherjee's credibility by claiming that the rank and file of the Congress are already with Mukherjee and "if the process goes unchecked the WBPCC(I) and its followers will be in a minority within a short while." This kind of favourable assessment for somebody who was anathema for the Marxists till recently, along with the conspicuous absence of criticism of the Left Front in Mukherjee's speeches, have lent credibility to Roy's charge.

Though plans for a new party are only expected to crystallise after the proposed convention of dissident Congressmen in September, Bose concedes that they are working with the objective of capturing the Congress vote in the next assembly elections, tentatively scheduled for February next. Says Bose: "Our intention is to create a base in West Bengal and then launch an all-India party with a leftist bias." Mukherjee knows that if he cannot become the second political force in Bengal he has "no chance" and like the Bangla Congress, where he started his career, will fade into oblivion.

The odds, according to political pundits, are against Mukherjee and Bose. Explains the West Bengal Socialist Party Chief Biman Mitra: "Pranab babu is doomed. His ideology is no different from the Congress(I) and he will lose out to Rajiv Gandhi in the politics of benefits." Mukherjee himself does not expect spectacular returns in the immediate future, as his sights are on the Centre. "There is a possibility of a mass exodus from the Congress (I) in mid-1988 and till then Rajiv will keep losing elections and whatever mass support he has." For the moment, he is content to jog along. "After all, I don't consider this a 100-metre race but a marathon," he says.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE with bureau reports

K.M. KISHAN

Pipariya accused: caste rivalries

BIHAR

Letter Bombs

BIHAR'S politicians have more skeletons in their cupboards than most others and last month, skeletons came tumbling out of several unexpected cupboards. It all started with the disclosure that state Lok Dal strongman Karpoori Thakur had written to Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey asking for withdrawal of cases against the perpetrators of the ghastly 1984 Pipariya massacre. Barely had the consequent ripples abated, when it was revealed that the state CPI leader Sunil Mukherjee had also written a similar letter to Dubey.

Suspicion that an orchestrated campaign was afoot was confirmed when Congress(I) MP D.P. Yadav sent a memorandum to Dubey with the same demand. Nine children, and two others, mostly Yadavs, were killed in Pipariya, Munger district, in January 1984.

Thakur's letter of April 26 quickly became the focal point of the controversy because he has cultivated the backward castes and was in the forefront of the campaign to demand speedy trial of the 24 accused. All of them, now serving life terms in Munger jail, are awaiting the outcome of their appeals in the Patna High Court.

Ram Bilas Paswan, party general secretary and a committed opponent of Thakur who was denied a Rajya Sabha ticket by him, said: "Such a move (to withdraw the cases) will bring back jungle raj." And P.K.Sinha, former state general secretary, commented sarcastically: "The same Thakur who found landlord's terror prevailing on April 2 now finds peace and harmony."

"Only those who are enemies of peace and friendship amongst different communities can oppose the withdrawal of the criminal cases."

KARPOORI THAKUR

Waking up to his predicament, Thakur explained that it was up to the Government to decide on the merits of his letter. Added Thakur: "Only those who are enemies of peace and friendship amongst different communities can oppose the withdrawal of the criminal cases born out of caste rivalries."

Sunil Mukherjee's letter of May 5, claimed that 25 people belonging to the backward Yadavas, Dhanuk and Bind castes had been murdered over the past five years and argued that even the 200,000 people of the diara (land near the rivers) around Pipariya want the legal proceedings to end.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thakur and Mukherjee also pointed out that socialist leader Sewak Yadav had convened a meeting where the people had pledged to fight caste tensions. Enclosing a memorandum purported to have been signed by 400 villagers of Pipariya seeking withdrawal of the cases, Mukherjee added: "You (Dubey) should take personal interest to get the case withdrawn. If not withdrawn, caste tensions will escalate."

While Dubey maintained a mysterious silence, Lok Dal leader and Sarvodaya worker Jabir Hussain led a team to Pipariya to find out the truth.

The real reason, the team discovered, for the letters was the opposition leaders' desire to woo the powerful Bhumihar landlords in the area: even the 2,500 bighas mentioned in Mukherjee's letter mostly belongs to Bhumihars. The Bhumihars, alarmed by the growing prosperity and increasing political influence of the backward castes, have long been playing one backward caste against another. Though the main accused in the Pipariya carnage is a Dhanuk—a backward caste—the police believe that he had been instigated by the Bhumihars.

After the law caught up with the murderers, Bhumihar leaders have been promising the area's backwards that they would get the cases withdrawn if they voted for their candidates. Gradually, these leaders brought other caste leaders around and finally in April chalked out a plan to mount pressure on Dubey from all sides. The letters followed, proving yet again that in Bihar the politician-criminal nexus is all-pervading. The perpetrators of the Pipariya carnage are unlikely to gain, but for Thakur and Mukherjee the letters will long be a source of embarrassment.

—FARZAND AHMED

LAW

Just Terms

WHILE a bizarre political controversy was going on to save the killers of the innocent Pipariya victims, the law took its own course in the macabre Parasbigha case in which 13 Harijans and backward caste people were shot dead or burnt alive by an armed mob on the night of February 6, 1980.

Last fortnight, a division bench of the Patna High Court comprising Justices P.S.Sahay and R.N.Prasad confirmed the life sentences passed on the four accused and enhanced the punishment of 33 others from 10 years' rigorous imprisonment to life. Describing it as a unique case in which "a minister, MLA's, a member of the Board of Revenue and eminent doctors" appeared on behalf of the defence, the judges observed: "It is unfortunate that after so many years of independence we have not been able to get rid of class hatred and protection could not be given to persons belonging to weaker sections of the society, in this case, at a place just 50 km from the capital town of Patna."

Parasbigha, and now the controversial Pipariya, are not the only ghastly spots in the blood-stained map of Bihar. Since May 1977, the state has witnessed a series of mass killings of the poor. The list is unending: Belchi, Dharampura, Bishrampur, Chainpur, Kaila, Pipariya, and Parasbigha. Though in many cases people with enormous political clout were involved, in none of them had politicians of different hues come out in the open to save the accused as they did in the Parasbigha case. Fortunately, however, justice if delayed in some cases was never denied. Some examples:

► Belchi(Patna district): A mob of backward class landlords raided the village on May 27, 1977, and burnt alive 11 landless including eight Harijans. Three years later, the additional sessions judge of Patna sentenced two of the accused to death and 15 others to life imprisonment. The guilty went in appeal to the high court where the sentences were confirmed except in respect of two accused whose appeal against life terms was allowed.

Mrs Gandhi in Belchi after the killings

► Bishrampur (Rohtas district)): A Harijan village was attacked and set ablaze by a mob of over 500 people on March 25, 1978. Three Harijans were killed. Justice came three years later when 27 of the 31 accused were sentenced to life imprisonment.

► Kaila (Nalanda): Landlords and their henchmen descended on this Harijan village on December 9, 1978, and killed three of its inhabitants. Two years later, three accused were sentenced to life imprisonment and eight others were awarded various terms of rigorous imprisonment.

► Pipra (Patna): On February 25, 1980, villagers from six neighbouring villages surrounded this Harijan settlement. They resorted to indiscriminate firing, killing fourteen persons including six children. A case was registered against 39 named and 300 unknown persons and a month later 62 of the accused were charge-sheeted. A year later 50 accused were awarded life terms.

The then Mishra government had claimed that the cases were settled so expeditiously due to fortnightly monitoring of the trial by senior officials. Says Mishra: "All this had served notice on potential trouble-makers that retribution can be quick in the face of depredations against the weaker sections of society." But the controversial demand by politicians to get the Pipariya case withdrawn has underlined the growing power of the criminal element in Bihar.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Ar Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We could talk about our consultancy services for 30 national and

But we would ra about our contribution to Railway ca

India Tourism Development Corporation

AKSHARA/ITDC-43-D

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

rather talk to improving catering.

The Management Services Division of Ashok provides a unique example of public sector expertise being used in private and public sector projects alike.

Hyderabad, Goa, Kolhapur, Ranchi, Bhopal, Guwahati, Pondicherry... the list of our hotel project locations extends beyond the borders of our country to Iraq, Kuwait and Nepal. Not surprising, considering our years of experience in hoteliering and tourism.

But whatever our attainment in this field, we accord a special pride of place to something as fundamental as helping the Railways improve their catering service.

A modern base kitchen in Delhi to produce 5000 meals per day under stringent hygienic conditions. Nutritious and standardised menu. Food packed in sealed casseroles, stored in special pantry vans attached to the trains. Utmost care taken to ensure that food remains fresh and untouched from the moment it is cooked to the moment it is served.

Destinations	22
Hotels	23
Beach Resorts	2
Travellers Lodges	3
Forest Lodge	1

The Ashok Group

HOTELS • TRAVEL SERVICES • DUTY FREE SHOPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In life, the most beautiful things are a bit more expensive.

It's simply one of life's truths, that things of beauty are made that much more painstakingly.

Like Nuware tableware. Intricate, exquisite designs. From the purest ingredients. That don't break easily, stain, scratch or peel off.

We've even tied up with New Ornapress AG, Switzerland — the tableware people. To make sure you get the finest tableware available.

So make Nuware a part of your world. To greet your special guests. Or as an elegant gift. And then just sit back and hear them say:
"Gracious! You've got style."

Send for our detailed information leaflet.

NUWARE

Melamine Tableware

14 Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi 110 065.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Wall of Suspicion

WHEN communal violence flared once again in Ahmedabad last fortnight leaving 18 dead and over 140 injured in a short and deadly span of 24 hours, nobody was really surprised. Tension was conspicuously present even when the annual Rath Yatra had set off on July 9. The busy streets of Relief Road and Gandhi Road, the virtual lifelines of the city, through which the procession was to pass, were less crowded than usual as most people were anticipating trouble. The administration had requisitioned 10 companies of the State Reserve Police (SRP) to patrol various sensitive areas of the city.

But communal violence erupted suddenly in Shahpur, Dariapur and Kalupur—all sensitive localities within the walled city. After setting off from the Jagannath temple in the morning, the Rath Yatra procession had swelled to over a lakh of people and as it wound its way through Muslim-majority localities, some pro-Hindu slogans were voiced. When the procession was stoned by some miscreants at Jordan Road, hell broke loose. Shops were looted and burnt, vehicles were set on fire and damaged and over 50 people were stabbed in a matter of minutes.

Curfew was immediately imposed in the trouble-torn areas and within a span of four hours the police fired 18 rounds and 85 teargas cannisters but with little effect. Mobs gathered at places where there was no curfew and went around setting fire to kiosks, shops and vehicles. Late in the night the entire 5 km stretch from Gandhi Road to Kalupur was dotted with blazing objects.

Fears that a lot of illegal arms had been smuggled into Ahmedabad by communal elements were confirmed when gunshots rang out from several quarters. Their target was the security forces. One home guard was killed while seven others were admitted to hospital with bullet injuries.

Ahmedabad has seen several major communal disturbances since the holocaust of 1969 but never has the situation been as tense as it is now. In the last 12 months, some 170 people have been killed in 10 communal incidents. Obviously, the wounds inflicted by the five-month-long agitation last year, which started off as an expression of anger against the backward castes and turned communal later, have yet not healed.

Knowing this, police officials went around Muslim localities before the Rath Yatra, organising meetings between community leaders and cajoling Muslims to participate in the procession. But the wall of suspicion between the two communities proved insurmountable. Many irate Muslim youth asked policemen why the Government was allowing the Rath Yatra to take the same route as last year despite the violence that had erupted, taking seven lives.

The police were caught in a dilemma. If they changed the route it would amount to admitting that the Government did not trust the minority community and was incapable of tackling any law and order contingency. But what finally decided the issue in favour of the original route was the realisation that they could well fail in persuading the organisers of the procession to change it. Last year they had banned the procession and imposed a curfew and yet the procession had come out. Lamented Narayanlal Kalma, assistant commissioner of police: "We tried to do our best but despite all our attempts at a human level, a communal riot broke out."

The latest flare-up has only increased the bitterness between the communities. Muslims allege that processionists shouted abusing slogans while V.A.Vanikar, vice-president of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad, maintains that the sudden stoning of the procession and the precise way the violence erupted in several parts of the city showed that the attack was pre-planned.

In this atmosphere of growing hatred, housewife Jayanti Gadadhah reflects the pain shared by the declining number of secularists in the city when she says: "It scares me to admit that hatred cannot be wiped out in the erstwhile amiable Ahmedabadi." Even as Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary tried to contain the violence by airlifting 12 CRPF companies from Delhi, he was yet to show that he has any cure for the city's worsening communal malaise.

—RAMESH MENON

Riot-torn Dariapur: communal divide

Ahmedabad has seen several major communal disturbances since the holocaust of 1969 but never has the situation been as tense as it is now.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

M.G. RAMACHANDRAN

The Glitter is Gone

EVER since he stormed into power 10 years ago, M.G. Ramachandran, the dark-glassed and fur-capped chief minister of Tamil Nadu, has been the most enduring symbol of the state's hero-worshipping and cinema-crazy populace. But the charisma now seems to be fading and the frenzy usually associated with MGR-sponsored extravaganzas missing. Factionalism and dissension are raising their ugly head within the party and ominous signals of MGR losing his grip over the state's political destiny have started manifesting themselves. Last fortnight MGR's reign entered a record tenth year, but much of the gilt was missing from the celebrations. Senior Correspondent S.H. VENKATRAMANI with Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA report:

CELLULOID glitter doesn't last long in the more realistic world of politics. This point was driven home quite forcefully last fortnight in Tamil Nadu even as Chief Minister Maruthur Gopala Ramachandran (Menon) entered his 10th year in power, setting a record in the political history of the state.

As a motley crowd of AIADMK activists carrying the party's red, white and black flags assembled at Anna Nagar in north-west Madras for a cycle rally to mark the onset of year-long celebrations, something seemed amiss. The size and trappings of a typical AIADMK show of strength were all there, but the hoopla and frenzy usually associated with MGR-sponsored shows was conspicuous by its absence. And later, when 5,000 cyclists peddled through the arterial Mount Road, there were neither attempts at self-immolation nor crowds cheering the AIADMK activists from the roof-tops.

Normally, the dark-glassed and fur-capped puratchi thalaivar (revolutionary hero) would have at least made one appearance on such an occasion, his mere presence sending the frenzied crowd into dizzy raptures. But, understandably, the near-septuagenarian leader—he is (officially) 69—chose to be absent. His speech is still slurred as a result of the paralytic stroke he suffered two years ago, the fluctuations in the haemoglobin content of his blood necessitates occasional blood transfusions and he has suffered frequent bouts of epileptic fits. Confessed a prominent AIADMK activist: "The rally was just a formality to satisfy the ego of Propaganda Secretary Jayalalitha Jayaram who had chalked out the programme."

Cycle rally: the hoopla was missing

If the rally symbolised the decay which has overtaken the ruling party, there have been numerous other ominous signals of MGR's loosening grip over the state's politics. Nothing could have illustrated this more powerfully than the two paid advertisements issued by the chief minister in the local newspapers last month. The first stated that MGR did not relish the interference of his wife or close relatives in administrative affairs and directed civil servants not to entertain any requests from his wife, V.N. Janaki, or other close relations regarding official matters. The provocation for this advertisement was the appointment of a police constable on Janaki's recommendation.

The second advertisement was equally startling in what it sought to address. Denying the existence of a "personal and confidential cell" in the Chief Minister's Secretariat, it asked officials to be wary of letters arriving on that letter-head.

After his paralysis, MGR is known to have become peevish and moody. But that he had to resort to advertising was as near to a confession of loss of command as is possible. Remarked noted satirist Cho Ramaswamy: "There is no doubt that MGR has lost control over his executive."

The major setback for MGR last fortnight, however, was the fresh evidence, in the Rajya Sabha elections, of open defiance from his own partymen. Instead of trying to get as many of his own men through—at a pinch the AIADMK could have clinched a fourth seat—MGR concentrated on seeing that DMK candidate T.R. Balu was defeated. And to show his dominance of state politics, he had the retirement of the fourth candidate, Ankapathur Ramalingam, announced at the last minute and persuaded state Janata Party President Era Sezhiyan to file his nomination. The Janata has a strength of three in the Assembly but MGR assured Sezhiyan that he would get through on the basis of surplus AIADMK votes.

But to MGR's utter shock not only did Sezhiyan fail, but Balu polled four votes more than the DMK's strength of 31. While Balu won in the first count itself, Sezhiyan lost by one crucial vote which was invalidated by the returning officer because the ballot-paper was deliberately marked in green ink instead of the ink provided by

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOVERNOR

In the Dark

THE administrative drift in Tamil Nadu has even prompted the state's Governor, S.L. Khurana, to deal himself a hand in the issue by officially reprimanding Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran in a series of letters. Khurana had earlier been sending favourable reports to the prime minister about MGR's ability to govern the state but changed his tune after he realised that the chief minister's style of functioning was throwing a spanner in the administrative works. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA during his visit to Madras managed to obtain the confidential letters exchanged between Khurana and MGR. Two of the most pertinent letters are reproduced below.

Khurana with MGR: the warmth is gone

"Of late I find that I learn about major policy decisions mainly through the newspapers. Unfortunately, I have been kept in the dark."

S.L. KHURANA

"I have been under the impression that everything has been going according to the rules. If there has been any omission, these could have been averted had I been properly advised."

M.G. RAMACHANDRAN

Khurana's letter dated May 20, 1986:

"My dear chief minister,

Of late, I find that I learn about the policy decisions through the newspapers. If legislation is involved, I know only when the governor's message is sought. Article 167 of the Constitution indicates the role of the chief minister regarding the furnishing of the information to the governor. Article 166(3) says that the governor shall make rules for convenient transaction of the business of the state. Rule 35(2) gives the classes of cases that shall be submitted by the chief minister to the governor before the issue of the orders. Clause 2 of this rule lists the cases pertaining to the questions of policy. Where change of policy or practice is involved the governor has to be kept informed. Even the minutes of the Council of Ministers relating to a meeting held on October 28, 1985, were received by me in March 1986. No meeting of the Council of Ministers seems to have been held after December 3, 1985, except a meeting held on March 11, 1986, to consider the budget. None of the policy decisions taken recently seemed to have been discussed in the Council of Ministers as visualised in Clause 16 of the Second Schedule of the Business Rules. You may examine this so that major items of policy do come up before the Council of Ministers and minutes are sent to me immediately thereafter as visualised in Article 167(1) of the Constitution. Frequent contacts and frank exchange of views between the chief minister and the governor are the essence of the Constitutional requirements. I presume that you would have inferred that my role as head of the state has throughout been constructive and in the best interest of the state. Unfortunately in the recent past when a number of major decisions have been taken I find that I have been kept in the dark. I do hope that this position will be rectified."

MGR's reply ten days later:

"Dear Governor,

I received your letter of May 20, 1986. I learn that you have not been informed about some of the decisions taken recently. I have been under the impression that everything has been going on according to the rules and procedures prescribed in the Business Rules. If there has been any omission, I feel, these could have been averted had I been properly advised by the chief secretary in such matters. I assure you that they are absolutely unintentional. The chief secretary and the senior officials in the secretariat have, therefore, been instructed suitably to strictly adhere to the rules and procedures and the constitutional requirements that are already in vogue. I fully agree with you that frequent meetings between the chief minister and the governor are very much imperative and useful in the interest of the state and I can assure you of my fullest cooperation in this regard. In fact, I have always deemed it a pleasure to meet you often and discuss with you all important matters. I am proud to say that in all the meetings I had with you, I felt as if I had met a personal friend from home. I have always got valuable advice and guidance. I have got the highest regard for you and great admiration for a constructive role you are playing as head of the state."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the election office.

Obviously, MGR had been unable to prevent cross-voting from his own party, though an official spokesman maintained that Balu's unexpected votes could have come from the AIADMK's ally, the Gandhi Kamraj National Congress. MGR has ordered an inquiry into the episode, the latest challenge to his authority.

OTHER instances of recent indiscipline by ministers and partymen have been no less significant. Early last month Agriculture Minister K. Kalimuthu defied his leader and got into a slanging match, despite MGR's directive not to do so, with Union Minister of State for Personnel, Administrative Reforms and Public Grievances P. Chidambaram. Taking umbrage at some critical remarks made against the state Government by Chidambaram, Kalimuthu dubbed him a "tout of the Central Government".

When local Congress(I) leaders protested against Kalimuthu's outburst, MGR asked him to apologise, but Kalimuthu flatly refused to do so and finally MGR himself had to express regrets to the Central minister. The episode further soured the already none-too-happy relationship between the AIADMK and the Congress(I). Remarked Tamil Nadu Congress(I) Committee President M. Palaniyandi: "How long can we tolerate this disrespectful way of talking?"

It is not only against Kalimuthu that MGR has been helpless. At the AIADMK general council meeting Finance Minister V.R. Nedunchezhiyan threatened, on chief minister's behalf, to drop 10 or 11 AIADMK ministers and draft them for party work. Much water has since flown down the Cauvery, but the plan remains where it was.

Even the little salvo the chief minister fired, by way of depriving former minister K.A. Krishnaswamy of his labour portfolio, boomeranged badly. Before he could be fired, Krishnaswamy resigned from the Cabinet in a huff. And even the most concerted of attempts by MGR's emissaries at getting him to withdraw his resignation did not work.

Kalimuthu (below); and (bottom) Krishnaswamy: open defiance

GEORGE FRANCIS/Scorp News

BHAWAN SINGH

Not just ministers, but the MLA's also do pretty much what they will. With MGR's appearances in the Assembly getting rarer, party MLA's also are seen less frequently. Earlier, they used to attend in order to catch the chief minister's eye. But, according to official figures, only 13 of the 234 MLA's were present during the 60 days on which the Assembly met in 1985. And even when MGR was present for some of the debates, the attendance of ruling party's MLA's was very thin.

Concerned with the diminishing interest in the Assembly, Tamil Nadu recently became the first state in the country to introduce a scheme of prizes to ensure the presence of MLA's in the Assembly. For 100 per cent attendance Tamil Nadu MLA's will henceforth get a prize of Rs 300. Concluded a Congress(I) MLA: "It is obvious that MGR's writ no longer runs in his own party."

Nine years ago when he took over the chief ministership, his word was a command and his filmi-style nod a directive. His movements charted the destiny of the state and the ruling party. Thousands of people would flock to his public meetings as if it was the first show of his films. Party MLA's, ministers and civil servants would shudder to speak to him unless encouraged to do so. Even during his second term, after 1980, village women used to sleep on his portraits and blow-ups. Any government official or party leader who questioned the supremo was sent into political wilderness. Recalled Nanchil K. Manoharan, the DMK assistant general secretary who was number two in MGR's first cabinet as his finance minister: "MGR

SUCCESS FORMULA

Populist Ploys

TRUE to his cinema background, MGR believes in heavy make-up and make-believe. He will never appear before anyone, however close he might be, without his dark glasses for fear of exposing his deeply-sunken eyes. He will never show up without his wig and fur cap for fear of showing his bald pate. And he will not open his mouth in knowledgeable company since his official bio-data lists his education as elementary.

No wonder his style of functioning has been highly secretive right from the very beginning. He has never believed in the merit of open discussion of issues with his cabinet and other party colleagues. He has always relied on a coterie, the composition of which keeps changing from time to time. He plays a balancing trick with faction leaders of his party, which not just safeguards his own position as the ultimate authority within the party but also prevents anyone else from taking him for granted.

Says a former AICC (I) executive member who has been a close MGR-watcher over the decades: "MGR is at once very shy and very authoritarian. He will never look at you straight but at the same time will be harshly authoritarian and vindictive." This was also confirmed by DMK Assistant General Secretary K. Manoharan who was once MGR's number two: "Even in cabinet meetings he and I would be sitting while the other ministers would be dutifully standing to attention. The chief minister would deliver a sermon and everybody would have to listen." After his speech impairment, however, he was not able to deliver sermons anymore but only issued slurred and staccato orders after other ministers had made their formal presentation. The final decision on every issue is still left to him.

After his illness, MGR has been operating through his secretary and personal staff, getting his intelligence from them and using them as conduits for communicating his instructions. The key man is MGR's IAS Secretary M.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

used to beckon cabinet ministers with a twist of his little finger."

But after nine years in office, the situation has turned around almost totally. Crowds are missing from his meetings, as if the film has overrun and the hero over-exposed to his audience. It is no longer true, as Annadurai used to say, that even brandishing MGR's fur-cap was enough to get the votes into AIADMK ballot-boxes. While the party is divided into various factions, MGR is powerless to stop them from feuding openly. Said Vai Gopalasamy, a DMK Rajya Sabha member from Tamil Nadu: "People want progress and this is precisely what MGR has failed to give to Tamil Nadu's four crore people."

IN FACT, the state has slipped badly in virtually all spheres. The rice-bowl of Thanjavur was once considered a show-case success story but the state has seen no new cases of farming breakthroughs. The growth areas in the national economy—petrochemicals, automobiles, small-scale industries—have all but passed the state by. In the early '60s, Tamil Nadu used to rank third in the country's industrial map but now it has slipped to the 13th position. The state's rich culture has been vulgarised and the administration, once among the best in the country, has become supine.

More damaging for MGR, the halo of incorruptibility with which he stormed into power has all but vanished in the spate of scandals that have engulfed the ministry in the last six years. Though none of the charges of corruption have been proved before commissions of inquiry, the people of Tamil Nadu are convinced that even if MGR himself is not corrupt, he condones large-scale and widespread corruption among his ministers.

With growing dissension and factionalism in the party, it is widely believed in Tamil Nadu political circles that the ailing MGR will not be able to ensure the electoral success of the AIADMK-Congress(I) alliance in any future election.

Veerappan (top); Jayalalitha (below): faction leaders

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

BHAWAN SINGH

Congress(I) leaders expect that after MGR the AIADMK will split into three different factions and the Government will collapse. While a faction led by Jayalalitha is likely to join the Congress(I), along with Electricity Minister R. Ramachandran, the R.M. Veerappan-K. Kalimuthu group will try to retain its original identity and may rally behind Nedunchezhiyan as the original AIADMK. Other splinter groups may join D.S. Somasundaram, the expelled former vice-president of the party who had now formed his own party, or the DMK.

But the Congress(I) has decided to play it safe till a clear picture emerges about MGR's ability to run the administration. So far, it has either supported MGR or, where it disagreed, maintained a policy of non-interference. Though it was opposed to the abolition of the state legislative council, it did not vote against the bill, choosing to abstain.

Still, the Congress has made up its mind on one question: it will strive to stage a comeback in the state where it was last in power nearly two decades ago. Younger elements in the party have been pressurising the party high command to give up its policy of latching on to one or other of the Dravida parties to retain its vote in the state. But a powerful section led by AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar holds the view that the Congress(I) cannot win on its own. Should it try this after MGR, DMK leader K. Karunanidhi could surprise them all by grabbing power by playing to regional anti-Hindi and anti-north sentiments. But with MGR still holding the fort, however precariously, Tamil Nadu's political future is as wavy as MGR's health graph.

Paramasivam. Vying with him as the chief minister's closest confidant is the deputy secretary in the chief minister's office T. Pitchandi; and Under-Secretary T.S. Sivakolundu is another member. MGR's wife, V.N. Janaki, is also a crucial figure in his household; after his illness, MGR has become totally dependent on her.

Those not under his command were bound at some stage to be upset by MGR's style and so it was that Tamil Nadu Governor S.L. Khurana wrote to him last month objecting to his practice of taking unilateral policy decisions without discussions with his cabinet colleagues. Khurana refused to elaborate on what else he wrote in the letter. Khurana had characterised MGR's process of decision-making as defective and desired the chief minister to adopt a more democratic and participative system of functioning. (see box)

But, if, in spite of his idiosyncrasies and secretive style of working, his personal popularity has proved to be so resilient, it is because he tries, however outlandishly, to address the poor man's problems. While the mid-day meal scheme for children has been the bedrock of his popularity, he has got away with several fantastic promises made publicly. He once promised to make a cyclone-ravaged Rameshwaram into a world-famous beach resort like Miami—he had just come back from a visit to the US. On another occasion he announced, amidst thunderous ovation at a public meeting in Madras, a government programme to give a rupee a month to every family living below the poverty line in the state.

Again, during the campaign for the 1980 assembly elections, MGR assured voters at a meeting in a remote corner of the state that, if they voted the AIADMK to power, he would reduce the price of a postcard, because postcards were the poor man's vehicle of communication. But the very nature of these blunders explains his success: the fact that he is always, however unrealistically, talking about the problems of the poor. And that in a hero-worshipping, cinema-crazy state is just the formula calculated to click.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUNDU RAO

"I feel suffocated in the party"

HE IS yesterday's politician in search of a future, angry and frustrated that he counts for little in the present. After having risen to the top in both the state and the party, Ramarao Gundu Rao finds it difficult to adjust to a situation where he is virtually irrelevant. Once a member of both the Congress Working Committee and the Congress Parliamentary Board, and chief minister of the state of Karnataka to boot, he had unobstructed access to the late prime minister Indira Gandhi. But now, he has been dropped unceremoniously from all party forums, and his letters and telephone calls to the prime minister remain unacknowledged for months.

Gundu Rao spoke last fortnight to Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA at his 20 acre farmhouse outside Bangalore on the state of Congress (I) and on national issues. Excerpts:

Q. What do you do these days?

A. I meet people every day. I address public meetings. Recently over 15,000 people came to listen to me. People are upset about the poor state of the Congress(I). The people in Delhi are living in a fool's paradise. For the next decade and a half, Congress(I) cannot return to power in Karnataka without Gundu Rao. It will become another Tamil Nadu.

Q. Why don't you take charge of the party in the state?

A. This is for the high command to decide. Hundreds of people come to me every day. They don't find active leaders to whom they can relate.

Q. But surely there are district and block Congress committees.

A. None of them are active. Our leaders say these will be reconstituted after the party elections. But I am sure the elections will never be held. Genuine Congress workers cannot win party elections. Money will flow like water and power brokers will take over.

Q. Have you told the high command what you think on party matters?

A. Yes. I have met the prime minister, Arjun Singh, Arun Nehru, and Arun Singh. But they are not keeping their word. I have written three letters to the prime minister, which have not even been acknowledged. I have also been denied appointments with the prime minister. Now I have stopped meeting them.

Q. What promises did they make to you?

A. They promised that my services will be used for the party. But I haven't heard from them. People have been misleading the prime minister right from the 1984 parliamentary elections.

Q. Do you mean that everything changed after the parliamentary elections?

A. Yes, in Karnataka we won 24 out of 28 seats. Rajiv Gandhi changed nine candidates at my advice, and all of them won. But six weeks later we lost the assembly elections because I became a bad person and they did not consult me.

> "Where is the forum in the Congress to protest against wrongdoing? We are not allowed to meet the prime minister. I was not allowed to speak at the AICC meeting in Bombay. Representations are not acknowledged."

The people of Karnataka punished the Congress for humiliating Gundu Rao.

Q. What about the other states? Do you agree with Kamalapati Tripathi's views on loyalists being ignored?

A. It must be happening in other states too. Whenever I go to Delhi, they talk about Indira loyalists being ignored for party and government work.

Q. Do you think newcomers are being imposed on party workers?

A. Yes. The policy of rehabilitating retired officers politically is totally against democratic norms. They can become ordinary Congress workers and serve the party. They enjoyed power and perks for 25 years, and now they want to enjoy political power. What is their contribution to the party? What have they done in life to supersede hard-core Congress workers? They cannot be imposed from above like this on the workers, who have given their life and blood to the organisation. The people, who went to jail and faced lathi-charges and humiliation for Indira Gandhi at a time when these officers were in power, are suffering even now. It can't go on like this.

Q. Don't you need new talent, good people, and expertise for party work?

A. We need them, but not as ministers and Rajya Sabha members. We require partymen and not five-star experts who have no clue about reality and the misery of the people.

Q. But they can be useful in some ways.

A. If that is the trend, then you can make all the chief secretaries and secretaries chief ministers and ministers after their retirement.

Q. Who are these civil servants you talk about?

A. People like Romesh Bhandari, L.K. Jha, K.R. Narayanan, Natwar Singh and Jogi should not have been nominated to the Rajya Sabha or to party posts. Bhandari was the foreign secretary and he has now become chairman of the AICC(I) foreign affairs cell—a post meant for a Congress worker. Jha and Natwar Singh may be good for a government job, let them do that. It is not good to impose Natwar Singh on a constituency which could have been won by a committed Congress worker. Are Congressmen meant for shouting 'Congress zindabad' and organising public meetings so that these people can come and enjoy power over our heads. Did any of the bureaucrats participate in the freedom movement? Did they suffer in any way? Why should they be allowed to rule over Congressmen? If Jha is good let him continue as adviser to the prime minister. Natwar Singh, if he is so efficient, can be sent as the envoy to the UN.

Q. Have you protested against what is happening?

A. Where is the forum in the Congress to protest against wrongdoing? We are not allowed to meet the prime minister. I was not allowed to speak at the AICC meeting in Bombay. Representations are not acknowledged.

Q. Do you find any change in Congress popularity between now and the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1984 parliamentary elections?

A. The 1984 victory was mainly due to a sympathy vote in favour of the party. They exhibited their loyalty to Mrs Gandhi and protested against her assassination. Had she died a natural death, the victory would not have been so massive.

Q. But after that you lost in a lot of places.

A. That proves that sympathy does not last long. After a point of time it is your performance which matters. Whether we agree or not the results show that our popularity has suffered a setback. All those who opposed Indira Gandhi are occupying important posts. They were rejected by the people, who had chosen Indira Gandhi and not them. Siddhartha Shankar Ray was defeated by the people. Our workers fought against him and now he is imposed on us and the party workers are told to obey and respect him. You know when Indira Gandhi came back to power in 1980, she took only Gundu Rao in her car to Rashtrapati Bhavan for the swearing-in ceremony. When we returned home she offered me laddoos at her house. She knew the value of commitment and loyalty.

Q. What differences do you notice between Indira Gandhi and Rajiv Gandhi?

A. You can't compare the two. Mrs Gandhi was brought up in politics. She suffered a lot and saw many splits in the party. She knew the difference between loyal and selfish people. She knew over a thousand Congress workers in every state. She was accessible to all and we knew that we could meet her when we wanted to. But now they can't meet the prime minister. In a way they want to reduce him to a captive prime minister.

BHAWAN SINGH

Q. What do you think of the various accords signed recently?

A. All accords seem to be going against the interests of our party. Wherever we have signed accords the Congress(I) is finished there.

Q. What should be done to improve matters in the party?

A. The loyalists, whatever his opinion, who stood by Mrs Gandhi in 1969, 1978 and 1980, should be rehabilitated.

Q. But the high command thinks that most of the Indira loyalists are corrupt.

A. Was Indira Gandhi corrupt? Was she a leader of corrupt Congressmen? Has anybody got the guts to say that? If the loyalists are corrupt, then they are indirectly dubbing Indira Gandhi as a corrupt politician. This means that those who were with her have a bad image and those who were not with her are clean.

Q. Is it true that you have lost out because of the removal of R.K.Dhawan?

A. He is my best friend even now. I am proud to be his friend. I do not drop friends just because they are out of power.

Q. Do you think that after Dhawan's exit it is Fotedar who is influencing Rajiv's mind?

A. Fotedar was always against me and other loyalists. I don't know why. Rajiv should beware of people who can misguide him.

Q. Is Oscar Fernandez unsuitable for heading the Karnataka PCC(I)?

A. He is a good person. But he has no rapport with the grassroot workers. He is not a good leader.

Q. What do you think of the Hegde Government?

A. He is in office because of the weakness of the Congress. We can throw him out if our party is united and strong.

Q. People think that Hegde's Government is cleaner than Gundu Rao's.

A. It is absurd. My government was much cleaner than Hegde's. No government is above corruption.

Q. What will you do if things don't go in your favour?

A. I have to make up my mind soon. It will not be long. I feel suffocated in the party and there are others who feel the same way. I have to find a way out. We expect the environment to change in favour of the Congress(I). I represent the silent majority. Iam the only batsman. All the others are bowlers in Delhi trying to bowl me out. Even if the umpires (Rajiv's advisers) want to give a biased decision, I cannot be bowled easily. And the audience is with me so they are afraid of passing judgement.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Non-Resident Indian Investor can assist to translate your project into reality. He brings the much needed funds and valuable inputs like Foreign Exchange, Advanced Technology, experience of International Markets and the benefit of various Government Incentives to NRIs. If only you could locate him.

The Project Data Bank does precisely that.

The Project Data Bank

bringing the Project Sponsor and the NRI Investor together.

The Project Data Bank is a revolutionary new concept that facilitates exchange of information between registered Project Sponsors and NRI Investors. It provides access to thousands of NRI Investors interested in direct participation in projects by making bulk investments.

It is the only such facility existing in India.

Already, the Project Data Bank has detailed profiles of over 2000 potential NRI Investors. Many more are joining every day. These profiles are channelised through a computerised system for optimum compatibility.

NRI Investments in projects worth Rs. 28 crores have already been finalized. Many others are in advanced stages of negotiations.

ENARAI taps NRI funds for industrial ventures in India.

ENARAI
Comprehensive range of Project Services

ENARAI offers completely integrated Project Investment and Implementation Services. After finalization of NRI investment, the Company provides all possible assistance in timely execution of the project. The services available include assistance in obtaining Government Approvals, Company Formation, raising Project Finance, Merchant Banking and Project Engineering.

In addition, ENARAI is developing a 74,000 sq. metre Industrial Complex in Goa for the benefit of Project Sponsors and NRIs.

Registration Procedure

Genuine Indian Project Sponsors having ready projects are welcome to join the Project Data Bank.

Mail the coupon for full details.

If you have a project with potential, we have a partner

ARTIG 4489

ENARAI

THE PROJECT DATA BANK
ENARAI INVESTMENT & CONSULTANCY SERVICES (INDIA) LTD.
97, ATLANTA NARIMAN POINT
BOMBAY—400 021 (INDIA)
TEL: 235016/235339/2045915 TELEX: 011—6079 FALC IN

I wish to benefit from the Project Data Bank. Datails of my project are:

Name of Project Sponsor: _____

Address: _____

_____

Name of the Project/Industry: _____

Project Cost: _____

NRI Investment required: _____

Kindly let me have full details.

(Signature)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The dictionary does not have a word for architects to industry...

so we gave it our name

Simon-Carves India Limited, n.

SIMON-CARVES INDIA LIMITED have been closely associated with the industrial scene for so many years that today, our name is virtually synonymous with all that is sophisticated in India's construction projects.

From the first zinc complex in India at Alwaye for Cominco Binani Zinc Ltd., to the first pickle acid regeneration plant for Bokaro Steel Ltd., to Asia's largest fluidised bed alumina calciner for National Aluminium Company Ltd., at Damanjodi, everywhere SCIL have taken up projects that call for the latest global technology and which are, at the same time tailored to Indian conditions.

Today, SCIL are branching out into even more specialised fields of technology—treatment of municipal and industrial effluents, process evaporation and crystallisation equipment—the list goes on.

So that, when somebody wants a reference for architects to industry one name readily comes to mind—, SIMON-CARVES INDIA LTD.

SIMON-CARVES INDIA LIMITED

Simon-Carves India Limited
'Simon House', Transport Depot Road,
Calcutta 700 027

Bombay Office : "Nirlon House"
254-B, Dr. Annie Besant Road,
Worli, Bombay 400 025

CLARION C-SCIL 2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SALARIES

How much are

SUDDENLY it is the season for salaries and heart-burn. Everyone from cabinet secretary to clerk, from general to jawan, from corporate high-flier to the scrounging scribe and schoolteacher, from airline pilot to railway driver and from the public sector chairman to the peon at his doorstep is peering over his shoulder at the next man's pay slip. The question uppermost in everyone's mind: How much am I worth? Am I abreast of the Joneses?

When the chips are down, there is no more fundamental question for any wage-earner. As costs of living increase, taxation levels change, the job market opens up and ways of spending money multiply in an increasingly consumerist society, does the monthly pay packet contain enough?

Pay commissions skew the graphs, periodic pacts between public sector employers and employees up the ante further, unionised power creates high-wage islands, and companies anxious to buy talent build in new perquisites and think up novel ways of feather-bedding covenanted managers who exploit the increasingly greater mobility in the job market. Airline pilots, oil industry technicians, bankers, computer software experts and a host of other specialists find they have a market abroad as well—in the oil-rich Gulf, in fields where the natural ingenuity of the Indian commands a premium, or with non-resident Indian businessmen who want to fill key posts with people of their own nationality. Said a former finance chief of Hoechst, who now works for an Indian entrepreneur in Dubai: "I have saved more in three years in Dubai than I could have in an entire lifetime in India."

Amid a general revolution of rising expectations, the salary earner has come into his own. In private companies, the public sector and in the Government, in that order, the last decade has seen a money-spinning surge that has brought wage-earning professionals a new, prominent status. Sons rake in sums that their fathers never dreamt of, as salaries outpace inflation in several sectors. Public sector companies like Maruti Udyog hand out allowances unheard of before in staid government circles, like an annual entertainment allowance of Rs 25,000 for a director and anything up to Rs 10,000 for a senior manager. And even though there is a vast sea of unemployment and low-wage troughs, those fortunate enough to have scrambled up some employer's

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

you worth?

gangway are increasingly able to dictate terms, move from lower to upper deck, and a few eventually—with a little luck and a lot of effort—work their way towards the bridge.

Always, there are the winners and the losers. A production expert who runs a textile mill in return for Rs 35,000 a month in Madhya Pradesh was recently offered a total monthly package of Rs 50,000 to switch to a new polyester unit planned further east. But an impeccably qualified lecturer in a Bangalore college, who sticks with academics because of her love for history, gets no more than Rs 2,500 after more than a decade of dedication to a declining profession: teaching. That's less than what an unskilled workman makes in Roussel Pharmaceuticals in Bombay. Wages and salaries in Bombay have been rising 15 per cent annually, well ahead of the inflation rate of 10 per cent. But in New Delhi, Indian Express Chief Sub-Editor Kedar Nath Pandita, who began with Rs 125 in 1953 and now barely manages with his Rs 3,200 a month, confesses: "I have always been broke, and though I have withdrawn nearly all my provident fund, I will retire in debt. God will take care of me."

If some regions prosper, others don't, and the same holds for broad swathes of industries. Those caught in the textile depression find their counterparts in growth areas like electronics and petrochemicals getting more generous pay hikes. Money is easier to come by in the commercially expanding west and north, to the envy and despair of those trapped in the declining industries of the east or the relative backwater of the south.

But for those who are moving up, up and away, the sky is not the limit. Hindustan Lever's balance sheet has a list of people earning more than Rs 36,000 annually, and it runs into 43 pages of fine print. And the sums mentioned do not include the perks hidden between the lines. The stories of success and prosperity are legion. Ashwini Windlass studied journalism in 1976 but decided to go into management and today, eight years after he got a management degree, makes more than Rs 10,000 a month with an Indian pharmaceutical company. Alok Kapur earns Rs 9,000 thirteen years after he graduated from the Indian Institute of Technology at Kanpur, and Kavin Sethi—no more than a graduate—grosses Rs 7,000 plus perks after 12 years in the Lufthansa sales office in New Delhi.

Lionel Coulter, 36, front office manager at New Delhi's Taj Mahal Hotel, began in 1968 as a Rs 60-a-month receptionist at Srinagar's Nedou's Hotel. Today, after a series of job changes, he earns Rs 3,000 and has a fully-furnished, two-bedroom house in pampered south Delhi, free meals, telephone, hotel transport, generous bonus and leave travel allowance. Says he: "Once I waited for 10-rupee tips to put petrol in the scooter. Now I have money to spare."

Several changes are taking place simultaneously. There is the concertina effect as the salaries and perquisites at the very top come down, and the money available at the bottom increases. Says an oil industry expert: "The expatriate general manager of a foreign oil company in the 1960s used to get Rs 25,000 a month, and his peon Rs 350. Today, the company has been nationalised, the peon gets over Rs 1,000 and the general manager Rs 5,000." A fresh recruit at Metal Box in 1963 was paid Rs 750, today an MBA is offered a little over Rs 2,000 by most front-ranking companies: the increase is not enough to neutralise inflation. But subsequent growth is rapid and more than makes up.

And much of the brown sahib culture of the multinational corporations' Indian subsidiaries is fading away. Recalls someone who worked for Imperial Chemical Industries and Imperial Tobacco in the 1960s: "We used to get allowances to buy sherry glasses, and coffee sets and spoons. The premium was on style. Today, people will drink coffee in anything." Officers in Vazir Sultan Tobacco in Andhra Pradesh used to pack pink gin in their car trunks when they prepared for visits to the tobacco-growing areas. And the old Metal Box hand recalls that lunch at the office used to come from the Bombay Yacht Club, while the company secretary drove a Rolls. "Today he is lucky to have an Ambassador." Adds

"The new pay-scales have narrowed the gap. I would like my son to go into the IAS. I may have earned more but I also suffered a heart attack in 1978 at 38."
VINOD BAKSHI
executive director, Stallion Shox

"I can live well but there are no savings. If I did not have any company perks, we would be in very bad shape."
ASHOK MEHRA
branch manager with Tata Tea

"Things have changed for the better. Once I waited for 10-rupee tips to fill petrol in my scooter. Now I have money to spare."
LIONEL COULTER
front office manager, Taj Mahal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ivan Mathias, 46, vice-president of Oberoi Hotels: "It was the generation before mine that really had the perks. Every time I got a promotion I didn't get the perks my predecessor had got."

If the brown sahibs—and their companies, like Metal Box—have gone into decline, the new thrust up the salary and perks ladder comes from more desi outfits, like those of the Birlas—who were the first to break out of the pay restrictions imposed by the Government on managing directors (Rs 7,500 plus perks and a commission on profits) by switching to the American system of presidents and vice-presidents (who, not being members of the board, were unfettered by the pay ceiling). The Company Law Board is often bloody-minded about fixing the managing director's salary—which ends up being less than that of the men he hires. This means an invitation to corruption at the top.

VINOD BAKSHI, a painter-cum-model-cum-executive, is a beneficiary of open-market system in the private sector. He started in 1963 as a trainee in a small Punjab government company without any professional qualification, at Rs 250 a month. Today, after moving through four engineering companies, his pay package exceeds Rs 18,000. This includes a basic pay of Rs 6,000, a house for Rs 8,000, two air-conditioners, two club memberships, a servant allowance and apart from everything else a starting, lump-sum furniture subsidy of Rs 25,000. Bakshi's employer: Stallion Shox, which hopes to start making shock absorbers very soon.

Then there is the constant hide-and-seek game with the taxman. Though the maximum income tax rate has come down from 97 per cent in 1970 to 50 per cent today, the game continues in myriad ways. Said an accountant: "It is a cat-and-mouse-game, but the mice are smarter." High-flying managers, well-looked after by any standard, constantly complain of a shortage of liquid cash. So what really matters today is not one rupee in the hand but two in the bush.

If interest-free loans are taxed, the companies give the loans to the wives. Companies run holiday homes in choice locations: one company charges Rs 30 a week at its pad in Mahabaleshwar. If taxes take away too much, money is paid to the wife for decorating the chairman's office, managing the company guest-house, or

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

for just about any voucher reading: "Towards the cost of..." Said the personnel head of a large Indian company: "The effort is not to break the law, but to look for the grey areas." But there are those who hand out crisp notes in pay packets too. Said tax consultant and lawyer O.P. Vaish: "Many people these days negotiate dual pay packets." As Indian businessmen have bought into large foreign companies, cash payments have become increasingly common, sucking what was a "clean" section of society into the vortex of corruption.

In Calcutta, a large company owning several tea gardens gives a rose-growing allowance to its garden managers, and loans to its senior managers' wives to whom it then sells the company's debentures. In Bombay, a pharmaceutical company routinely gives loans to its executives' spouses to buy cars and then hires these as taxis at Rs 3,000 a month. In several companies, top executives take loans to build houses that are then rented back to the company and lavishly appointed under the camouflage of routine maintenance. Perhaps the employers take a cue from economist Paul A. Samuelson, who said: "The only way to have your cake and eat it too is to let it out on interest."

In several companies, including the middle-sized ones, executives sometimes run up entertainment bills of over Rs 10,000 a month. Home entertainment pays for much of the family's upkeep as no income tax officer has the time to go and check how many guests came on a particular evening, how much chicken was actually eaten and how many Scotch bottles still remained unmolested. There are other fiddles, on leave travel allowance (LTA) or on furnishing expenditure. A multinational consumer goods company pays its senior officers Rs 20,000 a year as LTA.

And, newest of all, there are the foreign junkets on "business trips", generous retirement benefits and even stock options. The finance chief of a synthetic textile unit in Bombay has made a fortune through stock holdings acquired when the company was in its fledgeling days. "If I did not have any company perks we would be in very bad shape," says Ashok Mehra, a Tata Tea executive.

THE TRUE jet set, however, comprises those who fly company planes: Russi Mody of Tata Iron and Steel, D.P. Mandelia of the Birlas, the head of IEL. Vijaypat Singhania flies his plane too, and the younger Modis commute 70 km from Delhi to Modinagar and back in their helicopter. These are the corporate maharajahs, men like A.N. Haksar, whom local executives were so much in awe of that when he visited Hyderabad as ITC boss they kept a spare air-conditioner in the adjoining room with an electrician standing by, in case the air-conditioner failed while the prima donna slept. When there is power over men and money, government regulations that speak of a pay ceiling of Rs 7,500 become meaningless.

Everyone, of course, does not reach these cool, cool heights. The pay packet of a public sector employee is an uncomfortable half-way house between the private sector and the government employees. After six to seven years of experience, an assistant manager in Steel Authority of India Limited (SAIL) would gross no more than Rs 3,800, while his course-mate in DCM Toyota draws over Rs 6,000 as deputy manager. "There is no comparison," says Kavin Sethi of Lufthansa. "In the public sector, at my age I'd probably be earning Rs 2,500, and that too if I had a godfather somewhere." Added Murad Ali Baig, general manager of Escorts, in the same vein: "The Government and the public sector may have the power. But I would still prefer the private sector for its value for go-getters. And, of course, for its money."

In fact, the latest Pay Commission has, perhaps for the first time, brought government salaries to a level where these could begin to worry the blue-chip professionals. For example, now an additional secretary's new salary of Rs 7,300, added to his under-valued government bungalow and transport, plus full medical cover, leave travel concession and other benefits like a pension, could very nearly compare with the average private sector salary in his age group: normally around 50. Says a company executive director: "The new pay scales have narrowed the gap. I would like my son to go into the IAS. I may have earned more, but I also suffered a heart attack

"In the public sector, at my age I'd probably be earning Rs 2,500—that too if I had a godfather somewhere."
KAVIN SETHI
deputy to sales manager, Lufthansa

"The Government and the public sector may have the power. But I would still prefer the private sector for its value for go-getters. And, of course, for its money."
MURAD ALI BAIG
general manager, Escorts

"I have always been broke and though I have withdrawn nearly all my provident fund I will retire in debt. God will take care of me."
KEDAR NATH PANDITA
chief sub-editor, Indian Express

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

when I was 38."

Now the public sector has a further cause of complaint. The Pay Commission report places the salary of the cabinet secretary higher than any public sector chairman—even if the latter heads a unit twice as large as the largest private sector behemoth. "This is not fair. The man who produces the roti should not be paid less than the man who distributes it," protests Alok Kapur. And an irate public sector executive fumes: "What do these bureaucrats get paid so much for? Earlier, they sat on their back-sides for six days a week. Now they do it for five." Adds a middle-rung officer in the State Bank of India: "For years these IAS chaps have kept down banking sector salaries and benefits because they themselves did not get more. But do they do half the work that we do?"

But how much can salaries be kept down, even if people try? Despite the widespread unemployment—there were three unemployed graduates last year for every 10 that had jobs—and the turning out of 35,000 doctors and engineers every year, oddly enough, virtually every employer who can afford to do so is paying far more than would be the case if a totally free labour market operated. So the minimum wage keeps rising, the good professionals demand and get their price, and money flows into salaried pockets as a growing middle class asserts its buying power. A growing number feel, nevertheless, that a salary will never be enough and therefore end up trying to set up their own businesses.

Still, for those who prefer to stay with the security of a job, the rewards today—whether in the Government or the private sector—are better than they have ever been. In this new era of rapid growth, no ambitious entrepreneur can afford to count his pennies, be they black or white, and the good professional can virtually write his pay-packet. And now, with even the Government becoming conscious of the need to retain the right kind of talent before the private sector lures it away, the road to the top has suddenly become a multi-lane highway. So what if millions fall far behind somewhere in the race—for an open, competitive job market is the very essence of a vibrant economy. The fittest prosper, and go on to live by the maxim: you are always worth more than your last salary.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA and TANIA MIDHA with bureau reports

PAY COMMISSION

Lopsided Bonanza

FOR THREE years, 5.2 million pairs of expectant eyes had remained riveted on a nondescript annexe to Vigyan Bhawan, New Delhi's imposing convention centre, where five old men deliberated the fortunes of the world's largest bureaucracy. Over 8,500 memoranda were plodded through at 206 meetings, dozens of experts consulted and finally last fortnight, the Fourth Pay Commission pronounced its 711-page verdict, leaving the Centre the prospect of scraping the barrel to find another Rs 1,287 crore annually to feed the gangly dinosaur.

For several days, work in government offices came to a standstill as officers and menials pored over the report. On the day the Government closed its offices to mourn Jagjivan Ram's death, every office boasting a photocopier was open, churning out faint copies of what had for long been expected to be the document of deliverance for hapless wage-earners struggling against inflation.

But now, it was time to count the chickens. For the army's Captain Madan Suri, the report brought in Rs 300 a month, offsetting the expense of sending his daughter to school. For his chief, General Krishnaswami Sundarji, the gain was around Rs 2,000, besides the bonus of free rations.

His eyes gleaming, Charan Singh, a lower division clerk in the Commerce Ministry, could barely control his excitement. "Hamara to hundred per cent fayeda hai (my gain is a 100 per cent)," he said hyperbolically of the expected Rs 250 raise. But there was let-down too. Said Neeta Ghosh in the same ministry: "It is not enough when prices are shooting up." For Bimla Devi, a sweeper in the Parliament annexe, the gain was over Rs 150: "I do not have to wake up early morning and sweep the street to collect some money from the residents."

With enhanced non-practis-

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Majumdar presents report to Finance Minister V.P. Singh (left); and Central government employees protest

ing allowance and a higher basic pay, the report would mean another Rs 500 monthly for Leela Mathai, a government paediatrician, though this would not bring her much closer to what private practitioners earn. And for postman Narottam Lal, the report meant increasing his take-home pay of Rs 675 by 40 per cent to Rs 950, enough for him to think of giving in to pressure from his parents in far-away Banda to finally get married.

But there were also as many Cassandras as there were calculators. A joint secretary who stands to get about Rs 1,000 more at Rs 6,300 worked out how he was going to lose Rs 30 every month after higher income tax, house rent and provident fund deductions. But at the top a secretary due to retire shortly was making a different calculation. His pension would be based on the new basic pay, bringing a gain of over Rs 200.

The report is full of innovative concepts in wage planning. The number of pay scales has been reduced from 153 to 36, the annual increments are fatter, increments may be withheld from those who don't perform, and extra increments given to those who excel. Inflation-neutralisation through dearness allowance (DA) has been made particularly generous (at 10 per cent annual inflation, a joint secretary can see his DA alone increase by Rs 450 annually). Moving the other way, the Pay Commission wants overtime abolished: so drivers, stenographers and clerks may end up getting less than they do now. The widely expected offer of a golden handshake option for those who had put in 15 years with the Government has not come about, however, but may still do so when the commission submits its report on pensions.

The fair sex has got a particularly fair deal from the commission: priority allotment of houses, hostels for single women, extraordinary leave for family reasons, creches and special transport facilities.

But it is the DA recommendation that could end up as the biggest bonanza of the lot, far more than the immediate increases in basic pay. "We have tried to give government employees protection against prices. If this results in better productivity it will be money well spent," said A.K. Majumdar, the commission's member-secretary. Added H.D. Shourie, who runs Common Cause, which in the past has fought for government pensioners: "It is certainly a generous Pay Commission report, even if an elitist one."

However, many thought that the commission had been tight-fisted. Said George Fernandes, president of the Hind Mazdoor Kisan Panchayat: "A prisoner's diet in Tihar Jail is worth Rs 7 a day. For an average family of five, this adds up to Rs 1,050 a month. And this does not include shelter, clothing and medicines, all provided free in the jail." He added indignantly: "To call this a bonanza will require rewriting the lexicon." Others were equally dissatisfied. Rangarajan Kumaramangalam, president of the National Confederation of Central Government Employees and Workers, said: "How I wish there were no Class III or Class IV employees. Then everyone would be happy. The secretary has gained 48 per cent while a peon has got only 8.5 per cent more." Pointed out B.B. Bhattacharya of the Institute of Economic Growth, whom the commission had consulted: "The minimum pay of Rs 750 is hardly above the poverty line of Rs 700 in Delhi."

But it is the defence forces which have got a carpet-bombing of goodies. Officers' salaries up to the brigadier's rank are now a running scale, and the starting point at Rs 2,300 (about the same as for someone joining the Indian Administrative Service) is no less than what someone with a management degree would get in a blue chip company. In addition, a rank pay ranging from Rs 200 for captains to Rs 1,200 for brigadiers puts them well beyond civilian earnings. The fliers' and submariners' special monthly allowance of Rs 500 has been raised to Rs 1,200 and similar gains have fallen in the military doctors' aprons. "It is a welcome feeling that the commission has accepted the special problems, role and need of us soldiers though we would have liked more for the technical men," said a recently retired general who had co-authored the army's approach paper to the Pay Commission. Inevitably, the technical men in the army feel cheated when the forces are short of technical hands. "There is no respect for education," grudged an engineer in the navy. Added another: "If all you can pay is peanuts, all you will get are monkeys."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Others in uniform felt even more cheated. The police constable has been considered unskilled labour and placed even below a cook or bearer. "Now, when a constable goes to serve a warrant, he will leave it in the letter-box," fumed Kiran Bedi, deputy commissioner of police in Delhi. Said an angry traffic constable: "The worst that can happen to a postman in Punjab is that a dog may bite him. I could get shot."

Police officers say they have been downgraded vis-a-vis their counterparts out of uniform. Said Gautam Kaul, secretary of the Indian Police Service Association: "From being the number three service, after the IAS and IFS, we have been reduced to the 43rd among the 45 Central services. Our moustache, the pride in uniform, is lowered." In Patna, the Bihar branch of the IPS Association called the report "discriminatory, invidious and unjustified from all accounts."

Also contentious is the commission's refusal to compare government pay scales with those in the public sector units, which have traditionally paid more. Said J.P. Chaubey of the All India Railwaymen's Federation: "The report unfairly rejects the demand for parity with the public sector." Argued Kumaramangalam: "Tell me, how is a sweeper in the public sector any different from a sweeper in the secretariat?"

As far as the unions are concerned, a cri de coeur has already gone up and protest demonstrations were held in New Delhi. "The recommendations on increased working hours and introduction of modern machines are retrograde," complained the General Secretary of the All-India Trade Union Congress, Indrajit Gupta. Protested Balwinder Singh, a driver in the Commerce Ministry, against the abolition of overtime: "If they want us to drive their cars after office hours they will have to give us overtime. We are not going to work for free."

The ripples are bound to spread to the state capitals, where employees want parity with their Central counterparts. Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde said: "The financial liability, if the report is accepted, will be almost Rs 3,500 crore (for all states put together) and finding resources will be a very big problem. The prime minister should call a meeting of chief ministers before deciding on the report."

BHAWAN SINGH

"From being the number three service, we've been reduced to the 43rd in the 45 Central services. Our moustache is lowered."
GAUTAM KAUL
police officer

HARI OM GULATI

"If they want us to drive their cars after office hours, they will have to give us overtime. We are not going to work for free."
BALWINDER SINGH
staff car driver

In states like Maharashtra, the decision to follow the Central Pay Commission recommendations will add several hundreds of crores to the existing wage bill of Rs 1,800 crore for a million employees, including those of the zila parishads. July 3 was observed as protest day in the state, demanding implementation of the recommendations. In Karnataka, a senior official said the new wages would add Rs 100 crore to the Rs 450-crore wage bill.

There were, however, exceptions such as Andhra Pradesh where employees are comparatively better off. Their salaries are due to be revised a sixth time on the recommendations of a pay commission which was to present its report on July 14. Said G.M. Kasiviswanatham, president of the Andhra Pradesh Non-Gazetted Officers' Association: "This is the first time that our pay revision will follow the Centre's." Similarly, Bihar awaits the recommendations of its own Fifth Pay Commission.

A higher wage bill could spell financial disaster for a poor state like Uttar Pradesh, where the wage bill of 1,647.78 crore is already higher than the annual revenue of Rs 1,360 crore. "We are hard-pressed. We cannot absorb another Rs 450 crore which the pay commission recommendations will imply," said Minister of State for Finance and Planning Richaria. The state employees are threatening to launch a "Gujarat-type agitation" to press for a better deal. But government sources warned that any increase in salaries now would mean fresh taxation.

That option might be forced on the Centre too. "In making the projections for the Seventh Plan, no explicit account was taken of the wage revision though a general cushion was provided for higher non-plan revenue expenditure," explained Planning Commission Member Raja Chelliah. Similar signals came from the Finance Ministry, where a senior official warned: "We have no elbow-room for this kind of a wage hike. It will reflect in next year's budget." But opinions differed on the exact burden. Said economist Bhattacharya: "The burden will be between Rs 700 crore and Rs 800 crore, not the projected Rs 1,287 crore, as some money will come back as income tax and provident fund."

Finance Minister V.P. Singh has promised a decision within three months. But going by precedents, it is a reasonable presumption that the Government will more or less accept the report. Yet, a wage hike as substantial as this can only mean a massive resource-mopping operation. Also inevitable is further inflation, making the largesse a mixed blessing.

But these problems lie in the future. And despite the various criticisms, the basic remained that the world's largest bureaucracy was about to get the biggest pay bonanza ever. If the Government accepts the report by the next Diwali, the lights in millions of government employees' homes will shine brighter than they have in a long time.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA and TANIA MIDHA
with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sometimes, the whole of India watches the same sunset.

Or, the Prime Minister talking to newsmen in Washington. Or, Kapil Dev sprinting to bowl at Wankhede Stadium. Or, Tabassum asking a cheeky question.

In the living rooms of India, the world has become more accessible. And events don't have to wait till the morning newspaper.

At GCEL, we find it a little gratifying. Because our Low Power Transmitters have made it possible for people in different parts of India to feel one with the rest of India. And the world.

GCEL's Low Power Transmitters

And at GCEL, our know-how builds different kinds of LPTs. In three power ratings, for instance. Which means every community from a small village to a large metro can be served. Reliably. And with its state-of-the-art technology, the GCEL equipment demands minimum manpower. And today, there are 52 GCEL-built LPTs beaming round the country. Plus, the latest VLPTs that work unmanned. Each one built according to specific environ needs.

Because at GCEL, we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.

Low Power Transmitter

GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:3002

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YOU'VE SEEN THE CROWD. NOW MEET THE LEADER.

Owning a Yamaha has always been every motorcyclist's dream. With good reason of course. It's a name that has been winning more races and breaking more records than any other. All over the world.

So sit astride this wonder machine and discover what makes the RX 100 a leader.

11 BHP POWER UNDER YOU

You can feel the extra power the moment you kick it to life. And the slightest twist of the throttle sends the pulse racing with excitement.

0 TO 60 KMPH IN 7.5 SECONDS. WILL THE COMPETITION EVER CATCH UP?

A glorious pick-up that touches 100 KMPH before the competition has even begun to move. Well, almost.

30% EXTRA BRAKING POWER

The great thing about the RX 100 is that it stops as surely as it takes off. With extra large brake drums that make your ride completely safe.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ESCORTS

UNIQUE CERIANI TELESCOPIC FRONT FORK. A NEW DIMENSION IN CONTROL.

The all metal front fork gives you optimum control while the extra long wheel base makes sharp curves easy to handle.

LOOKS TO QUICKEN YOUR PULSE

The RX 100 has been engineered from the ground up to look and feel great. A triumph of aerodynamic design that's a traffic stopper on the roads.

ESCORTS' ENGINEERING SUPPORT

The RX 100 has been specially designed for Indian road conditions. With Escorts' motorcycle know-how. A name that's behind every second motorcycle you see on the road today.

RX100
AUTHENTIC
YAMAHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Please do not call him Jeeves.

No sooner you've unloosened your tie and put your feet up in your suite at the Taj Mahal Hotel, New Delhi, a discreet knock on the door will herald the arrival of your very own personal valet. Impeccably outfitted, he will hold in a white-gloved hand, a silver salver bearing a frosted glass of good cheer.

At your service, round the clock, he is a man of singular means. A round of golf at six? A brisk gallop at the Rider's Club? Tickets, perhaps, to the following day's French Film Festival, or merely a few useful tips: for instance, where are you likely to acquire an original Kashmiri antique rug? Or an authentic Rajput miniature?

On these, and many other matters of mutual concern, you may rely on him to deliver the genuine article.

THE TAJ MAHAL HOTEL
NEW DELHI

THE TAJ GROUP OF HOTELS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

VIDEOCON

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

51cm LARGE SCREEN COLOUR TV SET

207E3E

Compactness And Entertainment: Just Right For Your Home

SUPER-SSI BLACKSTRIPE II

VIDEOCON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Watery Harvest

TECHNOLOGY transfer can be very expensive, especially if the transfer happens to be from the land of the rising yen. Apart from miniature electronics, the Japanese have perfected a technique for growing vegetables in water—hydroponics, it's called. Indian scientists who went to Japan to see it for themselves were simply bowled over, but the price for the technology transfer was a bit too steep: Rs 2 crore for one-tenth of a hectare. So the scientists did a little snooping around and came back to launch the experiment at the G.B. Pant University of Agriculture and Technology in Uttar Pradesh. After months of work, they have at last perfected the concoction necessary to grow plants in water. The scientists have successfully raised cucumbers and tomatoes, with 30 tomato plants on 3 sq metres of water yielding more than 1,000 tomatoes in five months. "The technique can be used commercially, and vegetables can also be grown in bungalows and on roof-tops," says varsity Vice-Chancellor Kripa Narain. So it won't be long before hydroponically-grown vegetables are sold in the corner shop.

Tomatoes grown in water

Star War

WHEN dancer-actress of yesteryears Vyjayanthimala Bali, now MP from south Madras constituency, inaugurated a suburban railway station outside Madras airport last fortnight, few people knew that what she would inaugurate was a controversy instead. As the glamorous MP cut the ribbon, sold the first ticket and flagged off the first train, the star-struck audience was treated to some honest confessions by state Chief Secretary T.V. Antony, who told the public how he had been smitten with her role in Vazhkai and how he'd seen it 30 times and how well the lady had preserved her charming looks. And so on, till the politicians present at the ceremony—none of whom had been called to the dais—started squirming in their seats. While some wondered whether it was an inauguration ceremony or a fan club, DMK chief M. Karunanidhi speculated that perhaps the chief secretary was planning a film with the MP as his leading lady. The result, sure enough, was a controversy involving the Railways, the AIADMK Government and the heroine. When last heard, the various parties were still bickering.

Vyjayanthimala: fan fare

Land Locked

AS SOON as the first Malayalees returned from the Gulf with their shiny new two-in-ones, enterprising businessmen in Kerala had got busy cooking up schemes to put all those petrodollars to use. The projects ranged from hotels and hospitals to real estate. Almost overnight, multi-storeyed structures of two-to-three-bedroom flats began springing up all over Trivandrum and Cochin. Four years after the mad construction rush, the monstrous monoliths loom large over the cityscape—uninhabited and empty. There are simply no takers. The builders seemed to have forgotten that the average Malayalee prefers the single-storey, open-spaced type of house. Of the 205 flats built by private promoters—priced between Rs 250 and Rs 300 per sq ft—only 90 have been sold so far. The 45-flat Samarias Centre in the heart of Trivandrum is still to be commissioned, while the Kerala Housing Board has yet to sell the first flat in the nine-storeyed complex of 108 flats—costing Rs 3 lakh each—in Ernakulam. The builders are now trying to woo the local middle class with cut rates, but with little success.

Unoccupied flats: no takers

Taking a Break

IN TRYING to set the record straight, Subrata Mukherjee, general secretary of the West Bengal PCC(I), set a dubious record instead—of the shortest resignation period in the unit's history, 9 minutes and 20 seconds to be precise. The occasion was a meeting to prepare for Rajiv Gandhi's visit to the city. Mukherjee saw red when a colleague had a dig at his abrupt cessation of hostilities against the high command on being elevated to the post of general secretary. He promptly summoned a press conference and grandly announced his resignation, and in reply to queries, also let slip that he was not even a primary member of the party as he had not renewed his membership this year. Just then, in walked state party chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi. "Don't be mad," he exclaimed and promptly closetted himself with Mukherjee. A few minutes later, the press were told that Mr Mukherjee had withdrawn his resignation. "I have never withdrawn what I said before," he said. "But this time I am withdrawing what I just told you. I am sorry for the inconvenience." A very convenient excuse, indeed!

Mukherjee: volte face

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOREIGN OFFICE

Turbulent Times

THE FOREIGN Service, considered the cream of the bureaucratic crop, is currently passing through troubled times. Excessive interference from external sources, a succession of changes at the ministry level, a reduced role in the conduct of foreign policy and other related factors have reduced the morale in the service to its lowest-ever. Internally, there are additional pointers to the problems ahead, namely, a marked reduction in the quality of inductees into the service and ever-increasing levels of politicisation and favouritism. Associate Editor DILIP BOBB spoke to a wide range of people in the Ministry of External Affairs and serving diplomats to gauge the extent of the malaise and its effects. His report.

SHORTLY after taking over as foreign secretary last April, A.P. Venkateswaran, a stocky, no-nonsense type addicted to aromatic pipe tobacco and navy blue safari suits, sent out a "Dear Colleague" circular to all heads of missions abroad and also individually to the 2,826 members of the Indian Foreign Service (IFS). Venkateswaran, widely acknowledged to be one of the most capable and efficient officers to tread the country's diplomatic board-walk, also has an added reputation—for not pulling his verbal punches. "I am sorry to have to say that the reputation of the foreign office is not what it should be. Too many of us have been indulgent, placing self above all and regarding the service only as a means for promoting personal needs and ambitions," he wrote.

Venkateswaran's missive missile, though characteristic of the man's forthright nature, was nonetheless symbolic of the prevailing pressures that have bedevilled the country's most high-profile and elite service. Perhaps at no other time in its 38-year-old history, as now, has the morale in the foreign office sunk so low, engulfed by what one top Foreign Ministry official terms, "a tide of rising expectations and diminishing returns".

The sense of uncertainty is reflected in myriad and inexplicable ways. In the almost cavalier manner in which changes are made at the top—Bali Ram Bhagat replaced by P.Shiv Shankar, who doubles as commerce minister, and Eduardo Faleiro, the MP from Goa, brought in as minister of state for external affairs. (With former diplomat K.R. Narayanan already ensconced as minister of state, this marks the first time in the country's history that three ministers have had the run of the foreign office). The sidelining of veteran G. Parthasarthy and the Policy Planning Committee, and their subsequent rehabilitation. The unseemly lobbying that has led to embarrassing delays in the choice of ambassadors to the two key embassies in Moscow and Washington and the side-lining of career diplomats from such plum postings. The rather naive approach to current foreign policy concerns like Sri Lanka and Pakistan. The confusing flip-flops on relations with the US, one minute wooing Washington ardently for super-computers and other high-tech goodies and the next, hysterical anti-US outburts on issues like Libya and South Africa. The failure so far to influence countries like Canada and Britain on the activities of Sikh terrorists. The interference by officials in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, not to speak of retired diplomats like K.Natwar Singh and Romesh-

Shiv Shankar

K.R. Narayanan

Eduardo Faleiro

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bhandari, one of whom is now a minister and the other in charge of the Congress(I)'s foreign cell. The decision to shift a large chunk of the foreign office from South Block to the Akbar Hotel. The litany seems endless.

The tragedy is made all the more greater by the fact that the Indian Foreign Service, with minor exceptions, has been regarded as the cream of the Indian bureaucratic crop, an elite corps peopled by "the best and the brightest". But now, under assault from marauding politicians and interlopers, they seem to have drawn their wagons into a circle in the vain hope that the cavalry will eventually come to their rescue. Much of the undermining of the foreign office citadel is attributed to the advent of Rajiv Gandhi. His informality and political naivete seems to have short-circuited the traditional channels of communication in the foreign office.

The naivete, or lack of basic political reality, is probably the reason why the flurry of changes at the political and bureaucratic levels in the ministry has led to the impression that it is sprinting on a treadmill. Just before Bhandari's exit, there was total confusion in the upper echelons of the ministry as to his successor. Venkateswaran was, in fact, informed that he was going as ambassador to Moscow and then later, deservedly, made foreign secretary. The embassy in London was without an ambassador for months after the premature retirement of Prakash Mehrotra till P.C. Alexander was taken out of limbo and given the job.

In Washington, K.S. Bajpai had packed all his belongings and was in the midst of his final farewell party when he received a frantic telephone call from the ministry asking him to hang on till a replacement could be found. That embarrassing situation was further compounded when veteran B.K. Nehru, 77, was approached for the job he had held exactly 20 years ago. Nehru cited ill-health as his reason for rejecting the offer. Then the Prime Minister's Secretariat mulled over another candidate, former foreign secretary M.K. Rasgotra, but even that was shot down by the invisible marksmen in the Prime Minister's Secretariat and it was only last fortnight, two months after Bajpai finally left Washington that the cabinet secretary, P.K. Kaul, was appointed his successor, triggering off yet another round of bureaucratic musical chairs (Kaul had one more year to serve as cabinet secretary).

MUCH the same situation existed in the case of the ambassador to Moscow, where the names of candidates were seemingly selected out of a hat and then discarded while the crucial post remained vacant. B.K. Nehru was approached again and after he politely turned down the offer T.N. "Tikky" Kaul, 73, a staunch pro-Soviet who had served as ambassador in Moscow in the mid-1960s was shaken out of semi-retirement and given the post. Reacting sarcastically to the appointment of people taken out of mothballs ("recycling of skeletons" as it is being derisively referred to) and the inexplicable delays, a foreign office source quipped: "After all, we are a nation of 750 million people. It must be awfully difficult to find suitable people."

But there is little cause for humour in the foreign office these days. The bottom line in the appointments is that in none of the cases was the foreign office involved. The Prime Minister's Secretariat was solely in charge and that is currently the main cause for concern in the foreign office—the growing feeling that their role is being undermined, that they are being increasingly sidelined from their rightful turf and they no longer wield the clout they once did. One example officials point to is the abrupt decision to shift the main bulk of the foreign office to the Akbar Hotel, the former India Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC) hostelry, to make space for the expansion of the Prime Minister's Secretariat and the Defence Ministry. This, when it should have been the Defence Ministry that moved out after its new headquarters, Sena Bhavan, was completed. Little wonder that foreign office officials literally see red at the sight of flag cars belonging to military brass cheekily parked in front of Gate No: 4 at South Block, the entrance to the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA).

More recently, the foreign office was shouldered out of the negotiations with

Natwar Singh

G. Parthasarthy

B.R. Bhagat

The uncertainty is reflected in the cavalier manner in which changes are made at the top—B.R. Bhagat, Shiv Shankar, Faleiro, K.R. Narayanan. The sidelining of G. Parthasarthy, interference by former diplomats like Natwar Singh and Romesh Bhandari.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pakistan on the Siachen glacier. The negotiating team is headed by service officers rather than diplomats, as has always been the case when the country's borders are at issue. Natwar Singh, at the behest of the Prime Minister's Secretariat elbowed his way into the non-aligned meeting in Harare and was sent there to oversee arrangements. Similarly, in the last round of negotiations with Colombo, the team was headed by a rank outsider, P. Chidambaram, minister of state for personnel and administrative reforms.

In Indian missions abroad, the foreign service is increasingly finding itself in a minority. The advent of extremism has panicked the Government into posting additional intelligence people abroad. Currently, rather than the traditional one representative from the Research & Analysis Wing (RAW), the larger embassies now have as many as three intelligence operatives from RAW as well as the Intelligence Bureau (IB), and that too in important consular and second secretary positions. This is in addition to personnel from defence, the Administrative Service, the Audit and Accounts Service, commerce and trade and the boffins from the Department of Science and Technology. There have been, inevitably, increasing reports of the intelligence agents being at loggerheads with the diplomats on issues such as embassy policy and information-gathering. The controversial decision last year to expel two Sri Lankan Tamil Eelam leaders from the country was strictly a RAW recommendation that the country's top diplomats did not even know about in time. Inevitably, the move boomeranged.

There are also increasing signs that many ambassadors and high commissioners find they are left with little initiative even in such areas as the hiring of public relations firms (as was the case in Washington recently), private meetings with government officials, dignitaries and legislators or in the negotiation of various purchases, which has been their purview all along.. This has increased with the Rajiv Gandhi Government's penchant for appointing a host of "special emissaries" of the prime minister for negotiations abroad, often without the ambassador of that country being kept fully informed. Complains a senior foreign office official: "In no other ministry is there such a high level of intervention. Everybody is an expert on foreign policy and want to put in their oar. Everybody else has the voice but not the responsibility. "We have the responsibility but not the voice."

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There are, of course, other and more obvious reasons, cloaked inevitably in political raiment, that have been responsible for India's recent foreign policy activities being subjected to bewilderingly quixotic twists and turns, with an equally bewildering assortment of players being accused of poking their unwanted fingers in the foreign office pie.

THE MOST visible symptom of the malaise was the surprise induction of Bali Ram Bhagat as foreign minister last year and his equally surprising and ignominous ouster. Bhagat in a fit of pique, gave an interview to a Bombay tabloid, washing some dirty Foreign Ministry laundry in public in the process. Terming the ministry a "khichri external affairs ministry" and stating that India's foreign policy was in "an unbelievable mess", Bhagat charged that he had been sacked because Rajiv had "succumbed to the pressures of pro-US elements" and added that the prime minister's directions were "often confusing, being a little pro-Soviet and a little pro-US". He also accused Romesh Bhandari, Natwar Singh and G. Parthasarthy of meddling in the foreign office pie and also alleged that the activities of pro-Soviet and pro-US lobbies in the ministry were chiefly responsible for the "mess".

Those who currently occupy the upper echelons of the Foreign Ministry dismiss the allegations airily. "Since taking over, I have not noticed any signs of external pressure from any side," says P. Shiv Shanker. "We have highly capable people in the ministry and we discuss matters and come to our own decisions. If we feel that a certain issue needs external input, only then do we get it." His deputy, the mild-mannered K.R. Narayanan, says that Rajiv's entry into the scene has brought in an element of "creative continuity and originality into our foreign policy. His is an uncluttered view and a freshness of approach." Romesh Bhandari diplomatically denies any interference in the ministry on his part. "I was asked to join the delegation to Sri Lanka because of my experience on the subject but apart from that, I have no reason or opportunity to interfere in the ministry's workings," he says.

But despite the denials, Bhagat's charges buffeted South Block till finally he himself succumbed to pressure by issuing a statement lamely denying that he had given the interview. The tabloid, however, insisted he had and also mentioned that it had left out even more controversial statements on interference in foreign affairs by officials in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, namely Mani Shankar Aiyar, G.K. Arora and Montek Singh Ahluwalia (the first a joint secretary and the other two additional secretaries).

Rajiv with Bhandari: short cuts

Though dismissed as the irrational outpourings of a frustrated politician, Bhagat's allegations were taken seriously enough in the South Block offices of the Foreign Ministry, which has of late given the impression of floundering around in a turbulent sea of uncertainty. Admits a senior Foreign Ministry official: "There is a sense of uncertainty in every ministry and department in the Government today. The uncertainty in our case, as in many others, is about what our policy really is or should be."

What has hardly helped matters is the succession of changes at the top. Khurshid Alam Khan, the first minister of state for external affairs under Rajiv, was nothing more than a name-plate on the door that the then foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari passed on his unimpeded way to the prime minister's office. Bhandari, on his part, immersed himself in one major priority—to project Rajiv as the great conciliator which, in time, only succeeded in whetting his personal ambitions. In terms of official competence, Bhandari had few equals and the powerful espirit de corps that exists in the foreign office ensures that there are very few of his former colleagues who will admit that he stepped out of line. "He was ambitious, everyone knew that, but at the same time, he was exceedingly competent, the first foreign secretary who had specialised in economic affairs, and his input was very valuable indeed," says one of his senior ex-colleagues.

What is possible, they admit, is that Bhandari lost sight of the wood for the trees in his image-building exercise for Rajiv as far as India's dealings with the neighbours were concerned. Says a top official: "We seem to have lost the edge of cynicism that we had when Mrs Gandhi was around. She was heavily involved in foreign policy and knew

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When it comes to tree plantation, it's the more, the merrier at Neyveli. When it comes to population, it's the other way round.

Ecology and Birth Control. Two areas in which NLC has surpassed even the national averages. But that's not all...

A MODEL TOWN:

If you are wondering what India's 5th largest profit making public sector undertaking is doing with Ecology and Birth Control, it's a good question?

When Asia's largest mine-based power and industrial complex came up at Neyveli in 1956, it set out carving a model town, of pristine orderliness, remarkable growth and marked prosperity.

COMMITMENT — NLC STYLE:

In a drive to strike an ecological balance and rehabilitate mined out areas, NLC planted an all time record of 55 lakh trees in less than five years. Achieving a tree plantation record of 345 per family as against a national goal of one tree per family.

The birth rate at Neyveli, has dropped to an incredible 4.04 per 1000, with 97.35% of employees covered under the family planning programme.

The Company is proud of its fully equipped 350-bedded hospital, supported by 5 peripheral dispensaries, providing health care for its employees' families. Surplus underground water from mines, is supplied to nearby agricultural areas for irrigation, besides digging numerous borewells to provide drought relief to nearly 72 villages.

DEVELOPING HUMAN RESOURCES:

To NLC, its 20,000 people are so many units of energy that could work wonders, when harnessed well. To this end, NLC has vocational and on-the-job training schemes. A modern training complex, costing about Rs.1 crore, trains fresh recruits, besides imparting refresher and skill development courses for existing employees.

Providing a comprehensive range of social welfare benefits and amenities, NLC incurs a per capita expenditure of about Rs.4500 annually.

admas/NLC/074

NEYVELI LIGNITE CORPORATION LTD.
A Government of India Enterprise
NEYVELI 607 801 ■ TAMIL NADU

NLC — GROWING POWER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

exactly what the response would be from people like General Zia and Jayewardene to any initiative from us and also what their limitations would be. There was a solid political content in our policy then. Once they (the neighbours) know that you are giving top priority to better relations with them, it gives them the advantage. If you are going to play poker, you don't lay all your cards on the table."

THAT situation was best illustrated by the recent dealings with Sri Lanka on the Tamil issue. When it appeared that Colombo was hell-bent on a military solution, the Indian Government declared its intentions to pull out of the negotiations. Almost immediately, Jayewardene sent frantic messages to say that he was sending a fresh package of proposals. "The Indian public, the current leadership and Parliament have the facile assumption that diplomacy means instant results. After 38 years, we are still unable to accept reality. The general impression is that if we don't have good relations with our neighbours it is India's fault, forgetting that it takes two to tango and that diplomacy, ultimately, is the art of the possible. It is this naivete that is hampering our functioning to a great extent," says a foreign office mandarin.

In the ranks of the foreign service itself, there are other pointers to the troubled times ahead. One major headache is the decline in the quality of people joining the service in recent years. In the last combined services examination, a candidate who had ranked 149 in the merit list made it to the foreign service—the lowest in the history of the service. A year earlier, in the batch of IFS optees, the topper ranked 21 in the all-India list and the last candidate ranked 119, which meant that over 100 candidates eligible for the service had chosen to opt out. Budding bureaucrats obviously no longer find the IFS as attractive a proposition it was earlier and many now prefer the IAS or even the Central services like customs and income tax.

Another cause for current concern has been the increasing politicisation of a service that was once immune to internal or external manipulations. The foreign office is now a helpless victim of favouritism and patronage in the posting of first and second secretaries to embassies located in the western countries. Says one Foreign Ministry source: "These posts are no longer filled on merit but on how much influence your godfather wields." One prime example is the case of an IFS officer who was posted to Washington despite the fact that his dossier detailed two vigilance investigations against him.

In a recent review, the foreign office sent out an angry letter to its 150-odd embassies abroad stating: "Officers and staff are not relieved from their current posts despite clear instructions. Similarly reprehensible is the use of non-official channels for making representations. This is against Conduct Rules, as we all know, but is blatantly resorted to at all levels... In the more comfortable posts there is an irrepressible urge to seek extensions on medical grounds or education. Conversely, in difficult posts, there are representations made to cut short the tenure. The result is that a series of extensions occur in comfortable posts whereas the turnover in difficult posts is too rapid."

The bottom line is that a diplomatic career is no longer the glamorous one it once was. The arrival of extremism has now added a new element of risk—four Indian diplomats have lost their lives due to assassinations or bombings in the last few years. Added to this is the psychological pressures of operating on an alien environment with a comparatively low salary and the periodic upheaval in family life and children's education that comes with each posting. Saddled with tougher problems and challenges on the one hand and a decline in the quality of inductees on the other, the foreign office is faced with an unprecedented dilemma.

On the plus side is the fact that most of those currently serving in the MEA still display a fierce pride in the service and a close camaraderie. "This (the IFS) is material that the country can really be proud of," says Shiv Shankar. Adds a senior MEA official: "The service has remained very Indian and its roots are deep and well watered. Despite the problems, the machinery is working and working well. If it is not producing, the question to be asked is, who is holding it up?" The fingers, inevitably, all point to the current political leadership and the quixotic element it has introduced into the country's foreign policy dealings. "Our policy right now is like the fable of the donkey and the two bales of hay," says a senior official, "he couldn't decide which one to eat so he died of starvation."

The feeling of frustration in the top ranks of the foreign office—of having the talent and capability and being denied the chance to use it properly—is palpable. "Why all this timidity and humility? Why are we reduced to reacting to situations rather than acting on situations?" queries a top MEA official. "We have the fourth largest army in the world, we have the technological edge, we are not dependent on anybody for feeding our people, we have the second largest population in the world and the biggest flourishing democracy. But instead of being nightingales, we are parrots."

The only ray of hope, as many in the service see it, is reposed in the man who currently occupies the plush corner office on the first floor of South Block, Foreign Secretary A.P. Venkateswaran. He has the confidence, the capability and the courage to buck the mounting odds that the foreign office is currently faced with—if he is given a freer hand in the running of the service. He has already laid out his list of priorities and objectives, which, as he emphasised in his circular, "will require the cooperation of everyone in the service. If we can come even within a reasonable distance of achieving these objectives, I feel that we would have brought about a worthwhile transformation in the foreign service as a body to which we are privileged to belong".

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The only ray of hope, as many in the service see it, is reposed in the person of Foreign Secretary A.P. Venkateswaran—if he is given a freer hand in the running of the service.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STORMAC PRINTING AND COATING SYSTEMS

Orders for 4 complete lines under execution.

Stormac India Ltd. in partnership with internationally renowned Stork Brabant B.V. of the Netherlands manufacture the most modern Coating and Printing systems available in India.

Each Stormac installation is made strictly in accordance with the designs, specifications and standards of Stork and is custom-built to meet the specific needs of the customer. Stormac Coating and Printing Systems are noted for their versatility of application, operational economy and efficiency and perform satisfactorily with a wide variety of coating media on a number of different substrates.

The systems incorporate:-

Rotary Screen Coating/Printing Units
Knife Coating Units
Rotogravure Coating/Printing Units.

Stormac Coating/Printing Systems find application in the manufacture of—

* PU, PU/PVC & PVC Artificial Leather
* PVC Wall Coverings
* Cushion Vinyl Floor Coverings
* PVC Coated Tarpaulins and Industrial Fabrics
* PU Coated Rainwear/Wind Cheater Material
* Fusible Interlinings

STORMAC's valued and highly satisfied customers include:

- National Leather Cloth Manufacturing Co., Bombay
- Feno Plast Pvt. Ltd., Hyderabad
- Lucky Plast Pvt. Ltd., Delhi
- Roto Screen Tech Pvt. Ltd., Rajkot
- Gor Leather Industries Pvt. Ltd., Bombay
- A. Arti Leathers Pvt. Ltd., Ahmedabad

ATE/21/86

Manufacturers: STORMAC India Limited

Sales & Service: Associated Textile Engineers, Industrial Products Division, 1st Floor, Raja Bahadur Mansions,
28, Bombay Samachar Marg, Fort, BOMBAY-400 023.
Tel: 275102, 275197, 271097. Telex: 011-2118 ATE IN. Telegram: 'CORATEX'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN A SPOT

THE SHRIRAM family that runs DCM is in a bit of a spot: it has to find Rs 10 crore to buy out Swraj Paul's 13 per cent holding in the company, but is unable to get the money together—unlike Escorts, which has rushed through with the deal. Matters have become more complicated because the male members of the family and their descendants simultaneously want to buy out Lala Shriram's daughters and their descendants, who in any case have had no stake in the management of the company, and who would therefore prefer to invest their money elsewhere. But this deal too is stalled, because the money required for the deal has yet to be found. Meanwhile, DCM itself is not doing very well—a money-spinning unit in Delhi was closed following a gas leak and the company is unlikely to declare a dividend this year.

NEW PROPOSAL

RELIANCE Industries, never a company to sit quiet, has now proposed to the Government that it should be allowed to expand its licensed capacity for linear alkyl benzene (LAB)—a raw material for manufacturing detergents—from 50,000 tonnes to 80,000 tonnes. The initial licence has not yet been implemented, and the company would like to go in for a bigger operation from the start, with an investment of Rs 32.4 crore and an expected turnover of Rs 57 crore. Rivals view the companies proposal in the context of efforts by other companies to get licences from the Government for setting up their own LAB plants. The outcome of this battle should indicate whether the wind continues to blow unfavourably for Reliance in New Delhi's corridors of power, or whether it has changed direction.

PANELS APLENTY

BELIEVE it or not, the country's bemused exporters are faced with not one but three courts of final appeal. With a number of agencies functioning in the export arena, exporters had long been demanding an apex body to which they could appeal on day-to-day export matters. The Government finally obliged them early this year. The snag: both the Industry and the Commerce Ministry came up with committees headed by their respective secretaries, leaving businessmen thoroughly confused as to which one would have the last word. The official answer to their predicament? Yet another committee, headed by the cabinet secretary. Straddling all these are a cabinet committee on exports headed by the prime minister which is looking at policy issues, taking the total number of committees to four.

PRICING PROBLEM

WITH the prices of several new models of two-wheelers ruling at unexpectedly high levels—new 100 cc models often cost more than older 125 cc and even 175 cc machines—the Government has now sat up and taken notice of an irrational situation. The problem, lies in the duty burden borne by the new models, many of which have a high import content, on which they are charged customs duty. The continued rise of the yen during the last few months has only compounded the problem. New car models face a similar problem, but the Government seems inclined to look more considerately at the problems of the two-wheeler industry, and a duty reduction may be round the corner.

THE TALL TATAS

WHICH corporate giants will be ahead of the field four years from now? The first ever answer to this very interesting question comes from the research bureau of Business Standard, which concludes after a regression analysis that none other than the two Tata giants—TISCO and TELCO—will continue to head the field in 1989-90, followed well behind by ACC in the unlikely third spot, with Reliance Industries coming no better than fourth. The analysis takes a number of factors into account before making its forecast, but clearly some of the companies could do better than they are given credit for, given their plans for launching new projects. Equally, some of the other companies seem overrated for their growth potential.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CHIPPING TROUBLE

WIPRO, the Bangalore-based computer unit, has run into an unexpected conflict with Sentinel Computer Corporation, the US company from which it initially acquired its technology in 1980. Sentinel has said that it is cancelling its licence arrangements with Wipro and has called on it to stop using software and manufacturing or selling products based on Sentinel technology because of "various breaches, contraventions and violations" of Wipro's agreements with Sentinel. But Wipro counters that it had bought Sentinel's technology outright on a lumpsum payment, that Sentinel's contentions are "absurd" and that the US company is raising these claims to try and take advantage of Wipro's success in India because Sentinel has failed in the American market. The company says that its subsidiary has invested over Rs 4.5 crore in research and development, resulting in "significant indigenous development of several hardware and software products". It now remains to be seen which company will sue first.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXCISE

The Business Blacklist

HE HAS been neither a businessman nor a money-lender. But Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh's ingenuity for devising novel ways of recovering government dues should provide object lessons for many a Marwari and money-lender in the country. Initially, Singh launched punitive raids on erring businessmen in order to get the message across that he would not tolerate tax evasion. When this strategy ran into a strong head-wind, he and his advisers decided to go for the jugular: no tax evader, Singh decreed, should be allowed to get favours from the Government, including industrial licences, permission to issue shares, foreign currency loans, and money from Government-owned financial institutions. Having got Cabinet approval for the decision, the Finance Ministry last month decided to blacklist 21 leading business houses which had Central excise dues of over Rs 5 crore each.

Determined to ensure that the new fiat would have the maximum possible sting, Singh decreed that even sister companies of defaulting corporations would be denied clearance. So the 'blacklist' reads like a veritable who's who of Indian industry, featuring such illustrious names as Russi Mody (TISCO), R.P. Goenka (Dunlop and Ceat), K.N. Modi (Modi Rubber and Bombay Tyres) and Jagdish Sapru (ITC). Other companies include GTC, Hindustan Lever, Bhadrachalam Paper Boards, Arbuda Mills and Hind Lamps (see table). The total excise outstandings against these companies exceeded a staggering Rs 400 crore. Though many of the companies concerned have taken their tax disputes to the courts, Finance Ministry officials argue that if the companies can delay tax payments by getting stay orders on purely technical grounds, the Government can also use its executive powers to deny them sanctions that they seek. Said V.P. Singh: "If a group can't clear its dues then there must be something wrong with its management. If they collect money from their customers as excise and other taxes, this must come to the treasury immediately."

Singh set the ball rolling on his controversial—and potentially explosive—proposal last December. The Central Board of Excise and Customs (CBEC) calculated that various business houses had been able to withhold over Rs 3,700 crore as excise duty on one pretext or the other. While the recovery of over Rs 1,700 crore was stayed by various courts, the remaining Rs 2,000 crore was locked up in departmental adjudication, which many businessmen were delaying on many counts. The revenue department prepared a list of "persistent and deliberate defaulters" and the finance minister took this to the Cabinet and recommended that none of them receive any government backing.

The formal proposal sent to the Cabinet in February suggested that:

- Groups which had defaulted on taxes should not be given any industrial licence;
- The Department of Company Affairs, which administers the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Act, should be asked to withhold clearance for expansion or diversification programmes suggested by the defaulting groups;
- The Department of Economic Affairs should not sanction any external commercial borrowings;
- No debenture and share issues should be allowed to the blacklisted companies;
- Comprehensive guidelines be sent to financial institutions, advising care in giving loans to groups that owe taxes.

Even within the Government, the proposal created shockwaves. But after a month of to-ing and fro-ing, the Cabinet finally gave its approval. The Revenue Department then sent a list of over 200 companies (linked to the 21 major defaulters) to all the important ministries and departments, including industry, electronics, commerce, company affairs and petrochemicals. The list even included the public sector Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) and Oil India.

Despite the Cabinet approval, officials (including some in the Prime Minister's Secretariat) continued to seek ways of diluting the proposal. The Industry Ministry

Chart by B.K. Sharma

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

> "If a group can't clear its dues, then there must be something wrong with its management. If they collect money from their customers as excise and other taxes, this must come to the treasury."
>
> V.P. SINGH
> finance minister

argued that the country's industrial development could not be mortgaged to revenue collection. It also wanted public sector units to be excluded, and contended that the cut-off limit of tax dues, for a company to be included in the blacklist, should be raised from Rs 1 crore to Rs 5 crore. The Finance Ministry eventually fell in line with these suggestions.

THROUGH this period of debate, several companies on the Finance Ministry's list managed to get away with official clearances. The Birlas were allowed to become partners in Indo-Gulf Fertiliser, R.P.Goenka got clearance for acquiring some of Dunlop's overseas shareholdings, ITC plans a major restructuring and share issue, GTC's Sanjay Dalmia got permission for Dalmia Resorts to issue share capital, the Singhanias have been going ahead with the broadbanding of licences and joint sector projects, Hindustan Lever has been pursuing normal expansion plans, and many are lobbying for new projects: the Tatas with the Honda car proposal, for instance. In none of these cases is there any sign of the panic that would be inevitable if the door had been slammed shut in their faces.

Official explanations for this are not entirely convincing. But there is little doubt that the Industry Ministry (and perhaps some of the other wings of government) has little stomach for V.P. Singh's brainwave. But the Finance Ministry has gone right ahead, refusing permission to several leading business houses to raise funds on the capital market, holding up their proposals for overseas loans and not clearing the acquisition or the merger of some companies.

One person to suffer, ironically, is President of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, R.P. Goenka, who was not granted permission to buy additional overseas shares of Dunlop (some shares had been bought earlier). The reason: his companies have excise dues of over Rs 85 crore. A lot of this is held up in court action, but some of it is not. Among companies that have not been given permission to issue shares are Duncan Agro Industries (run by G.P. Goenka, R.P. Goenka's brother), Bombay Tyres International (run by the Modis), Orient Paper (a Birla unit), Ceat Tyres (R.P. Goenka), and Continental Construction Company.

The ministry's stubborn attitude has begun to pay dividends. Last fortnight R.P. Goenka told Revenue Department officials that he had a cheque for Rs 2 crore, and this was the first step to clearing his companies' dues. Said CBEC Chairman Jyotirmoy Dutta: "Every day we have been getting more than half a dozen proposals for part payment of dues."

Russi Mody

R.P. Goenka

K.N. Modi

Jagdish Sapru

Among the leading businessmen affected by the Government's decision to blacklist tax-defaulting companies are Russi Mody (TISCO), R.P. Goenka (Dunlop and Ceat), K.N. Modi (Modi Rubber and Bombay Tyres) and Jagdish Sapru (ITC).

The Government has, of course, not told affected companies and groups that they have been formally blacklisted, as this might provoke legal action. The ministry is aware that such formal notices are fraught with legal danger, and the guidelines on the subject that have been sent to the financial institutions are couched in suitably careful language. Ministry officials conceded that some of the companies may not even be aware of the Government decision (K.N.Modi, for instance, confessed he had no idea that his group had been blacklisted), but said that most businessmen knew they would get nothing out of the Government till the tax money was paid up.

Meanwhile, the industries affected by V.P. Singh's decision have been plying the Government with memoranda stating their case. Typically, the industry associations have blamed the Revenue Department for overcharging them, so that they were forced to resort to legal remedy. The tyre industry (one of the biggest culprits) argued in a representation: "We have never stopped legal dues, but more often than not the excise authorities have not given us benefits genuinely due to us according to law." The cigarette business (another major culprit) said in its representation: "The laws are vague and difficult to understand. They give enough scope for interpretation, and different people have been taxed differently for the same product. We have to fight these discrepancies. Hence the delay in payments."

These representations, however, have cut little ice with V.P.Singh, who sees the issue in simple terms: companies with large tax dues are delaying payment of money to the Government on a number of pretexts. He salvaged his budget last year through the tax raids, which put the fear of God into potential tax evaders and sent tax collection soaring despite the sharp drop in tax rates. This year Singh has a large deficit to handle, plus additional burdens like the pay commission, and he must ensure that the money keeps coming in, lest he is left at the end of the year with an unpretty picture to present to Parliament. So whether industry protests or not, and whether the other ministries cooperate or not, he says he intends going full steam ahead with his latest drive.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GTC PROBE

The Smoke Rings

THE MONEY involved is Rs 50 crore. The Government's investigators unearthed what they saw as a tax fiddle to squirrel away this enormous amount into secret pockets two years ago during raids conducted between 1980 and 1982. Yet, in a cautionary tale that involves textbook bureaucratic dawdling, deliberate delays and legal quibbles, the Government has been inexplicably tardy in trying to recover the sum from Golden Tobacco Company (since renamed GTC Industries). The price of the delay: Rs 10 lakh daily.

At one stage, the officials handling the case were systematically transferred to far-flung outposts. Questions have been asked in Parliament, alleging attempts at hushing up the case. And the Public Accounts Committee has persistently nudged the Finance Ministry into taking follow-up measures. But the money remains unrecovered.

The action began after a long investigation, when GTC's premises, wholesalers and semi-wholesalers were raided in several towns and cities across the country. "Truckloads of documents" were recovered as evidence, as well as statements under questioning allegedly indicating that the cigarette-manufacturing company was engaged in a nation-wide excise evasion exercise in collusion with its dealers. Finally, after a parliamentary storm during which the Government was openly accused of attempting a cover-up, the excise authorities issued two show cause notices to GTC in 1983.

But the company's lawyers got a stay order from the courts on the ground that the notices dealt with matters that were time-barred: a show cause notice relating to under-recovery of excise can only cover a period starting six months before the notice's issuance. And as GTC's lawyer Umesh Khaitan argued, the period covered by the 1983 notice covered 1978-79 and 1979-80.

Two full years later, the authorities woke up once again—after the Parliamentary Public Accounts Committee got into the act. This time, they issued a notice to the company making allegations of fraud. But once again, GTC went to the court and got a stay order—on the same ground: the matter was time-barred. A notice including allegations of fraudulent manipulation covers a longer period: five years. But the company lawyers pointed out that, as before, more than five years had elapsed before the notice was issued and this was indeed the case—the 1985 notice related to a period before 1980. If the charge of fraud had been made in either of the 1983 show cause notices, the company's lawyers would have been unable to get a stay order on the technical ground of the matter being time-barred. But this was not done. And now the court has ordered that while administrative proceedings against the company may continue, no orders can be issued.

Even today, the case has not come up for departmental adjudication, though excise officials acknowledge that the daily loss is a staggering Rs 10 lakh. Only now has the Revenue Department in the Finance Ministry stirred itself to create a special cell in the Central Board of Excise and Customs (CBEC), charged with preparing a prosecution case against GTC. Said CBEC Chairman Jyotirmoy Dutta: "We are not going to allow anybody to take advantage of any delay on our part. We have a cast iron case against them and we will fight it out in the court." But that only begged the question: why had the matter dragged on for four years if the Government had a cast iron case?

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The information already with the officials, meanwhile, reveals a ingenious modus operandi through which—Government documents allege—GTC and its dealers used a system of fictitious accounts, phony agencies, fiscal legerdemain and tight control of the distribution machinery to avoid paying their fair share of taxes. This scenario, however, is disputed by Khaitan, who argued last fortnight that, "There is nothing to the case. There are no real facts behind the show cause notice. After the raids took place, there was an extensive inquiry by the officials concerned, and they did not find a shred of wrong-doing."

Nevertheless, the fact remains that strong influence was brought to bear on the Government to thwart the investigation, and senior officials in the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence severely curtailed the number of investigators on the job and slowed down the pace of the inquiry.

Moreover, the Government's own records show that, since 1980, it had details compiled by the investigators which set out a graphic account of what GTC and its dealers were up to. The case diary records that in 1979, when Sanjay Dalmia bought GTC from the Narsis—a Gujarati family—all the company's existing wholesalers were replaced with 13 Marwari families. By 1983, some 40 such families were running a network of 330 wholesalers who controlled the company's sales throughout India. In 1982, their cigarette sales in Bombay were controlled by just two families—the Sardas and the Thards—each of which had several subsidiary partnerships under which market territories were clearly defined.

The wholesalers and other dealers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

down the line, the Government's documents say, were chosen not so much for their experience in the cigarette trade as for the purpose of forming a tightly-knit organisation which would be an extension of the mother company in the fiscal wheeling and dealing that was to follow. The investigators alleged that the business relationship between GTC and its dealers "was in the nature of transactions between commercially related persons who have both a direct and indirect interest in promoting the business of each other".

THE MASTER PLAN to dodge excise payments, the documents allege, began in 1979. GTC began steadily reducing its wholesale prices, often by minor changes in the brand names of its cigarettes. The price reductions brought down the excise burden as well as the tax on profits. On paper, there was nothing illegal about this exercise. As attorney Khaitan put it: "The cigarette industry has total freedom to fix its prices. In fact, our price lists were approved by the Government after negotiations. The whole scheme was revealed to the Government."

But there was one hitch. If the wholesale prices were reduced, the retail prices should also have come down. This did not happen; instead, they remained unchanged. And Government investigators alleged after their investigations that the wholesale prices too had changed only on paper; in reality, even these had not come down. The "lowered" prices were reflected in kutcha or dummy vouchers. The difference between the old and the new price—the Government argues—was then ploughed back into the company.

The charge against the company is that this accounting gimmick was designed to bring down the selling price of cigarettes in the books, thereby drastically reduce the excise levy on the cigarettes, and then plough the money back in a manner that did not attract taxes.

GTC's wholesale buyers, after getting their cigarettes at an unusually low price, sold them downstream to their dealers or semi-wholesalers with a higher margin. For example, GTC supplied Panama Virginia Special to its wholesale buyers at Rs 69.18 per thousand cigarette sticks. The wholesaler sold them at Rs 94.20 to semi-wholesale dealers. But this last price—the real earnings—were not reflected in the account books because the wholesalers gave kutcha vouchers to the dealers showing that they had sold the cigarettes at Rs.74.20. The actual profit to the wholesaler (the difference between Rs 69.18 and Rs 94.20) worked out to about Rs 25 per thousand cigarettes. But for the record, the wholesalers showed a profit of only Rs 5: the difference between Rs 69.18 (the artificially lowered ex-factory price) and Rs 74.20 (the dummy voucher). Government investigators say that the hidden profit of Rs 20 was ploughed back into the company through a series of tax evasion devices.

BHAWAN SINGH

The Government charges Sanjay Dalmia's GTC with operating through closely-knit wholesalers to siphon money out of the company and then plough it back through fictitious book entries so as to evade Rs 50 crore in excise duties.

Similarly, GTC supplied Panama Filter King to its wholesalers at Rs 90.91 per thousand sticks. The wholesaler realised an actual price of Rs 154.25 from his dealers, but invoices showed that the dealers had only paid Rs 104.25, thereby creating an unaccounted profit margin of Rs 50 per thousand cigarettes.

According to a Finance Ministry report, one method of ploughing back the secret profits was through a complex system of deposits and commercial credit, with interest charges so designed as to get the money back into the company from the wholesalers. In other words, the debits and credits were manipulated in such a way that they served the purpose of creating a legal cash flow between the wholesaler and the company to cover the flow-back of the "extra" money.

Another method by which the unaccounted cash found its way to the parent company was in the form of advertising and sales promotion expenses borne by wholesalers, government investigators reported. Seized records as well as raids on several advertising companies revealed that these expenses, though borne by the wholesaler, were actually controlled by the company. And several crores worth of bills maintained by GTC as advertising and sales promotion expenses were suspected to be either inflated or fictitious. In addition, several advertising agencies which were submitting bills to GTC were found to be functioning only on paper and issued bills merely as a means to facilitate the flow-back of funds from the wholesalers to GTC. At least three agencies—Govan Advertising (which is owned by the Dalmias), Everest Advertising and Blitz Advertising—raised bills against both wholesale buyers and against wholesale dealers.

Investigators recommended that owing to several "suspicious transactions", in which the officers of the company may themselves have directly participated, it would be necessary to obtain the statements of all the directors and senior officers as well as to keep a constant vigil on the entire GTC network in order to prevent alteration or further destruction of records. Once again, this was not done. Instead, revenue officers in charge of the case were transferred to different parts of the country and the adjudication process allowed by the high court has moved at a snail's pace. It was only after Finance Minister V.P. Singh insisted that his officials go after the "big fish" that the department swung into some action. Said V.P.Singh: "I don't believe in words like 'time-barred'. If the money is due to us we will recover it even after 100 years." Only time will tell whether Singh is willing to put his money where his mouth is.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JHARIA COALFIELDS

Ordeal by Fire

AS THE first showers of the monsoon lashed the Jharia coalfields last fortnight, vast areas in southern Bihar's coal belt suddenly turned copper red, the earth cracked, flames leapt skyward and a thick brown cloud of poisonous carbon monoxide spewed out, spreading fear and panic. The underground inferno, raging for decades, had burnt its way through yet another seam of coal-rich Jharia land.

If unchecked, the fire can destroy 17.32 square kilometres of land and 117 million tonnes of prime coking coal. Already, the fires have endangered numerous coal production outlets, surface infrastructure installations, railway sidings, roads and drainage channels, besides wiping out several housing blocks. And if local politicians and social workers are to be believed, 5,000 people are uprooted every year or affected in a variety of ways because of the fires underground. Last fortnight, even as fresh flames leapt out of the earth, the Controller of Fire and Environment in the Western Jharia coalfields, K.K.Malhotra, led a convoy of bulldozers to level the Angar-Pathra project where the underground fire had reduced 40 houses to ashes, apart from searing a 22-hectare stretch of land with its blazing heat.

But the problem can be doused, the first successes have been notched up in the fire-fighting operations, and Bharat Coking Coal Ltd (BCCL) last fortnight unrolled a Rs 125-crore plan aimed at taming the remaining 70 fires and freeing 90 million tonnes of the 117 million tonnes of coking coal still locked in the fiery earth underneath. This marks the most ambitious effort so far to confront the problem.

In June, the Jogta fire—which had been eating into Jharia's vitals for over four decades—was finally put out. The method employed to control 18.9 hectares of blazing fire was simple: after ploughing the surface with bulldozers, the entire block was isolated by trench-cutting and the gaps covered with heavy layers of soil. Simultaneously, 14 million tonnes of coal which had been encircled by the Jogta fire, was also freed. Earlier, the blaze, which had sent the soil temperature shooting to 40 and 50 degrees Celsius, had killed all bio-life in the area. But the Jogta fire control project has changed the picture dramatically. As many as 21,000 of the 65,000 saplings planted in the last six years have survived, the oxygen level in the area has been brought down sharply, two fish hatcheries have been developed, and now BCCL officials are planning to raise a forest on a 20-hectare stretch of land; a playground and a park are also being developed. According to BCCL officials, apart from Jogta, fires have also been put out at Moolkharki, Kuridih, East Katras, Jogidih and Let Mudih.

There have been other partial successes too. Under the Londa fire control project, sanctioned in 1979 with a capital investment of Rs 17.95 crore, the danger to Londa's surface complex, the Dhanbad-Pathdrih rail line and the Jharia-Sindri road has been partly checked; also the emission of smoke, steam and obnoxious gases has been suppressed.

Under the Braree fire project, also sanctioned in 1979 with an outlay of Rs 3.78 crore, the fire is being dealt with by the surface sealing method. The digging of coal was stopped in March 1984 because the fire-front had advanced well ahead of the quarry face. But a great deal of the local coal has now been saved from getting ravaged by the flames. Some amount of success has also been achieved under the Rajapur fire project.

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

Gas and smoke in the danger zone (top); and fish tank on former fire ground

The fires in Jharia had been caused in the first place by spontaneous heating, illicit distillation in abandoned mines, selective mining, fire in quarry debris and the dumping of hot ash. But according to S.C.Batra, deputy director of mines safety, spontaneous heating is the most common cause of major fires, including the ones at Jogta, Sijua and Londa. He argues that the making of soft coke in quarries and on ground broken by mining operations is also responsible for these fires.

Attempts to douse the fires before nationalisation by private mine owners, singly or jointly, by trench-cutting, sand blanketing and digging yielded poor results since they lacked the resources, expertise and equipment required for the difficult job. However, in the course of their trial and error methods, the private mine owners succeeded in turning 35 million tonnes of coal into ash. At today's prices, that would be worth a staggering Rs 700 crore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Despite the breakthroughs achieved by BCCL and the unveiling of a long-term plan to tackle the problem, the task of putting out the fires altogether remains daunting. The most difficult issue may be the re-locating of people in the affected areas. The 'Quit Jharia' notice, which was served on the coal town's residents, on the ground that the city is sitting atop an inferno, has not been followed up in any way and is now the subject of local mockery. A signboard fixed at the entrance of Jharia, proclaiming it a danger zone, has been missing for a long time and no effort has been made to replace it. And the Dhanbad deputy commissioner admitted that though "we are aware of the dangers, forcible eviction of one lakh people is not possible". Said Ashish Banerjee, a shop worker: "I have been hearing of this notice for the last several years but all along, in blatant disregard of the notice, buildings have been mushrooming, shops have been coming up and market complexes growing in Jharia."

Nevertheless, the state Coal-mines Development Authority is busy chalking out schemes to lure Jharia's population away through attractive incentives. BCCL sources say seven satellite townships are to be developed in a plan to shift Jharia's population by the turn of the century. In May, Coal India floated a global tender asking architects and town planners to "meet the challenge of building a township for 10,00,000 inhabitants....The conceptual plan should include multi-storey buildings for residences, shopping centres, stadia, parks, gardens, lakes and other modern civic amenities. The proposed township needs to be linked with Jharia coalfields through shuttle trains and road transport."

But the plan, if applicable to Jharia township, is likely to face rough weather once it gets off the drawing-boards. One of the formidable opponents of the evacuation plan is the powerful Janata Party MLA Suryadeo Singh, who has made his intention known clearly. The issue has also attracted a great deal of public attention, being the main election plank in the last Lok Sabha and assembly polls. Clearly, the fire underground will spark off political firestorms overground if the authorities push through with their scheme. However, without such a scheme, there is little hope of finally putting out the underground fires either, notwithstanding the recent successes in Jogta and elsewhere.

—FARZAND AHMED in Jharia

HINDUSTAN CIBA-GEIGY

Brand Bother

NAME-dropping is not the prerogative of the arriviste alone. Companies sometimes do it and, as Hindustan CIBA-Geigy will testify, the consequences can be quite unforeseen. CIBA has been hauled up by the Trade Marks Registrar for misleading consumers, and its expensive advertisement blitz has been terminated. Binaca, it was shouting from the roof-tops, has become Cibaca. Now, however, the only advertisements one is likely to see will state instead that Binaca is not Cibaca.

This confusing saga was sparked off by the sale of the consumer products division of CIBA-Geigy of Switzerland, to the English firm Reckitt and Colman (overseas). India and Pakistan were left out of the deal however, thus creating an anomalous situation: while the local incarnation of CIBA could continue making the same products, it could not use the original brand name. The item that mattered—the Binaca line of oral hygiene products which fetched the Indian company Rs 23 crore in 1985—had thus to don new raiment.

"We launched a very effective campaign," says Hindustan CIBA-Geigy consumer products chief S. Kalra. "We explained that everything was the same but the name Binaca had become Cibaca." But the hitch came when Reckitt and Colman in India approached the Registrar of Trade Marks for assignment of the Binaca brand name.

While the Calcutta-based Reckitt and Colman declined to comment at all on the whole affair, Joint Registrar of Trade Marks K.C. Kailasam pointed out that, "The advertisements were a violation of the law." Added Kailasam: "They were misleading the public. Binaca and Cibaca are two separate brands which are owned by different companies."

But what really caused Hindustan CIBA-Geigy to sit up and take note was the registrar's order that the damage should be rectified through "suitable corrigenda both in the press and television". After spending a rather large sum of money on propagating the message that Binaca was Cibaca, it could hardly sit back and watch Reckitt and Colman start a campaign saying the very reverse.

CIBA executives rushed hotfoot to the registrar. "We convinced him," says CIBA Company Secretary M.R.Lal, "that there was nothing wrong with the campaign, and anyway, that phase of it had come to an end."

The registrar, however, has a different version of the meeting. "They came with their attorneys and even contended that they would go to court to challenge the decision," says Kailasam, "but they failed to convince me that the advertisements were not misleading. The only concession we made was to delete the bit about issuing corrigenda on TV."

Matters were, however, patched up. CIBA has stopped the campaign and removed the hoardings. "We are not going to use the word Binaca in our advertisements any more," explains Kalra. Only the footnotes are left to be filled. Reckitt and Colman (overseas) has already complied with the Trade Marks Registrar's instructions to counter the CIBA campaign. Now CIBA-Geigy of Switzerland has been asked to issue a similar notice. And that, one supposes, should finally convince the misled consumer that while Binaca is not Cibaca, it is the same thing anyway.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

The offending ad: causing ripples

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TATAS

Twin Trouble

IN APRIL this year a new chief executive was drafted into National Radio and Electronics Company Limited (NELCO). His job: to turn around a company which has been making losses for most of the 40 years it has been in existence. At about the same time, winding up operations were going full steam ahead at Tata Burroughs Limited's (TBL) manufacturing unit in Santa Cruz. In less than seven years, it had become a white elephant.

The two companies are Tata stable-mates, and were supposed to be front runners in the group's thrust into new growth areas. Instead, both are evidently in trouble, and the might of the Tatas seems to have been of little help in a field where numerous small-scale entrepreneurs have a far better track record.

For NELCO, of course, being in trouble is practically a way of life. It surfaced momentarily in 1982-83 to make a profit of Rs 64 lakh and then Rs 1.14 crore in 1983-84, but then slipped back to a Rs 1.10 crore loss in the 18-month accounting period that followed. Its radio division is unlikely to ever pay its way, its computers have failed to make a splash and its various efforts to diversify are yet to bear fruit.

Says S.K. Mukherjee, the newly-appointed chief executive: "NELCO can be called a company of lost opportunities. It concentrated on manufacturing when it needed a marketing orientation. It stuck to radios while others diversified. It got into a groove." The new boss's recipe for revival is to divisionalise the organisation, introduce more accountability and diversify into data acquisition systems, cable TV and other high-tech areas. "You will see a new NELCO soon," he promises.

Why NELCO has constantly been allowed to remain in the doldrums is a mystery; how it has managed is no big secret. While its competitors merely added their brand names to cheap cottage industry products, it set up a huge manufacturing infrastructure. And it began with a particular approach and disdained change.

TBL's fate has been little better. It was set up in 1977 to market Burroughs' systems, manufacture peripherals and sub-assemblies and provide software and computer consultancy. Today after several midstream corrections, only consultancy keeps the company going.

"NELCO can be called a company of lost opportunities."

S.K. MUKHERJEE
President and Chief Executive of NELCO

Business India

"We have had setbacks. But these are inevitable in a fast moving industry."

MINOO MODY
Director of TBL

(Centre) Closed TBL printer assembly area

Computer sales never really took off, while rivals outfits flourished. The manufacturing line for printers, inaugurated in 1979, was ill-judged: Japanese technology made it obsolete in no time. After stumbling along, its Santa Cruz unit has finally been closed down, with 26 employees being offered a golden handshake. And the sortie into magnetic ink character recognition encoders has not proved very successful so far as the banking sector is dragging its feet. "We have had our setbacks," admits Director M.H. Mody. "But these are inevitable in a fast moving industry."

Now, as in the case of NELCO, a fresh start is being made. On the manufacturing side, TBL is now concentrating on Burroughs B25 super-micros for which a plant has been set up in Goa. But this will be priced much higher than existing alternatives, and so may not get customers trooping in. Mody insists, however, that the B25 has a vastly superior performance and potential. This is true. But industry sources feel that with computerisation just taking off, clients would prefer to invest in a less expensive machine to start with. As a rival company's executive put it, "Even if you give a 10-year-old a 42-function calculator that costs $50, he will still use only the four basic functions."

But even TBL's software business is not doing as well as before. While product sales understandably dropped from Rs 3.98 crore in 1984 to a meagre Rs 12 lakh in 1985, income from services also declined from Rs 12.85 crore to Rs 10.66 crore. TBL has been riding piggyback on Burroughs Corporation of the US, doing routine software conversion jobs. The future evidently lies in a greater emphasis on manufacture. But too many plans have gone awry. Mody feels that the Government is not changing its policies fast enough and proposals were not cleared. He admits that TBL is facing a few more problems than the others but that, he counters, is because it has been in the game longer.

Not everybody agrees. "In this high-growth industry," says an executive of a leading computer manufacturer, "you have to be pro-active not reactive. Only those companies which are fast with their footwork will avoid becoming obsolete."

So the solution for the two companies may well lie in the Mukherjee prescription: "To get NELCO going," he says, "you have to take tomorrow's decisions yesterday." Evidently, both need to catch up with the times.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When you purchase property shares in Dalmia Resorts, you purchase one or more weeks every year (depending on your investment) in a beautiful holiday resort in some of the most exotic locations in India. The Unit is yours to occupy, enjoy and own for one or more weeks every year—forever! It is yours to live in, loan to friends, sell, let or bequeath to your heirs.

A ONCE-ONLY MINIMUM INVESTMENT OF Rs. 13,500 ONWARDS

You pay only once for a Dalmia Resort which you and your family can enjoy forever. There is a variety of accommodation types to choose from. Ranging from elegant Efficiency Units to Deluxe 2-Bedroom Units. The cost of a week varies from Rs. 13,500 to Rs. 29,500 depending upon the type of accommodation you select and the season your week falls in. You can buy as many weeks as you wish.

What's more! Unlike hotel accommodation where prices increase by around 10% every year, owning a Property Time Share assures your family an inflation-proof holiday. Forever! Add to it the bonus of an appreciating asset—after all you are buying real estate. Thus, with every Property Time Share you own, you benefit in more ways than one!

Dalmia Resorts International has now entered into an agreement with Canara Bank through which the Bank will act as the Custodian and Escrow Agent.

Your share purchase payments will be deposited in an Escrow Account, with money to be released according to the terms of the Escrow Agreement. The Bank will also hold the Title Deeds in trust on behalf of the owners.

32 RESORTS IN THE NEXT 4 YEARS

Dalmia Resorts International is based on an exciting new concept that has gained phenomenal popularity worldwide. In India, this unique new concept will give birth to 32 holiday resorts at various exotic locations over the next 4 years. Bhoomi Puja has already been performed in Goa and Kodaikanal. Foundations have been laid in Delhi. Several other sites are in various stages of negotiation.

ENDLESS VACATIONS ANYWHERE IN INDIA

When you buy property shares in any one of the many Dalmia Resorts, you don't own your own holiday resort in just one exotic location. You also have the right to exchange your resort with other Dalmia Resort owners anywhere in India through our Exchange Bank. So you can vacation in a different holiday resort every year, if you wish. All for a nominal fee!

EVEN A HOLIDAY ABROAD

What's more! Through our association with Resort Condominiums International (RCI), the world's largest Time Share Exchange company, you will also be able to exchange your resort in India with the owners of over 1000 RCI holiday resorts in 46 countries worldwide by just paying a nominal Exchange Fee!

YOU HAVE NOTHING TO LOSE—AND THE WORLD TO GAIN

Imagine owning your very own holiday resort for just Rs. 13,500. Forever!

Imagine holidaying in a different resort in India. Every year! Imagine holidaying in Rome, Paris, London, Hollywood, Hawaii... and even Disneyland!

HIGHLIGHTS

- Memorable holidays, year after year, forever!
- 32 resorts to choose from in the next 4 years.
- No maintenance hassles, as the resorts will be run by expert hotel managers.
- Even the smallest Unit is larger than a 5-Star hotel room and is fully equipped, with your own kitchenette.
- All facilities, such as Restaurants/Bars/Recreation facilities are yours, either free, at cost or at nominal charges.
- Exchange facility in India enables you to vacation at a different resort in India every year.
- Association with RCI, the world's largest Vacation Exchange Company with over 1000 resorts in 46 countries, allows you to enjoy holidays abroad too.
- Facility to rent/sell/gift/bequeath your property share.
- Appreciating asset, being real estate.

Property Shares in Dalmia Resorts

RCI world's largest company dealing in time share exchange

American Land Development Association

THIS COUPON CAN CHANGE YOUR LIFE

Act fast. Post this coupon today. It'll change the way you spend the rest of your holidays.

Name : _____

Address : _____

_____

_____

Tel : (Off.) _____ (Res.) _____ (IT-D/786)

DALMIA RESORTS International

esorts Office.
ombay Office : 65, Mittal Chambers, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Phones : 2021922, 2028843

Govan Advtg & Mktg /DRI/25A/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"18! At last ! Ready for a bike!"

Here you are – the stylish, gutsy bike that'll take you anywhere you'll go.

Feel its lively pick-up. Watch the (pretty!) heads turn when you dart away at the lights.

Notice how the frame and engine are mated perfectly. That's what makes the bike a breeze to handle.

Notice the attention to detail. The chunky fuel tank. Die-cast wheels. Tinted fibreglass windshield. Sleek instrumentation. The generous saddle.

In fact, the only thing miserly about the bike is its use of fuel : 60 kms per litre in actual city traffic.

Unbelievable?

Wait.

You haven't heard all.

Explorer is available, right away. You can walk into a showroom and ride out with it.

Today.

"18? Already?... Ready for a bike?"

Let's set your mind at ease. Are you worried about stability? The Explorer's 50cc engine and compact frame are matched perfectly for easy handling.

Tipping the scales at a sturdy 82 kg, the Explorer is a stable, well-balanced bike.

Safety? The bike's so manoeuvrable it takes city traffic, and sharp corners with ease. Besides, the tyres on the Explorer are wider than those on larger bikes. You see, the rider is in full control.

On the other hand, the 120 mm dia brakes on the Explorer are the same as those on larger bikes. No other 50cc bike has these brakes!

You can depend on the Germans to give you a sturdy design. But if you're still not sure, ask any owner.

He is your best reassurance.

Incidentally, Explorer is a good Rs.5000/- less than most other bikes!

Explorer by Enfield

All that a man's first bike should be.

OBM 9621

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEXTILE POLICY

Warped Progress

YOU WOULDN'T guess it from the official press release and Textile Minister Khurshid Alam Khan's comments, both of which are generous in praise of the results of the brave new textile policy, announced a year ago. But the fact is that rarely had any industry been less in a mood to celebrate than India's cloth manufacturers were last month, when the Government toasted the first anniversary of the new policy.

Some 70 mills are lying closed; more than a lakh textile workers are on the streets; though the Government has set its face against nationalising sick textile units, the Gujarat Government was forced to do just that last month; production by the textile mills had dropped, and it was little solace that output in the powerloom and handloom sectors had gone up. Finally, the air has been thick with charges hurled at the Government for having failed to stick to promises made in the policy. Complained Jaswant Rai, president of the Northern India Cotton Textile Mills' Assocation (NICTMA): "The policy's intentions and objectives are very good, but the implementation has been shoddy."

He has a point. A committee to assess the viability of the closed mills began functioning only three months ago, simply because the Government issued the relevant notification only last January. In even more laggard fashion, a Rs 750-crore government fund to modernise the industry as well as a Rs 10-crore fund to provide doles to laid-off workers were announced only last month. Said an exasperated M.K. Mohta, president of the Indian Spinners' Association (ISA): "The Government's modernisation plan hasn't been put into effect yet. You get results only when you prime the pump."

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Worse yet, the objective of paring the prices of synthetic textiles and sparking off a demand explosion has made little headway. The Government did not cut taxes on synthetics across the board, limiting the duty cuts to a few fibres and blends. The price drop that resulted was barely noticed, some companies refused to pass on the benefits of the lower tax rates, and a peeved Government recently jacked up some duties.

Meanwhile, labour is turning restive, and the Government seems to have developed cold feet about shutting down unviable units. An official committee recommended closing eight National Textile Corporation mills almost a year ago, but no action has been taken on the proposal. With more than 60,000 textile workers idling in Bombay alone, local parliamentarians like Murli S. Deora were worried enough last month to write to the textile minister urging him to swiftly tackle the unemployment problem. Said Deora last fortnight: "The textile policy was not supposed to serve the interests of the millowners alone. Hardly anything has been implemented to help the workers."

Amid this collective gloom, powerloom associations—which have been crying foul for almost all of last year—questioned a fundamental premise of the new policy (that they enjoyed inherent cost advantages over the integrated mills) and lobbied furiously for amending a law introduced last year for reserving 22 textile items for handloom

RANJAN BASU

"Government's modernisation plan hasn't been put into effect. You get results only when you prime the pump."

M.K. MOHTA
president, Indian Spinners' Association

RANJAN BASU

"The policy's intentions and objectives are very good, but the implementation has been shoddy."

JASWANT RAI
president, Northern India Cotton Textile Mills' Association

OBM 8621

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bank of Credit and Commer

(Incorporated in the Cayman

BALANCE SHE

Previous Year Rs. P.	CAPITAL AND LIABILITIES	Rs. P.	Rs. P.
	1. CAPITAL:
30,00,000.00	Nominal value of securities deposited with Reserve Bank of India under Section 11(2) of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949		30,00,000.00
	2. RESERVE FUND AND OTHER RESERVES:
5,37,094.00	Special Reserve (see note 1)
	3. DEPOSITS AND OTHER ACCOUNTS:
	Fixed Deposits:
5,10,00,000.00	(i) From banks	6,50,00,000.00
32,88,17,411.50	(ii) From others	1,10,54,71,022.87
37,98,17,411.50			1,17,04,71,022.87
1,46,56,872.31	Saving Bank deposits		6,08,16,784.34
	Current Accounts Contingency Accounts, etc.
52,60,427.70	(i) From Bank	1,74,56,828.79
18,98,88,726.11	(ii) From others	47,52,99,113.77
58,96,23,437.62			49,27,55,942.56
	4. BORROWINGS FROM OTHER BANKING COMPANIES, AGENTS, ETC.
20,91,46,000.00	(i) In India		14,59,08,000.00
92,20,949.76	(ii) Outside India		9,98,56,727.00
21,83,66,949.76
	PARTICULARS:
—	Secured		—
21,83,66,949.76	Unsecured		24,57,64,727.00
37,70,142.26	5. BILLS PAYBLE:
	6. BILLS FOR COLLECTION BEING BILLS RECEIVABLE AS PER CONTRA:
11,81,757.28	(i) Payable in India		72,00,855.60
12,32,86,982.00	(ii) Payable outside India		27,98,92,591.40
12,44,68,739.28
	7. OTHER LIABILITIES:
4,92,48,423.66	(i) Head Office and branches outside India-Net		5,04,09,550.08
1,17,12,454.63	(ii) Others (see note 2)		4,34,41,845.04
6,09,60,878.29
35,94,66,427.10	8. ACCEPTANCES, ENDORSEMENTS AND OTHER OBLIGATIONS PER CONTRA:
	9. PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT:
1,62,000.51	Profit as per last Balance sheet		43,97,153.11
42,35,152.60	Add: Profit for the year brought from Profit and Loss Account		2,14,19,568.10
43,97,153.11
	10. CONTINGENT LIABILITIES
—	(i) Claims against the Banking Company not acknowledged as debts		—
16,10,79,979.78	(ii) Guarantees given on account of customers		50,22,25,966.08
2,02,975.00	(iii) Guarantees given on account of officers		3,43,251.00
14,22,00,366.99	(iv) Bills of Exchange rediscounted:		88,05,79,957.56
75,14,81,668.86	(v) Outstanding Forward Exchange Contracts		1,42,05,89,685.84
1,36,15,90,821.42	TOTAL:		3,36,92,6

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ternational (Overseas) Limited

(mited Liability)

IN NCH

AT 31ST DECEMBER 1985

PROPERTY AND ASSETS

Previous Year Rs. P.		Rs. P.	Rs. P.	Rs. P.
	1. CASH: In hand and with Reserve Bank of India and State Bank of India (including foreign currency notes)			14,22,94,463.51
12,75,48,002.61	2. BALANCES WITH OTHER BANKS:
	(A) On Current Account:
34,33,621.72	(i) In India	75,35,054.15
27,13,471.27	(ii) Outside India	4,35,76,534,41
61,47,092.99			5,11,11,588.56
	(B) On Deposit Account:
—	(i) In India		—
—	(ii) Outside India		—
61,47,092.99				5,11,11,588.56
—	3. MONEY AT CALL AND SHORT NOTICE:			—
	4. INVESTMENTS (AT COST):
	(i) Securities of the Central & State Governments and other Trustee Securities uncluding Treasury Bills of the Central and State Governments (Market value of securities Rs. 40,20,67,884.00 (1984: Rs. 17,77,74,607.50) including Treasury Bills Rs. nil (1984: Rs. 7,90,80,000) at book value)		40,89,58,669.17
17,74,15,408.17	(ii) Shares		—
—	(iii) Debentures or Bonds		—
—	(iv) Other investments (units) (market value Rs. 14,00,00,000 1984—Nil)		14,00,00,000.00
—	(v) Gold		—
17,74,15,408.17				54,89,58,669.17
	5. ADVANCES: (Other than bad and doubtful debts for which provision has been made to the satisfaction of the Auditors)
	(1) Loans, Cash Credits, Overdrafts, etc.
37,29,24,891.68	(i) In India	77,83,47,166.67
36,72,202.24	(ii) Outside India	—
37,65,97,093.92			77,83,47,166.67
	(2) Bills Discounted and purchased (excluding Treasury Bills of the Central and State Government
10,27,11,952.39	(i) Payable in India	42,57,60,138.58
3,47,25,518.18	(ii) Payable outside India	10,67,68,169.09
13,74,37,470.57
51,40,34,564.49			53,25,28,307.67
	(Particulars as per schedule attached)			1,31,08,75,474.34
	6. BILLS RECEIVABLE BEING BILLS FOR COLLECTION AS PER CONTRA:
11,81,757.28	(i) Payable in India		72,00,855.60
2,32,86,982.00	(ii) Payable outside India		27,98,92,591.40
2,44,68,739.28
	7. CONSTITUENTS' LIABILITIES FOR ACCEPTANCES ENDORSEMENTS AND OTHER OBLIGATIONS PER CONTRA:			28,70,93,447.00
5,94,66,427.10	8. PREMISES LESS DEPRECIATION:			93,61,62,414.11
—	Cost as at 1st January, 1985		1,92,76,842.67
1,92,76,842.67	Additions during the year		1,19,31,457.44
1,92,76,842.67			3,12,08,300.11
—	Less: Deductions during the year		Nil
1,92,76,842.67			3,12,08,300.11
1,25,235.52	Less: Depreciation written off to date		5,49,837.11
1,91,51,607.15
	9. FURNITURE AND FIXTURES LESS DEPRECIATION: (INCLUDING VEHICLES AND EQUIPMENT)			3,06,58,463.00
15,82,852.76	Cost as at 1st January 1985		1,15,13,819.26
99,54,751.50	Additions during the year		94,80,245.39
1,15,37,604.26			2,09,94,064.65
23,785.00	Less: Deductions during the year.		71,972.27
1,15,13,819.26			2,09,22,092.38
12,10,702.06	Less: Depreciation written off to date		32,07,268.15
1,03,03,117.20
	10. OTHER ASSETS:			1,77,14,824.23
1,83,83,062.94	(i) Stamps, sundry advances, deposits and other accounts etc. (including advances and deposits for premises, furniture and fixtures (Rs. 80,83,72,055) (1984: Rs. 29,34,916) (see note 2)		2,67,61,543.46
41,82,799.49	(ii) Accrued Interest		1,71,37,606.62
4,90,000.00	(iii) Deposit under the Companies Deposits (surcharge on Income Tax) Scheme		5,00,250.00
2,30,55,862.43
—	11. NON-BANKING ASSETS ACQUIRED IN SATISFACTION OF CLAIMS:			4,43,99,400.08
—	12. PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT:			—
3,15,90,821.42	TOTAL:			3,36,92,68,744.00

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bank of Credit and Commer

(Incorporated in the Cayman

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCO

Previous Year Rs. P.	EXPENDITURE	Rs.
4,01,55,592.22	1. Interest Paid on Deposits, Borrowings, etc	17,67,70
25,41,273.21	2. Salaries, Allowances and Provident Fund (see note 3)	50,14
—	3. Directors' and Local Committee Members' fees and allowances
1,33,62,823.37	4. Rent, Taxes, Insurance, Lighting, etc.	5,24,74
75,058.00	5. Law Charges	2,64
5,26,759.91	6. Postage, Telegrams, and Stamps	14,26
13,500.00	7. Auditors' fees	25
30,20,523.59	8. Depreciation on and repairs to the banking Company's property.	48,32
5,28,799.73	9. Stationery, Printing, Advertisements, etc.	19,86
—	10. Loss from sale of or dealing with non-banking assets
50,73,280.46	11. Other Expenditure (including proportion of Head Office expenses)	1,56,70
42,35,152.60	12. Balance of profit for the year	2,14,19
6,95,32,763.09	TOTAL	27,98,84

Schedule of particulars of advances required by the Banking Regulation A

Previous Year Rs. P.		Rs
21,71,82,919.87	1. Debts considered good in respect of which the banking company is fully secured	64,62,1
8,87,74,214.78	2. Debts considered good for which the banking company holds no other security than the debtors' personal security	15,36,07
20,80,77,429.84	3. Debts considered good, secured by the personal liabilities of one or more parties in addition to the personal security of the debtors	51,10,51
—	4. Debts considered doubtful or bad not provided for
51,40,34,564.49		1,31,08,7

AUDITORS' REPORT

Auditors' Report on the Indian Branch of Bank of Credit and Commerce International (Overseas) Limited under Section 30 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949

We have audited the attached Balance Sheet of the Indian Branch of Bank of Credit & Commerce International (Overseas) Lim December 31, 1985 and the relative Profit and Loss Account of the Indian Branch of the Bank for the year ended on that date, s us under reference to this report.

In accordance with the provisions of Section 29 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949, read with the provisions of Sub-Sections and (5) of Section 211 and Sub-Section (5) of Section 227 of the Companies Act 1956, the Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss together with the notes attached thereto, are not required to be and are not drawn up in accordance with Schedule VI to the Co Act, 1956. The accounts are therefore, drawn up in conformity with Forms A and B of the Third Schedule to the Banking Regulat 1949.

We report that subject to and read with the foregoing remarks:

(1) We have obtained all the information and explanations which to the best of our knowledge and belief were necessary for the of our audit and have found them to be satisfactory;

(2) The transactions which have come to our notice have been, in our opinion, within the powers of the Indian Branch of the Ba

(3) In our opinion, proper books of account as required by law have been kept by the Branch so far as it appears from our examin those books maintained and produced to us at Bombay;

(4) The above mentioned Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Account of the Indian Branch of the Bank dealt with by this repo agreement with the books of accounts;

(5) In our opinion and to the best of our information and according to the explanations given to us, the Balance Sheet and Prof Account, together with the notes thereon, give the information required by the Companies Act, 1956, in the manner so req Banking Companies, and on such basis give a true and fair view in the case of the Balance Sheet of the state of affairs of the Branch of the Bank as at December 31, 1985, and in the case of Profit and Loss account of the Profit of the Indian Branch for ended on that date.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ternational (Overseas) Limited

mmer
in the Cayman mited Liability)
NCH

THE YEAR ENDED 31ST DECEMBER 1985

INCOME

Previous Year Rs.	P.		Rs.	P.
		(Less provision made during the year for Bad and Doubtful Debts and other usual or necessary provisions)
5,89,67,288.82		1. Interest and Discount	24,80,09,164.16
1,05,62,474.27		2. Commission Exchange and Brokerage	3,14,53,004.88
—		3. Rents	—
3,000.00		4. Net profit on sale of investments, gold and silver, land, premises and other assets (not credited to reserves or any particular fund or account)	4,22,165.40
—		5. Net Profit on revaluation of investments, gold and silver, land, premises and other assets (not credited to reserves or any particular fund or account)	—
—		6. Income for non-banking assets and profit from sale of or dealing with such assets	—
—		7. Other Receipts	—
		Note: Remuneration paid to General Manager and Chief Executive Officer in India (Previous period 4.4.84 to 31.12.84)
		(Rs.) 1,06,800 Salary — (Rs.) 1,44,000
		15,575 Perquisites (including benefits calculated in accordance with Income Tax Rules) — 36,096
		1,22,375 — 1,80,096
27,98,84	6,95,32,763.09	TOTAL	27,98,84,334.44

of 1949) annexed to and forming part of the Balance Sheet as at 31st December 1985

Previous Year Rs.	P.		Rs.	P.
21,88,271.98		5. Debts due by directors or officers of the banking company or any of them either severally or jointly with any other persons	31,15,134.09
—		6. Debts due by companies or firms in which the directors of the banking company are interested as directors, partners or managing agents or in the case of private companies, as members	—
21,88,271.98		7. Maximum total amount of advances including temporary advances made at any time during the year to directors or managers or officers of the banking company or any of them either severally or jointly with any other persons	31,15,134.09
—		8. Maximum total amount of advances including tempoary advances granted during the year to the companies or firms in which the directors of the banking company are interested as directors, partners or managing agents or in the case of private companies, as members	—
36,72,202.24		9. Due from banking companies	—

S FORMING PART OF THE ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1985

ecial Reserve" represents written down value as on 31st December, 1985 of motor car gifted by Head Office and is represented by milar amount under the head "Furniture and Fixtures".
dry Accounts included under the heads "Other Liabilities" and "Other Assets" include amounts pending transfer to appropriate ounts.
vision in respect of future payment of gratuity to staff is not required as employees have yet to complete five years service with the k.
ets and Liabilities in foreign currencies are converted at the rates ruling at the year end except that contingent liability in respect of ward exchange contracts is included at the contracted rates.
proval of Reserve Bank of India has been received in February, 1985 for the appointment of members to constitute the first Local visory Board of the Bank's Indian Branch. The first meeting of Local Advisory Board was held on March 12, 1986.
vious year's figures have been regrouped/rearranged where necessary.

GHOSH
er
d on behalf of WATERHOUSE
ty
WATERHOUSE & CO.
ered Accountants
ay, 15th March 1986.

K. MURARI
General Manager
and Chief Executive Officer
India
Bombay

VIJAY K. KAPUR
Manager
India
Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BCCI HOLDINGS (LUXEMBOURG) SA

39 Boulevard Royal, Luxembourg

Financial Highlights 1985

Capital Fund including reserves	US$	1,190 million
	(since increased to US$	1,510 million)
Deposits from customers	US$	12,700 million
Loans and Advances net of provisions	US$	6,800 million
Total Assets excluding contras	US$	16,500 million
Result before Tax after subvention	US$	158 million
Capital/Assets Ratio		7.18%
		(since increased to 9%)
Branches and Offices in		71 Countries

Principal Subsidiaries

Bank of Credit & Commerce International S.A., Luxembourg
Bank of Credit & Commerce International (Overseas) Ltd., Grand Cayman

Subsidiaries, Affiliates and their branches/offices in the following countries

Argentina
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Botswana
Brazil
Cameroon
Canada
China
Colombia
Cyprus
Djibouti
Egypt
France
Gabon
Germany (West)
Ghana
Gibraltar
Grand Cayman
Hong Kong
India
Indonesia
Isle of Man
Italy
Ivory Coast
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Korea (South)
Kuwait
Lebanon
Liberia
Luxembourg
Macau
Malaysia
Maldives
Mauritius
Monaco
Morocco
Netherlands
Netherlands Antilles
Niger
Nigeria
Oman
Pakistan
Panama
Paraguay Philippines
Portugal
Senegal
Seychelles
Sierra Leone
Spain
Sri Lanka
Sudan
Swaziland
Switzerland
Thailand
Togo
Turkey
UAE
United Kingdom
Uruguay
USA
Venezuela
Yemen (North)
Zambia
Zimbabwe

VARDHAMAN CREATIVE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

weavers. Some of the associations have taken the matter to court.

What this frenzied activity makes clear is that the neat weave of the year-old textile policy is now beginning to look more than a little tattered and frayed. And today's disappointment, frustration and anger mark a sharp contrast to the euphoria with which the industry had greeted the policy in June 1985, when it was hailed as the most sweeping policy turnabout to have come from the corridors of power.

OUT HAD gone the official conviction that sick mills had to be nationalised in order to protect jobs. In came the acknowledgement that terminally ill units should be allowed to give up the ghost. If labour was a casualty in the process, it would be provided a financial cushion: for three years, workers would get paid a diminishing percentage of their wage from a government fund. The freeze on mill capacities was lifted, and they would enjoy undreamt of freedom in expanding or contracting production capacities and in using almost any fibre of their choice (instead of being tied down to cotton). Lower taxes would lower prices and the tax imbalance between the organised mills and the powerlooms of Bhiwandi and Surat would be corrected. In June 1985, the joy of the Indian Cotton Mills Federation (ICMF) must have known no bounds. In June 1986, ICMF Chairman Kantikumar P. Poddar spoke of broken promises. And Chairman of the Southern India Mills' Association (SIMA) D. Lakshminarayanaswami said that the industry in the south "has been pushed to the brink in the past one year".

Ironically, the key criticism of a year ago—that the new policy would sound the death knell of the handloom weavers while crippling the powerloom industry—has proved as unfounded as the euphoria. Handloom production rose last year, as did the official statistics on powerloom production. But these statistics might be misleading, because a great many powerlooms were under-reporting their production earlier in order to escape the tax net. If this is indeed the case, both the mill sector and powerlooms turned out less cloth last year than in the year before.

The Government, of course, sees things differently. It insists that it has worked on all the major components of the new policy and says that this has provided significant pay-offs. Textile Minister Khan claimed last month that the policy was working: that total cloth production in the country had gone up, as had exports, and that substantial fresh capacities had been licensed in the synthetic fibre and blends sector. Taxes had been cut, and outdated regulations had been simplified. Textile Secretary Shiromani Sharma said that around 200 textile units had applied for switching fibres. Also, the Government announced new incentives last fortnight for textile exporters.

But the industry still has its complaints. Satish Modi of Modi Spinning and Weaving Company pointed out that the cumulative duties on blended yarns still came to more than 250 per cent. F.C. Rustagi, president of JK Synthetics, also complained of the duty levels and said this would prevent markets expanding to a point where companies could take advantage of economies of scale.

The Government in turn has its complaints about the industry's behaviour, and not just on the question of its failure to lower prices in line with lower duties. Textile Secretary Sharma argued last fortnight that the announcement of the modernisation fund was delayed by discussions on the industry's demand for very soft terms. "The industry expected the entire modernisation programme to be at government expense. The Finance Ministry said this was not on."

HARI OM GULATI

"The industry expected the entire modernisation programme to be at government expense. The Finance Ministry said this was not on."

SHIROMANI SHARMA
secretary, Department of Textiles

Meanwhile, the Government is faced with several sticky issues. Powerloom associations contend that thousands of powerlooms have been forced to down shutters because the textile policy discriminates against them—an argument that finds powerful support among the unions and even in the organised mill sector. M.K. Padhe, secretary of the CPI(M)-affiliated CITU, reports after a visit to Maharashtra's powerloom belt that thousands of them have closed down. This, argues SIMA Chairman Lakshminarayanaswami, was inevitable because powerlooms don't have the advantage of a brand image when marketing their cloth. Lending credence to such assessments is a South India Textile Research Association study on the textile policy's impact. The unreleased report startlingly concludes that powerlooms have cost disadvantages in several areas. If this is true, this knocks the bottom out of a premise on which the policy was founded.

However, the biggest single fall-out of the continuing ills of the textile industry may be a potentially explosive labour situation. Industry experts say that some 10 per cent of mill capacities and 20 per cent of the labour force are surplus. Fearing large-scale retrenchments, some 19,000 striking textile workers included in their charter of demands a call to the Government to withdraw its textile policy altogether. Said Brinda Karat, joint secretary of a CITU union that is involved in the strike: "The Government's rehabilitation scheme looks fine, but where will workers get jobs after three years?"

But the industry's prospects for trimming its fat seem bleak. The state governments have the final say on closures, and they will be wary of annoying the 8-lakh strong textile mill workforce.

Faced with this bleak scenario, Textile Department bureaucrats concede that the industry's road to recovery will not be smooth. If nothing else, that marks a new realism that stands in sharp contrast to the euphoria of a year ago.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

VARDHAMAN CREATIVE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Marking Time

THE BULLS are willing, but the market is bearish: that about summed up the situation on the stock exchange last fortnight as most shares reached slightly lower levels and The Economic Times share price index closed out at 517, well below the recent high of 550. As share prices moved down listlessly, it seemed the right moment to bide one's time and wait.

Tata Iron and Steel lost ground despite a bonus issue, while Tata Engineering also gave in to bear hammering. Others to lose included Associated Cement, Century Spinning, Gujarat State Fertiliser, and Larsen and Toubro.

Not everything was, however, on the downswing. And among the relatively few shares that notched up some gains were Reliance Industries, which benefited from a late rally after the company's annual shareholders' jamboree, and Hindustan Aluminium, which improved on expectations of a convertible debenture issue. JK Synthetics also was bullish following excellent results and a higher dividend (20 per cent, compared to 15 per cent the previous year). And Gujarat Narmada met with buying in anticipation of a good dividend.

But there was little mistaking the bearish undertone to the general trading sentiment on the market. The monsoons had petered out in several parts of the country after a promising start, and the future looked uncertain. And there were no cheerful announcements from the Government, after its shattering decision to not allow the conversion of non-convertible debentures.

There was some amount of buying support from the financial institutions, but many bulls were busy licking their wounds after having suffered a beating on companies like Tata Tea, Hindustan Motors and even Reliance, and unable to launch a fresh offensive on other counters. And some money wended its way into the bullion market, where profit levels have become more attractive following recent price movements, domestically and internationally.

The market could well be snapped out of its stupor by long-delayed Government decisions which—the optimists hope—will spark off a fresh rally. The G.S.Patel Committee has recommended that the guidelines on bonus issues be liberalised, removing the stipulation that three years must elapse before a bonus issue can be repeated and doing away with the limit of two bonus issues in five years. There was also some speculation that the Government might announce higher prices for levy cement at a time when cement has become an unattractive investment proposition. If these pronouncements do in fact come about, the bulls should be in better shape to push up prices and recapture some of the optimism of times past.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	1986 CLOSE 8.7.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	28.00	0.25 –
Asian Paints	280.00	130.00	231.25	13.75 –
Associated Cement	389.00	228.00	260.00	14.00 –
Atlas Copco	92.50	64.00	79.00	1.00 –
Avery India	146.00	100.00	118.75	6.75 +
Bajaj Auto	3550.00	1950.00	3510.00	335.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	290.00	305.00	55.00 –
Bata India	82.50	54.00	66.00	6.00 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	540.00	10.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	68.00	1.00 –
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	102.00	3.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	90.00	5.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	123.00	77.00	96.00	2.00 –
Britania Ind.	142.00	85.00	140.00	23.50 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	57.00	58.50	28.00 –
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	420.00	nil
Century Spinning	1690.00	780.00	795.00	35.00 –
Chloride India	132.00	86.00	126.00	nil
Citurgia	65.00	42.00	45.00	0.50 +
Colgate	307.50	200.00	295.00	25.00 +
DCM	58.50	32.62	46.00	1.50 +
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	66.25	0.25 –
Elecon	127.00	80.00	117.00	5.00 +
Escorts	117.00	69.00	105.00	5.00 –
Finolex Cables	92.00	36.00	92.00	12.00 +
Food Specialities	327.50	215.00	320.00	13.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	44.00	1.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	61.50	67.00	2.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.00	21.25	24.00	0.50 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	182.00	92.50	163.00	10.50 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	77.00	nil
Hindustan Lever	166.00	124.00	163.00	nil
Hindustan Motors	128.50	39.40	41.90	1.30 +
Hind. Dorr	660.00	380.00	620.00	60.00 +
IEL	84.50	61.50	67.00	1.50 –
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	nil
Indian Organic	97.00	63.00	74.00	1.00 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	139.00	4.00 +
Indrol	430.00	200.00	420.00	70.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	505.00	250.00	250.00	207.50 –
ITC	76.50	53.00	66.75	4.25 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	115.00	3.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	355.00	220.00	355.00	25.00 +
Lakme	195.00	120.00	142.50	nil
Larson & Toubro	204.00	124.00	129.00	5.00 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	57.00	1.50 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	36.00	38.00	5.00 –
Madura Coats	92.00	53.00	53.50	4.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	51.00	56.00	1.00 –
Motor Industries	1000.00	605.00	890.00	45.00 –
National Organic	840.00	530.00	787.50	2.50 –
Nirlon	77.00	39.00	40.50	1.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	192.00	111.00	178.00	nil
Pelco Electronics	104.50	48.00	55.25	1.75 –
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	88.00	7.00 –
Ponds	327.50	200.00	327.50	27.50 +
Premier Auto	870.00	555.00	842.50	25.00 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	134.00	2.00 –
Raymond	97.00	72.00	85.00	1.00 –
Reliance Industries	392.00	226.00	363.00	8.00 +
Shriram Fibres	88.00	49.00	53.50	2.50 –
Sandoz	120.00	62.00	111.00	17.50 +
SPIC	184.00	129.50	143.00	15.50 –
Tata Steel	1610.00	1090.00	1440.00	40.00 –
Telco	910.00	575.00	600.00	85.00 –
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	105.00	5.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	7.9568	7.8824
Austria	Schilling	100	81.7751	81.0034
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.0138	32.9710
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.9730	41.5720
Canada	Dollar	1	9.0672	8.9935
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5408	1.5274
Egypt	Pound	1	15.0290	14.8732
France	Franc	1	1.7953	1.7809
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5914	1.5790
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1010	1.0930
Iran	Rial	100	15.7320	15.5010
Italy	Lira	100	0.8290	0.8130
Japan	Yen	100	7.7761	7.7147
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7790	0.7680
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.4048	42.1996
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.7475	4.7080
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9330	0.9018
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5960	0.5800
Netherlands	Guilder	1	5.0830	5.0427
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7380	0.7218
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6988	5.6501
Spain	Peseta	1	8.9380	8.8010
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4390	0.4210
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7642	1.7485
Switzerland	Franc	1	7.0135	6.9554
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.4330	0.4260
Thailand	Baht	100	47.6030	47.5820
UK	Pound	1	19.1681	19.0439
USA	Dollar	1	12.5000	12.4150
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3910	3.3080
USSR	Rouble	1	17.9038	17.9780
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.7471	5.6980

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 8.7.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the valley of peace the only flutter is the rustle of breeze amongst the chinars

Kashmir invites you to a serene experience. Here nature unfolds her treasures in the most beautiful ways. Stately chinars line your path to breathtaking sights: majestic snow-peaked mountains, bubbling brooks, sparkling lakes and flower-spangled meadows. The cool mountain air caresses you. You are at peace with yourself and the world.

Kashmir offers you many tranquil retreats. Conveniently close to the necessities of life and yet blissfully away from it all.

Come keep a date with peace. Go back refreshed.

Visit Kashmir
Discover Paradise

Department of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLUE RIBAND. A CUT ABOVE.

Blue Riband Lime Juice Cordial: superior, cool.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In communications, space and defence what you don't see matters most!

Over 10,000 high-technology test and measuring instruments and systems in more than 70 establishments nationwide.

There is probably no major space, communications or defence establishment in India today, which does not depend on these systems from Blue Star. For accuracy of tests and measurements, R & D, control, manufacture and maintenance.

Behind the scene, Blue Star Electronics is at work where it matters most.

Total Electronics Capability

Blue Star in association with Hewlett-Packard, Hitachi, Scientific Atlanta, Technicon, Yokogawa Hokushin, Johnson Controls and Jeumont-Schneider—each a leader in its own field—has been in the forefront of Electronics for over 30 years.

Among the products it markets — and increasingly manufactures in India — are : State-of-the-art Computer Systems and Business Machines, Analytical Instruments, Medical Instruments, Test and Measuring Instruments, Process Control Instrumentation, EPABX Systems and Professional Electronic Components.

These are backed by over 1000 man years of specialised experience of over 200 professionals.

Blue Star also exports Computer Software to technologically advanced countries.

State-of-the-art Solutions

Business, Industry and Government. Defence, Space and Telecommunications. Medicine, Research and Education. Increasingly, they will need Electronics.

And that's where they will find Blue Star.

In the vanguard of technology. With a total package of state-of-the-art solutions to their complex problems.

THE BLUE STAR PACKAGE

- State-of-the-art, high technology products from world leaders.
- Prestigious manufacturing collaborations : Hewlett-Packard, Jeumont-Schneider, Yokogawa Hokushin.
- Systems-engineering capability of foreign-trained Blue Star scientists and engineers, for solutions to customer needs.
- Customer support services : technology update seminars; demonstrations and training programmes; ever-expanding technology applications library; electronics R & D centre; countrywide network of service centres; calibration and workshop facilities; ample stocks of spare parts.

★ BLUE STAR
the hi-technology Company

JAISONS BS 12885

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you are planning to modernize your textile mill...

...consider over 200 mills Batliboi have humidified.

Humidification – the indispensable component
The truth is, an ideal humid climate is an indispensable factor towards making better cloth and increasing productivity. Without it, even the best machinery is of no avail.

BATLIBOI – the first name in humidification systems
Let the facts tell their story. BATLIBOI has supplied humidification systems to more than 200 mills in the country. They include most of the big names in textiles: Century, Premier, Reliance, Raymonds, Dinesh, Bombay Dyeing, Morarjee, Orkay... They are more than satisfied with the performance of our units and have given repeat orders over the years for the expansion/modernisation of their plants.

BATLIBOI – A cut above the rest
Yes, we are first on every parameter: Price, performance, low power consumption, efficient after-sales service...

So, if you are planning on modernising, BATLIBOI is the answer. We will design, fabricate and install the perfect humid climate to improve the quality and image of your mill.

BATLIBOI

Batliboi & Company Limited
Regd. Office: Apeejay House, 6th floor,
Dr. V.B. Gandhi Marg, Fort,
Bombay 400 001 (India)
Branches – Associates ALL OVER INDIA

BATLIBOI—Leaders in Humidification Systems

CHAITRA-B BB 255

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFLATION continues to remain steady at under 5 per cent. The industrial production was up in the first quarter of 1986 and the long-term trend is accelerating. But the manufacturing sector is not doing as well. Power generation has also shown improvement. Bank credit is expanding. The stock market is relatively quiet and gold prices are on the rise.

All data are seasonally adjusted. The cement trend is computed on the basis of the last one year's data on which regressions are fitted.

There was a 1 per cent fall in wholesale prices between end-May and mid-June. Overall, inflation has remained steady at under 5 per cent.

Industrial production grew by 3.3 per cent between October and March, a performance that has taken the growth rate to 8.4 per cent.

Manufacturing output jumped by 4.6 per cent between December-January, but at 6 per cent the long term growth leaves much to be desired.

The period from May to June saw a 1.6 per cent rise in money supply though the long-term trend has declined from 13.5 to under 12 per cent.

There is a counterbalancing trend in the money market. Money supply is growing slowly while bank credit grew from 16 to 19 per cent.

From the dizzying highs of June 1985, shares have fallen by 16 per cent. The 5 per cent spurt in May-June failed to reverse this decline.

Higher PLF led to a 5.7 per cent increase in generation between February and May. But it is not much ahead of industrial growth.

Gold prices are on the rise. Between March and June prices jumped by 4 per cent, contributing to a double-digit long trend.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in March, 1986

	% Growth
Newsprint	169.74
Metallurgical Machinery	66.73
Textile Machinery	53.69
Insecticides & Pesticides	37.26
Paper Machinery	25.84
Boilers Steam Generating Plants	25.47
Cement Machinery	23.31
Explosives	22.77
Dye-Stuffs	19.87
Handtools & Small Tools	18.94
Footwear	16.45
Railway Locomotives	16.40
Coffee Curing Works	16.40
Bolts & Nuts	15.46
Tea	14.07
Iron & Steel Structurals	14.01
Linolium & Similar Products	13.13
Air Gas Compresses	12.34
Rubber Footwear	11.35
Mining & Quarrying	11.28
Hydrogenated Oil	11.15
Railway Rolling Stock	10.04
Organic Chemicals	9.94
Earth Moving Machinery	9.72
Iron & Steel	9.24
Cement	7.55
Razor Blades	6.53
Petroleum & Coal Products	6.33
Bakery Products	5.77
Electricity & Power	4.94
Sugar Machinery	4.71
Tobacco Manufacture	4.66
Man-Made Fibres	4.17
Internal Combustion Engines	3.76
Sugar Industry	3.46
Buses Trucks & Jeeps	2.88
Telecommunications	2.76
Beverage Industry	2.11
Iron & Steel Pipes	2.01
Dry Cells	1.50
Dairy Products	1.29
Paper & Straw Board	1.17
Motorcycles & Bicycles	0.38
Power-Driven Pumps	0.05
Cotton & Blended Yarn	–0.06
Matches	–0.15

Of the 86 series considered, 46 of them with a total weight of 54.4629 has a positive growth & 40 of them with a total weight of 33.513 had a negative growth

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1986
Rail Movement
Net Tonnes-km, May	16967	14994
Revenue Earning Goods Traffic
Million Tonnes, Originating, May	22.52	19.96
Call Money Rate
Percent, May	10.00	10.00
Letters of Intent Issued
Number, May	80.	140
Industrial Licences Issued
Number, May	56	96

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAKKAR COMMISSION

Appointment with Death

AS WITH the John F. Kennedy murder, the assassination of Mrs Indira Gandhi promises to become an endless controversy. Even after the conviction of surviving assassin Satwant Singh, and his co-conspirators Balbir Singh and Kehar Singh, several questions remain unanswered. Was there a deeper conspiracy leading to the assassination? Could it have been prevented by better organised security? The Justice M.P.Thakkar Commission went into these issues. But three months after its report was submitted, it is still being kept under the wraps. Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA got exclusive details on the proceedings of the commission. His report:

IT IS one of the most sensitive documents in the vaults of North Block. Only a handful of officials have been allowed to read the report, which is escorted from one room to another by an officer not below the rank of under-secretary. Yet the Home Ministry grape-vine has been humming with hushed talk about the proceedings of the inquiry and the contents of the report. Vitally, the discussion centres not so much on the answers the commission has provided but the questions it has raised.

The most basic of these is Thakkar's concern that Mrs Gandhi's life would have been saved if she had stepped out of her house a few minutes earlier than she in fact did, before Beant Singh and Satwant Singh joined up. This is exactly what would have happened if she had kept to her original schedule of meeting Peter Ustinov's film crew at 8.30 a.m. But the appointment was put off by half-an-hour, by which time the assassins had gathered their nerves and got together. Though the commission does not say so in as many words, it suspects that the change in the time of the appointment was not without motive.

This suspicion arises out of the startling discovery that in Mrs Gandhi's appointment diary the time of the interview, 8.30 a.m, had been changed to 8.45 a.m. Thakkar had the diary subjected to an infra-red check, which confirmed that someone had neatly erased the original entry of 8.30 and written 8.45 over it. In the printed list of appointments for that day, the Ustinov meeting was listed at 9 a.m. and a mysterious, unidentified caller from Mrs Gandhi's office had phoned Ustinov asking him to come at 9 a.m. instead of 8.30. In reply to a letter from the commission, Ustinov confirmed that someone had called him in his hotel on the morning of October 31 to change the time.

In lengthy replies to the commission, which he typed on his old typewriter, R.K. Dhawan denied that he had anything to do with the change of timing. Commission sources confirm that the handwriting in the appointments diary is not his. But Thakkar backs up his suspicions with circumstantial evidence based on several other happenings within the 18 fateful hours beginning on the evening of October 30 in the following sequence:

► On the afternoon of October 30, Dhawan's office sent a message to Orissa where Mrs Gandhi was on tour, asking whether she was going to keep her appointment with Ustinov. The commission finds this curious because such appointments are generally fixed well in advance and, according to Thakkar, it was unusual for someone to have tried to confirm it again with the prime minister. Pleading his innocence, Dhawan told the commission that the appointment had been fixed at rather short notice and the call, in any case, was made by one of the personal assistants, and not by him.

► In the evening when Mrs Gandhi returned from Orissa, Dhawan walked up to her on the tarmac and asked if she was going to keep the appointment. She said there was no reason for cancelling it. Questioned on this, Dhawan initially denied the conversation. But Mrs Gandhi's chauffeur and personal security officer confirmed that the dialogue had taken place. Dhawan then explained that he had inquired because Mrs Gandhi often asked to have a free morning after returning from tour.

► On the morning of October 31, Mrs Gandhi emerged from her room barefoot, angry why her hairdresser, Nanda had not yet reported. The staff arranged a replacement, from Doordarshan.

Following this, Dinesh Bhat, Mrs Gandhi's personal security officer, decided to go out and look for Ustinov. Around 9.15, the prime minister was told that it would take a little more time to arranging all the props. She said she would proceed anyway and have a chat with Ustinov while the arrangements were made. By this time, the two assassins had come together and were waiting.

THE CRUCIAL QUESTIONS

Who changed Mrs Gandhi's appointment with Peter Ustinov from 8.30 to 9 am?

Who called Ustinov in his hotel to inform him of the change?

Why did R.K Dhawan seem concerned whether Mrs Gandhi was going to keep the appointment?

Why did Beant, before pulling the trigger, ask Satwant to make sure that Dhawan was not hit?

Why did Beant feel indebted to Dhawan?

Who bungled on the removal of Sikh guards from Mrs Gandhi's security?

Who was responsible for the delay in verifying the antecedents of the men in the security set-up?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dhawan was walking with Mrs Gandhi, barely a foot from her side, when Beant Singh began to fire. Thakkar's suspicions have been confirmed by Satwant Singh's own account of those crucial moments. He told police interrogators that when Mrs Gandhi was approaching the wicket-gate, Beant told him that he would fire five bullets at the prime minister and the sixth at Satwant in case he did not fire at her. Satwant says Beant told him to be careful not to hit Dhawan as "he has done so many favours for us". Dhawan vehemently denies making common cause with the assassins. Normally reluctant to talk to the press, the visibly hurt Dhawan told INDIA TODAY last week: "To even suggest that I had anything at all to do with the murder is the greatest sin on earth. I worshipped and served Mrs Gandhi as if she were a goddess. To me she was my everything, my mother. And after her death I have become an orphan. Can't you see that?"

"To even suggest that I had anything to do with the murder is the greatest sin on earth. I worshipped Mrs Gandhi. To me she was my mother. After her death I have become an orphan."

R.K. DHAWAN

The investigators assisting the commission too found nothing to establish any previous link between him and Beant except that he had perhaps helped include Beant on one of Mrs Gandhi's trips abroad. Several Home Ministry officials wonder if he would have walked so close to the firing line if he had any fore-knowledge of the assassination plan.

The commission had wanted to question him, with a lie-detector, on another vital point: who was responsible for persisting with Sikhs among Mrs Gandhi's bodyguards? Dhawan asserted that when Mrs Gandhi noticed that the Sikh guards had been removed she asked the police to put them back on. Dhawan claims to have told the officers that the Sikh guards should be brought back where Mrs Gandhi could see them.

The commission cross-questioned several officials to fix the responsibility for this vital lapse. One of these, Gopi Ram Gupta, the then deputy commissioner of police (DCP) in the special security district, was put through gruelling questioning for a record 39 days at the end of which he was reduced to a nervous wreck. Even today, he is under suspension. Though it has been difficult for the commission to fix responsibility, the reconstruction of the events provides tell-tale evidence of the confusion that prevailed in Mrs Gandhi's security set-up.

Given Mrs Gandhi's sensitivity on this question, her security adviser, Ram Nath Kao, suggested an alternative. He advised the Intelligence Bureau (IB) and the Delhi police to periodically re-verify the antecedents and links of the policemen in the prime minister's security set-up. But this was never done and gave the commission another lapse to delve into. The Delhi police, however, reported that they had immediately accepted the suggestion and decided to conduct verifications. At a joint security meeting, however, it was decided that the routine special branch/CID procedure of making cursory inquiries from neighbours about a man's antecedents was inadequate and that this verification should be done on the basis of a proforma to be prepared by the IB. But the Intelligence Bureau took all of three months to prepare the proforma, which was sent to Delhi police on October 25, just six days before the assassination.

Several examples of confusion and lack of accountability came up during the cross-examination of officials. The picture the probe paints is of a total lack of organisation in the prime minister's security set-up. For example, several months before the assassination Rattan Sehgal, a deputy director in the IB looking after the prime minister's security, was put in charge of the security of Rajiv and Sonia Gandhi and had, in fact, visited Italy with them. But the IB did not post a replacement for him. Similarly, the sudden induction of scores of commandos from the Indo-Tibetan Border Police only caused confusion. The commandos did not seem to know where they were to position themselves, and often refused to take orders from Delhi police officials.

Embarrassing disclosures like this are one reason why the commission's report is being treated as one of the most sensitive documents in the vaults of North Block. But another reason why the Government is shy of releasing the report is the basic message it contains: that there might have been a deep conspiracy. Justice Thakkar had suggested that the Government should ask the Anand Ram Commission to look into this and several other questions. But a decision is yet to be taken.

Highly-placed Home Ministry sources are sceptical about the possibility of any investigating agency being able to find substantial evidence against any of the other suspected conspirators, including former Bhopal student and All-India Sikh Students Federation leader Attinder Pal Singh, currently believed to be in Pakistan. But if the evidence of confusion, lack of precise responsibility and amateurishness in the security of perhaps the most threatened political leader in the world, results in preventing a re-enactment of similar tragedies, then Justice Thakkar's exertions would have proved more than worthwhile.

Satwant says Beant told him to be careful not to hit Dhawan as he had done so many favours for them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JK PAPER LAKSHMI CEMENT

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

At the 47th Annual General Meeting

Ladies & Gentlemen:

I cordially welcome you all to the 47th Annual General Meeting of your Company. The Directors' Report and the Audited Accounts of the Company for the year ended 31st December 1985 have been in your hands for some time from which you must have observed that the Company continues to have sustained all-round growth.

IMPROVED PERFORMANCE

There was an overall improvement in the performance of the Company during 1985. Sales and other income crossed Rs. 117 crores. The gross profit at Rs. 21.16 crores was substantially higher than Rs. 16.99 crores in the previous year.

I am happy to state that your Directors have recommended a dividend of 20% on the Equity Capital which has more than doubled as compared to last year. The dividend to be distributed for the year 1985 would thus be Rs. 2.04 crores as against Rs. 1.07 crores in the last year, consequent upon enhancement of the Equity Capital to Rs. 10.14 crores from Rs. 4.84 crores.

Production of Paper & Board and Cement was well maintained. "JK Paper" and "Lakshmi Cement" continue to be the market leaders in their respective fields and enjoy consumer preference on account of their high quality.

Modernisation and renovation of Paper Mills in Orissa with an investment of Rs. 23 crores is progressing satisfactorily and is expected to be completed before the end of 1987. The Company proposes to take up installation of a new Paper Machine for production of light weight and speciality papers at a cost of about Rs. 10 crores. Besides expansion in its existing products, the Company is pursuing its policy of diversifying into new areas. Electronics, synthetic fibres and petrochemicals are some of the areas under active consideration.

Polyester Staple Fibre project of Orissa Synthetics Ltd promoted by the Company and Industrial Promotion and Investment Corporation of Orissa Ltd is in an advanced stage of implementation. The plant is expected to go into production in the third quarter of 1986. We would like to express our gratitude to the Indian and non-resident Indian investors for reposing confidence in our new venture by their overwhelming response to the Public Issue.

OPTIMISTIC ECONOMIC SCENARIO

Ever since Shri Rajiv Gandhi took over the reigns of the Government about a year and a half ago, the economic and industrial scenario has undergone a sea change for the better. The change is fundamental. From a regime of controls and regulations in which we have lived for over 35 years, there is an attempt at deregulation and restoration of management initiatives in decision making. The industrial capacity is no more looked upon as a restrictive ceiling for production, rather a new concept of Minimum Economic Scales of Operation has been adopted for several industries in due recognition of economies of scale. Competition, both domestic as well as international, is being encouraged to achieve efficiencies and cost control. There are new perceptions of the role of the Government in the economic affairs and therefore the need for re-allocation of its functions. We have, I think, got out of the sterile debate on Public versus Private Sector. Challenges of the future — of the 21st century — have been accepted with timely response for rapid modernisation and adoption of high technology in various areas including information and communications. It is heartening to see computers on the desks of ministers and bureaucrats.

Confidence shown in the principle that beyond a point high taxation is counter-productive and consequent reduction in tax rates have yielded immediate and positive response. Income-tax collection has increased by 36% in 1985-86 and overall tax revenue by 21% over the last year. Union budgeting has been made open. The announcement of the long term fiscal policy has ushered in a new era of meaningful dialogue between the Government and the public.

Economic and industrial outlook, both within the country and as perceived by the foreign investors all around the world, is one of new optimism and opportunity. It is indeed satisfying to know that India is now sought after for investment and technology transfer more vigorously than it was only a couple of years ago. This will no doubt result in long term benefits to the country.

I would like to take this opportunity of congratulating and recording our deep appreciation for this turn around in the economic scene to Shri Rajiv Gandhi, our young and dynamic leader and his team, particularly Shri Vishwanath Pratap Singh, the Finance Minister and Shri Narayan Datt Tiwari, the Industry Minister. I am fully confident that the Indian entrepreneurs will rise to the occasion and make full use of the new opportunities that are available for expansion, diversification and growth. I would request the Government to continue to vigorously pursue the process of change and not to get disheartened or impatient because the results in full measure are not obtained immediately.

Shri Hari Shankar Singhania

AREAS REQUIRING URGENT ATTENTION

Despite substantial improvements, there are some areas which need urgent attention. I would touch upon a few.

Growing trade deficit underlines the need for export-based industries as an integral part of industrial development as imports are bound to rise with spurt in industrial growth. We must, therefore, indentify and promote industries which can stand up to international competition in terms of economies of scale, cost of production, quality and technology. On the strength of large domestic market base, there is no reason why India cannot develop such industries.

The other important area is one of growth of demand. It has been the country's experience for some years that even a moderate growth in industrial production cannot be sustained due to lack of growth of demand. There are various factors governing it, including the purchasing power and cost to the consumer. These are, no doubt, complex issues. I suggest that due recognition of the need for deliberate effort to increase demand to achieve higher and rapid industrial growth is called for.

In initiating anti-poverty programmes, the Government is moving in the right direction. It is only through such measures that we can increase the purchasing power and achieve socio-economic goals. We have to overcome the present deficiencies of leakages, identification of beneficiaries, ignorance of needs of the people concerned and inappropriate appraisal of the local conditions. It is necessary to have a single agency in each State to integrate various programmes, rather than each programme to have its own target and each to run independently as is being done now.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The next important subject which I would like to refer to is one concerning redundancy of labour in the existing industries which need rationalisation to cut costs, to modernise and in fact even to survive. I do hope, with the active participation of the trade unions, it would be possible for the Government to find a solution to this vexed problem. Financing of sick industries has already assumed enormous proportions. I am glad that the Government has come out with a new legislation which aims at identifying and providing solutions for sick industries quickly. However, the question of how the redundant or excess labour can be dealt with has defied solution. I would recommend an unemployment benefit scheme to be provided to the affected workmen, This will have to be essentially for a limited period and would be less costly than continuing to operate uneconomic units.

Last but not the least is the almost perennial question of inadequacy of infrastructure. Industries continue to suffer both quantitatively and qualitatively because of infrastructure deficiencies. For instance, your Company was forced to transport over 50% of its production both of cement and paper by road at a considerably high cost. The quality of coal continues to be poor adversely affecting efficiency and cost of production. The coal quotas have been pruned causing serious anxiety for maintaining production. Situation in regard to power is even worse. On one hand there are severe power cuts and on the other the quality of power in terms of interruptions and voltage fluctuations continues to be unsatisfactory. There is also continuous and steep increase in power rates. The increase in cost of power and fuel leads all other cost increases. No doubt, there is awareness of these problems. However, more meaningful action is necessary in order to achieve definite results.

I will now say a few words about the Paper Industry and the Cement Industry.

PAPER INDUSTRY

The paper production in India in 1985 was 14.25 lakh tonnes showing an increase of 8% over the previous year. However capacity utilisation continued to be low due to large capacity remaining closed and inoperative. Moreover 40% of the installed capacity is comprised of small units. Most of these have been set up by import of very old second-hand plant and machinery and thus are basically uneconomic. Keeping in view the need to put the nation's economic resources to the best possible use, the advisability of running such uneconomic units with heavy fiscal support is a moot point for consideration.

In the past years I have dealt with the problem of raw materials faced by the Paper Industry. The situation has worsened to the extent that the country has to import pulp and even wood chips to sustain production. Even large quantity of waste paper is being imported. This is a sad commentary for a country of our size and endowments. Effective conservation of forests, utilisation of degraded forest land for captive plantation and stoppage of wasteful use of wood for packaging etc are areas which brook no further delay. Unfortunately, despite recommendations made by the Development Council for Paper, Pulp & Allied Industries and other Committees set up by the Government from time to time, very little has been done so far. It is necessary to evolve a national strategy for forest conservation and development. An action plan fixing responsibilities of different agencies who should implement various programmes should be adopted.

I am happy to state after persistent efforts, your Company has been able to secure some areas for plantation in Orissa. The Company plans to develop these areas on scientific and modern lines.

The Government has at long last recognised the serious situation in the Paper Industry and has set up a High Powered Committee under the Chairmanship of the Secretary, Industrial Development. This Committee is to go into all aspects of the industry including its financial health and to suggest remedial measures. I sincerely hope that the deliberations of this Committee will help adoption of right policies to the benefit of the Paper Industry and the consumers at large.

CEMENT INDUSTRY

Installed capacity of cement has increased from 22 million tonnes in 1978 to 44 million tonnes in March 1986 and is expected to reach 63 million tonnes by the end of the Seventh Plan. Production has also increased to 32 million tonnes in 1985-86 from 19 million tonnes in 1977-78. Cement is now freely available and open market prices have come down. At some forums I hear questions whether further increase in cement capacity by about 50% in the Seventh Plan will not result in substantial over supply situation. It is this subject that I would like to deal with.

Cement consumption is an important index of economic prosperity of a nation. Per Capita consumption in India at 40 kgs is extremely low even when compared with developing countries where per capita consumption ranges between 100 kgs and 150 kgs. What is needed is to take steps to encourage the use of cement in India in areas which will benefit the country. For instance, cement silos for food-grains would reduce considerably annual damage due to improper storage. Similarly, cement highways would result in efficient and speedy transport and open the country for increased economic activities. Construction of houses is another top priority requirement. Increased pace of all these activities will not only stimulate the demand for cement but will also provide large employment. With rich limestone deposits and adequate coal reserves that the country possesses, there is no reason why Indian cement should not find its due place in international market also. More positive and aggressive attitude is therefore necessary for development of cement industry at this juncture by taking necessary steps towards stimulation of demand and encouraging further investments.

The adoption of pragmatic policy since 1979 has paid rich dividends and resulted in big spurt of production, transforming this almost stagnant industry into a dynamic one. The present need is to continue this thrust. It is necessary that new investment in cement remains viable and 12% post tax return maintained. Of late, returns of the new plants have fallen because of continuous increase in production cost, inadequate and delayed increase in levy cement prices and steep fall in open market prices. As a result of these factors and high investment cost even the existing new cement plants which came into production since 1982 such as yours, require excise duty rebate and reduction in levy quota to sustain themselves. The position of new cement plants which are being set up is still worse. This has been effectively brought out in the representations of the Cement Manufacturers' Association submitted to the Government. A six-monthly review of levy cement price to keep pace with the increasing cost of production is also essential to maintain the health of the industry.

Cement is a power intensive industry. The power situation continues to be bad particularly in States like Rajasthan and Karnataka where there are heavy power cuts almost continuously. This imposes extra burden by running DG sets continuously rather than as standby, resulting in high maintenance cost due to their heavy wear and tear. Cement manufacturers in these power famine areas require additional assistance over and above the DG relief already allowed.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The improvement in Company's operating results has been possible due to dedication and hard work put in by all sections of employees. The management team, the workers and staff at all levels deserve appreciation for their contribution to Company's growth. I would also like to acknowledge the assistance and support we have received from the State Governments, the Financial Institutions and Banks.

Thank you.

This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Thatcherism in Retreat

WITH ELECTIONS looming on the horizon, political affairs in Britain are gradually beginning to resemble campaign rhetoric. The key issue, however, continues to be Mrs Thatcher herself. By the time of the next general elections, she will have been prime minister for nearly nine years—the sum total of Heath, Wilson and Callaghan during the 1970s. For the Opposition, her removal from 10 Downing Street is the over-riding political priority. She continues to dominate her party and nation, and no opponent—Tory, Alliance or Labour—has yet succeeded in wresting the ideological initiative away from her potent combination of laissez-faire capitalism and disciplinarian social policy.

The Opposition argues that the tide has decisively turned against Thatcherism and a number of anti-Tory verdicts have been cast. To some extent, they are right. The current government has taken a hammering: it has been through the Westland crisis, British Leyland, Sunday trading, the Libyan bombings, the recent disastrous council elections and is currently stewing in a jam over its obdurate refusal to endorse sanctions against South Africa. There is hardly a well-populated part in this country with a Conservative-controlled council. There is hardly a Conservative parliamentary seat that is not at risk in a by-election. It is hard to believe that when the Tories enjoy a majority of over 130, it has to resemble a lame-duck government.

There are many observers who feel that, after the next elections, it is unlikely that Mrs Thatcher will be back in 10 Downing Street. Some have made furtive attempts to look for alternatives to Mrs Thatcher. Amongst the names mentioned include Energy Secretary Peter Walker. The party hierarchy has made the occasional foray to break ranks. John Biffen, leader of the House, one of the shrewdest observers of the political climate and a widely respected politician, has questioned Mrs Thatcher's singular style of leadership. An eloquent leader of Tories, Biffen called for a "balanced ticket". The prime minister's response was to imperiously ignore Biffen. She has swept away the likes of Ian Gilmour, Francis Pym, James Prior, Norman St. John Stevas and James Carrington as politically and culturally expendable. And Michael Heseltine, who turned the otherwise mundane rescue of a West Country helicopter firm into high political drama is beginning to realise that, after resignations and sackings, the chances of fighting from the outside hardly does its protagonists much long-term good. Heseltine—nicknamed "Tarzan" ever since he sprang into headlines by seizing the mace in the House of Commons and shaking it balefully at Labour MP's who were singing "The Red Flag", is a plausible candidate for the "liberal Tories" who are an army in search of a leader.

London Pictures Service

Thatcher: the image problem

The loss of two out of three parliamentary by-elections, the results of the local elections and the slump in the Tory ratings to a poor third, behind both Labour and the Liberal-SDP alliance in recent Gallup polls have, not surprisingly, touched off a severe bout of nervous introspection. The Tory image is one of an insensitive, uncaring government undisturbed by the escalating ranks of the unemployed. Whilst her supporters see Mrs Thatcher as a tamer of price rises and trade union rioters, her critics brand her as bossy, insistent and dogmatic. The Thatcher image of the "Iron Lady" is no longer seen as the Conservative Party's greatest asset as it had been at the time of the last general elections. Her image builders would like—in this age of nuclear disasters—to "reprocess" her.

This task is left to Saatchi and Saatchi who would like the electorate to see her as a "lovable Golda Meir". Mrs Thatcher herself has made attempts to woo rebellious Tory back-benchers by inviting them to Chequers for Sunday lunch. Yet, she is still known to clear the House of Commons tea room with a cloud of an approaching stilleto. Roy Hattersley, Labour deputy leader, says: "Nobody really believes that Margaret Thatcher has been converted overnight from a hard-hearted harridan into a caring mother of her people. She can use the language of compassion recommended to her by Saatchi and Saatchi, but she cannot erase the memory of seven callous years." At times of great national effort, to battle General Galtieri or an Arthur Scargill, her style of leadership is a national asset. In more normal times, it is increasingly seen as counter-productive. Her army of critics maintain that Britain's problems are too deep-seated to be tackled by a one-woman band. They need to be confronted by a first rate cabinet galvanised by a strong prime minister rather than the current lacklustre team.

Thatcher's choice of the abrasive Norman Tebbit as chairman of the party has proved unpopular. With his reputation for verbal brutality and his inability to strike a rapport with partymen, there have been demands for his removal. His deputy, Jeffrey Archer, has been effectively silenced by the Central Office after a remarkable series of gaffes that was quite extraordinary for a best-selling author (First Among Equals). Critics have accused Downing Street of "continuing" to operate as a conspiracy against the Cabinet.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the distinguished columnist Peter Jenkins points out: "These Byzantine habits have created a bureaucracy which does not know who are its political masters—or its mistress. The civil service has ways of getting its act together, but only if ministers can get their act together first. There comes a moment in all Governments when direction is lost and, usually, it is the mandarins who are the first to know it. That moment seems to have arrived."

The time scale for the next elections is being predicted as sometime in the autumn of 1987 and the Tory conference in October this year will provide the way for the election manifesto. The focus will then be switched to education and health, having diverted resources from areas like defence to social programmes, and elaborating the theme that voters must not take the Government's achievements for granted: low inflation, trade union reform and income tax cuts. However, Mrs Thatcher's survival hinges on relegating unemployment as the dominant issue to a less conspicuous position. And therein lies the pinch.

London Pictures Service

The Labour Party's spokesman, John Prescott, has claimed that the Government carried out 18 fiddles on the jobless figures. The headline total of 3.3 million unemployed is bad enough, but the composition of these figures is the real cause for concern. Forty per cent of those unemployed in Britain have been out of work for more than a year. Male unemployment in Britain is now nearly twice as high as in France, Germany, Italy or the US. The British Chancellor talks of recovery, yet fewer men are in work in this country now than before the outbreak of World War I, mainly because of union muscle, restrictive practices and other labour market rigidities. Disturbingly, long-term unemployed have effectively withdrawn from the workforce and are virtually living on the dole. Neither an economic upturn nor even the limited reflation promised by the Alliance will do much to help them.

WHILST Mrs Thatcher and her party wrestles with a genuine image problem, their principal opponents, the Labour Party, having hit the magic 40 per cent in the opinion polls, are confronted with other dilemmas. For instance, the policy that has emerged from Labour spokesmen has been shot from the hip, and Labour often finds itself impaled on the Thatcherite fork. Neil Kinnock is popular, but there are many who question his fibre for prime ministership. Kinnock has a tendency to touch off unexpected rows. On his recent visit, he made the grand gesture to his Indian audience that Labour would repeal the two pillars of present immigration law—the 1971 Immigration Act and the 1981 Nationality Act—which would be replaced by "non-racial controls". John Wheeler, a senior Conservative in the Home Affairs Select Committee, has alleged that Kinnock's plans would send primary immigration rocketing back again to 100,000 a year. This is typical Conservative ploy, yet no Labour Party spokesman has effectively countered the allegations. Immigration is a non-issue as far as the forthcoming elections are concerned. But there is now a danger that it could become live again.

(From left) Labour's Kinnock, Liberal's Steel and SDP's Owen: succession stakes

Three years ago, people predicted that Labour was "finished" and that the Conservatives were "in for another 15 years". Now, Labour sees itself in front as Kinnock launches one spirited attack after another on Mrs Thatcher's domineering attitude and her "jelliod ministers". His anti-militant crusades within his party have also gained him valuable media coverage and is applauded by many. But a Guardian-sponsored voting analysis, soon after the council elections, revealed that although it might finish in front and put Kinnock at 10 Downing Street, his party might still lack a Commons majority.

Meanwhile, the third force—the Liberal-SDP alliance led by the two Davids, Steel and Owen, are the best known political double act. The Alliance, formed five years ago, has been remarkably united so far but it came to an abrupt end last fortnight with a splendid row over defence policy. It was a dismal show by a party whose unique sales pitch is its claim to represent a new spirit of partnership in British politics. If not rapidly healed it could leave the Alliance looking as erratic and non-credible in 1988 as Labour did in 1983. The spat is over whether Britain should have a successor to Polaris as the independent national deterrent and the joint commission has sought to fudge the issue by postponing a firm commitment. The Liberal leader, David Steel, was forthright when he said: "I don't think that we can go into an election with one set of candidates saying one thing, and another set saying another."

It is the firmness to back down by Dr David Owen which caused the row. If Neil Kinnock is the terror of the militant tendency, David Owen is the scourge of the wimpish tendency. Like Mrs Thatcher, whose "spirit" he admires, Owen is a believer in "conviction politics". This has not made him very popular. With the fluctuating political climate, the four leaders are confronted with contrasting fortunes, as a result of which Steel is very pleased, Kinnock quite pleased, Owen not very pleased and Mrs Thatcher not pleased at all.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

Peace Talk

FINALLY last fortnight, a faint glimmer appeared at the end of the tiresomely long tunnel of Sri Lanka's ethnic problem. For the first time, decisively and unequivocally, Sri Lankan President J.R. Jayewardene sent a set of detailed and specific proposals to New Delhi to be passed on to the Tamil groups.

The proposals envisaged the establishment of reasonably autonomous provincial councils in the northern and eastern parts of Sri Lanka with substantial legislative, executive, and financial powers to be devolved upon the provincial councils; the northern and eastern provinces empowered to consult each other and coordinate on matters of mutual interest and concern; the extent of autonomy to be limited within the unitary nature of the Sri Lankan Constitution; the control of defence, national security, and the armed forces shall vest with the President. Control over land was also to be devolved, except that the Central Government would have the power to use the lands it requires.

Jayewardene did not exactly give the Tamils what they have been demanding—a Tamil homeland—but it was still the most that he has committed himself to since the July 1983 Colombo riots. The 'Annexure-C' had talked about a regional council concept, the Tamil region comprising the northern and eastern provinces, but the Sri Lanka Government had not committed itself on specifics. The latest proposals marks the first time Jayewardene has directly proposed the formation of autonomous provincial councils.

Jayewardene circulated copies of the draft proposals at a conference of registered political parties in Colombo on June 25, and the understanding was that the conference would resume on July 15; after the parties studied the proposals and formulated their views. Meanwhile, the President held separate meetings with the leaders of different political parties in Colombo with a view to arrive at a Sinhala consensus.

The Indian Government promptly circulated the proposals to the Tamil groups. Highly placed sources say that the Government wanted the TULF to attend the political parties conference in Colombo on June 25. But the TULF, sensing the angry mood of the Tamils after the latest military offensive and the disapproval of the militant groups, decided to officially boycott the conference saying that Lanka was attempting to sideline India's mediatory role.

Map by B.K SHARMA

TULF's Amrithalingam

J.R. Jayewardene

The latest proposals mark the first time Jayewardene has directly proposed the formation of autonomous provincial councils in the northern and eastern provinces.

The Indian Government was obviously not happy. The TULF leaders were summoned to Delhi and told in unmistakeable terms that the Government's considered opinion was that the latest proposals were certainly fit to be discussed with Colombo. The TULF came up with the excuse that there were serious discrepancies between the proposals that Jayewardene had sent to Delhi and those he had placed at the political parties conference in Colombo. The discovery of these discrepancies came as a godsend to the Tamil groups. The Indian Government was getting tough in making it plain that the Eelam demand was unrealistic. The Centre also asked Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran to convey the same tough stand to the militant groups to whom he distributed copies of the proposals. According to one militant leader: "The chief minister almost blew his top when we expressed our reservations about the proposals. He told us that we could go back to Jaffna and continue our fight from there."

The initial response of the Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF) was that the latest proposals did not constitute a satisfactory basis for negotiations. The ENLF reiterated the point that any settlement of the ethnic problem would have to accommodate a Tamil homeland comprising of both the northern and the eastern provinces and also allow the Tamils the right of self-determination. But so as not to sound recalcitrant to the Indian Government, the ENLF, in its confidential response, indicated its willingness to cooperate.

However, the groups were given little chance for stalling. New Delhi immediately got in touch with Colombo and clarified from Jayewardene that the Delhi document was the correct one. Jayewardene also promised to amend the draft proposals circulated in Colombo.

All this meant that at the close of the fortnight, the TULF could not but bow to the wishes of the Indian Government by agreeing to go to Colombo and convey its reactions to the latest proposals. Delhi also summoned the militant leaders to the capital, ostensibly to ask them to avoid jeopardising the Colombo peace process. So, in spite of the Sinhalese hardliners and the Buddhist clergy on one side, and the Tamil militants on the other, the blurred outlines of a meeting ground between the Sri Lanka Government and the Tamil groups did finally seem to be emerging. And with the Government of India putting its weight solidly behind a quick settlement, all eyes were focused on the negotiating table in Colombo where the future fate of the protracted ethnic crisis now lies.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXIT

All other ways of cleaning your toilet bowl.

ENTER

Harpic in India! "The cleanest way to a totally clean toilet."

Outshines the rest in keeping your toilet totally clean and safe.

Harpic's powerful formula goes much beyond superficial cleaning. It keeps your toilet sparkling clean and safe by killing germs.

Outdates the rest in convenience.

No messy handling of harsh cleaners. So simple to use. Just spray Harpic. After 20 minutes lightly brush and flush. No mess, no fuss!
A clean, clean way to a totally clean toilet.

Outperforms the rest in killing germs.

Harpic's special nozzle helps kill germs lurking even under the rim of the bowl, where other cleaners just cannot reach.

Harpic's special nozzle.

New Harpic SEAL OF HYGIENE

The international germ-killing formula that outdates the rest.

CLARION C-RCH-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE WORLD CHAMPION

Over one million Rosemount Pressure Transmitters already sold.

Overwhelming, Outright Victory, leaving others far behind.

Rosemount 1151 Solid State Electronic Pressure Transmitters are the most trusted and best selling transmitters of its kind in the world today.

At the heart of 1151's success, is an ingenious design, measuring changes in pressure by variable capacitance technique, perfected by Rosemount over the last 20 years of its field experience. Rosemounts mastery of this technique, coupled with 1151's design innovations, signify the state-of-art-in pressure sensing transmitters. It is no wonder, that today, many instrumentation companies world-wide, have switched over to capacitance sensing technology, pioneered by Rosemount, more than 2 decades ago.

Thousands of these reliable Transmitters are manufactured at Rosemount (India) Ltd., (RIN), as per Rosemount's International Quality Standards. RIN, a joint venture company in India, with international approvals of RIN's facilities by FM (USA) and BASEEFA (U.K.), prove high standards of RIN's Quality Assurance Programmes and Implementation.

To satisfy customer needs for greater reliability and performance in other basic process measurements, RIN offers a full range of Rosemount Analytical Instruments, Beckman's Infrared Analysers and Kay – Ray Non-contacting type of Level Measurement Systems.

Our dedication to your complete satisfaction, and Commitment to Excellence has made us the Market Leader today.

The 1,000,000 th transmitter

Rosemount (India) Ltd.

H.O.: 26, Maker Chambers VI, 2nd Floor, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 231552, 231383 Tlx. 011-3757 JSGR IN

Regd. Off: Taj Bldg, 3rd floor, 210 D.N. Road, Bombay-400 001. Tel: 204 2044 (4 lines) Tlx: 011-4253 JSCO IN. Gram: CHEMTECH

Branches:

- 803 Chiranjiv Towers, 43, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Phone: 6417056, 6436921 Tlx: 031-65778 JSGR IN
- Azimganj House, 4th Floor, Office No.2, 7, Camac Street, Calcutta 700 017. Tlx: 21-4132 CTF N IN.
- Suite 103, Jhaver Plaza, 1-A, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 476252, 479334 Tlx: 041-8005 JSGR IN
- 205 Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Circle, Vadodara 390 005. Tel: C/o. 65698 Tlx: 0175-559 JSGR IN
- 342, Al Karim Trade Centre, M.G. Road, Secunderabad 500 003.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bass you can feel

Super FH series. The hi-fi power squad with breathtaking bass

FH-150R • 320 Watts PMPO
- SAT (Super Acoustic Turbo) for astonishing bass
- Wireless remote control with basic CD operations

FH-100W • 320 Watts PMPO
- SAT (Super Acoustic Turbo) for astonishing bass
- Double auto-reverse cassette deck

FH-77 • 320 Watts PMPO
- SAT (Super Acoustic Turbo) for astonishing bass

SONY 1,000,000 SOLD WORLDWIDE FH series

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEWSPAPER INDUSTRY

Stop Press

STRIKES launched by employers are unprecedented. So when press barons closed their papers across the country for a day last fortnight, the day's news took on a different colour. The issue: sharply rising newsprint costs, wage hikes ordered by the Government, and official policies towards the print media. At stake, the newspapers claimed, was the freedom of the press. Said The Statesman: "The hope is that this token protest against a discriminatory policy that is clearly designed to muzzle the press and penalise readers will awaken the public to an awareness of the danger."

Simultaneously, Bennett Coleman (The Times of India and other publications) along with two news agencies went to court challenging an official decision to double an interim wage increase for newspaper employees from 7.5 to 15 per cent.

Industry unions viewed these developments with alarm. "The closure is a declaration of war against newspaper employees," charged S.Y. Kolhatkar, chairman of the National Confederation of Newspaper and News Agency Employees' Organisations. But Basudev Ray, president of the Indian and Eastern Newspaper Society (IENS), said: "We merely wanted to tell the Government not to go on putting burdens on us."

Several forces have riled newspaper magnates: the high customs duties on printing machinery when publishers are striving to modernise; the continuance of import duty on newsprint despite the Supreme Court asking the Government to re-examine this; the failure to release requisite foreign exchange for newsprint import; and the recent newsprint price hikes when Indian publishers already pay among the world's highest prices for their basic raw material.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

"We wanted to tell the Government not to go on putting additional burdens on us."

BASUDEV RAY
president, Indian and Eastern Newspaper Society

"Allegations that we're trying to suppress the press are unfounded. We want a free press."

V.N. GADGIL information and broadcasting minister

The Indian Express group swiftly moved the Supreme Court on a host of issues. Press barons wrote a joint letter to the prime minister seeking a rollback in newsprint prices, and resolved to close down their papers for two days during Parliament's budget session. The decision was deferred, says Ray of the IENS, to give the prime minister time to react.

Newsprint prices have bloated over the years and now account for over half of a newspaper's total cost. Samir Jain, joint managing director of Bennet Coleman, claimed that each newspaper page costs 10 paise. Said Jain: "A 20-page newspaper costs Rs 2 but we charge 90 paise, of which the hawker takes 30 paise." And prices can't be raised either: Malayalam Manorama, the country's largest selling daily (6.14 lakh in 1984), lost 65,000 readers when it tried to pass on the latest newsprint price hike.

The last straw, newspaper managements declare, was the Government's decision in May to grant a 15 per cent interim wage relief to newspaper employees without consulting publishers. Several managements insist that they cannot afford a fatter pay bill because wages form 20 per cent of total costs.

But an industry wage tribunal had concluded that the 7.5 per cent interim relief it recommended would add 2 per cent to the cost of publication. So even the 15 per cent wage hike announced by the Government will mean only a 4 per cent increase in costs: advertisement tariffs have been increased substantially more than that in recent months.

Nevertheless, newspaper barons see "a deliberate attempt to squeeze the press," as Ananda Bazar Patrika's Arup Sarkar puts it. That may or may not be true but the industry clearly has a case. The Government released only enough foreign exchange last year to import 2 lakh tonnes of newsprint, as against the 2.30 lakh tonnes that newspapers were entitled to under the Government's own allocation scheme.

The problem, says Information and Broadcasting Minister V.N. Gadgil, is that imports are based on projections of domestic newsprint production that have gone wrong. He says that he has spelled out newsprint policy alternatives to proprietors and promises a decision by the end of this Parliament session. Also, the Bureau of Industrial Costs and Prices has just recommended that the import duty on newsprint should be around the level suggested by the Supreme Court. Adds Gadgil: "All these allegations that we're trying to suppress the press are unfounded. We want a free press."

Still, the mills of government grind slowly. Though Gadgil seems willing to tackle their problems, a solution to many of them does not lie in his hands and the industry may have a long struggle ahead.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

The Dadua Manhunt

Photographs by S. PREM

Combing-out operation in the Vindhyachal jungles: elusive

2,500 policemen have been engaged in the hunt for Dadua, the elusive bandit leader. As on previous occasions, the wily bandit has so far outwitted the policemen.

BEGINNING from the 17th of May, some 2,500 men of the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC) have been combing a 120 sq km stretch of harsh and inhospitable terrain in and around the Vindhyachal ranges of Uttar Pradesh. Their prey is Shiv Kumar, alias Dadua, the elusive bandit leader with over 100 officially-registered cases of kidnappings, murders, dacoities and robberies to his credit. This is the third successive time in the last two years that a hunt has been launched to eliminate the cowherd-turned-desperado. But, as on the previous occasions, the wily bandit has so far outwitted the policemen.

In their latest operation, the PAC men say that they have failed to even catch a glimpse of Dadua, leave alone engage him in an encounter. "We have no idea of the whereabouts of the gang and so far, have failed to gather any worthwhile intelligence on him," confessed Senior Superintendent of Police of Banda, C.D. Sharma, adding, "the support given by the backward classes and Harijans to Dadua is the main hurdle in our task."

The police claim is, however, contested by five residents of Garha Kachar village of Manikpur—Moti Chamar, Kamta, Pachna, Kailash and Sudin. They claim that twice they helped the police sight the gang in the first week of June but both times the guardians of law chose to look the other way. They state that, on the first occasion, there were seven dacoits with Dadua and 14 on the second.

Whether or not the cops have deliberately shied away from engaging Dadua, the outlaw has not been cowed down by them. Instead, he has been openly contemptuous of them, raiding and looting at his own will. His latest outrage was the burning of the house of Dharampal, a Brahmin of Marayian village on June 25. The depredation was carried out because Dadua believed that Dharampal was acting as a police informer.

Of a lean frame with an ugly scar running down the right side of his face, Dadua was baptised into the harsh world of dacoity and pillage by Gaya Kurmi. Following Gaya Kurmi's surrender in Madhya Pradesh in 1976, Dadua took over the mantle of leadership. Initially, his gang comprised only five or six members armed with ordinary, country-made weapons. But after years of painstaking consolidation, Dadua's army has become a dreaded force. Today, it has 14 to 15 hard-core members, supplemented by 10 to 12 hired hands. According to official sources these bandits are equipped with at least one Sten gun, two Chinese-made and two .375 Magnum rifles, six .30 Springfield carbines, two .315 country-made rifles and three 12-bore double barrel shot-guns.

Dadua's gang was catapulted into the limelight in July 1984 when it kidnapped four railway employees on track duty in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pateria Purva village near Manikpur. While one of the abducted victims was released, the others were kept hostage for 24 days and freed only when a ransom of Rs 70,000 was paid. On September 14 the same year, the gang kidnapped eight schoolboys who had gone on a picnic to Hanuman Dhara in Chitrakoot. Two boys were released within a day but the parents of the remaining had to pay a ransom of Rs 2 lakh to buy their children's freedom.

A sworn enemy of Brahmins, Dadua has unleashed a terror campaign against them. Hira Pandey, block pramukh of Karvi, whose three relatives, Ram Kanhai 72, Avadhesh 21 and Mahesh Pandey, were kidnapped and shot dead by Dadua, says: "Dadua has killed at least 150 Brahmins. But he will never be caught as station officers of three police stations are on his payroll."

His war on Brahmins has embittered social relationships in the rocky terrain, triggering off the worst-ever caste feud seen in the region. While the Kurmis, forming 40 per cent of the 2.5 lakh population in the "Operation Dadua" area, are "united to save their Dadua," the powerful Brahmins comprising 35 per cent of the population have also closed ranks to ward off the challenge to their sovereignty.

Prakash Narain Tripathi of Manikpur, who once employed the "docile and innocent" Dadua, is vitriolic against him now. "He burnt my truck loaded with logs in 1981, had me shot and injured soon after, and as late as March this year, beat up my labourers and attempted to set light to my tendu field." Living in a house reminiscent of a fortress, Tripathi says he can get rid of Dadua "if given a free hand". His claims are, however, looked upon with suspicion by the local populace, which holds him responsible for initiating Dadua into the world of crime.

The reason for Dadua's elusiveness is that he is always on the move, never resting for more than a few hours at a place. Three of his kidnapped victims, Mahavir Gupta 59, Bhuyandan Gupta 47 and Chunwa Gupta 23 assert that Dadua did not touch a drop of liquor during the 27 days they were held captive nor allowed his gang to drink—a rare achievement for a dacoit chieftain. Consumption is, however, eating away at the entrails of the 35-year-old outlaw and Sadhu Pandit, 50, who was kidnapped from Hanua village, says that Dadua takes medicines religiously three times a day to keep his ailment at bay.

Crime has always been a cottage industry in Banda, a district where the poor prefer to forgo a day's meal for months altogether to buy a gun. The registered firearms licences range from 300 to 650 at each of the district's 19 police stations—many of them being the deadly .375 mm Magnum rifle or .30 Springfield carbine. Violence is so deeply ingrained in these thatched lives that womenfolk of some families will consider themselves widows only when their husbands' deaths have been avenged.

"Operation Dadua" has, however, added a new dimension to the violence-scarred lives of the people of Manikpur and Karvi. More than the prey it is the predators who have become the objects of dread and terror for the 2.5 lakh villagers eking out a miserable existence in the villages of the "Operation Dadua" area. Tales of police bestiality have overshadowed the failure of the men in uniform to liquidate the dacoit. Armed with the Anti-dacoity Act, policemen have gone from village to village wielding canes, insulting women and at times even forcing the villagers to leave their homes. Some villages, where mass looting, beatings and evacuations have been confirmed, include Onjhar, Panwari, Agru Hura, Bhujauli, Rojhota, Bilkhari, Mahulia and Pipra in the Manikpur-Karvi area. A revenue official of Manikpur confessed that mass rapes had been committed in Garwara, Deokali and Parampura villages but added that the villagers were fearful and lacked the courage to lodge reports.

But the main fear is that with the current caste war raging in the area, Dadua killed will be more dangerous than Dadua alive. The poor villagers are mortally afraid that with Dadua eliminated, the Brahmins will hit back with impunity to settle old scores. Meanwhile, they are the target of harassment by the forces involved in "Operation Dadua". Either way, they are the only ones who will lose if Dadua is finally eliminated.

—DILIP AWASTHI in Manikpur

Sadhu Pandit who was kidnapped by Dadua and released

Chunwa, Bhuyandan and Mahavir: kidnapped for ransom

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Of the 1550 Busybees installed within just one year, a full 40% are repeat orders from top companies like TELCO, Blowplast, The Shriram Group, English Electric, HAL...

Just one year since its launch, the HCL Busybee IBM compatible PC/PC XT has become a major success story. And what has been so gratifying about the Busybee's success is the extent of repeat orders.

TELCO, starting off with just one trial machine, soon placed repeat orders totalling 28 Busybees in succeeding months. Sundaram Clayton placed repeat orders worth 24 machines. Blowplast repeat orders of 17 machines. HAL wanted 18 more after its initial order. The Department of Space till now has 52 machines and Indian Institute of Science 32. The story was the same with the Shriram Group... and the list goes on.

Repeat orders that account for almost 40% of the total Busybees booked. A fact which shows the trust enjoyed by the Busybee within just one year of its launch.

A customer list no one else can match.

The HCL Busybee's client list reads like the who's who of Indian Science and Industry.

With companies like TELCO, Thermax, BATA, Blowplast, English Electric, Reader's Digest, JCT Mills Ltd., IFFCO, ECIL, GMMCo, Paradeep Phosphates, Indian Railways, HAL, Fenner, Jenson and Nicholson, BHEL, NGEF, The Shriram Group, MICO, Reckitt and Colman, Hindustan Motors, U.S. Aid... to name just a few.

Premier educational and research institutions like IIMs Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Calcutta, Jamna Lal Bajaj Institute, IITs Kharagpur and Madras, CEERI Pilani, ISRO, NAL, Indian Institute of Science, VSSC, BARC and many more. Who have whole heartedly opted for the Busybee.

An amazing 98.9% national uptime.

The reliability of the HCL Busybee is borne out by its maintaining a 98.9% national uptime! Across the country. Setting something of a record for PCs.

A record which is made possible because of HCL's wide network of support infrastructure. With 34 support offices across the length and breadth of the country. And with every second one of its over 800 workforce an engineer, engaged in support functions.

The hard facts about the Busybee.

The HCL Busybee is probably the most powerful and versatile IBM PC compatible available today.

It is the only Bi-lingual PC/PC XT to date. Supporting Devnagri as well as English for word processing. So you can create documents in Devnagri. Or use Devnagri characters with English in the same report or even in the same line!

In a large organisation with multiple departments, the Busybees link in a Local Area Network of upto 64 machines over a distance of 1.2 Kms. Sharing expensive peripherals, communicating and sharing information. Yet maintaining confidentiality with a 2-level password system.

And if your requirement is Multi-terminal, you can add on two additional terminals. Through the industry standard MP/M Operating System—ideal for a data processing environment and with the most powerful COBOL capability, used on the HCL Workhorse II.

Then the Busybee talks to the giants too. Through Mainframe Linkage to systems like Data General, Burroughs, Sperry Univac, or the HCL Workhorse II and Horizon.

Hardware Add-ons like the Mouse, Digitizer and X-Y Plotter make the Busybee the most versatile PC for your Computer Aided Design and Graphic Presentation.

The 8 MHz optional CPU clock time is one of the fastest of all IBM PC compatibles. Its Hard Disk Drive add-on enables the processing of much larger volumes of information. While the Cartridge Tape back-up safeguards against corruption of important data.

The 8" Floppy Drive of the Busybee makes it compatible to earlier generation systems.

The HCL Busybee. Setting the standard for PCs and PCXTs in the country within just one year of its launch. The beginning of the biggest success story of the year.

HCL
BUSYBEE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRAVEL FRAUD

Passport to Easy Money

TAUFEER Parvez of Lucknow submitted her passport to the local passport office a few months ago to get her son's name endorsed on it. Months later, told that her passport was lost, she applied for a duplicate only to learn that her passport had turned up in Delhi—in the hands of a small-time travel agent arrested for fraud. The passport bore the names of four children—not hers—and $2,000 had been drawn on it under the Foreign Travel Scheme (FTS). This intriguing case is just one of the hundreds that have begun to attract the attention of the Enforcement Directorate, the Finance Ministry's watchdog agency for foreign exchange .

Travel fraud is suddenly big business and easy money. That the racket is country-wide and booming is borne out by the arrests made by the authorities in recent months from Delhi, Madras, Bombay, Bangalore, Jalandhar and many small towns in western Uttar Pradesh. Those arrested included fly-by-night operators gypping innocent passengers of thousands of rupees to get them passports and visas, the general sales agents (GSA's) of major airlines, the owners of major travel agencies and small-time curbside touts who collect foreign exchange and sell it in the black market.

The most startling is the case of GSA's, two of whom landed in the Enforcement Directorate's net last fortnight. Naresh Goyal, managing director of Jet Air, the agent for a large number of airlines including TWA, Kuwait, Singapore, Philippines and Gulfair, was arrested in Bombay in connection with retention of foreign exchange abroad, running offices outside the country without RBI permission and receiving part of his commission abroad on discounted tickets sold in India. He was released on bail but a full-scale investigation was launched into his dealings.

Simultaneously, the Enforcement Directorate launched prosecution against another major travel agency, Onkar Travels, GSA in New Delhi for Japan Airlines. The premises of the company and its directors were searched last September and the documents recovered during the raids revealed that as far back as 1980, Onkar Travels had acquired foreign exchange worth $1,20,6197 and £80,000, transferred it outside India and sold it to an Indian businessman in the US. Enforcement Directorate investigations revealed that in return, Onkar Travels had received payments of about Rs 1.17 crore from the Delhi-based father of the businessman. It is suspected that this may be the commission the agency received for discounted airline tickets sold in India, according to a senior directorate official.

A forged Pakistani visa; and (below) confiscated blocks and passports

BHAWAN SINGH

But there are also the smaller touts, whose methods range from the simple to the ingenious. The simplest of all techniques was employed by Parvez Alam Dost, 26, owner of a small travel agency called Dost Travels operating from Delhi's Jama Masjid area. He used to obtain the passports of poor Muslim villagers living in Saharanpur and Muzaffarnagar who had relatives in Pakistan. False visas for Pakistan were then stamped on these passports and the names of four to five dependent children forged onto the passport. Dost's men then bought cheap Delhi-Lahore railway tickets costing Rs 58 for each prospective passenger and armed with these documents, they would visit the Janpath branch of the Union Bank of India. A "helpful" official in the bank's foreign exchange department—who was later arrested by the authorities—unquestioningly paid out $500 per passenger. Dost's staff used to bring to the bank bunches of 100 passports and, on an average, draw $2,000 per passport. The Enforcement Directorate estimates that Dost and his men drew $387,500 from the bank. His main associate and financier was Haji Ikram, from whose house enforcement officials seized documents revealing that in one week alone he had provided Rs 7 lakh to Dost to buy dollars. Dost and Ikram have been detained under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Act.

Dost's activities turned out to be only the tip of a large operation whose tentacles extended to separate gangs of passport forgers and printers, visa slip forgers, couriers and printers of counterfeit currency, and staff members of the passport offices in Delhi, Bareilly and Lucknow. The original owners of the passports were mostly unaware of the use their passports were being put to by petty tricksters. More than two dozen persons have been arrested in connection with this racket, including some who had set up a press to print passports, and others who were manufacturing rubber stamps to make endorsements in the passports.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In recent times, however, the biggest rackets uncovered involve foreign travel allowance drawn for trips to neighbouring countries. Two Madras travel agencies, Jai Exports and Tours and Vellavar Travels, used pretty much the same methods employed by Dost Travels in Delhi. They hired a broker, K.V. Jesudas, to "purchase" passports from poor villagers for under Rs 200. Inexpensive air tickets to Sri Lanka or the Maldives were purchased in the names of the passport holders and the travel agent's employees, then foreign exchange was drawn from the Mount Road and Kondichetty Street branches of the Bank of Madura, where helpful staff paid out unsigned traveller's cheques. Enforcement Directorate officials say that in this way, Jai Exports and Tours had illegally drawn traveller's cheques worth $8,98,650 whereas Vellavar Travels had drawn $92,000. Jai Exports Managing Director S. Subbiah and Director S. Pallanivellu were quickly arrested along with the owner of Vellavar Travels, Sri Annamalai, and broker Jesudas. When questioned, the passportholders denied having applied for the foreign travel allowance. Most of them claimed they had lost their passports or sent them for renewal.

Kundan Singh of Jalandhar was more enterprising. Single-handed, he ran a foreign exchange racket which enabled him to pocket $3,47,248, £32,137 and Canadian $3,061. When arrested, Kundan Singh reportedly admitted to the authorities that he had drawn the $500 allowance on 548 passports. All he did was to buy air tickets in a name with initials like G. Singh. He would then take the passport of Gurdev Singh and after collecting the $500, take the same ticket back with another passport belonging to Gurmit Singh, then a third of Gurcharan Singh and so on. Or he would use the same passport again and again after changing the photograph. An educated man, Kundan Singh used illiterate villagers as couriers to collect money from the banks; four such villagers were arrested with him. The authorities suspect that Kundan Singh was passing on the foreign currency to smugglers involved in gold-running from Pakistan to India.

The same kind of racket was also busted in Bangalore by the CBI with the additional twist that in this case even Indian Airlines (IA) tickets being used were forged. The CBI uncovered the press printing fake IA tickets in the annexe of a huge bungalow in Madras' fashionable T. Nagar locality. The kingpin of the Bangalore-based racket was I.M. Tahir, 28, alias Raja, a Sri Lanka-born Tamil. He would get the forged tickets from Madras and send villagers with passports round the banks to draw foreign exchange for a trip to Colombo. After obtaining the FTS allowance, the bank's endorsement would be erased from the passport and the same passport submitted again to another bank for a repeat payment. In this way, approximately $2,00,000 were drawn from different banks in Bangalore in a span of just three months.

The most startling is the case of two GSA's who landed in the Enforcement Director's net, Jet Air, agent for a number of airlines, and Onkar Travels, GSA for Japan Airlines.

One thing which has surprised investigators is the ease with which the racketeers have procured large stocks of passports. This, they say, could not have been possible without the active collusion of some staff members of the passport offices, mainly in Bareilly and Lucknow. A case of possessing disproportionate assets has already been registered against a former passport officer of Bangalore and the Ministry of External Affairs has been informed of the CBI's suspicion about the involvement of passport office staff at other places.

Following the discovery of the widespread travel-related fraud in foreign exchange, the RBI had changed the rules for grant of foreign exchange allowance under the FTS. The $500 allowance will now be paid once every three years instead of once every two years. The allowance for those travelling to neighbouring countries has been reduced to $250 (from $500 earlier) and that too only once in three years. To further minimise the chances of racketeering, the Home Ministry has suggested to the Reserve Bank that those wanting to travel to Pakistan and Bangladesh should be paid only in Pakistani rupees and Bangladeshi takas. If accepted, this could help block the drain of valuable foreign exchange, which now finds its way to the black market and is used for smuggling gold, narcotics and probably guns into India.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAMESH KRISHNAN

Serving Notice

IN A SPORT dominated by brute strength, scorching serves and muscle power, his game—built on elegant, almost casually languid but deceptively lethal ground strokes—is something of an anachronism. Logically, he should be a marginal force in today's world of tennis, but 25-year-old Ramesh Krishnan served notice at the Wimbledon championship last fortnight that he is a much better player than his pre-tournament rank of 41 would suggest. Apart from making it to the quarter-finals (he is only the third Indian to do so), Krishnan also showed that he has matured into a much tougher player—both mentally and physically—and might be approaching his peak.

Krishnan's brightest hour came on a blazing hot summer day when he demolished sixth-seeded Joachim Nystrom, winner of five titles this year and marginally behind world champion Ivan Lendl in the Nabisco tally. Wrote tennis world's top commentator David Irvine: "The Indian beat Nystrom with tennis in the Ken Rosewall mould: with sudden drop shots, subtle changes of pace, whipped backhand passes unleashed with a roll of the wrist, and a beautiful improvisation when all seemed lost."

Colorsport/Sportsworld

Ramesh: in the Rosewall mould

Krishnan has shed considerable weight. He is leaner, fitter and sharper on the court. There is even a bite to his serve. Several commentators were impressed by his nerve—his "steel" and "spirit" which were previously suspect. They still recall how he let slip a peerless opportunity in 1983 after a superb five-set duel with Vitas Gerulaitis.

Relaxing at his rented house, Krishnan concurred about his new image: "I am more determined now. Perhaps marriage has made me more responsible."

Arriving in England in early June, Krishnan performed well enough in pre-Wimbledon matches to attract the notice of The Times' tennis correspondent, Rex Bellamy, who quoted a Belgian journalist as saying: "Krishnan is like the cream on the strawberries." To attract this kind of attention in the highly-charged atmosphere of Wimbledon, the unofficial world championship, is not easy. You need the rock star charisma and good looks of a Pat Cash or the 'golden boy' aura of a Boris Becker or the swashbuckling French Musketeer style of a Henri Leconte.

Yet, the short, unassuming and serious-looking Krishnan confounded critics. He said later: "After this championship, I now have an idea of what the guys go through to win a big tournament—it takes a lot of physical strength, it goes on for two weeks, it is three out of five sets and ultimately, it is a big learning experience." Added father Ramanathan Krishnan: "Ramesh's success proves his dedication to the game."

The five-setter Krishnan had to endure was against Mike Bauer, a big-built American. In a match in which fortunes careened wildly, what stood out was the former Wimbledon junior champion's ice-cool demeanour. But it was only after his upset win over Nystrom that Krishnan attracted headline attention and comparisons with Rosewall. Was he flattered? "Very much so. I have always considered him a genius. He too didn't have a big serve and is the perfect player for me to model my game on."

In this world of cannon-ball serves Krishnan's serve is something of a disadvantage. But it leaves him unfazed: "I think I have to learn to play my ground strokes in such a way as to protect my serve. I am not going to serve like a Becker or a Lendl or a Zivojinovic, because I am not built that way. You have to build on what you have."

His adaptability was most in evidence against the unheralded West German Eric Jelen, another giant killer at the tournament. But Krishnan disposed him off in straight sets in just over 100 minutes. His quarter finals against the 6 ft 6 in Yugoslav, Slobodan Zivojinovic, was billed as a David vs Goliath duel. It proved to be one, with the Slavonic sledgehammer blasting down 16 aces. Said Krishnan later: "I found his serve too hot to handle. He put a lot of pressure on me from the word go." Admitted "Bobo" Zivojinovic: "I had to keep on top of him because Krishnan is one of the best touch players in the world."

The new look Krishnan is now taking a few days off in Madras before returning to the American circuit in preparation for the US Open. His keenness to get back to competitive play is evident when he says: "I don't want to say, well, I performed so well at Wimbledon, let me take a fortnight off. I will then lose my sharpness. I want to get back to the US before the week is over." The US circuit is largely played on Krishnan's favourite surface—cement—which means that his fans in India will have plenty to cheer about in the months to come.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IF YOU WANT TO GET AHEAD, START BY KEEPING UP.

It's easy to spot the people on the move in business.

They're already reacting to the latest developments before others are even aware of them.

They read The Asian Wall Street Journal.

All the business news you need.

Every business day, The Asian Wall Street Journal gives you important information that can affect you, your career, and your company.

No business magazine is as timely, no newspaper business section as complete.

The Asian Journal has access to the largest staff of business news experts in the world. They know what you need, while sparing you the unimportant and the irrelevant.

So if you're serious about getting ahead, you should read the publication that keeps successful executives on top of the business news.

The Asian Wall Street Journal.

Subscribe now for a free gift.

Enter a new subscription for three months, and we'll send you a fine leather passport case, free. Subscribe for one year, and receive an elegant quartz analog travel clock, absolutely free.

To start your subscription to The Asian Wall Street Journal, please complete the coupon below and mail it today.

Return to: India Book Distributors
107/8 Arcadia Bldg, 195 Nariman Point, Bombay 400021 (Tel: 225220)

YES, please enter my subscription to The Asian Wall Street Journal for (tick one):

☐ ONE YEAR (253 ISSUES) Rs1,650. Send me the free travel clock with case.

☐ THREE MONTHS (64 ISSUES) Rs500. Send me the free leather passport case.

☐ I enclose my cheque for _____ payable to "India Book Distributors."

☐ Please charge my credit card.

☐ Diners Club

☐ Central Card

Signature _____

Card No. _____

Expiry Date _____

Name (please print) _____ Title _____

Company _____

Delivery Address _____

_____ Tel. _____

IT

THE ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Incentive

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NATIONAL BIO-GAS PROJECT

Raising a Stink

FIVE YEARS ago, the Government launched the national bio-gas project as a solution to the rural energy crisis. The targets were grandiose, the budgets generous, and the hopes sky-high. A lot of dung has flowed into the more than 6 lakh bio-gas plants that have been set up in most of the states at a cost of Rs 270 crore. Last month, however, when the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India (CAG) released a review of the programme, it raised doubts as to who was really gassing: the bio-gas plants or the officials who are in charge of the project.

Test checks by the CAG in 16 states yielded shocking findings. In Madhya Pradesh, 35 per cent of the 7,847 plants studied were not functioning because of lack of dung. In Punjab's Bhatinda district, more than 40 per cent of the 653 plants installed were defective, and another 25 per cent were working only partially. The situation in most of the other states was no better.

The review—which has kicked up a storm in official circles—quoted a host of studies done by the states to buttress its main argument: that something was seriously wrong with the bio-gas programme. A survey done two years ago by the Khadi and Village Industries Commission, one of the nodal agencies for the project, found that more than 20 per cent of the 13,216 plants surveyed in Maharashtra, Bihar and Tamil Nadu were not working at all. Worse, the surveyors couldn't find 826 plants that existed on paper.

The most important reason for the plants not functioning was lack of dung. The Department of Non-Conventional Energy Sources (DNES), which has overall charge of the programme, stipulates that anyone who wants to set up a plant must have three or four head of cattle, which can provide 50 kg of dung daily—the average needed to run a plant. But this rule too had been flouted. In Rajasthan, for instance, of the 141 cases selected in Bikaner district, 79 did not own even one animal, while 33 had only one animal each.

DNES officials are now making frantic efforts to refute the damning findings. A series of meetings was convened with state representatives to check the veracity of the charges, and a visibly upset Maheshwar Dayal, secretary in the DNES, said: "On the contrary, the project is a tremendous success and we are shocked at the auditors' report." Dayal pointed out that five independent agencies, including the National Council for Applied Economic Research in New Delhi and the Operations Research Group in Vadodara, had reviewed the bio-gas programme around the same time and found 80 per cent of the plants working. Added a senior official: "We were expecting a pat on the back for our efforts. Instead, we got a kick. The audit report has really defamed us." Nevertheless, the CAG's report raises serious questions about a programme on which Rs 450 crore will be spent in the next four years, on top of the Rs 270 crore that has already been spent.

When the bio-gas project was conceived in the late 1970s, the planners had forecast a very energy-intensive future, basing their calculations on the country's cattle population of 237 million and the annual dung production of a mammoth 980 million tonnes: enough to run 55 million bio-gas plants round the year. The technology to harness this tremendous potential seemed simple: build a concrete tank, fill it with a mixture of dung and water in equal parts and cover it with an airtight slab. The slurry ferments and produces bio-gas, mainly methane, which can be piped straight into specially designed cooking stoves. Apart from producing cooking gas, the slurry can also be used as manure for fields.

When the initial momentum was slow, the Government in 1981 decided to launch the National Project on Bio-gas Development, offering a handsome subsidy of up to a third of the cost of a plant—which is around Rs 4,500. As a result of this, 6.47 lakh plants have sprung up in just five years, 1.9 lakh in the last year alone. Close to Rs 100 crore has already been given out as subsidy, and the project is, according to a DNES official, "ready to take off". The DNES plans to install 15 lakh plants by 1990.

AJIT NINAN

But the CAG report now puts a spanner in the works. While DNES officials argue that most of the flaws pointed out are "technical" and claim that replies received from many states will prove the auditors' findings wrong, even independent agencies reviewing the project have been finding flaws with the whole programme. In north India one of the agencies, which does not want to be quoted, found that during winters, the efficiency of many of the plants dropped to 30 per cent. Maintenance too was a serious problem. On top of everything else, it was turning out to be a rich farmers' project because only those owning three cattle or more were eligible for subsidies and the average cost of Rs 4,500 for setting up a plant effectively priced out the poor.

The bio-gas programme may survive the new spate of criticism. But unless corrective action is taken, the DNES is going to find it difficult to cover up the stink raised by the audit report.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Automatic ageing, testing and sorting machine at Punsumi's Aluminium Electrolytic Capacitor Plant, Bhiwadi.

The machines that make Punsumi Capacitors are nearly foolproof. Nearly. That's why we've got machines to check on the machines.

We felt that even a Rs. 40 million assembly line (fully automated, fully imported from Germany and Japan) can make a mistake. And that's why a capacitor made on it is tested – and tested again. On fully computerised machines that can detect the slightest flaw in machinemanship. What's more, throughout the manufacturing and testing process the capacitor is never once touched by human hands.

The result is a component that is not just the most technically advanced in the country, but also the most reliable.

And just in case you find any of these statements hard to believe, do drop in at our plant in Bhiwadi. We'll be glad to show you around.

You see, we at Punsumi are pretty fanatical about quality assurance and reliability (not just quality control). And we think, you'll find this attitude reflected in the product we make.

If you'd like more details, or want to place an order, mail the coupon to us at the address below.

Name : _____

Designation : _____

Company : _____

Address : _____

_____

_____

punsumi

The Better Capacitor

Punsumi India Limited,
D-16, Meera Marg, Bani Park, Jaipur 302 006.
Phone: 69497, 66171. Telex: 364-210 PUNS IN Regional Offices: Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Presenting an incredible new concept in the field of kidney-stone surgery: No scalpel.

SKF technology helps make it possible.

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Associated Bearing Co Ltd
Hoechst House, Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021

Skefko India Bearing Co Ltd
Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Bldg,
Netaji Subhash Rd, Bombay 400 002

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It almost sounds like something out of science fiction:

A West German group has now developed an amazing new technique of removing kidney stones... by beaming shock waves at them! These shock waves actually pulverise the kidney stones — without, of course, having any adverse effects on the patient himself.

One of the aspects that was critical to the success of the entire project was the availability of electro-mechanical actuators that could enable the apparatus to zero in on the kidney stone with the extreme degree of accuracy and reliability required.

And for these actuators, significantly, the West German group turned to SKF. Hence a set of SKF Transrol ball screws helps control the apparatus's X-ray locating system, as well as its shock-wave generator.

It's this kind of technology that has given us the reputation of being the world leaders in bearings.

And it's this same technology that goes into everything we do – whether it's a bearing for an electrical motor or a truck, for a sugar mill or a nuclear power plant.

SKF. Behind every bearing, a world of technology.

SKF

The World's No. 1 Choice

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I was impressed when my doctor said Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer really stops hair loss".

"My doctor told me Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer* is a unique scientific formula based on extensive research. He also told me it provides all the essential proteins, co-enzymes and vitamins for strengthening hair roots.

All I know is that it has certainly stopped my hair from falling and checked dandruff."

Here's an excerpt from the research report:

"66.66% gave excellent and 33.33% gave good results with complete disappearance of dandruff in all cases and nearly cent per cent stoppage of fall of hair...So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

Indian Medical Gazette 118 223 (1984)

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

* It is not a toilet preparation.

Dey's® Care you can trust

CLARION C-DMHV-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Theatre of the Past

INNER RECESSES OUTER SPACES
Memoirs by KAMALADEVI CHATTOPADHYAY
Navrang
Pages: 410; Price: Rs 195

THE CAST alone is worth the entrance into the theatre which this book holds between its covers. Margaret Cousins teaching the young Kamaladevi the Jana Gana Mana on the piano, the golden eloquence of Sarojini Naidu, pre-dawn walks with Tagore in the beauty of Shantiniketan—set against the background of growing national consciousness and Gandhiji's call to nationhood.

Kamaladevi recalls the numbing sense of disappointment which Gandhi's call to break the innocuous salt tax evoked: "For a moment I felt a chill...is that all our great leader could devise?" Pandit Nehru's bewilderment and irritation, "unable to equate a national struggle with common salt". And the ultimate triumph of the old man's genius, now recorded history.

What is best told is Kamaladevi's stay in Sevagram with Gandhi and Kasturba. "It was a pleasant sight to see them together, an intimacy which is woven like a web, intricate yet simple." And Pandit Nehru's reaction when she tells him that "she was not important enough to add weight to the Congress Executive". Said the Congress president: "May I remind you of the popular allegory of the unostentatious squirrel contributing to the final success of an engineering feat that enabled Rama to cross over to Lanka."

To the post-Independence generation of Indians, these are polaroid images of historic events, flinty courage and untold sorrows—images which are compelling and authentic. They change frequently, yet evoke a response from the bedrock of our being because they are about us. Occasionally she inspires a rejoinder, as when she observes that modern Indian women show subtle undercurrents of prejudice against womanhood, "as though they regretted being born because of several natural functions that went with it". She sees them as isolating themselves from the mainstream of society. An argument which, however, is not true and is harsh on women who are making an attempt to change society from within.

She, however, loosens the silken cords of her persona when she talks frankly of her relationships with people: "I give myself entirely, whole-heartedly, not just bits and pieces of me." Her obvious devotion to the poet-musician Harindranath Chattopadhyay and their discovery of the new theatre is movingly described. But marriage to him could not retain that intoxicating passion for long.

She does not come out on the quality of communication between her and Verrier Elwin, the anthropologist who had married a tribal, but she notes on his death: "It left a big void in my heart...(he was) only one of his kind in my life." And of her meeting with physicist J.C. Bose she records that "he was vibrant with energy and yet soft with dreams lurking behind the eyes".

For Kamaladevi, nature is clothed in soft drapes and she lets the reader take a peep, as if through a filter. "So this is the true Ananda!," she exclaims, one evening in Ooty, as a rare blue envelopes the ghats. In Darjeeling the sunrise is awash with an enamel-tinged pink and she invites the reader to celebrate its perfection.

It is far easier to describe what Kamaladevi is not—not a cabinet minister, not a Congress president, not even one of the devotees upon whom Mahatma Gandhi leaned on his way to prayer meetings. By normal standards, such a person should be a saint, a discredited politician or dead. But this lady towers like an elegant colossus in India's showcase of freedom fighters and nation-builders. Her book is steeped in the importance she accords to the dignity of man, and is like the finger tracing the words, guiding the inner eye to spaces where fears of subordination were vanquished.

Today, Kamaladevi dwells in two spheres: the body entombed in one sphere, diminishing, hurting, while the heart and the mind are adrift in the other where the past nestles in the present, as the future burgeons forth from it.

The chapters are steeped in vital essences which her mind has distilled—the impeccable priority for human dignity; her joy in the beauty of nature and its gentle embellishment by craftspeople; her detachment with a capacity to be still, full of a silence which is pregnant, not empty.

Here is a personality who has not been associated with any 'ism', but has compacted a philosophy of life, and a wisdom which Tagore sang about:

"Where roads are made I lose my way, in the wide water, in the blue sky,
there is no line of a track,
The pathway is hidden by the bird's wings, by the star-fires, by the flowers
Of the wayfaring seasons,
And I ask my heart if its blood
Carries the wisdom of the unseen way."

—NALINI SINGH

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

Extract

'Many of us chafed over what appeared to be a stalemate. Impatiently, we looked to Gandhiji for a sign, but none seemed visible. We had not yet grasped his uncanny capacity to gauge a situation accurately, and the ability to act at the proper psychological hour. Pandit Nehru remarked that he was not of ordinary coinage but made of a rare metal and could not be assessed by our normal weights and measures. Though we fretted we knew that when the hour came, he would strike and strike hard and one day it would be the final stroke.'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Success isn't the end of the road.

Success can make one complacent. At Unit Trust, we are well aware of the danger.

Each year, we've set ourselves targets. Each year, we've worked hard and achieved them. Sometimes even overshot them.

But far from allowing this to make us sit back and take things easy, it has only spurred us on.

This can be seen in everything we did over the last year.

Sales under our various schemes crossed Rs.860 crores.

Investible funds reached Rs.3239 crores, recording an increase of over Rs.1000 crores.

The number of Unit-holders in the country rose to over two million.

However, much more revealing than the changing figures were the ways in which the perspectives of the organisation changed in the last year.

Take financing for a start. The Trust took the bold step of going into a non-traditional but extremely important new area — housing. Already, in the very first year, loans to State Governments for housing projects crossed Rs.100 crores.

We took several popular Unit Trust schemes and made them even more meaningful in the current context. The accent is on growth-orientation, reflecting the need of the investor today.

We went even further in our efforts to bring people closer and closer to Units. We introduced Unit Trust counters in department stores. Investors are now able to buy Units at their convenience, at the nearby store.

As part of the same drive, we worked out a special arrangement with selected Hindustan Petroleum petrol pumps. Investors can now come in and pick up literature and application forms for any Unit Trust scheme, at any time.

New ground was covered with Project PURA for the promotion of Units in rural areas. We are working with several fertiliser companies to bring the message of Units to people in remote villages.

The last year also saw a very significant development in the Trust's 22-year old history. For the very first time, the Trust's activities took on a global dimension. Unit Trust tied-up with Merrill Lynch the world-renowned investment consultants. Together we will be bringing the advantages of Units to people outside India as well.

A lot of spade work was also done for the setting up of a Mutual Fund. A Fund that would offer capital growth and at the same time reduce risks. An unusual and attractive combination for people who are interested in investing on the stock market.

Those are some of the highlights of the last year.

Every little success we have achieved so far will be yet another reason to push ourselves a little further in the future.

As our perspectives have grown so have the challenges. And our determination to meet them.

UNIT TRUST OF INDIA

(A Public Sector Financial Institution)

Sinar-UTI 7809BA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The B-25 super micro

"Designed on a cluster concept... the B-25 on a standalone basis is at least 4 to 5 times as powerful as the IBM PC/XT... Supports MSDOS and CP/M."
– Smith Barney Research

- Affordable Power
  Mini-computer power at micro-prices
- Built-in Clustering
  To share data and peripherals as your needs grow, without forming islands of information
- Enormous Growth
  To handle your growing needs without disruptive replacement of computers
- Multiple O.S.
  Multi-User BTOS, Single-User IBM-PC compatible MSDOS

The Cute Brute!

Tata Burroughs Limited

Marketing offices at:
Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta, Madras, Bangalore

Tata Burroughs Limited
216-A, Manish Commercial Centre
Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025

Shilpi TBL 10/88

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Gaindamal women mourn Lalaji (Sudhir Pande); and (right) Sippy directs: family saga

BUNIYAAD

The New-wave Saga

FROM Hum Log to 'Punjabi log', television has come a long way. From tackiness to slice-of-life realism, from Dadaji's average present-day Indian family to Lalaji's pre-partition Punjab and the Buniyaad (foundation) of a new phase in Indian television.

Tuesday and Saturday nights are curfew time in Lahore: the streets of the city are empty as people rush home to see their favourite Buniyaad. Back home in India too, the TV series is rapidly moving up the popularity charts, and now ranks second among all TV serials, behind Nukkad (see box).

Scripted by long-distance writer Manohar Shyam Joshi (157 episodes for Hum Log; 104 eventually for Buniyaad), it is genuine, good soap opera. The realism about the series gives it depth and authenticity, without making the viewer uncomfortable in his drawing-room. So the partition bloodbath is no more than a little rioting and looting. The horror and communal tension that Lalaji and his clan are confronted with are sanitised. It is the bowdlerized version we are presented: even realism must make bow to the demands of the medium.

What makes this rapidly unfolding saga of a Punjabi family—which begins in Lahore in 1915 and ends in Delhi in 1985—so special and engrossing is the attention to detail, the special quality to the language, the high quality of acting by people who were not stars before, the nostalgia it evokes across much of the country's northern belt. The sights and the sounds of olden day Lahore waft outward from the screen. Buniyaad takes the people of Punjab back to their roots. Says Aneeta Kanwar, whose amazing performance as Lajoji has made her the leading actress of the small screen: "My mother was so upset after the first episode, the partition one. She said it brought back terrible memories. But later she liked it; it was like going home twice a week, she told me."

The absence of stars in the serial only enhances its authenticity. Kanwar, despite a few sterling performances—as the bubbling young bride in Adhaarshila, the convincing tart in Mandi, and more recently, the older, tremulous other woman in Janam—was unknown and literally homeless until Buniyaad came along. "I moved from one friend's house to another...I could not even see any films. I was so poor." Alok Nath never became a household name despite his appearance in 13 serials, until he played Haveli Ram-Lajoji's lovable, fumbling Masterji. Asha Sachdev—Shano, the meanie in the stories—had been relegated to the dead-end of filmdom but now makes everybody think of their nasty sisters-in-law. Says Director Ramesh Sippy: "Unknown faces do help. If somebody who had played a swashbuckling pirate tried to play the role of Haveli Ram, it might not have been so effective."

This is not the instant television or video. It is real film. Sippy (Sholay, Sagar) is using 16 mm—his usual team of above 100 people in attendance—and not making any concessions for television. So the budgets are bigger than TV is used to: the sets alone have cost over Rs 10 lakhs already, and each episode about Rs 3 lakhs (both more than double the norm for the small screen). The extravagance may be justified: the producers plan to market Buniyaad abroad. Says Amit Khanna, the executive producer: "The large Hispanic markets of the United States look very promising." And so, before long, Lajoji

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Haveli Ram (Alok Nath), Lajo (Aneeta Kanwar) and chaiji (Asha Sharma): house hold names may be spouting impeccable Spanish to her Masterji.

More than the extravagance of the production, it is the detailed research into the period and the people of Lahore of that time and the story-line (many people recognise their grandparents) which is helping push Buniyaad up on the ratings list. The non-Punjabis, for whom words like chaiji, bauji and colourful gaalis for which Punjabis are known and grudgingly admired—khasma khaniyeh, marjani, margai—are quaint and almost endearing, have also begun to watch the Buniyaad serial. And the sets are absorbing. A large corner of Film City in Bombay has been transformed into a bit of Lahore by Sudhendu Roy.

The architecture of the place is pivotal to the story. For instance, the mounty—an arch of sorts between the stairs and the terrace—is indispensible to the story. And the props: the earthern pickle jars, the chhajj-makers, the doridhandas (spice-grinding pots), the solid mahogany hat racks and hangers with their criss-cross designs, and the very real door of the Atmaram house with its chained kundi and aala—the lamp-arch above the door—all add to the authenticity. Quaintest of all is the kitchen: the spankingly clean brass utensils arranged neatly in a row and the chulha which almost brings a remembrance of meals past. The art director's eagle eye has not missed even the tap in the courtyard: the green moss behind the tap has also been reproduced.

Finally, of course, it is the acting which has endeared Buniyaad to its audience. Much of it comes from the language and gestures of the Punjabi. Says Hindi writer Krishna Sobti, who provided most of the details: "Language is sensibility—that certain Punjabipan. We had to give the smell. We had to find the essence of the urban Punjabi: mannerism, speech, body language..." Says Kanwar: "Krishna Sobti helped me understand how much I was to flirt with Masterji. It was almost flirting, and yet it also had to be innocent."

RAMESH SIPPY, unshaven and lost in Lahore, says that he is telling the story of every and any family. "We are interested in the universality. After all, family relationships are the same anywhere...There are the same emotions of love, hate, jealousy. Children are born, people die. We are trying to be authentic; not only in the costumes and backdrop, but the way the characters speak and emote."

What is missing is the nitty-gritty of the communal tension of partition-time Lahore. It remains a backdrop to the story of Lalaji's family. But Sippy justifies this: "Partition was not our story. Its importance lies in the fact that it displaced people. The Hindu-Muslim hatred is not really our story...We have been asked to keep clear of this...But rather than portray a goody-goody world, I stayed away from it altogether."

History then can only be glimpsed out of the window. The focus is on the family; but what makes it more than a sarson ka saga, or Punjab's answer to Dynasty or Dallas, are the interesting historical references. Continuous references to events are made: Bhagat Singh's arrest, the Simon Commission, the Naujawan Bharat Sabha. Even the names of plays on at that time in Lahore have been dug up—Bhola Shikar, Chandidas and Miss 1933. (Dr Pushpesh Pant of Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, provided the chronology.)

The period and location may be specific, but it is about every man and every woman. Haveli Ram is no hero: he is vulnerable; he does not know how to propose to Lajoji or how to become a revolutionary. These are people who were caught up in those times, and most of us can find them in our family-trees. Says Alok Nath: "My nana was a freedom fighter and in this role I have been inspired by him. When my mother saw me, she almost broke down."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But Buniyaad has until now captured only the northern heart; in the south the popularity ratings have not crossed 40 per cent, compared to as high as the 90 per cent range further north. But gradually, as the story shifts to Delhi, more parts of the country will be drawn into the dragnet. As they move down the genealogy of Lajoji and Masterji, the sons become more cosmopolitan. One of them joins the Government and lives in bureaucratic Lodhi Estate, the other becomes a businessman and lives in refugee-built Karol Bagh. Keeping up with the times and that window to the outside, there is even a grandson attracted to the Naxalite movement. So the story moves down the ladder of time. And Buniyaad takes root.

—MADHU JAIN in Bombay

NUKKAD

Corner Stone

IF BUNIYAAD is the soap opera of the right, Nukkad has been christened the soap opera of the left. The little screen bristles with energy each week as the 27 characters crowd this street corner—albeit in search of a story-line. A beggar, tailor, barber, shopkeeper, drunkard, sweeper...the cast reads like a poor man's who's who. It is also "an exercise in collective nostalgia" for Saeed Akhtar Mirza, his brother Aziz, and Kundan Shah, who take turns to direct. Says Mirza: "This is not supposed to be a real world; there is a certain idealisation. There is a bit of Awara, Shri 420, Do Bigha Zamin. It is a lost world where words like solidarity, compassion meant something—these words are outdated today."

The sets of Nukkad—spread out over 600 square feet in Rajkamal Studios—certainly look like a slice-of-street corner-life at first view. Over Rs 1.25 lakh was spent in creating this nukkad with its Taj International Continental Hotel ('with no branches'), Raghunath's Electrical Shop, Janata Sari Shop and Guptaji's shop. The buildings are crumbling; the dirt and squalor show. But on second view, it does seem idealised. Where would one find a street corner which has the lower middle class, the middle class and the mezzanine middle class living cheek-by-jowl?

Mirza wanted to portray all three worlds: from the lower middle class of Bhendi Bazaar and Parel to the slightly upper middle class of Shivaji Park and Mahim. Says Jayant Bhinde, the art director who designed the sets after taking 1,300 pictures of street corners in Bombay: "I have spent enough time in Metro Bar, Cafe Cadel in Shivaji Park, Excelsior Restaurant in Mahim and at Lucky's in Bandra to know this world. These are all nukkads: you sit back and love and hate."

Nostalgia it might be for the directors, but the viewers have taken illusion for reality. Nukkad societies have come up in Bombay. Says Raja (Hyder Ali): "People come up to us in the streets and say: this is our Guru, this is our Khopdi." A Raghunath's Electrical Shop has sprung up in Bombay Central, a Khopdi Bar in Bandra, Karim's Hajjam Shop on Grant Road, and even a shop called Nukkad in Bandra. Says Guru (Dilip Dhawan), the series' soft-hearted toughie and its fulcrum to some extent: "People take this serial too seriously. Because of its repetitive nature, there is nothing to break that illusion."

Mirza (below); and the Nukkad crowd: streetside story

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

Nukkad gives you the people of the streets, but these are not mean streets. The inhabitants of Nukkad, be they beggar, sweeper or drunkard, are lovable. Khopdi, the drunkard (Samir Kakkad, teetotaller in real life), is no less adorable than Winnie the Pooh. The beggar, Ghanshu (Suresh Bhagwat, who is however an architect in real life), is almost as lovable—you would not mind taking him home to mother, almost. And Hari (Pavan Malhotra) is a roadside Romeo few would slap.

It is this very cuteness that has made leftists the more vocal critics of the series. But Mirza says: "I am not dealing with Marxism. Yes, it is a left-wing programme. I am left-wing, but I did not want to be dogmatic. There is an expansiveness in Marxism which the theorists have lost. They want to make everything obscenely dour. They would have loved a Lower Depths kind of story."

Whatever the critics might say, Nukkad makes you turn and take a second look at the beggar and drunkard on the street: they could well be Khopdi or Ghanshu. The inhabitants of Nukkad are here to stay, but what will last long after the series is over is its exuberant street slang: Bambaiyya. The vernacular is already crossing the borders of the metropolis. And that is the ultimate achievement of this street corner named Nukkad. One day perhaps, even the Doordarshan newsreader might bat an eyelid and say: "Good evening, Reagan told Gorbachev to chul phut this morning."

—MADHU JAIN in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The future finds the pace of Neyveli Lignite maddening, as it races through the nineties...

What it doesn't know is, that we'd like to be there to welcome 2001 A.D., before it arrives...

Ever since 1976, when it turned the corner, NLC's saga of success, has touched dizzy heights. Before one starts fading from the view, another landmark follows.

PERFORMANCE AWARDS GALORE:

From the Government of India's Import Substitution Award for modification and perfecting the bucket wheel technology, to National Safety Awards for 7 consecutive years; from continuously bagging the coveted Awards of National Productivity Council and Government of India, for the best performance among Thermal Power stations, to winning first prizes at the State and National Trade Fairs; from Awards for Family Welfare programmes from FICCI and Tamil Nadu Government, to finding a place among the Top Ten public sector enterprises in India... Neyveli Lignite has blazed one trail after another.

ALL SET FOR 2001 A.D.

Come 2001 AD, Asia's largest mine-based integrated industrial and power complex, will have created yet another stunning performance record, with lignite production soaring to 32 million tonnes and Power generation, a whopping 3990 MW!

Neyveli Lignite Corporation, is veritably proud to be Asia's most veteran, experienced and seasoned organisation — in the art and skill of lignite mining and power generation. Naturally, its services have been requisitioned by the States of Gujarat, Rajasthan and Jammu & Kashmir.

Yes, NLC, is always one step ahead of the future.

Having taken the past and present, in its strides...

admas/NLC/075

NEYVELI LIGNITE CORPORATION LTD.
A Government of India Enterprise
NEYVELI 607 801 ■ TAMIL NADU

NLC — GROWING POWER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ON WINGS OF FIRE

Unholy Furore

HOW DOES one make a film on an ancient prophet who founded the world's oldest-living faith some 6000-7000 years ago, whose teachings handed down in now-defunct languages have had myriad different interpretations, and whose present-day followers are a shrinking breed? The answer is: very, very carefully.

But the producers of the film, On Wings of Fire, based on Zoroastrianism and the Prophet Zarathustra, chose to disregard this precept. Caution should certainly have been the watchword for those behind the venture, originally titled A Quest for Zarathustra, which has the renowned Bombay born Parsi maestro Zubin Mehta as its pivotal figure. In their exuberance, however, Executive Producer-Director Cyrus H. Bharucha, co-producer Meherji Madan and others of the Persepolis Productions Inc., a company formed specifically for this project, seem to have burnt their fingers.

During the course of the production, eventually premiered at Bombay's Sterling Cinema last month, they proclaimed: "Just as Sir Richard Attenborough's Gandhi has touched us all on a worldwide scale, this film may evolve into a thought-provoking experience of far-reaching consequence." Instead, On Wings of Fire ruffled quite a few feathers and generated much heat among the orthodoxy within this minuscule community—said to number 1.4 lakh throughout the world, with about 1 lakh domiciled in India. Not only was the 90-minute presentation replete with misrepresentations and gross distortions, it was a dastardly attempt to convey an unhallowed portrayal of the religion and its prophet, the rarely militant conservatives fumed.

A scathing indictment appeared in the community's Gujarati-language newspapers, Jame Jamshed and Mumbai Samachar. In the English language community journal Parsiana, three high priests, Dr Hormazdyar Mirza, Dr Kaikhushroo Jamapasa and Dr Feroz Kotwal, asserted: "The film, if produced in the form and manner reported in the press, will be construed as a deliberate and malicious act intended to outrage religious beliefs by insulting the religion and beliefs of the Parsi community."

NOSHIR M. DESAI

Bharucha (far left) with cast on the sets; and (right) Mehta: fiery reaction

Behram Mistry, the fire-eating member of the Sestet, Council of Vigilant Parsis, moved the Bombay High Court for an injunction on the screening of the film. Both the petition and the subsequent appeal were dismissed, with eminent jurist Nani A. Palkhivala appearing on behalf of the respondents. Incidentally, Palkhivala also chairs the Oriental Heritage Trust, the sponsoring organisation and one of the fund raisers for the film. Some diehards decided to adopt the direct approach and picket the premiere but sharp monsoon showers dampened their zeal.

Probably the film-makers had nothing diabolical up their sleeves. But Bharucha and Mehta, both key persons in the production of the film, had at the outset affirmed that the project, as it progressed, would afford them an insight into their religion. Thus implying that their understanding of their faith would be manifest at the end, rather than at the beginning, of the production.

Most of the 'research' for this Rs 1.08 crore production shot mostly in Bombay and Navsari—an erstwhile citadel of the Parsis in Gujarat—was entrusted to Zoroastrian Studies (ZS), a religious studies institution directed by Khojestee Mistree who plays the role of a priest in the film. It is to Mistree that Zubin Mehta—who plays himself in the production, a westernised Parsi in search of his roots—poses questions about his faith and its implications. On Wings of Fire is a tacit projection of the interpretations espoused by Zarathustra, many of which are the subject of dispute.

For instance, in his eschatological dissertations in the film, British actor Nigel Terry, who portrays Zarathustra, is made to argue in the court of King Vistasp that death is evil. In reality, Zarathustra propounded that death was a necessary and unavoidable element for the evolution of human-kind. This concept is based on the underlying principle of reincarnation, a principle rejected by Zarathustra which expresses belief in resurrection instead, and the final day of judgement. Also, in the scene where

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Zarathustra confronts Ahriman, the supreme spirit of evil, the Prophet seems to loose his nerve and plaintively urges his nemesis to leave him alone. Actually, Zarathustra, who evolved this non-idolatrous and monotheistic faith in ancient Iran at the time of the Kayanian dynasty, circa 6350 BC, exhorts his adherents to stoically overcome the evil within and around them.

The film-makers have cast their version of Zarathustra in the role of a philosopher more than a divine being endowed with divine wisdom. Consequently, their Prophet comes across as a diffident tyro peddling a rather pedestrian thinking.

Emmy award winner William Humble's script had been vetted by Justice Jal Vimadalal, a retired judge of the Bombay High Court and a former trustee of the Bombay Parsi Panchayat. Vimadalal found the manuscript flawed and lacking in authenticity but refrained from publicly denouncing it so as not to stir a hornet's nest.

Bharucha's credentials are impressive; his awards include the Robert Flaherty award, the Golden Rose of Montreux, a double Emmy nomination, the Hugo award and the Humanitarian award. On Wings of Fire proved that Bharucha's forte lies in the production of television documentaries, for which he won these awards, and the film strikes the viewer as handled by a novice with chunks of it devoted to stills, charts and maps. The conclusion comprises depictions of famous modern day Parsis such as industrialist J.R.D. Tata, the late nuclear scientist Homi Bhabha, Field Marshal S.H.F.J. Manekshaw and Air Marshal (Retd) Aspi Engineer, and a Singapore based entrepreneur Dadi Bulsara, who contributed generously towards the venture.

It may be recalled that about half a century earlier, the noted film-maker and Avestha scholar, J.B.H. Wadia of Wadia Movietone, had to abandon his proposal of producing a film on Zarathustra in deference to an outcry within the community. Today, even before the dust has settled down on On Wings of Fire, Bulsara has made a public statement that he intends to make a grander, more expansive film on the Prophet starring, you guessed it, Charlton Heston. His "good friend" Francis Ford Coppola will direct this venture, Bulsara declared. By then, the community's quest for Zarathustra might have fluttered already into the flames.

—RATI DAWAR

RADIO ADVERTISING

Making Waves

THE AIR waves are alive with the sound-track of Telegu films. Radio listeners in Andhra Pradesh are turning in to a most innovative effort by Telugu film-makers to plug their latest releases, a 10-minute capsule on prime time featuring enticing excerpts from the sound track of the film and interviews with the stars.

Till last September, there were about 60 sponsored programmes a month on radio. By last month, the number had shot up to 200 on the Vividh Bharati channel in Hyderabad and between 60 and 120 in Vijayawada, and producers are using every hype in the book to entice listeners into the movie theatres. The programme on Sirivenella, features interviews with Suhasini and Moon Moon Sen, comments of the singer S.P. Balasubramaniam and the director K.V. Suhasini, is heard saying that "the film's shooting was an educative tour" while Moon Moon recalls that "right from my childhood my mother, emphasised the importance of working with good directors".

The other programmes are similarly a mix of conversations of film-goers, descriptions of selected sequences of the film, excerpts from the sound and song tracks and name-tags to glorify the film's personalities. N.T. Rama Rao is plugged as 'Nata Ratna'. The younger stars are given lurid descriptions like "young and angry hero" Bhanuchander and "action and karate king" Arjun. The stocky Balakrishna is known as "Nandamuri Andagadu" (the handsome man from Nandamuri village or family) and Telugu actress Vijayashanti is referred to as "Saheja Nati" (natural actress).

The radio rush actually began with Lady Doctor and Ardha Ratri, two films which were plugged on the air by a capsule devised by M.S. Rao, the one man firm called Taranga Advertisers, which today makes about 200 programmes a month. The films ran for over 100 days each solely because of the publicity through the radio programmes. The floodgates crashed open and the scramble for time slots began with radio advertising agencies pressurising All India Radio to increase their quota to one hour on peak listening time and for 90 minutes on weekends.

"Our problem is to introduce novelty so that listeners remain tuned in throughout the week. Listeners are tired of repetitive programmes", says Rao. And novelty is what the game is currently about. Nagadevatha, a children's film, has an introduction by a child and the conversation includes a remark by a young girl who says she took her friends to see the film to celebrate her coming first in an exam and that one of the group wound up seeing the film 12 times. Another movie, Punyasthree, was advertised along with the offer of a handkerchief for every woman going to see the film. Film critics and people from the target groups are asked to comment on the film and draw comparisons with earlier films by the same director.

S.V. ANJAN BABU

S. Rao: cashing in on the boom

The success of the programmes is debatable but the advertisers and film producers are convinced that they have hit the jackpot. Says S. Gopal, manager of Ramakrishna Motion Pictures: "At Rs 600 on weekdays and Rs 900 on holidays, radio advertising is cheap. We can go on the air between five and 10 times with 10-minute programmes for the same cost of hiring space for a banner or hoarding at a vantage point."

Meanwhile, the success of plugging films through sponsored programmes on radio is inspiring a wider band of advertisers. Lyricist V.S. Ramamurthy put together a programme aimed at selling cassettes and even writer M. V.Krishnamurthy has taken to the air waves to push his latest novel. Now, only the local politicians remain to get into the act. The Telugu Desam can then be plugged as Telugu Dishum.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where Continental Construction leads, confidence follows.

Continental

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

rst twenty-four years.

Few construction companies in the country have a track record of growth like Continental Construction. Incorporated in 1962 as a private limited company and converted to a public limited company in 1983, Continental Construction has grown from strength to strength to emerge as a leading company in specialised construction. Be it hydro-electric or irrigation projects, dams or power houses, barrages or tunnels, dry docks or jetties, water or sewerage projects, airport runways or transmission pipelines, grain silos or industrial complexes, Continental Construction executes every challenging project with unmatched expertise and uncanny perfection.

Small wonder then, that the Company is ranked among the world's "Top International Contractors" by a leading survey in the U.S.A. It has also won the "All India Top Exporters" shield for export excellence for five years in succession.

The leadership position continues. Continental Construction has on hand an extremely prestigious contract — Rs. 800 crore Karkh Water Supply Project in Iraq — the single largest contract secured by an Indian company.

The future, undoubtedly, is extremely bright. The rapid growth in the construction industry worldwide, and especially in India augurs well for the Company. And with a team of dedicated, highly qualified executives and a work force of over 5000 motivated people, Continental Construction looks forward to an era of growth and prosperity. A future, it would like to share with you.

Continental Construction Limited

Regd. Office: "Continental House"
28 Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019.

We'll build a better future for you

PRESSMAN

onstruction

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Planning for Fraud

WHEN the Gujarat Government announced last fortnight that the state had been selected by the Centre for a Rs 1-crore award for crossing its target for sterilisations, quite a few people in the state could barely suppress a chuckle. They had good reason to: they knew how exactly this had been achieved, having contributed in their own way to this success. Their names appeared in the family planning records as acceptors, but they had never really been operated upon. They had merely gone to a family planning centre, had a small incision made or a piece of adhesive tape stuck as testimony and come away richer by as much of the incentive money as they could wrest from the touts in between.

What began as a vote-earning gimmick that earned the Congress(I) Government its rightful share of notoriety, and then boiled down to a low-key and supposedly earnest effort, has now been reduced to a racket. Since the entire family planning programme hinges on cash incentives and yearly targets, almost everybody involved in it is a willing accomplice. And since the statistics keep rising, nobody complains.

The Gujarat Government, for instance, set itself a target of three lakh sterilisations last year and before the year was through, the state boasted of the proud figure of 3,33,452 sterilisations—an impressive achievement of 111.1 per cent. On paper, of course, the figures look impressive. What goes on behind them is quite another story.

Dhiraj Lal, 50, of Meghaninagar in Ahmedabad first got himself sterilised in 1974. In the 12 years since, he has repeated the experience ten times, each time under a different name. Only the first operation was "real"; the rest were all fake. At his last "operation" in March this year, at a family planning centre in Janatanagar, Lal earned Rs 80, though an acceptor is officially entitled to Rs 300. The rest, he says, was shared by the centre's officials and doctors. "After all," Lal reasons, "one cannot get the full amount for a fake operation."

For each sterilisation, the motivator who brings in the case officially gets Rs 40 and the doctor who performs the operation Rs 10. But the cut in fake cases is much higher and, according to an official in Kheda, a motivator can easily make a few thousand rupees between January and March, when officials are busy trying to beat deadlines and meet targets. This easy way to gain without pain has thrown up a whole lot of professionals who earn their entire livelihood from the family planning programme.

"When one earns only Rs 10 after a hard day's work, getting Rs 50 by giving a fake name and putting a thumb impression, is not bad."

MANGA MOHAN

"It is so easy. I just have to change my name every time."

BABU MAGAN

So lucrative is the business that another unscrupulous breed, the professional blood-donors, have decided to switch to this. They now hop from one centre to another, making money and losing not a drop of blood. According to Babubhai Mehta, a blood donation camp organiser, there are at least 300 people in Ahmedabad alone who have graduated from blood-donation to fak sterilisation. Babu Magan, 40, who ha three hungry mouths to feed, used to be blood-donor until he discovered th "pattiwala operation" last year. Sinc then, he has been to the family plannin centres four times, each time getting Rs 7 for his labours. "It is so easy," he says. just have to change my name everytime.

It is easy money and there are few wh would pass up a fast buck. Manga Mohan 40, a casual labourer who lives in th Jamalpur slum of Ahmedabad, has bee "sterilised" twice in a span of 45 days th year at the same centre in the Paldi area notorious for its fake sterilisations—un der the names of Manga Mohan an Manu Soma. "When one earns Rs 10 afte a hard day's work," he says, "getting R 50 just by giving a fake name and a thum impression is not bad."

The motivators prefer fake cases sin it is these that are not only easy to get b bring in more money as well, with acce tors agreeing for sums as low as Rs 35. Th acceptor, motivator and doctor all g their money, the charts keep rising, an everybody is happy. The picture could be rosier. "The idea," says Vad Fakirchand Parmar, a professional mo vator of Ahmedabad, "is not just to ma money but mainly to break targets an win bosses' favour."

A senior bureaucrat in Gandhinag agrees that the flaw lies in the targe "Setting unrealistic targets can be ve dangerous and counter-productive as encourages a lot of corruption an malpractices," he says. Not that the Go ernment is unaware of this, but figur matter more than facts. In fact, the Hea Department slogan last year was that th state must top the national chart.

The Government went about this applying a lot of pressure on its employe

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

not just health workers, but primary schoolteachers, taluka and panchayat heads and collectors as well. The penalty for default could be anything from withholding salaries to summary dismissal. In Panchmahal district alone, about 200 community health volunteers paid with their jobs this year for not bringing in the stipulated 12 "cases". The fear of punishment corrupts even those who would have had little to do with the family planning programme. In Kanbaipura village of Anand taluka, a motivator brought a sterilised man, Bagha Waghri, for another operation—a common occurrence, except that the motivator happened to be the headmaster of a local school.

THE CARROT is as corrupting as the stick. A doctor in Nadiad town of Kheda district was shocked when a panchayat official came to him two months ago and suggested that he fill up the records to show that 300 villagers in the district had gone in for family planning—so that Kheda could get the colour TV set promised to districts with outstanding records. The doctor refused, but the official went ahead and swung the deal at another centre.

Earlier on, there used to be a semen test to see whether a man was eligible for sterilisation. But when motivators and laboratory technicians started selling their semen and test reports for as little as Rs 20 this method was discontinued. Also, doctors refused to sterilise anaemic cases, as well as those who had been sterilised earlier. But now all this has been thrown to the winds. With the exception of a few conscientious doctors and officials, almost everybody toes the line. Says Kantilal Parmar, a professional motivator in Ahmedabad: "Motivators work hand in glove with doctors to build up fake cases and share the booty."

The exact number of fake sterilisations is not available, nor for that matter are rough estimates. But health and family welfare officials privately admit large-scale compilation of fake cases this year. It is not surprising that the state which ranked 17th in October last year, came second barely a few months later. Janata Party MLA Manubhai Katodia had voiced fears of large-scale manipulation in sterilisations in the Assembly last year. Vigilance teams, both of the state and the Centre, sent to check out fake sterilisations confirmed their existence. But Directorate of Medical Health and Services and the state secretariat at Gandhinagar dubbed these reports "secret" and put them in cold storage.

"There has not been even a single fake sterilisation in Gujarat. If there was, I would have got complaints."

VALLABHBHAI PATEL
health minister

The Central vigilance team, during its tour of Surendranagar and Amreli districts, had found that 6.2 per cent of the so-called acceptors had given fictitious names and addresses. It also found that 215 women had removed the Intra Uterine Device (IUD) after pocketing the motivation money. Over 195 of those appearing on the list of sterilised men could not be found at the addresses given. Villagers who figured in the records and who were contacted, denied ever having been sterilised. In Kheda district, which achieved 165 per cent of its target with 44,707 sterilisations, it turned out that 15,567 of the operations had been performed in March alone. The Anand Municipal Hospital, which had not reached even 50 per cent of its target in February this year, had crossed 250 per cent by the end of March.

In spite of remarks by the various vigilance teams that the acceptors could not be traced because they had left fictitious names and addresses, Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary dismissed the phenomenon outright, saying that he'd never heard of any malpractices in the family planning programme. State Health Minister Vallabhbhai Patel was more emphatic in his denial: "There has not been a single fake sterilisation in Gujarat. If there was, I would have got complaints."

Complaints there are but they mostly fall on deaf ears. A large number of complaints have already reached the Health and Family Welfare Department. Surat Collector Roy Choudhary, in fact, has categorically written to the Government that Kheda had cooked up a large number of fake cases so as to swell up its statistics and bag the cash prize. There were instances where even young boys were vasectomised at half-a-dozen places in the state. Among the cases "sterilised" at Sarsa, a taluka of Kheda, were a widow, a mentally retarded young boy and a eunuch. Not surprisingly, Sarsa achieved 215 per cent of its target.

The state's family planning programme involved an expenditure of almost Rs 31 crore last year. Almost all of it was funded by the Centre, with only Rs 1 crore coming from the state Government. The conclusion to the whole sordid drama came last fortnight when Haryana bagged the first prize of Rs 2.5 crore for its family planning record and, for all its pains, Gujarat had to be content with the second. State health and family welfare officials promptly dashed off a protest letter to the Centre, alleging fraud and malpractices by Haryana to inflate statistics. When last heard, the state Government was planning to send a team to Haryana to find things out for itself.

—RAMESH MENON

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINGLES FELLOWSHIP

A Singular Success

WHENEVER I enter my house I feel like a stranger despite the fact that my four sons, their wives and four or five grandchildren live with me..." R.L. Anand's room, on the second floor of his Greater Kailash house in New Delhi, is an island of silent loneliness in the hustle-bustle of 15 people going about their lives. He eats breakfast alone in his room, goes to the rubber factory of which he is the joint managing director, returns late, goes straight to his room, eats his dinner there and tries to sleep. "I keep to my own room. You see after I became a widower, there was nobody with whom I could talk about my feelings, about my loneliness."

In October 1984, Anand could finally unburden himself. A group of 22 widowers and two widows met in Delhi to form the Singles Fellowship (India), affiliated to the Netherlands-based International Federation of Widows and Widowers. Like Anand, the others too had pulled up the drawbridges to the rest of the world.

At the first meeting itself, these drawbridges were lowered. "For once we could talk about our wives without feeling that we were boring people. Only those who have gone through the same thing will be able to understand," says D.B. Malik, a former Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd official who lost his wife in 1983.

Then began the Sunday meetings. The first Sunday of each month would find a group of about 40 men and women strolling through Lodi Gardens, sitting around tables in a restaurant nearby, helping each other out of the impasse of loneliness and despair. Today there are over 60 members, nine of them women. Nearly 300 people correspond with the society and more branches are in the offing.

Last fortnight, the society celebrated its annual day. It would have been like any other function: rambling speeches, distracted faces. But when Mrs Gujral began to dance, and in her dance to tell her story of loss and subsequent courage, there were very few dry eyes. It was collective catharsis.

The society is the brain-child of M.S. Rana, a retired bank official who had lost the will to live after his wife died in 1983. During a visit to the US, he stumbled across an organisation of widows and widowers and decided that he could cope with his grief by helping others out of theirs. On his return home in 1984, Rana went through newspaper obituaries and wrote 51 letters, asking the grieved to meet him. He received eight replies. He then advertised a meeting in a Delhi paper. And so it all began.

The society is still in its teething stages. But its plans are long-term—a home for widows, residential complexes, holiday resorts, a library. It has had its upheavals too. When the society newsletter published the addresses of its members, the women received marriage proposals. A subsequent newsletter stated that the society was not a marriage bureau.

Not that all the members are averse to the idea of marrying again. Mrs Tapasri, 40, who works for All India Radio, would not "hesitate to marry" if she found a suitable person. But she is quite content with "the emotional security" the society offers. "Had I come across such a society five years ago, I would have got over my grief much more quickly... when I see others like me I have the feeling that I am not alone."

Mrs Gujral, who lost her husband in 1977, believes that life is much more difficult for a widow. "After a few months a man can re-marry. People say that a man cannot run a house alone. He needs a woman. When a widow wants to re-marry, people say that she can't live without a man. Then it is only a question of sex. Why is that so?"

But in the case of men, generally their wives had served as bridges of understanding to the children. Says a businessman: "I have become a silent spectator at the dinner table. I cannot share the jokes, the conversation. I have now decided to live alone because this house has become more like a hotel."

And so, the members turn to one another. Strangely enough, two brothers, both widowers, had never really spoken to each other about their personal feelings. But after the society was founded, words began to fill that gap of silence between them.

Most of the society members have begun to put back pieces of their lives. And though the setting sun each evening casts the biggest shadow over their lives, the Singles club helps fight the never ending battle with loneliness.

—MADHU JAIN

RAGHU RAI

Tapasri helps Rana at society meeting

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MITSUBISHI
COLOR PAPER
KER TYPE 6000 SUPER

Photo by : Mr. V.K. Rajamani

MITSUBISHI COLOR PAPER – a product of high technology and research conforming to the highest quality standards, has become the favoured one among professional and discerning photo enthusiasts – no wonder!

MITSUBISHI COLOR PAPER Ker Type 6000 Super has all the features to make your customers happy and maximise productivity.

Manufactured by :
MITSUBISHI PAPER MILLS LTD.
Exporters :
MITSUBISHI CORPORATION JAPAN

COLOR PAPER
MITSUBISHI

Processed, Packed & Marketed by :
INDIA CINE AGENCIES
Head Office : 730, Mount Road,
Madras – 600 006
Phone : 88843/88844

Branches:
Bombay (Ph: 351961/354202),
Delhi (Ph: 232156),
Calcutta (Ph: 290987/290286/297587),
Bangalore (Ph: 75762),
Hyderabad (Ph: 237865), &
Cochin (Ph: 354365)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Castrol GTX
The best engine protection mile after mile

CLEAN ENGINE EXTRA MILEAGE

That's right!

Castrol GTX - a high performance multigrade engine oil ensures a cleaner engine, longer engine life and extra mileage. That's precisely why leading car manufacturers in India and the world over recommend Castrol GTX.

So, to give your precious car the protection it deserves, use Castrol GTX and watch it perform mile after mile.

Castrol GTX exceeds API SF, the highest performance rating specified for petrol engine oils by the American Petroleum Institute.

Available at leading auto spare part dealers.

INDROL
Lubricants & Specialities Ltd

ILSL 3/88

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sawhney: burger king

Prabhakar with Deep: new role

◆ One look at that monstrous burger and Nippy Sawhney, 21, thought he'd bitten off more than he could chew. But he refused to turn chicken and with a bit of egging on from his friends, demolished that saucy giant of chicken mince, buns, mayonnaise and french fries—all 2.5 kilos of it, 4 inches thick and 11 inches across—in half an hour clean. Thus did Sawhney become the country's official Burger King in a contest organised by a five-star hotel in Delhi as the final round of its burger festival, which coincided with the World Cup Soccer Final and had dishy fare ranging from Huge Hugo Sanchez to Vege Platini. With 12 rivals to contend with, the chomping champ went at his Chic Maradona forks and knives. "I love food and it was a ball," confessed the "gourmet-cum-glutton", who wanted to open a fast-food joint until he became a builder.

◆ When even toppling and tapes failed to do the trick, Moodabidri Veerappa Moily, 45, gave up and resigned himself to the opposition benches of Karnataka Assembly. But rather than sit at home and issue vitriolic press statements like his colleagues, Moily found a better way to put his time, and pen, to use. He went tape-to-type. The result was a whirlwind, Suligali in Kannada, his first novel which went on to make a successful film. "I always wanted to fight for the people and this is why I began to write," said the leader, who will shortly release his second book, Sagara Deepa (light of the ocean). Moily—who is still facing a probe for the tape tangle—is now working on what he calls "an innovative novel combining epic, history and contemporary fiction". But not all of Moily is prose: last year he released his book of poems, Mathe Nadeyali Samara (let the war start again). And for once, the enemy was not a chief minister called Ramakrishna Hegde.

◆ "Enough is enough!" exclaimed Sharon Prabhakar, and slammed the door shut on her Evita wardrobe. Three years of anything—even the star-spangled saint-seductress of Argentina—would drive anyone into the wings. "I'm tired of singing," said the weary songstress, fed up to the teeth on her own falsetto, and promptly released her latest disc, Shararat. Then she breezed in with Titali, her first Hindi play. Dispelling the butterflies, and all memories of Kahan Kahan Se Guzar Gaya—her first foray, and fiasco, in films—she decided to give it another try. Prabhakar is now playing a double role opposite her Titali number Akaash Deep in K.A. Abbas' Ek Aadmi. And hoping that it doesn't go the labyrinthine way of Kahan Kahan Se Guzar Gaya.

Moily: tape-to-type

BHAWAN SINGH

Gavaskar: prime time

◆ It is quite literally, Sunil Gavaskar's biggest catch, the 101st to date. And with this the cricketer is now in league with such all-time greats as Satyajit Ray. The little master will soon follow the big master into the idiot-box with Sunil Gavaskar Presents: Great Matches I Have Seen—a 13-part nostalgia trip for the desi Don. The serial has just been okayed and producer Sumed Sharma of the Professional Management Group says: "It was Sunil's desire and Doordarshan has given him a free hand." With a director like Saeed Akhtar Mirza, who's Nukkad has TV audiences bowled over, and with Gavaskar running the show, prime-time success should be just round the gulley.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ntina—wo
nto the wing
ging," said
ss, fed up to n falsetto, a sed her late
Then s
Titali, her fi elling the b memories
Guzar Gaya
and fiasco, ded to give bhakar is n e role oppos
nber Akaa
pas' Ek Aad
t it doesn't way of Ka Gaya.

iterally, Su
gest catch,
nd with th
now in leag me greats
e little mas
the big ma
ox with Su
ts: Great M n—a 13-p
the desi D
st been ok
Sumed Sh
nal Mana ays: "It nd Doord him a director
Mirza, wh audien and ng the sh ess should ulley.
MMED ASLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12896

12895

12894

12893

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Reliance Under Pressure

Dhirubhai Ambani's Reliance empire is under siege from a variety of invaders. With the Government also cracking the whip and Reliance shares taking a beating, the corporate juggernaut's future seemed peppered with question marks.

COVER STORY 88

The Battle Within

The ruling party is in ferment. By last fortnight, half of the Congress (I) chief ministers were facing a revolt from dissidents. In Delhi, senior party functionaries were busy undermining each other and party President Rajiv Gandhi seemed unable to stem the rot.

SPECIAL REPORT 25

On a Short Fuse

Frightening visions of November 1984 were resurrected last fortnight as Sikh terrorists gunned down a bus-load of passengers in Punjab and Delhi mobs retaliated against Sikh homes and establishments, confirming that the crisis rests on a hair-trigger.

CURRENT EVENTS 30

Giving Peace a Chance

The light at the end of the tunnel of the Sri Lankan ethnic crisis seemed finally visible last fortnight. At the 10-day talks between Sri Lanka President J.R.Jayewardene and TULF leaders, a broad range of agreement on the key issues had reportedly emerged.

NEIGHBOURS 68

An Environmental Holocaust

Faced with the ecological havoc that has been wrought in the last decade by indiscriminate deforestation, India is engaged in a desperate race against time. At stake is the very survival of the country's agricultural livelihood.

SPECIAL FEATURE 77

Coming Home

After 30 years in the west, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi has decided to return to his roots. He has shifted his world headquarters to Delhi and is fast entrenching himself in the rest of the country, setting up ashrams, meditation centres and schools.

RELIGION 134

CONTENTS

OPINIONS TODAY 3
COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
SPECIAL REPORT
Congress(I): The Battle Within 25
CURRENT EVENTS
Punjab: On a Short Fuse 30
Haryana: Lal vs Lal 37
Eye-Camp Victims:
Blinding by Negligence 40
Andhra Pradesh: Political Stunt 44
Uttar Pradesh: Toothless Act 49
Gujarat: Ahmedabad's Agony 50
Tripura: Chakma crisis 54
West Bengal: Jail Storm 56
Kashmir: Treasure Hunt 61
Lok Dal: Family Struggle 63
Tamil Nadu: Sabre Rattling 64
STATENOTES 67
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: Giving Peace A Chance 68
GLOBE TROTTING
Commonwealth: Empire Strikes Back 72
MEDIA
Chandraswami: The Con-troversy 75
SPECIAL FEATURE
Deforestation:
An Environmental Holocaust 77
COVER STORY
Reliance: Under Pressure 88
TRADE WINDS 97
BUSINESS
Shaw Wallace: Fresh Charges 98
Johnson & Johnson: Free for All 100
Guest Column: The Neo-swadeshis 105
NTPC: Tender Trouble 109
Banks: Wooing the Non-resident 112
Pepsico: Fresh Fizz 117
Kerala: Power Panic 119
Peerless: Corporate Coup 121
The Markets: Bearish Phase 129
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
J.R.D Tata:
"I have been very frustrated" 130
RELIGION
Maharishi Mahesh Yogi:
Coming Home 134
CRIME
Drugs: Rich Haul 136
SCIENCE
Kavalur Observatory:
India's Eye in the Sky 138
TELEVISION
Doordarshan: Historic Heroes 146
DEFENCE
MiG-29: Sky Master 149
DEVELOPMENT
Chambal: From Guns to Tractors 152
Upper Krishna Project:
An Expensive Mess 156
CINEMA
Mirch Masala: A Lyrical Ballad 158
EYECATCHERS 160

Cover Photograph by NAMAS BHOJANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LAHAUL

NOW IS THE TIME TO VISIT A WORLD OUT OF THIS WORLD

A World untouched by the tribulations of time.

Far from the crowds and cares... rich in lush dales and craggy cliffs.. narrow gorges and rushing streams. An absolute must is a visit to Lahaul Valley, a wild and unspoilt area of great beauty, with foaming waterfalls and little villages perched on the rocky slopes. While on way you cross the Rohtang Pass (13,050 ft.) and see some of the most glorious, unspoilt scenery.

Lahaul—a world apart. Where the tribal life goes on in splendid desolation.

How to Reach: Reach Kulu by air/road from Delhi or Chandigarh. Then take a bus upto Keylong. Reach Simla by road or train then take bus to Kinnaur.

For information please contact H.P. Tourist Offices at:

New Delhi: Chandralok Bldg., 36, Janpath, Tel: 345320, 352104; 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, Tel: 344764.
Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Tel: 219191/284.
Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Tel: 446867.
Madras: 28, Commander-in-Chief Road, Tel: 472966.
Chandigarh: S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Tel: 26494.
Simla: The Mall, Tel: 3311; Panchayat Bhavan, Carl Road, Tel: 4589

For any complaint write or contact:
The Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Simla-171 001, Tel: 2028, 3136.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

पुस्तकालय
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय
हरिद्वार

Who's done the most to put Indian sports on the international map? You decide.

Is it Kapil Dev? Or should that distinction go to Vijay Amritraj? What about the achievements of Sunil Gavaskar, Michael Ferriera, Prakash Padukone, Ravi Shastri, Geet Sethi, P.T. Usha?

In this, the third Opinions Today poll, you can decide.

The above names can be found in the entry form overleaf.

Your task is to rank them on a table from 1 to 8.

Since this is a ranking, and not a grading system, no two persons can have the same rank.

Explain your first choice.

This is the next step. Thus, if person 'X' is your No. 1 choice, then in not more than 50 words you have to tell us why.

The entries will be evaluated by computer to determine the national average. An entry that ties in closely with the average will make you a contender for the awards associated with this series of polls.

These eight personalities have all made contributions to the current resurgence of Indian sports. Now, you have the chance to speak out on their merits.

The response to the first two polls has been overwhelming. The remaining polls—on the top achievers in business and culture, and on the government's major initiatives, will appear in the next three issues of INDIA TODAY.

Opinions Today is your chance to speak out. Make sure you do.

The awards.

For this poll.

First : Weston colour TV & VCR, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.

Second : Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Third : Weston 2-in-1, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.

Consolation : Annual subscriptions to INDIA TODAY.

Across six polls.

First : Return First Class air tickets for two to Los Angeles, courtesy PAN AM.

Second : A specially commissioned painting (30" x 40") by M.F. HUSAIN.

Third : PC Junior computer with printer, courtesy EIKO COMPUTERS.

Consolation : The World and its People—a twenty-seven volume set.

Turn overleaf to express your opinion.

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. An eGangotri Initiative

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Rules and regulations.

Since the entry forms will be processed by computer, it is important that you follow these procedures carefully. Incorrect or incomplete entries will be rendered invalid.

1. You can voice your opinion only through a valid entry form, such as the one below.
2. In case you have difficulty in obtaining the entry form, please mail a stamped, self-addressed envelope marked 'Opinions Today' to us at INDIA TODAY, 316 Competent House, F-14 Connaught Place, New Delhi-110 001.
3. An individual can send in only one entry form per poll.
4. The entries will be evaluated by means of a software package, specially designed by Tata Consultancy Services. The package will be run on a Burroughs B 6900 mainframe.
5. Important : while filling in this entry form, please ensure that you leave one square blank between the various units in your name and address.
6. All the eight options in each poll have to be ranked from 1 to 8. No two options can have the same ranking.
7. The name should start with the family name, followed by the first name.
8. Also ensure that you enter your first two or three initials in the space provided.
9. The date of birth should start with the date (two digits), followed by the month (two digits) and the year (again two digits). For example, if your date of birth is February 9, 1956, it should be entered as 090256.
10. Please tick the appropriate square, for other details such as sex, education, occupation.
11. In your address, please also give the pin-code number.
12. Please ensure that you fill in your particulars consistently across all subsequent polls.
13. In every poll you will have to explain the reasons, in not more than 50 words, for your No. 1 ranking. This is the 'tie-breaker'. Be sure to write the tie-breaker. You can miss out on the big awards if you don't. However, if your entry ties in with the national average, you will still be entitled to receive consolation prizes.
14. The entries will be evaluated by a panel of judges.
15. The results will be published in the forthcoming issues of India Today. The winners will also be notified separately by post.
16. Employees (and their relatives) of Living Media India Pvt. Ltd., its associate companies, Tata Consultancy Services, and Interface Communications Pvt. Ltd., are not eligible to participate in this opinion poll.
17. India Today will not be responsible for any postal delays.
18. The decision of the judges will be final and binding and no further correspondence will be entertained on the decisions.
19. ALL ENTRIES MUST REACH LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD., P.O. BOX NO. 29, N.D.H.O. NEW DELHI-110 001, BY THE LAST DATE INDICATED ON THE ENTRY FORM.

ENTRY FORM : 3

Please fill in BLOCK CAPITALS

NAME : Mr./Mrs./Ms. _____ Surname _____ First Name

DATE OF BIRTH: D D M M Y Y SEX : M [1] F [2] INITIALS : _____

EDUCATION : Professional [1] Post-graduate [2] Graduate [3] Matriculate [4] Others [5]

OCCUPATION : Service [1] Business [2] Housewife [3] Student [4] Others [5]

ADDRESS : _____

Have you participated in any previous Opinions Today poll? Yes [1] No [2]

CITY _____ Pin-code _____

OPTION NO.	PERSONALITIES	RANKING
1.	VIJAY AMRITRAJ
2.	KAPIL DEV
3.	MICHAEL FERRIERA
4.	SUNIL GAVASKAR
5.	PRAKASH PADUKONE
6.	RAVI SHASTRI
7.	GEET SETHI
8.	P.T. USHA

Please give reasons for your No. 1 ranking : _____

Signature of participant : _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Your opinion must reach us by 21.8.1986

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 15
FOR THE FORTNIGHT AUGUST 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
ARUN PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH
SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN
SURYA GANGADHARAN
MOHAMMED ASLAM

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312063, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448. 579037. 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA
• COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

ILLUSORY BENEFITS

There was much hue and cry in the Government and administrative circles that a better-paid employee would shun corrupt practices ("Salaries: How much are you worth?", July 31).

Will the recent recommendations of the Pay Commission make the files move in government offices without greasing the palms of the employees? Will the hike remove bureaucratic red-tapism? Will the hike induce improvement in public services? The answer probably is in the negative. As such, is the hike not a premia for inefficiency and corruption?

Lucknow NARENDRA M. PANT

■ The Pay Commission report has some inherent defects. There are few fringe benefits for the lower middle class. The Government has sought to satisfy them through salary raises. As they shall have to pay more tax, the real raise shall be only a bare minimum. The Commission has a pro-rich manner of fixing pay-scales. It should reconsider its adulterated policy.

New Delhi ARCHAN MEHTA

■ In the Fourth Pay Commission's report, one minor consideration has become obscured—what return to society is made by these legions who are employed at some public cost? The cost of Rs 1,000-3,500 crore per annum to provide for the bonanza is only small change and no great burden, if only we could get a competent and effective performance from the beneficiaries.

Bangalore G.S. CHANDY

ADULATION GALORE

Your cover story on Kapil Dev ("India's Greatest All-Rounder", July 15) was indeed timely. Even allowing for Gavaskar's tremendous career as a batsman, we must admit that India has never produced such a "total" cricketer as Kapil before. India's exploits in the arena of one-day cricket owe a lot to this prodigy from Haryana.

Calcutta SANKAR KUMAR BANERJI

■ I felt sorry for Kapil Dev when he said that the Gavaskar chapter in his book was included without his permission, obviously expecting his fans to believe that Vinay Verma, his co-author, wrote the book without recording any input from Kapil. Moreover, Kapil also didn't get the time to go through the Indian edition, or else he could have had the offending chapter taken out. I don't think Kapil will ever be able to set the record straight on this one.

Calcutta KALYAN NEGAL

■ For a magazine that prides itself on its keen professionalism, savvy and insight, your large-scale Kapil adulation bordered on the kind of knee-jerk reaction that makes the disclaimer kind of hard to follow. Doubtless, Kapil is a grand player, but the folly of recognising the May rains as monsoons is strictly reserved for meteorologists, not sports journalists.

Dallas V. PADMANABHAN

GANDHI CONFUSION

In your article ("Mischievous Content", June 30) your correspondent asserts that documentary footage of Indira Gandhi's funeral was shown in the Bandung File programme on the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP). There was footage of Mahatma Gandhi's funeral, but at no point does the programme show Mrs Gandhi's funeral or by implication suggest that the VHP was responsible for the anti-Sikh riots following her assassination.

London VASUDHA JOSHI

This was due to an editing error which is regretted. —Editor

FRESH FACES

Ramesh Sippy has done a good job by not taking a popular screen face. This adds more authenticity to the serial. ("Buniyaad: The New-wave Saga", July 31). In most of the serials I am struck with the quality of acting of the many new faces who are giving wonderful performances despite their being non-entities in the film world. It is going to bring down the star race that often

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It needs
a lot of developing to match
the HCL Busybee.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In just one year since its launch, the Busybee has been steadily growing. In all directions. Local Area Network... Multi-terminal capabilities... Bi-lingual capacity... Mainframe Linkage... and this is just the beginning.

While everyone was shouting themselves hoarse about their little geniuses, the HCL Busybee was growing quietly. In all directions. So today, it is the most powerful and versatile IBM compatible PC/PC XT there is.

It is the only Bi-lingual PC/PC XT to date. Supporting Devnagri as well as English for word processing. So you can create documents in Devnagri. Or use Devnagri characters with English in the same report or even in the same line!

In a large organisation with multiple departments, the Busybees link in a Local Area Network of upto 64 machines over a distance of 1.2 Kms. Sharing expensive peripherals, communicating and sharing information. Yet maintaining confidentiality with a 2-level password system.

And if your requirement is Multi-terminal, you can add on two additional terminals. Through the industry standard MP/M Operating System—ideal for a data processing environment and with the most powerful COBOL capability, used on the HCL Workhorse II.

Then the Busybee talks to the giants too. Through Mainframe Linkage to systems like Data General, Burroughs, Sperry Univac, or the HCL Workhorse II and Horizon.

Hardware Add-ons like the Mouse, Digitizer and X-Y Plotter make the Busybee the most versatile PC for your Computer Aided Design and Graphic Presentation.

The 8 MHz optional CPU clock time is one of the fastest of all IBM PC compatibles. Its Hard Disk Drive add-on enables the processing of much larger volumes of information. While the Cartridge Tape back-up safeguards against corruption of important data.

The 8" Floppy Drive of the Busybee makes it compatible to earlier generation systems.

A customer list no one else can match.

The HCL Busybee's client list reads like the who's who of Indian Science and Industry.

With companies like TELCO, Thermax, BATA, Blowplast, English Electric, Reader's Digest, JCT Mills Ltd., IFFCO, ECIL, GMMCo, Paradeep Phosphates, Indian Railways, HAL, Fenner, Jenson and Nicholson, BHEL, NGEF, The Shriram Group, MICO, Reckitt and Colman, Hindustan Motors, U.S. Aid... to name just a few.

Premier educational and research institutions like IIMs Ahmedabad, Bangalore and Calcutta, Jamna Lal Bajaj Institute, IITs Kharagpur and Madras, CEERI Pilani, ISRO, NAL, Indian Institute of Science, VSSC, BARC and many more. Who have whole heartedly opted for the Busybee.

As much as 40% repeat orders.

What has been so gratifying about the Busybee's success is the extent of repeat orders.

TELCO, starting off with just one trial machine, soon placed repeat orders totalling 28 Busybees in succeeding months. Sundaram Clayton placed repeat orders worth 24 machines. Blowplast repeat orders of 17 machines. HAL wanted 18 more after its initial order. The Department of Space till now has 52 machines and Indian Institute of Science 32. The story was the same with the Shriram Group... and the list goes on.

Repeat orders that account for almost 40% of the total Busybees booked. A fact which shows the trust enjoyed by the Busybee within just one year of its launch.

An amazing 98.9% national uptime.

The reliability of the HCL Busybee is borne out by its maintaining a 98.9% national uptime! Across the country. Setting something of a record for PCs.

A record which is made possible because of HCL's wide network of support infrastructure. With 34 support offices across the length and breadth of the country. And with every second one of its over 800 workforce an engineer, engaged in support functions.

The HCL Busybee. Setting the standard for PCs and PCXTs in the country within just one year of its launch. The beginning of the biggest success story of the year.

HCL
BUSYBEE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri damaged our film industry. The new faces, if given a chance in films, will certainly bring down star values.

New Delhi PRABHAKAR S. HARSOLE

LAUDABLE EFFORT

The Parsi community ("Unholy Furore", July 31) forms but a decimal of our 700 million population. If a religion of this minuscule community has decided for the first time to talk about itself and its prophet through the film On Wings of Fire, the effort should be lauded rather than its wings be clipped before it can even fly. Admittedly, the movie may have failed to evoke the desired interest and response and the conceptualisation could have been better, yet it did not call for injunctions and radical statements insulting religious beliefs.
Baroda NAZNEEN VIMADALAL

IRREVERENT LEISURE

Your editorial ("State-sponsored Absenteeism", July 31) is appropriate. Such is the alchemy of Indian custom that reverence for the departed gets immediately converted into leisure for the living. We, as a nation, seem unable to pay homage to our illustrious dead except by giving ourselves a holiday.
New Delhi Air Cmde A.L. SAIGAL

■ Congratulations for your eye-opening criticism of the ways of mourning in our country. In a developing country, we cannot afford such a criminal waste of manpower. I agree with the civilised ways of mourning suggested by you.
New Delhi KAMLESH G. VARYANI

SOUR GRAPES

The venomous utterances of Badal ("Militant Poses", July 31), show his true colours. It is clear that Badal and Tohra can go to any length for their selfish motives. Badal cannot reconcile himself to the fact that he is no longer chief minister. By speaking the language of the militants he thinks he may regain this coveted position. Similarly, the day Tohra was forced to resign as the SGPC chief, he began to find faults with the present Akali Government.
New Delhi SMITA NARANG

CELLULOID HERO

MGR's indecision and inconsistency have been ruling Tamil Nadu politics for a long time ("The Glitter is Gone", July 31) and people now wonder whether there is any government at all, let alone an administration. With only celluloid glitter ruling the roost, it seems the "revolutionary hero's" efforts to make Jayalalitha the chief minister may succeed where his arch rival Karunanidhi and the Congress(I) would fail.
Madras A. SESHAGIRI RAO

CASTE BIAS

In your report ("The Odd Man Out", July 15) there seems to be a deliberate twisting of facts to prove that the CPI(M) is ridden with communal factionalists. V.S. Achuthanandan is called a fanatic Ezhava. And E.M.S. Namboodripad, who stands apart from caste politics, is made out to be a caste-conscious leader.
Durgapur T.P. BENNY

■ According to you, caste factors have played a role in fomenting the CPI(M) crisis. The Ezhava group (led by Achutanandan) is trying to oust the Nair group led by Raghavan. It adds that Achutanandan has the support of E.M.S. Namboodiripad, "himself a Nair". Namboodiri brahmins wouldn't take kindly to being branded Nairs, but perhaps EMS, as a Marxist, won't mind.
Trivandrum S. RADHAKRISHNAN

The error in calling E.M.S. Namboodiripad a Nair is regretted. —Editor

POPULAR ACCORD

Rajiv Gandhi has shown his calibre by solving the Mizo problem ("Quest for Peace", July 31). Though some critics are against the accord, the people of Mizoram have expressed their solidarity for the accord. It is now time for Rajiv Gandhi to see through the speedy implementation of the accord.
Gwalior KAMLESH PRASAD

DOUBLE STANDARDS

I was surprised to see a sympathetic and heroic profile of V. Prabakaran ("Profile of a Tiger", June 30). The support of the Indian Government and the media for the LTTE is highly hypocritical. Though we criticise the Sikh terrorists who want to divide our country, we support a group which wants to do the same to a neighbouring country. From the Sri Lankan point of view, the problem of LTTE is not different from the problem of Sikh terrorism.
Washington P. JALOTE

BIASED REPORT

Your report ("Fires of Hate", July 15) is highly biased in favour of the PAC. The brutal attempt by PAC jawans to make Allahabad a graveyard of Muslims and the brave resistance by the community is absolutely true. It was not a riot, but a war between Muslims and the PAC.
Bhopal S. HAIDER

HOLIDAY TIPS

Your article ("Indians on the Move", July 15) was timely as lack of information on where to go and what to see do discourage some tourists, especially those with a tight budget and limited time. State tourism departments just publish newspaper advertisements but when written to, do not care to reply. Providing cheap accommodation, but not compromising much on facilities, is therefore welcome.
Jeddah MOHAMED ALI

■ Your coverage of domestic tourism was excellent and I hope that tourists begin going to places which are less known and attract less crowds, but are equally interesting and have sufficient accommodation. Hopefully, the Himalayan states should try and develop three or four places in each state. A similar effort could be launched by the southern states as well. Only then would most of the now over-crowded hill stations be better off.
Stockholm K.C. BATRA

BUREAUCRATIC PAWNS

Your article ("Transfer Tremors", July 15) was shocking. Administrators have always been pawns in the hands of politicians, but will no longer meekly tolerate and succumb to politicians' pressures. Their excessive interference will inevitably generate a new breed of politicians, most of them from these frustrated administrators. This may be a fitting reply to incapable and incompetent politicians.
Satna JAIDEEP MITTRA

■ Does your correspondent sincerely believe that these angels from the IAS and the IPS will put the poverty-stricken state on the path towards progress if they were to be left undisturbed? I have my serious doubts. Their track record has not been very inspiring for the last 30 years.
Bahrain ANANT SAHAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMUNALISM

A Failure of Leadership

COMMUNALISM—Hindu, Christian, Muslim or Sikh—Nehru warned in 1955, is disruptive, separatist, and a trend imbued with hatred. "If we maintain this kind of communalism," he said, "India will cease to be what it is. It will go to pieces." Today, more than 30 years after that warning, the communal poison has spread throughout the land like an odiferous gangrene eating away at the very innards of the country's body politic. And there seems to be no leader in sight either capable or willing to stem the venomous tide. And as the evil has spread it, has created within its course permutations and combinations of hatred and suspicions which have bludgeoned into disuse all norms of reason, common sense and compassion.

AJIT NINAN

Today, India lives in an atmosphere in which its people appear to have been vaccinated against the natural—human—response of loathing against communal convulsions. They seem to be inured to the daily atrocities in which man kills man in the name of religion or community or caste. So deep are these divisions that ordinary Hindus—perfectly reasonable, even kindly folk—applaud sectarian violence because "it is time we taught them a lesson," or because, "they deserved it". In Assam, where economic insecurity and mass xenophobia erupted in the communal havoc called Nellie there is now trouble over teaching the Assamese language in schools. The same linguistic tension—an outgrowth of unchecked communalism—holds a taut grip over Goa and Belgaum. In Punjab, the traditional and time-honoured bond of brotherhood between Hindu and Sikh has been cut, releasing a migration of fear. In the tribal belt of Madhya Pradesh and Bihar, Christian missionaries are locked in a potentially explosive turf battle with the Vishwa Hindu Parishad. In Gujarat, half as many people have been killed within a few days in two gory riots caused by a bloody cocktail of communal and casteist politics, than in Punjab during an entire year. In Uttar Pradesh, hitherto peaceful towns like Barabanki and Allahabad have been rocked by what started out as communal upheavals which later played into the hands of smugglers and criminals bent upon doing mischief and embarrassing the administration.

And each time politicians have "rushed" to trouble spots, clucked their sanctimonious tongues, smiled like jackasses for news photographers and moved on to their business of politicking. What is shameful is that our national politicians have often themselves incited or played opportunistic games with communalism. During the Emergency Mrs Gandhi banned 26 communal organisations—but to no avail. During the following five years there were more than 3,000 communal riots in the country. And the repeated pledges of the National Integration Council to deal with "an iron hand" with communal and anti-social elements have been broken as often as they have been invoked.

But for patchwork "remedies"—the transfer of a district magistrate or a superintendent of police, an inquiry into a PAC firing, dusk-to-dawn curfew orders—Rajiv Gandhi's Government has failed to demonstrate its ability to bottle the communal genie or to launch an all-out attack on the dangerous combination of politics and religion. Nor has the Government taken firm steps to battle communal forces which have crept into the educational system in the form of linguistic chauvinism. Again, Nehru warned against the intrusion of communalism into education in 1948. "Education is meant to free the spirit of man and not to imprison it in set frames."

Rajiv would do well to restudy the thoughts and actions of his grandfather on this burning issue. No one can accuse Rajiv of being a communalist. But his actions—even with the best intentions in mind—on the Muslim Women's Bill and the Ramjanamabhoomi issue—have only helped to compound an already bad situation. Communalism cannot be wished away or solved through mechanistic administrative remedies. What is required to fight it is statesmanship, uncompromising moral courage and aggressive leadership. Rajiv should have visited Barabanki. He should have visited Allahabad—the home of his ancestors—personally. He should have visited Ahmedabad. He may not have been able to solve the immediate problem but his presence would have been a symbolic demonstration—to the country and to politicians—of a national will to battle communalism. It would have shown, most of all, that he cares. And caring, unlike a managerial task, cannot be delegated to others.

If the prime minister can go on a moral mission to the frontline states of Africa and rail against apartheid, surely he can find the time to visit communally troubled areas in his own country and exert the moral authority—given to him by the people by virtue of his election—to openly confront the forces exploiting religion and caste and language and ripping this country apart. During his early days in office people—even his detractors—admired Rajiv for his tough, no-nonsense approach. But now, the very absence of these qualities—as evidenced by a demonstrable lack of leadership on the communal issue—is losing him the psychological edge through which he can assert moral authority. This, too, cannot be delegated. Rajiv—India's leader—must himself take the communal bull by the horns.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YOU'VE SEEN THE PAST...

J K SYNTHETICS DEBENTURES

Issue of 50,00,000 – 15% Secured Redeemable Non-Convertible Debentures of Rs 100/- each for cash at par aggregating Rs 50 crores.

THE BUY-BACK IS THE BEST PART

IN FACT IT'S FIVE TIMES BETTER!

JAY KAY

J.K. Synthetics LTD.

Kamla Tower, Kanpur 208 001.

Nylon • Polyester • Acrylic • Tyre Cord • Grey Cement • White Cement • Engineering • Cops • Energy

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1 It's so simple!
Getting your money back is so much easier. Just sign the Allotment Letter/Debenture Certificate like a Fixed Deposit Receipt.

2 Convenient too!
Seven Buy-Back centres at the Company's offices for discharging and handing over your documents: Ahmedabad, Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Jaipur, Kanpur and Surat.

3 And secure!
J K Synthetics is the first Company in the history of debenture issues to offer to buy back your debentures from a fixed date — October 1, 1987. Of course, the face value of your debenture should not be more than Rs 40,000/-.

4 How interesting!
Right up to the date of Buy-Back you continue earning 15% interest p.a.

5 All clear!
Sixteen repayment centres for encashment at par: Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Cochin, Delhi, Gauhati, Hyderabad, Indore, Jaipur, Kanpur, Ludhiana, Madras, Mangalore, Pune and Surat.

That's not all. The J K Synthetics Issue has more to offer!

- THREE Attractive Schemes

a) Non-Cumulative Interest Scheme (for steady half-yearly returns).
Earn an interest of 15% p.a. payable half-yearly. Redemption at a premium of 5% at the end of the seventh year.

b) Seven-Year Cumulative Interest Scheme (for long-term investment).
Interest cumulates half-yearly. At the end of seven years, for every investment of Rs 10,000/- you get Rs 28,024/- (including a premium of 5% on redemption). A return of 180.24%!

c) Cumulative Anticipatory Repayment Scheme (for planned cash in-flow and tax planning).
Repayment in five annual instalments. Receive an interest along with proportionate principal amount:
Rs 4,122/- at the end of the fifth year;
Rs 4,764/- at the end of the sixth year;
Rs 6,005/- at the end of the seventh year (including a premium of 5%);
Rs 6,361/- at the end of the eighth year and Rs 7,351/- at the end of the ninth year ... for every Rs 10,000/- invested.
(Applicable for investments in excess of Rs 5,000/-)

- Preferential Treatment
An opportunity to invest on a preferential basis in the Equity Issues of new ventures to be promoted by the Company, subject to necessary approvals.

- Even Better than Fixed Deposits
Interest at the rate of 15% p.a. irrespective of period. 5% premium on redemption. With upward revision of interest and other monetary benefits in accordance with guidelines.

- Predetermined Premium
A redemption premium of 5% of the face value of the debentures will be paid on the expiry of the 7th year from the date of allotment.

- Assured Return from Day One
Your money earns interest @ 15% p.a. from the date of realisation of application money to the date of allotment/refund.

- Fully Secured
You have a first charge on the Company's assets which means complete security of your investment.

- A Chance to Balance your Portfolio
Enjoy a high-yield, low-risk fixed income security.

- Excellent Instrument for Tax Planning
Either by selling on the stock market, or staggering interest income or receiving interest in a lump sum.

- Easy Liquidity
Listing on Stock Exchanges at Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi & Kanpur.

- No Tax Deduction at Source
On interest upto Rs.1,000/- p.a.

HURRY!
CLOSING DATE:
Saturday, Sept. 6, 1986

MANAGERS TO THE ISSUE
State Bank of India Merchant Banking Division
DSP Financial Consultants Limited
The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Limited

ADVISORS TO THE ISSUE
H L Financial Consultants and Management Services Private Limited

YOU HAVE A SECURE FUTURE

RAKA:1040:8:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Abortive Attempt

● Rae Bareli is the place where action and drama can take place without any warning and at any moment. And it may not necessarily be of the political variety as a bunch of VIPs from New Delhi discovered to their chagrin recently. The VIPs, led by Union Minister for Transport Mohsina Kidwai and Minister for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler, had proudly gone to Rae Bareli to attend the inauguration ceremony of the extended airport facility. And they were flown in a spanking new Dornier 228 by Vayudoot, the third-level airline which often has a hard time making up on the other routes the loss it makes on the flight to the VIP constituency.

For Harsh Vardhan, the ambitious young managing director of the airline, this was a welcome opportunity to show his wares to his ministry's bigwigs. But he was obviously out of luck. As soon as the function ended and the VIPs trooped to the small tarmac, came the shattering report: the aircraft battery was not working. It refused to show any spark of life despite ministrations by pilots and engineers. As the temperature went up under the mid-day sun, VIP tempers rose. It was only hours later that Vayudoot was able to divert its Allahabad flight via Rae Bareli to pick up some of the VIPs. The lesser ones had to rough it out on the dusty roads by night. It is not yet known if Harsh Vardhan has already changed his supplier of batteries or not.

Space Wars

● The establishment officer at South Block, a First Secretary, seems a very busy, very important person. After all, he is the person responsible for allocating office space within the corridors of power which weave their intricate pattern in the building. Senior officials—joint secretaries and additional secretaries—bow and scrape before him. One wants his PA's room shifted next to his. Another wants a room with a view. And with a stroke of a pen, it appears, the establishment officer dispenses Libensraum to eternally grateful bureaucrats. But the truth is that ultimately it is not really the establishment officer who handles the adverse supply-demand balance. The real czar is none other than the prime minister himself. All new allocations of office space—peons and PA's included—are handled by the prime minister's Super PA Vincent George with the approval of Rajiv. Senior bureaucrats are now discovering that their victories achieved in South Block's space wars are not the result of the munificence of the establishment officer but the result of the diktats of their supreme leader.

Nom de Plume

● Who is the real Gaj Singh? The identity of The Hindustan Times' media critic remains a mystery. Sunday Mail says that the man who consistently lavished praise on Gopal Sharman's TV serial IndiaAlive is none other than Gopal Sharman himself. The Hindustan Times editor N.C. Menon says with a chuckle that Gaj Singh is not Gopal Sharman and Gaj Singh is a pseudonym. The paper sends the cheque to Gaj Singh (Iyenger) to an address in west Delhi. The surprised old lady who opens the door of the house where all these cheques go does not know any Gaj Singh, or Iyenger for that matter, but points to a house next door. The angry Mrs Iyenger next door can't understand why Sunday Mail and Span keep calling up about "some Gaj Singh". But she admits there is an Iyenger next door, a Mr Sampath Iyenger, a chartered accountant who had to suddenly go to Madras. Gopal Sharman, "pained and hurt", asserts he is not Gaj Singh: "Those who want to destroy my credibility are behind this because they want to de-stabilise India; and I have spent my life and fortune for my country?" Will the real Gaj Singh please stand up so that India will not be further destabilised?

RAW Diplomacy

● The Ministry of External Affairs is increasingly being forced to rely on raw recruits. Literally. With former RAW chief Ram Nath Kao, founder and guiding spirit behind the hush-hush intelligence organisation, ensconced in the Policy Advisory Committee attached to the ministry alongside fellow former RAW chief, Gary Saxena, it is now the turn of yet another ex-RAW boss Shankaran Nair, to have found a diplomatic sinecure. Nair being missed at his favourite haunt, the Delhi Golf Club of which he is the President, fellow golfers were informed that he had "gone abroad" for an indefinite period. But there was nothing mysterious about his sudden disappearance. He has been dragged out of relaxed retirement and appointed Indian high commissioner in Singapore. His surprise appointment is yet another instance of professional diplomats being sidelined for key diplomatic appointments.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Train with a technologist

A company which set up its training institute in 1921 to build a solid core of Indian technologists, managers and technicians, to develop leaders for Indian industry.

A company which has a spectrum of comprehensive and specialised training programmes. Offering a sound, practical foundation for new entrants and continually updating the knowledge of existing employees so that they keep pace with the advances in technology.

A company where trainees not only learn about the operations of an integrated steel plant but also learn to respond to challenge, enterprise and endurance through Adventure courses.

A company which has trained its engineers and also many of those who today hold key positions in both public and private sector units. Several trainees from other parts of Asia and Africa have returned to vital assignments in their own countries after training at the Jamshedpur Technical Institute.

A company which has been awarded the Association of Indian Engineering Industry Award 1985 for 'Technical Education and Training' and is proud to have one of the finest technical training institutions in India. Where trainees have won 12 President's Gold and 45 Silver Medals at regional and national competitions. A company which has given the lead in action and in ideas.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremost

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fashion by Maria Mandotia in Vogue Fuji De Chine

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by

Product of the
Vareli Group of Industries
in association with
Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat.

VARELI
FABRICS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From bare grasslands to 35,000 hectares of lush green plantations?

MAA(S) SIV 3B 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Development of scrublands to serve industry and man

Acres and acres of degraded scrub forest. Only a few resilient plants survived the odds ... till South India Viscose along with the Tamil Nadu Government initiated and supported the afforestation of denuded scrublands. Eucalypti and wattle saplings were planted. Slowly over a period of 25 years 35,000 hectares of bare grassland in the Nilgiris and Kodaikanal were transformed into flourishing plantations.

Revolutionising traditional agricultural practices

Crop after crop, harvest after harvest, the top soil gets depleted of its natural minerals. With the cultivation of eucalyptus, the organic matter build-up and improved nitrogenous and phosphatic returns revitalise the crop-fatigued earth. This enables the growth of agricultural crops for the first few years along with eucalypti.

Caring for nature

South India Viscose is actively involved in the conservation of nature, because its very life depends on nature. Over 3 million seedlings have been distributed free to farmers to raise plantations themselves and to preserve the ecological balance of the hills.

South India Viscose doesn't think it's impossible

Even in the management of the plantations, strict sylvicultural regulations are adhered to. The practice of harvesting wood on a 8-10 years rotation by the coppice and natural regeneration method ensure a sustained yield without disturbing the environment.

South India Viscose is constantly aware of the magnitude of its dependence on nature. It has, and will always endeavour to give man an environment he can be proud of.

SOUTH INDIA VISCOSE LTD.

Post Box No. 3780, Rose Bed,
334, Avanashi Road, Coimbatore-641 018.

South India Viscose germinates seeds of hope in degraded scrub forests.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

● He (Prakash Singh Badal) is at odds with me. But I know he is very fond of me and I would like him to stay in the mainstream.

■ SURJIT SINGH BARNALA, Punjab chief minister, at the Delhi Press Club

● If the purpose of the latest Chinese incursion in an elaborate game of political mah-jong is obscure, how it intends the game to progress is still more difficult to fathom.

■ Editorial in The Statesman

● If people think I picked up this job for the publicity involved, they are being unkind. This is a job where my life is at stake. Even after I finish my job, I will probably not live out my whole life.

■ JULIO F. RIBEIRO, director-general, Punjab police, in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● Knives will be of use if the police are unable to control your enemies when they confront you.

■ M.G. RAMACHANDRAN at a rally of his Fan's Association in Madurai

● They (the Tamil militants) fight from here. And no country will help Sri Lanka to fight against India. The earlier we realise this the better it is for all.

■ VIJAYA KUMARANATUNGA, general-secretary of the SLMP, on India's role in Sri Lanka's ethnic problem in The Telegraph

● The other day I asked a British economist, a Nobel Prize winner who is a frequent visitor to India, what he thought of our economy. He said: "You will muddle through the '80s; it will be very difficult in the '90s, and by the end of the century....phoo!"

■ KULDIP NAYAR in The Tribune

● Today, the speeches of even the few good MP*'s that we have—which are sometimes quite extraordinary—are reported in a single sentence in the national dailies. Every banal statement of the prime minister is reported in three-column headlines.*

■ ROMESH THAPAR in Gentleman

● The quality of (news) presentation continues to be appalling. With supreme lack of imagination, Doordarshan now spells out its headlines on screen at the same time as the newscaster reads them out, as is done for the deaf in advanced countries.

■ AMITA MALIK in Express Magazine

● Sex appeal is an indescribable quality; you either have it or don't. Bombay is really getting to be a desperate scene. Between mamma's little munnas and the paan-bahar paunchies, sex is as remote as Halley's Comet!

■ SHARON PRABHAKAR in Sunday

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition,
Crystal Palace, London, 1851.

Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour
since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.

Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by
Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.

Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.

Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by
Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg.
Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.

Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out the exquisite grain.

Aramusk
BATH SOAP FOR MEN

Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses.
Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

Available in selected cities only.

Aramusk
BATH SOAP FOR MEN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Introducing Aramusk. Bath Soap For Men.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wherever you can't go, your voice can.

And whoever you may be. Instant telecommunication links you with the rest of the world. From any remote corner of the country.

Telecommunication. Making boundaries disappear and shrinking the wide world to size. Manageable, friendlier and beneficial.

In every sphere of growth. From Economy to Defence. And at GCEL, we believe growth begins from communication. And in the field of communication, GCEL's growth has helped India grow more accessible. Within and beyond.

GCEL's Communication Equipment

At GCEL, the communication equipment range is as wide as the country's needs. From the basic telephone instrument to state-of-the-art static and mobile satellite communication terminals. Designed and developed to meet specific needs. Like UHF Radio Relay Equipment. Upto 120 channels. Multi Access Radio Telephone Equipment (MART). Upto 6 VHF channels. Installed in several parts of the country on turnkey basis. Because at GCEL, we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.

Multi Access Radio Telephone

GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

Mudra:A:GCEL:3001

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

On the placid waters of the Dal the only ripples are the lapping of the waves against the shikara

That's the beauty of a Kashmir holiday. On Dal Lake itself you can spend hours. You'll love every minute of it. Take a shikara ride to the beautiful island of Char Chinar, past floating gardens and under picturesque bridges. You can live on Dal, too. In a houseboat. You need not even go to shop. Let the market come to you. Shikaras laden with flowers, fruits, vegetables, shawls, carpets and jewellery. Strike a bargain amidst the ripples.

Visit famous shrines on the shores of the Dal: Hazratbal and Shankaracharya Temple. And have your fill of peace and tranquillity.

Visit Kashmir
Discover Paradise

Department of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOWLED OVER

■ The Indian Olympic Association (IOA) seems to be forever sporting two minds regarding the granting of its favours. The latest example of its dual personality was its decision to bestow its official blessings on the Bowling Federation of India formed recently in New Delhi. The IOA appeared so bowled over by its generosity that it even sent its best wishes for the championship conducted by the federation a couple of months ago. But the IOA found itself skittled when it suddenly discovered that it had already granted official recognition to another bowling federation registered in Calcutta.

The reason for its left hand not knowing what the right was up to was evidently because the IOA itself seems to be rather confused about the sport and its variations. In Calcutta, not surprisingly, bowling is of the more genteel British variety, played on a manicured lawn in between the tea and the cucumber sandwiches. In Delhi, also not surprisingly, it is the faster, more aggressive and cacophonic American version played indoors in bowling alleys. Having recognised both federations, the IOA is now trapped in the embarrassing position of now having to decide which one gets no-balled.

BRAIN DRAIN

■ The Andhra Pradesh chief minister would hardly be amused to learn that in the heart of his citadel, Hyderabad, there are post-graduate students who believe that NTR actually stands for Nothing To Report. And, there would be small consolation for him in learning that the acronym is not an analysis of his political performance but an abject lack of general knowledge since they also believe that the USSR is the abbreviation for the United States of Soviet Russia. And that is not all. Similar pearls of wisdom were literally littering the floor of the examination room at Hyderabad's Bhavan's College of Communication and Management, for post-graduates.

Apart from NTR, other tragic victims who were unwittingly slandered included Acharya Vinobha Bhave who, according to one bright spark, ran an illegal gun factory in Jammu and Kashmir., while another believed that Mother Teresa "helped the wounded soldiers in Vietnam". The only one of the batch who got it right was the character who described "brain drain" as a "brain wash" which the examination surely was.

DISPUTED DOG

■ King Solomon must be giggling in his grave over the dogged determination of a magistrate in Kerala's Kodungaloor district to decide an unusual dispute. The dispute was dragged into the courts by a Yusuf Kutty who charged that his neighbour had stolen his dog. Kutty had earlier filed a complaint with the police, who made Kutty stand outside the neighbour's house and call the dog out. The dog immediately appeared with his tail all awag but the cops insisted that Kutty cross the road and if the dog tailed him, the issue would be settled: he set off but the dog refused to budge. That ended the dispute and Kutty was sent off with a flea in his ear.

But Kutty was not to be leashed so easily and he moved the court. The magistrate ordered that the dog be brought to court along with the two claimants for ownership. The first sitting proved messy since the dog went wherever it was called regardless of who was calling. When reports last came in, the hearing had been postponed because the courtroom was so full that exhibit A, the disputed canine, was going hysterical answering a barrage of calls from the crowd who had come to witness the dramatics.

DOUBLE TROUBLE

■ There was much merrymaking in a village in Ahmednagar district last fortnight, as the occasion certainly demanded. Kulkarni, the village headman, was "arranging" to marry off his two sons, Kashinath and Gopal, to two sisters Usha and Varsha. But since neither of the couples had set eyes on each other, there were bound to be some slips twixt the cups and the lips. The first eruption took place on the wedding day when Gopal saw that Usha, the bride chosen for Kashinath, was better endowed than her sister. He demanded the pairings be switched.

But Kulkarni ordered the assembled priests to get on with the job as per the programme. By now the guests were quite confused and were confounded further when Gopal disappeared. A frantic search was launched, the reluctant bridegroom found and dragged back with the promise that he would be married to Usha. Now, it was Kashinath's turn. He too vanished and remained untraced till the girls' disgusted parents decided that enough was enough and vanished as well, with daughters in tow.

—Compiled by DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Change.

The essence of progress. In a constantly changing world success means exploration of new frontiers. Through experimentation with new ideas. Through search for new directions. The winds of change have blown for the better at Swadeshi Polytex.

A band of dedicated professionals, the present management is committed to unrelenting growth of the company.

With production shooting up from 18 to 28 tpd, the company is well on its way to newer heights of acomplishment. With a new zeal and redoubled enthusiasm.

SP jailene®

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

shems/SPL/1/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Battle Within

Cracks in the ruling party have never been more visible than in recent weeks. Indecisiveness at the top, infighting among the party leadership and weak chief ministers have encouraged a flurry of dissident activity. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA visited key states and obtained reports from correspondents in other states affected by the dissident fever. His report:

ARJUN SINGH ARUN NEHRU RAJIV GANDHI ARUN SINGH KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI

The AICC(I) office-bearers installed by Rajiv have failed to maintain some semblance of party discipline. The party has been confronted with total confusion over the role and authority of Arun Singh and Arun Nehru—the prime minister's most trusted aids.

BARELY 18 months ago, the ruling party resembled a vast, indomitable empire whose loyal subjects bowed meekly before the iron will of its ruler. Now, the empire is striking back—at itself. All across the length and breadth of the huge, amorphous Congress(I) kingdom, bush-fires of revolt are erupting at an alarming rate. From Guwahati in the far east and Trivandrum down south, battle-lines have been sharply drawn between its regional satraps and factional leaders. And, in New Delhi, the seat of power, senior party functionaries are involved in an unending slanging match in a sordid display of political one-upmanship.

PRANAB MUKHERJEE GUNDU RAO

It is the lack of coordination and cohesiveness at the top which has encouraged the ranks of the dissidents like Gundu Rao and Pranab.

By last fortnight, half of the 17 Congress(I) chief ministers and over half-a-dozen Pradesh Congress(I) presidents were facing a serious revolt from dissidents. At the Centre, the All-India Congress(I) Committee's octogenarian Working President Kamalapati Tripathi was continuing to stoke dissident fires. In the past few weeks, the party has been forced to expel a former chief minister and a Central minister, suspend a former chief minister and a cabinet minister and serve warning to at least two other former Union ministers and a former chief minister for their open defiance. Admitted the party's powerful Vice-President Arjun Singh: "There are some noises being made in some places, but it is nothing new in a party which rules the country and has over three crore ordinary members. There is no cause for alarm."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But Singh only seems to be turning a deaf ear to the sound of alarm bells that are being rung loudly and clearly in virtually every Congress(I)-ruled state and by important senior leaders. In Delhi itself, the flag of revolt is still being held aloft in the frail hands of Tripathi. Last fortnight, during his routine press briefing, Tripathi demanded the immediate holding of organisational elections. "The party has become weak because the democratic process within the party has received a set-back by the continuous postponement of elections. Imposition of the PCC(I) office-bearers and other functionaries has caused immense damage to the party." he charged. In a reaction that exposed the widening fissures at the top level of the party hierarchy, the AICC(I)'s portly General Secretary T. Anjiah hit back at Tripathi. "Tripathi's statement should not be taken seriously," he stated and virtually asked him to quit his post before making an issue out of what is a justifiable enough demand on the part of the working president.

Anjiah's ill-conceived diatribe led to a minor revolt in the party spearheaded by another veteran, Karnataka's brash former chief minister Gundu Rao, who termed Anjiah a "buffoon" and demanded disciplinary action against him for insulting a senior party functionary. Tripathi himself reacted with unconcealed anger. "If action has to be taken it should be taken against those who are asking for disciplinary action against me." he declared. What was more surprising was the fact that neither Party President Rajiv Gandhi nor any of his senior party colleagues sought it fit to stop the mud-slinging, shaking the common worker's confidence in the party's leadership.

But in the context of the current internal crisis in the party, perhaps Rajiv's non-intervention is not all that surprising. It is precisely the lack of coordination and cohesiveness at the top which has encouraged the ranks of the dissidents. And it is Rajiv's inaccessibility and selective appointments which have adversely affected the smooth functioning of the party. Chief ministers are forced to wait for days, and in some cases weeks, before their request for an appointment with the prime minister is granted. If the current spate of dissident activities is any indication, it is evident that Rajiv's much touted earlier attempts as the AICC(I) general secretary to build a party of his own choosing seem to have been completely brought to a nought.

The team of AICC(I) office-bearers installed by Rajiv—which was a mix of new and old—has failed miserably to maintain some semblance of party discipline. None of the eight general secretaries can claim to have stemmed the tide of dissidence that has overtaken the states entrusted to them.

To make matters worse, the party has been confronted with total confusion over the role and authority of Union Minister of State for Defence, Research and Development Organisation Arun Singh and Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru—the prime minister's most trusted aides. With Arun Nehru falling sick and Arun Singh keeping a visible distance from the prime minister, party leaders and workers have been busy realigning and readjusting to the emerging new power structure evolving around Arjun Singh. Ultimately, the combination of an ineffective central leadership and weak leaders in the states has palsied the party and triggered off tremors of revolt in many states.

BIHAR

Ineffective Leadership

■ With its background of chaos and drift, it was hardly surprising that in the current round of factional warfare, it was Bihar which headed the list of states where dissident activity is at its height. With the weak-kneed and ineffective leadership at the Government and party level, the dissidents, led by the irrepressible Jagannath Mishra, have revived their offensive against the ailing and embattled Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey. Their war cry has taken the form of the slogan they have recently coined: "Dubeyji doob gaye and Baithaji baith gaye (Bindeshwari Dubey has drowned and Baitha (PCC(I) Chief Dumar Lal Baitha) is ineffective." Last fortnight, Dubey took serious note of the open derision and frequency with which the slogan is being aired and launched a counter-offensive against his former ally and now arch-rival former chief minister Jagannath Mishra.

Dubey sent an SOS through the state's district magistrates to all his MLA supporters in their constituencies, asking them to assemble in Patna. Despite that note of urgency, only 17 of them showed up and were flown to New Delhi, where the prime minister's aide and Dubey's protector Makhan Lal Fotedar had arranged for them to meet Rajiv. During their brief meeting, they demanded Mishra's expulsion from the party, obviously along the lines of the action taken against Gundu Rao in Karnataka. But even this did not deter Mishra and his supporters from continuing their campaign against the

Jagannath Mishra

Bindeshwari Dubey

With the high command unable to tame Mishra or activate Dubey's government, a truce was unlikely to return to the Congress(I).

chief minister. Mishra had earlier obtained the signatures of over 100 MLA's—as against the 17 Dubey was able to muster—on a memorandum against the chief minister, thus exposing in a most telling manner Dubey's limited following in the Congress(I) Legislature Party (CLP).

Mishra then brought all the three dissident groups on one platform and asked them to sign a strongly-worded memorandum against Dubey to the prime minister. As many as 125 MLA's signed the paper which contained serious allegations of corruption, growing atrocities against the Harijans and other weaker sections as well as total collapse of the state administration. The dissidents alleged that during Dubey's tenure, as many as 90 people have been gunned down by the police in 45 cases of police firing. Said Mishra: "The party is paralysed and the Government is dead in Bihar", and went on to predict that if Dubey was allowed to continue, the party "will be wiped out from the state". Added prominent Congress(I) leader Kamla Nath Singh: "Dubey is in a pathetic state of mind at present. When he was elected the CLP leader with Mishra's backing, he was a unanimous choice and today he can collect only 17 MLA's in his support. This alone shows that he is in a hopeless minority in the CLP." With the high command unable to tame either Mishra or activate Dubey's inactive government, a truce was unlikely to return to the state Congress(I).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Infighting Spills Out

■ In the country's most populous state, with the largest number of MP's in the Lok Sabha, the party has split vertically. While Tripathi's son and state Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi was battling his cabinet colleague Transport Minister Sanjay Singh, a relation of Arjun Singh, over the question of bogus memberships, Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh was faced with the problem of defending himself from the anti-Arun Nehru forces led by three of his own ministers who claim to enjoy the support of Amitabh Bachchan, MP from Allahabad. The dissident activity in the state was once again ranged along caste lines. But it was the first time that party rivals were attacking each other in public. Charged Lokpati Tripathi: "I will not name anybody but those who have spent bagfuls of money on the membership are now facing serious inquiries and

Lokpati Tripathi

Bir Bahadur Singh

Tripathi questioned bogus membership while Bir Bahadur Singh had to defend himself from anti-Arun Nehru forces.

may eventually pay for what they attempted to do. There is a boy who is trying all sorts of tricks but he won't succeed." Retorted the boyish Sanjay Singh: "The very fact that some senior leaders and old-timers are working and lobbying against me is proof that I am no more a kid in politics."

While the Singh-Tripathi feud posed no serious threat to the chief minister, the appearance of an anti-government advertisement sponsored by Bachchan in the local newspapers created ripples in the chief minister's camp last fortnight. The offensive advertisement, which almost indicted the state Government for its failure to prevent the Allahabad riots, appeared on July 18, the day the cine star was scheduled to meet the chief minister. Dealing extensively with the riots and their aftermath, the advertisement said on behalf of the MP: "There are many questions in my mind for which I shall be seeking answers when I meet the chief minister today, namely:

► Insufficient financial compensation to affected property and people;

► Administrative lapses, vis-a-vis timely intervention, indiscriminate arrests of innocents and their subsequent care while in custody.

Coming as it did from a personal friend of the prime minister, the advertisement was interpreted as a warning to the chief minister who owed his ascension to Arun Nehru. The advertisement and its loaded political implications provoked a flight of state ministers angling for the chief ministership to Delhi to stake their claim. A visibly-shaken Singh reacted grimly. "I have seen the advertisement. I think he has done a good thing," he declared, keeping in constant touch with his mentor in Delhi, Arun Nehru, who was recovering from his heart ailment. But with the infighting coming out into the open, there was still no signs of intervention on the part of the Central leadership or the PCC(I) President Mahabir Prashad, who has been reduced to a non-entity in the state's politics.

MADHYA PRADESH

Formidable Tie-up

■ Here, the growing party power struggle was being symbolised by the state's two most formidable leaders—former Union ministers P.C. Sethi and V.C. Shukla. After a year of relative inactivity, both leaders suddenly decided to undertake a one-and-a-half-month tour of the entire state to meet the party workers and collect their "views" on various issues confronting the people and the Government. The public relations programme is likely to end by the first week of August. While touring the state, they were careful to ensure that their paths did not cross. While Shukla confined himself to party affairs and refrained from attacking either the Central or the state leadership, Sethi launched a tirade against AICC(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh and his protege the PCC(I) President Digvijay Singh. In an informal chat with the press, he indirectly accused Arjun Singh of creating hurdles for Chief Minister Moti Lal Vora: "People in Madhya Pradesh are saying that Voraji is in constant fear of someone who is running the state through remote control." The reference was obviously to Arjun Singh. The Sethi-Shukla tie-up and their actions created further confusion in the party in New Delhi. AICC(I) General Secretary R.L. Bhatia, who is in charge of the state, had cleared their tour programme. But fellow General Secretary G.K. Moopanar dashed off a circular stat-

P.C. Sethi

V.C. Shukla

The Sethi-Shukla tie-up and their actions created further confusion in the party in New Delhi.

ing that any public meeting held outside the purview of the PCC(I) and the DCC(I) would amount to indiscipline and would invite action. Vora finally lent his open support to the Sethi-Shukla faction when he justified their tour and said: "I think that the intention behind the tour is not bad. They will submit their report to the prime minister."

KARNATAKA

Fernandes Fails

■ If up north the party was seething with discontentment, the southern citadels of the party were in an equally defiant state of rebellion. In Karnataka, Gundu

Oscar Fernandes

Gundu Rao

Fernandes has failed to build up an organisation and win the confidence of factional leaders like Gundu Rao who openly ridicule his leadership.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rao raised the banner of revolt against the leadership and was expelled from the party for questioning Rajiv's authority (INDIA TODAY, July 31). But the decisive action against the former chief minister failed to help the party present a united face. While walking away with two sitting MLC's and over a dozen former MP's and MLA's, Rao threw down yet another direct challenge to Rajiv. Boasted Rao: "Let Rajiv come to Karnataka and win an election on his own. What he is today is purely due to two unfortunate accidents in the country in which two of our important leaders were killed. If those accidents had not taken place he would have been flying Boeings somewhere."

Rao is hardly a serious threat to Rajiv but he has the capacity to do serious damage to the party. It was to minimise Rao's influence over the party that Oscar Fernandes, a relatively junior functionary with a clean image, had been chosen as PCC(I) chief eight months ago. Even at that time, it was widely felt that Fernandes would prove no match for state Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde or even party stalwarts like Veerappa Moily and S. Bangarappa. After eight months, it is evident that Fernandes has failed to build up an organisation and win the confidence of the factional leaders who openly ridicule his leadership. Said one senior leader from the state: "Oscar is too good to be a politician. He was trained by us in politics and now he expects us to learn from him. Is it possible?" But Fernandes insists that he has the qualifications: "Who says that I am inexperienced? I have been a Block Congress(I) committee secretary, a district youth Congress(I) president, a parliamentary secretary to the prime minister and an AICC(I) general secretary. I have travelled all over the country and even abroad with the prime minister." But the fact remains that the Congress(I) is divided into so many groups that Rajiv has not been able to appoint any of the other PCC(I) office-bearers or find a replacement for Bangarappa, who resigned as leader of the CLP following an adverse court judgement.

RAJASTHAN

Stalwarts at odds

■ In yet another important north Indian state, the battle was between two stalwarts, Chief Minister Harideo Joshi and former chief minister Shiv Charan Mathur. Last fortnight, Mathur took the chief minister to task for ignoring development activity in the state. In a press

Shiv Charan Mathur

Harideo Joshi

Mathur reeled out statistics to prove that the present chief minister, Harideo Joshi, was harming the state.

interview, Mathur reeled out statistics to prove that the present chief minister was harming the state. He also claimed the "high command was unhappy with the chief minister", and went on to predict sarcastically that it was Joshi who handed over the Congress rule to the Janata in 1977 and would repeat it again by his non performance. While Joshi did not react personally, his public relations department issued a hard-hitting rejoinder—saying that the Government was still bearing the burden of the maladministration of the previous government headed by Mathur. The state PCC(I) chief reluctantly issued a statement disapproving Mathur's attack and the former chief minister was finally summoned to New Delhi to explain his conduct.

KERALA

Battling It Out

■ This is perhaps the one state where the Indira loyalists are winning the internal war against the so-called "newcomers". During the last four years, relations between the group led by Chief Minister Karunakaran and the AICC(I) General Secretary A.K. Antony were never cordial. But matters came to boiling point three months ago when the then home minister, Vyalar Ravi, was shifted from the crucial home portfolio to agriculture. Ravi, instead of accepting the change, resigned and since then, Karunakaran and Ravi have been fighting as if they belonged to different political parties. Recently, the Congress(I) controlled Non-Gazetted Officers Association formally split between the Karunakaran and Ravi groups. Even though the chief minister's group lost in the Association elections, Karunakaran packed the organisation with his own nominees and called a conference under the leadership of rebel labour leader Karunakaran Pillai. In the meeting, the chief minister declared that his government would recognise the Pillai-led faction. But soon after Ravi directed his supporter R.K. Poduval to summon another conference where Ravi and Ommen Chandy blasted the chief minister. Declared Ravi: "If Karunakaran thinks that he only represents the Congress(I) then he is mistaken. Leaders may be with him but the Congress(I) is with us and Rajiv Gandhi." PCC(I) Chief C.V. Padmarajan was quick to warn that action would soon be taken against those who attended the conference. Retorted Ravi: "We do not agree with certain

Vyalar Ravi

K. Karunakaran

Ravi resigned and since then, Karunakaran and Ravi have been fighting as if they belonged to different political parties.

policies being pursued by the chief minister. But still, for the sake of party unity we have so far avoided any direct confrontation."

WEST BENGAL

Convulsed by Crises

■ If the Karnataka and Kerala problem is basically between Indira loyalists and Rajiv loyalists, a similar predicament confronts the high command in West Bengal where former Indira loyalists, led by the Union Minister for Programme Implementation A.B.A. Ghani Khan Choudhury are seeking their share of the party cake and are up in arms against the leadership of former Indira-baiter Priya Ranjan Das Munshi. In fact, in West Bengal, PCC(I) chief Das Munshi is so involved in trying to hold his party together that he has ceased to pose a challenge to the state's Marxist rulers. Since its drubbing at the mid-June state municipal elections, the party has been

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

convulsed by a series of crises, beginning with the dramatic revolt of Dr Sisir Bose. This "bhadralok" Congressman's charge that the party is being destroyed by the undemocratic tendency to foist leaders in an ad hoc manner from above has struck a responsive chord with most leaders in the state. Today, Das Munshi's dominance is being opposed by leaders like Ghani Khan Choudhury, Asoke Sen, Somen Mitra and the overwhelming majority of the state's 54 Congress(I) MLA's.

More worrisome are the signs of growing apathy among the party's grassroots workers—a tendency first hinted at by the failure of Das Munshi's Writers Building gherao call. Announced months in advance as a major party programme, the call evoked little response. And after the municipal polls, party workers from many districts reported that a large number of traditional Congress(I) supporters had abstained from voting, thereby offering a virtual walk-over to Left Front candidates.

All this, claim the dissidents, who today seem to outnumber their rivals, is because party workers have little faith in Das Munshi's leadership. In fact, he has failed to involve all Congressmen in the party's activities. So indecisive is the present PCC(I) leadership that it took over two months to actually suspend three MLA's—Samar Mukherjee, Ananda Mohan Biswas and Dr Sisir Bose—who have sided with the expelled Pranab Mukherjee. Last fortnight, Dr Bose derisively remarked that Das

Das Munshi

Ghani Khan

Today, Das Munshi's dominance is being opposed by leaders like Ghani Khan Choudhury and the overwhelming majority of the state's 54 Congress(I) MLA's.

Munshi has become a "laughing-stock" for not being able to take any action against him.

The only reason why dissidence is not open and vocal is because of Rajiv Gandhi's continued support for the present PCC(I) chief. The prime minister's recent tour of Calcutta has been interpreted as a deliberate expression of solidarity with Das Munshi. "Normally, it is the state party that boosts their Central leader," remarked a Congressman, "but now we have the phenomenon of the central leadership boosting a state chief."

ORISSA

Grab for Power

■ This is the only state where the high command has moved to back an embattled chief minister against his party opponents. But even that has not helped matters. After lobbying for over six months, Chief Minister Janaki Ballabh

J.B. Patnaik

Nityanand Mishra

The major threat to Patnaik is from the PCC(I) chief Nityanand Mishra who wrote a strongly-worded letter to the prime minister against Patnaik.

Patnaik was permitted to expand his cabinet last fortnight as a symbolic show of solidarity from the Centre. Patnaik, inexplicably, was also allowed to include Niranjan Patnaik, who had been forced to resign in the wake of an adverse high court judgement. The cabinet expansion only brought together various other lobbies which were lying in wait to make a grab for power. Now they have rallied behind the powerful Basant Kumar Biswal, known as the super chief minister in the Patnaik Cabinet. Meanwhile, five existing Cabinet ministers have been meeting Central leaders to complain against the chief minister. In addition, those MLA's who lobbied for Patnaik in his recent fight with the media, now feel cheated because they have not found a place in the new ministerial expansion.

But the major threat to Patnaik is from the PCC(I) chief Nityanand Mishra who wrote a strongly-worded letter to the prime minister against Patnaik. According to party sources, at least 12 MP's are with Mishra in his anti-Patnaik campaign. In a joint letter to the prime minister, they have emphasised the fact that the party is thoroughly demoralised due to the fast erosion in the credibility of both the Government and the party. Leading the anti-Rajiv assault is none other than Patnaik's young and ambitious brother-in-law Saumya Ranjan Patnaik, who is also an owner of an Oriya daily Sambad. While addressing a public meeting, he stated that Rajiv was not sincere in removing poverty from Kalahandi and instead had made it a public relations gimmick.

ALL this clearly revealed that an environment for direct confrontation between the high command and the dissidents was being created all over the country. The sudden surge in dissident activity is also directly related to the inordinate delay in organisational elections and to the impending assembly elections in Haryana, West Bengal, Kerala, Tripura and possibly Jammu & Kashmir. The national leaders are scrambling to find a foothold in influential party forums like the parliamentary board so they can manipulate the selection of candidates for the Assembly seats. Not that the situation is new. But under Indira Gandhi's leadership, dissidents were given the impression that she was not involved in any factional fights and was thus successful in the role of a final arbiter. But Rajiv has not been able to emulate his mother's strategy. Instead, he has given the overpowering impression that he is a man of strong likes and dislikes and will not rehabilitate anybody he considers bad or unfit for party work. It is precisely due to this that the party is currently divided between Indira loyalists and Rajiv loyalists. It is hardly a coincidence that all those who were considered very close to Indira Gandhi are being axed systematically.

During the last five years, Rajiv has not been able to evolve a system for party functioning and is still vacillating between his fanciful ideas of running the party on corporate lines and banking on a mix of the old guard and new faces. He has still not been able to find enough people from the solid phalanx of over 550 MP's and over 2,500 MLA's all over the country whom he can trust and his reluctance to meet senior leaders is seen as the main cause of his current party problems. Said a senior cabinet minister: "He can still reverse the trend only if he meets more politicians and people. In politics, there is no substitute for interaction with people." It is a lesson that Rajiv will have to learn fast if he has any intention of stemming the growing rot in the ruling party.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

On a Short Fuse

SWADESH TALWAR/Indian Express

Barnala and Ray at Muktsar site

IN LUDHIANA'S Brown Hospital sits Chand Kaur, sobbing, cursing and swearing angrily and often incoherently. "I fell at their feet. I said we are Jat Sikhs, your people, though my husband has cut his hair. But they pushed me aside, saying, 'Go away, we must finish all these people quickly'," she says, describing the harrowing moments on a lonely stretch of a link-road near Muktsar that left 14 bus passengers dead and seven injured, including her husband Surjit Singh. The clerk was shot in the head and may never recover his sight.

But he was one of the fortunate few who still lives to tell the gory tale, for hardly one of the bullets that the four murderers—armed with automatic pistols and Sten guns—fired in the state transport bus that morning missed its target. Despite heavy automatic firing, not a single bullet had struck the body, roof or the seats of the bus which now stood as mute evidence of the outrage: blood dripping from the creeks in its body and flies swarming all over its bloodied insides. Said a haggard-looking Surjit Singh Barnala as he returned from the scene of the slaughter: "The terrorists definitely want a communal divide and violent clashes as only that can cause the migration of Hindus away from Punjab and of the Sikhs towards it." Soon enough, his cabinet was pleading with the Centre to prevent reprisals outside Punjab at any cost as that could foul up the communal atmosphere in the state.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

In terms of the number of lives it consumed, as well as political fall-out, this was the worst carnage of all in the five-year history of blood, gore and terror in Punjab. In 15 frenetic minutes in the early hours of July 25, the terrorists had succeeded in putting the clock back on the hopes generated exactly a year ago when Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and the late Sant Harchand Singh Longowal signed the peace accord in New Delhi. Now, as the whole northern region of the country seethed with rage and indignation, a fresh fear psychosis spread among the Hindus in Punjab and as vicious riots broke out in parts of the capital the terrorists were probably laughing up their sleeves.

Last fortnight, they seemed to be winning as tension descended over north India. At Shimla and elsewhere in Himachal Pradesh, Sikh shops were ransacked and several bus passengers beaten up. In Ambala, a Sikh was stabbed to death and, as tension rose in several cities in Punjab, the army, for the first time since the accord was signed, staged flag marches in the volatile border towns of Amritsar, Tarn Taran, Dera Baba Nanak, Fatehgarh Churian, Batala and Gurdaspur.

Barely had Union Home Minister Buta Singh finished making a statement to Parliament on the Muktsar killings after his hurried visit to the spot that reports of heightening tension began to come in from several west Delhi colonies, where mixed Hindu and Sikh populations have lived under a fair bit of tension for several months now. The resettlement of Sikh widows of the November 1984 riots and then the Hindu migrants fleeing from Punjab had not exactly helped remove communal distrust in this sprawling gentrified lower middle-class ghetto.

Early next morning the area was aflame as hundreds of Hindus, led by the Punjab migrants, came to the streets in Tilak Nagar where a huge crowd of commuters waited for buses, and began a siapa, the noisy, Punjabi-style public mourning where women wail and beat

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARI OM GULATI

Rioting in Delhi: sharp recoil their breasts and thighs. Tempers ran high and group clashes broke out in an area where Sikhs are not hopelessly outnumbered and where they had remained prepared for just this eventuality.

As stones and soda-water bottles flew and a pyromania reminiscent of November 1984 seized the rival mobs, streets were soon littered with debris and blood. "I will never understand how people's moods transformed so fast. A minute earlier, we were all quietly waiting for our buses. Now, several (people) were throwing stones and burning vehicles while still clutching their lunch-boxes," recalls an incredulous Mathew Koshy, who was desperately trying to get away from the scene on the afternoon of July 26. The violence, however, was not unanticipated. "It was expected, a consequence of the militant Hindu revivalism that has been visible for some time," said Delhi Police Commissioner Ved Marwah.

Trouble soon spread to nearby Janakpuri, Hari Nagar and even the business district of Karol Bagh as angry mobs—several of them led by people carrying trishuls, the symbol of the militant Hindu—asked shopkeepers to pull down shutters. Buta Singh and Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat, who visited Tilak Nagar, were heckled by angry residents and until the Gurkhas of the army began to march across the area, there was no sign of any force controlling the violence.

But the situation, this time, was significantly different from what had happened in November 1984. At the very outset, the prime minister called up Delhi Lieutenant-Governor H.L. Kapur to put down violence effectively even if it meant calling out the army right away. The administration also requisitioned the services of an air force helicopter for aerial surveillance of the capital. Also, this time, Sikhs were standing up to the mobs. In fact, three of the men killed in police firing were Sikhs. According to senior officials, they were shot while they were sniping from roof-tops at the attacking mobs.

YET AGAIN, rumours of killings and counter-killings had left the capital perilously close to the edge of the short fuse. "It is madness. People rioting in Delhi are only serving the cause of those who killed innocent people in the bus in Muktsar," said retired lt-general Jagjit Singh Aurora, the new Rajya Sabha member from Punjab. Extremely worried by the fall-out of the killings at Muktsar, the Union Cabinet resolved to put it down in the most effective manner possible. The police had been ordered to shoot rioters, and to shoot to kill.

Just like the reprisals elsewhere, the killings in Muktsar too were not entirely unanticipated. Because of increased pressure from the police, the terrorists had not been able to do anything of significance for some time and an impression was growing that they were on the defensive. In such a situation, they were bound to try and pull off something spectacular. A day before the killings, Punjab police chief J.F. Ribeiro had warned Ranjan Gupta, the Faridkot district police superintendent, of the possibility. The police were expecting an attack on some VIP's.

But the terrorists stuck to their favourite target, the transport buses, which they have now hit four times with success, beginning with the midnight massacre of eight Hindus at Dhilwan near Amritsar on October 5, 1983, that saw the fall of the Darbara Singh government. Even this time, their planning was meticulous and they left no tracks for the police to follow. They forced a farmer to give them a ride on his Ford tractor to an irrigation channel about a kilometre away and then disappeared on foot. Police dogs were able to trace the smell for another 8 km towards the township of Gurharsahai and then lost it. The place is just about an hour's drive from the border. But the police suspect that the murderers are still hiding in the area.

There was also added cruelty this time in the manner the killings were executed: letting out women and children, making the clean-shaven men bury their heads between their knees and then shooting each one turn-by-turn while shouting, for the benefit of the survivors, that they wanted to teach a lesson to "these fat Hindus". The objective was obviously to cause as much indignation among the victims' communities as possible. It was achieved the next morning as people received their newspaper copies. Riots broke out in west Delhi soon afterwards.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YET ANOTHER significant fall-out of the killings was the confirmation of the security machinery's long-standing fear that the moment pressure is put on Amritsar and Gurdaspur districts, the terrorists will spill over into the adjoining districts, particularly Ferozepore, which too shares a long border with Pakistan. Some indications to the effect had been available of late: the killing of six car passengers last month and the increasing intelligence about the movements of known extremists. Last fortnight itself, at the village of Marmaloo near Muktsar, five terrorists looted the passengers of a bus at gunpoint. But they were chased, caught and almost lynched by the villagers, mostly Sikhs. Still, these men were relatively smaller fry and the terrorists in the region now have their own murderous pantheon led by none else than Gurjit Singh, a relation of Bhindranwale. Intelligence sources confirm that he returned to Punjab from Pakistan about three months ago and commands a group of 30 armed men. Gurdev Singh Usmanwala and Gurdev Singh Satianwali are his deputies.

Last fortnight, the CRPF killed two Sikhs related to Usmanwala in an encounter near Ferozepore and intelligence reports received at Chandigarh had spoken of a furious Usmanwala asking his followers to "teach them a lesson". Besides these three, the police suspect that Waryam Singh, whom an intelligence officer in Chandigarh described as a "satanic killer", was among the Muktsar killers. The quartet figures on the "hit-list" of 38 prepared by Ribeiro, who asserted that the killers will be caught. Said he: "Morale, both among people and the forces, is much higher in this region than elsewhere. They will surely catch them."

But if the latest outrage heavily dampened the recent feeling of police success in its drive against the terrorists the blame for this, at least partly, lay at their door. Earlier in the fortnight, they had launched with much fanfare Operation Mand, a massive overkill to clear the flood-prone, desolate riverine strip of land along the Beas River of terrorists. Helicopters, bull-dozers and mechanised boats were used in the campaign—from which much was expected. In the past, the police had lost the trail of fleeing terrorists on the fringe of the Mand region and there was suspicion that an isolated island in the Beas was the haunt of several terrorists, confirmed by the fact that a surveillance helicopter overflying the island was fired at last month.

BHAWAN SINGH

Tilak Nagar during the violence

The operation produced dazzling results; not so much in terms of captures of arms or criminals but in terms of publicity. Headlines talked of the capture of 200 terrorists and of the destruction of the "Khalistan capital". But all that the police had to show after the film-style spectacular were four pistols (two of them rusted), some ammunition, remnants of a crude arms factory, four cots and several illicit liquor stills.

Not a shot was fired in the 40-hour operation over the 240-sq km area and, in the end, the police were only embarrassed by the claims made in the publicity blitz. "The media played up the whole thing far out of proportion with the reality. We never claimed destruction of the 'Khalistan' capital and clearly stated that 200 persons had been picked up for questioning," said a defensive Amritsar Police Chief Mohammed Izhar Alam. But Kanwaljit Singh, minister of state for home affairs, claimed that the operation has finally brought the Mand area under government control.

The fact, however, remains that the whole show was put up on the eve of the monsoon session of Parliament to pre-empt the Opposition onslaught. It achieved that objective, but the highly-publicised claims raised expectations to dizzy heights and these suffered a sickening jolt with the Muktsar carnage and yet again caused a crisis of credibility for the police despite the impressive list of successes in days preceding the killings.

The killings also provided fresh ammunition to the Government's critics within the sharply-divided Akali Dal, led by the controversial Revenue Minister Major Singh Uboke who had earlier dismissed Operation Mand as "Operation Fraud" and loudly complained, at a cabinet meeting, that "innocent Sikh youths and even women" were being harassed and tortured by the security forces. The Cabinet meeting last fortnight became particularly scrappy for Barnala as even several of his supporters spoke against the police action. The result was the first unsavoury meeting between Barnala, who thinks he can't afford to alienate his partymen beyond a limit, and Ribeiro, who was in no mood to relent. "I know the compulsions of politicians," he said, "but fighting terrorism is a lot more important than conceding to their demands."

It is also a lot more difficult, particularly now, with counter-violence threatening to spill into the neighbouring regions and the Punjab cities where the Hindus are in a majority. Anything could set off a major catastrophe: the terrorists pulling off another raid of the Muktsar kind, a few deaths in rioting in Delhi or elsewhere, an attack on a VIP. A year after the accord signed in Delhi, Punjab is yet again poised on the edge of the precipice. Worse, it threatens to draw the whole nation into the bloody slush of communal hatred and terror.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA with GOBIND THUKRAL in Muktsar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

TIME BUSTERS

NOW SHOWING AT DELHI AND BOMBAY

STARRING THE
9 BRITISH AIRWAYS NON-STOP FLIGHTS TO LONDON

A TOTAL CAST OF 14 FLIGHTS A WEEK WITH DAILY PERFORMANCES.
THE OPPORTUNITY TO CATCH CONNECTIONS TO 140 DESTINATIONS WORLDWIDE FROM LONDON HEATHROW

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

A BRITISH AIRWAYS PRODUCTION

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Anyone could talk about duty-free shopping before departure.

But we would rath the convenienc of du shoppin on a

India Tourism Development Corporation

AKSHARA/ITDC-43.D

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ee

ulrather talk about nceof duty-free ingon arrival.

Buying goods on foreign trips can be a hassle. Packing, carrying, freight costs, insurance charges and the inconvenience of carting them around from place to place... the problems are endless. And needless, too. Because you can get the best of foreign products right here in India. Duty-free. At the Ashok Duty-Free Shops. At Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Madras and Trivandrum International Airports.

You can have your pick from a whole range of foreign products : videos, colour TVs, washing machines, cordless telephones, cigarettes, beverages, watches, cosmetics, games, toys and a whole lot more!

You can either buy them on arrival, or book on departure by paying US$20, and ensure guaranteed delivery on return. Come, shop the world in India. Duty Free.

Destinations	22
Hotels	23
Beach Resorts	2
Travellers Lodges	3
Forest Lodge	1

The Ashok Group

HOTELS • TRAVEL SERVICES • DUTY FREE SHOPS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"A casual way to spend the day"

"For casual occasions, I prefer a fabric that makes me look dressed in a comfortable, relaxed fashion. The quiet sophistication of world–class trouser material from Gwalior Suiting... in a wide, wide range of textures, weaves, designs and colours. And a super variety of plains, checks and stripes from Gwalior Shirting. They really make my day."

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

MAPP-GR-86-104

Digitized by Sri Sri Sri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Lal vs Lal

TWO MONTHS after Bansi Lal took over the reigns of the Haryana Government, he still finds that he has time for little else than undoing the damage that his not so illustrious predecessor Bhajan Lal had wrought in his seven-year stewardship. "The state has been mismanaged and every day murky deeds come to light," says Lal, who has struggled to find time to counter the political challenge he faces from the Lok Dal leader, Devi Lal.

Bhajan Lal, possibly the slyest operator in contemporary Indian politics, had his tentacles spread far and deep and Lal has had to move on several fronts at the same time. Last fortnight, Bhajan Lal was given a ticket to the Rajya Sabha to keep him at arm's length so as to minimise his potential for mischief. But here too Lal has taken further precautions. The other party ticket was given to his resourceful son Surinder Singh, who can keep a close watch on Bhajan Lal's doings in Delhi.

Lal has also moved swiftly to streamline the administration and stem the rot of corruption. Says he: "I will thrash the corrupt and the inefficient and make them work honestly." Over 280 officers—ranging from the rank of secretaries to tehsildars—have been transferred. Some 20 non-MLA chairmen, vice-chairmen and advisers of state corporations appointed by Bhajan Lal have been sacked.

In a swift operation, Lal ordered the takeover of a dozen silica sand quarries near Faridabad which were a source of patronage for Bhajan Lal. Currently a high-level probe is on to determine how many benami shares Bhajan Lal and his business associate, Pokharmal, had in the quarries.

Lal then moved against the irregular allotment of 180 residential plots in six towns which Bhajan Lal had given four days before he resigned. Three applications had given the address of a petrol pump, while one had not given any address at all. In some cases the date of application and in others the size of the plot allotted had been missed out. Since the allotment letters were still in the process of being issued, Lal cancelled all the 180 allotments. "I am not running a club," he quipped later.

Bhajan Lal's Government had also twisted the law in every possible way in giving over 4,150 acres in Gurgaon district, south of Delhi, to five Delhi-based developers in the last five years. The eventual profits of the developers could exceed Rs 125 crore. Lal called the senior officials of the Urban Development Department and gave them a mouthful but the problem is thousands of innocent buyers have invested their money in the properties. However, the new Urban Development Secretary R.S.Mann, a no-nonsense man, has already started moving to limit the damage, cancelling the allotment of some 800 acres to the leading land firm, DLF, which had orginally been allotted 2,000 acres.

But the decisions that clearly show that Lal means business pertain to Bhanu Industries, the Hissar-based combine run by Bhajan Lal's son-in-law, Anup Bishnoi. The Haryana power board has been asked to recover arrears amounting to Rs 80 lakh from the firm and explain how this happened. Bishnoi's units were getting round-the-clock supply of power but now the board has been told to treat them at par with the others. And the quota of molasses allotted to Bishnoi's distillery has been reduced from 55 to 25 per cent of the state's production.

Even Devi Lal, whose continuing campaign against the Punjab accord has kept Haryana's political scene on the boil, has stopped saying that the Haryana Government is now corrupt. Lok Dal sources admit that Bhajan Lal would have been a walkover for them in the coming assembly elections but the Jat from Bhiwani is a different proposition. But Lal is the first to admit that he still faces an uphill task. "I know the job is difficult," he says. As fresh evidence of Bhajan Lal's deals continues to emerge, Lal's words might turn out to be an understatement.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Here's a list of all those who make worldclass, whole body, brain and ultra sound scanners in India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yes, United's the only one. And number one in excellence too... in collaboration with Toshiba.

United. No.1 in so many fields. And in the exciting arena of scanners, the only in India. Creating world class scanners — whole body, brain, ultra sound — of the highest quality and reliability. In collaboration with Toshiba of Japan, an International leader in the field. United has already gone in for indigenous production, matching the same high standards.

There's more to it than manufacture. United already has an exclusive, all-India service network in 46 cities. With 26 engineers trained from abroad. So downtime is virtually eliminated.

It gives further meaning to the Group's philosophy of pioneering new and better paths in the service of the nation, the people and the shareholders.

Imageads/UG/86254

UNISCANS & SONICS LTD.
United House, 107-110 Sector-17B,
Chandigarh 160 017.

United Group Network
• Agra • Ahmedabad • Amritsar • Bangalore • Behrampur
• Bhopal • Bhubaneshwar • Bombay • Calcutta • Chandigarh
• Cochin • Coimbatore • Delhi • Dharwar • Guntur • Guwahati
• Gwalior • Hissar • Hubli • Hyderabad • Indore • Jabalpur
• Jaipur • Kolhapur • Lucknow • Ludhiana • Madras • Madurai
• Mangalore • Manipal • Nagpur • Nasik • Patiala • Patna • Pune
• Raipur • Rajkot • Rourkela • Salem • Srinagar • Sholapur
• Surat • Trivandrum • Vadodara • Varanasi • Vishakhapatnam.

Mail coupon to Uniscans & Sonics for more information:

Yes, I am certainly interested in finding out more about United Scanners. Rush details to:

Name: _____

Address: _____

Pin: _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EYE-CAMP VICTIMS

Blinded by

Over a hundred patients were blinded in April at eye camps in Khurja and Moradabad. While bureaucrats spin webs of inquiries, medical relief and action against the doctor are still awaited.

ON APRIL 22 at 4.00 p.m., cataract patients at the eye camp organised by the Adarsh Sarafa Club in Moradabad, watched flabbergasted as the operating surgeon, Dr R.M. Sahai, 49, suddenly announced that it was too hot and suspended operations for two-and-a-half hours leaving eight patients already administered local anaesthesia lying on the operation tables. The patients were understandably agitated. But the real reason for the sudden disappearance of the doctor was graver than the April heat. For this was when Sahai's junior doctor, Rajesh Sekhri, broke the news to him that many of the 108 patients on whom Dr Sahai had performed cataract operations the previous day at Khurja, 200 km away, had developed severe infection in the eyes.

The news must have rung loud alarm bells for a surgeon as experienced as Sahai, who says he performs an average of 12,000 cataract operations every year. But assuming, he confessed later, that it was a "minor problem" and after ordering the despatch of equipment and some members of his team, he resumed operations at 6.30 and even continued with the scheduled 150 the next day while Dr Sekhri, who had never handled a calamity of such proportions earlier, was left to deal with a stream of patients complaining of acute pain, pus formation, watering and bleeding in the eyes. Eventually, all the 108 cataract patients lost vision in the operated eye. In Moradabad the toll is gradually mounting as official inquiry teams are still trying to locate all the victims. Till last fortnight 11 more of the 390 operated had been found to have lost sight taking the total number of unfortunates to 119.

Though a spate of newspaper reports last fortnight highlighted the tragedy of the victims and the indifference of the doctors and officialdom, there is little hope of any immediate retribution or relief to the unfortunate victims. The Uttar Pradesh Government has received two official reports on the tragedy, but neither report categorically blames any particular individual or set of equipment.

Further, while a criminal case under Section 338 of the Indian Penal Code (IPC) (causing grievous hurt by act of negligence) was filed against Sahai and his team over a month ago, progress has been tardy. The station house officer of the Khurja police station, O.S.Rathor, says he has little time for the investigation because of his routine duties and has asked the Government to transfer the case to the Criminal Investigation Department (CID). But the state Government is yet to take any decision on his request. And though Khurja's Sub-Divisional Magistrate Shatrughan Singh, who conducted the first of the two inquiries and found prima facie evidence of negligence against Sahai's team, has also recommended that the state Government give interim relief ranging from Rs 500 to Rs 2,000, the Government has yet to decide—pleading that investigations have yet to be completed. The state Government has now decided to ban Sahai and to take a written undertaking from camp organisers that patients would be kept in post-operative care for at least seven days.

But for Khurja's eyeless, all this is cold comfort. "Taarif mein lut gaye hum to Jaipur wale ki, (We have been duped by the fame of the Jaipur doctor)", cries Har Pyaari, 70, still in agony with pain and constant watering from a shrunken grey jelly mass which was once her right eye. The sight in her other eye is also fast deteriorating making it difficult for her to work. But she refuses to consult a doctor now. "Even if I can't see at all I won't get an operation done," says a visibly-scared Pyaari.

Har Pyaari: painful agony

"Pakistan ke doctor bahut behter hain (The doctors in Pakistan are much better)," says Ummo Begum, 75, who had come from Karachi to visit her daughter. Convinced by Dr Anil Aggarwal, who organised the camp for the Lion's Club, that Dr Sahai was an extremely competent doctor, she agreed to the operation. Today, sitting sullenly on a charpai, she says: "Ab wahin ja ke dikhaungi. Yahan koi fayeda nahin. (I will only see a doctor there; there is no point seeing one here)."

A frail and sobbing Moharshree says she went to show her right eye. But the doctors insisted on operating her left eye which today is a gaping hole veiled by a wrinkled eyelid. With not a soul to call her own, and unable to see more than diffused figures, the 68-year-old-woman is living on neighbours' sympathy.

Word of the tragedy had first

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Negligence

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

leaked out in May, but the issue really snowballed after Singh submitted his report on July 14. Singh's report was supplemented on July 23 by a report by O.P.Gupta, deputy director in the Health Department.

Both the inquiries concluded that the most likely cause of the disaster was the saline solution used in treating the anterior chambers of the eye after the operation. Dr L.P.Aggarwal, former director of the All India Institute of Medical Sciences, also carried out an inquiry at Dr Sahai's behest and came to the same conclusion.

But while Dr Aggarwal found no other reason, the two official inquiries felt that Dr Sahai's team must share part of the blame. Singh is more inclined to believe that the solution was contaminated post-manufacture, implying that it was contaminated while in the possession of Dr Sahai's team. The reports also point to other examples of negligence by Dr Sahai's team which could have led to the infection. Five cryo-probes (needles kept at a very low temperature and used to puncture the cataract) were used over and over again as the operations were rushed through. The linen on the nine tables used for the operation was not changed at all. The equipment used for the operations had been sterilised in Jaipur, more than 24 hours earlier, when it should have been sterilised there. However, Dr Sahai denies that he and his team can be accused of negligence.

Singh's report is much harsher on Sahai for his "indifference towards (the) patients" after the infection was detected. Dr Sahai returned to Khurja on April 23 and spent the next day there, administering strong antibiotics to the patients. He came back on April 28 but flew to Rome for a conference on May 2. His plea is that since the treatment had been decided upon and his team of seven opthalmologists were qualified to treat the patients, his presence "would at best have provided psychological relief".

But Singh says the infection could have led to meningitis, and as Sahai should have been aware of this, his behaviour was "most condemnable". A precious 48 hours were wasted before Sahai turned his attention to his victims at Khurja. By that time the damage had been done. Almost all private practitioners consulted by the victims told them that had they come within the first 24 hours their eyesight could have been saved. By both Sahai's and Sekhri's account to Singh, they were hopeful of saving at least 15 to 20 per cent of the cases even until April 28 and yet Sahai did not consider it necessary to camp in Khurja to try and save as many as possible.

Sahai was not doing charity. In Moradabad Chief Medical Officer R.C.Johri says Sahai's team was paid Rs 40 per operation besides free lodging, food and transport. In Khurja the Lions Club spent Rs 8000. But Sahai denies he took money.

In his 25-page first information report (FIR) lodged on June 27, Singh has sought the prosecution of Dr Sahai and his team members under Section 338 of the IPC which recommends imprisonment for two years. But Sahai, who feels that the saline solution was to blame, says: "I have been crucified in this episode."

State Health Secretary Shyam Suri admits that the tragedy—and the widespread publicity it has received—will have an adverse effect on the eye relief camp project organised under the 20-point programme but says the Government is powerless to ban voluntary organisations from organising the camps. Of the 2.5 lakh operations conducted in the state till now, over 80 per cent have been performed by the voluntary organisations. "We don't have the infrastructure to even depute inspection officers here leave alone conduct these camps ourselves," says Suri.

Meanwhile, passions continue to run strong in Khurja, best known for its pottery. Anger against the doctors and the camp's organisers is still palpable. The Khurja victims have come together under the banner of Netra Peedit Kalyan Samiti to file a case in the Supreme Court against Sahai and the Lions Club. Says a belligerent B.C. Govil, secretary of the committee: "The doctors and the Lions Club will have to suffer as much as we have." Maybe they will, but there is one gift nobody can bestow on the unfortunate 119: the gift of sight.

—TANIA MIDHA in Khurja with DILIP AWASTHI and SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

Sahai (inset) at the Moradabad eye camp: indifferent attitude

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Through years of rugged service in war and peacetime, the C-130 Hercules aircraft has earned the admiration of pilots and mechanics all over the world. It's simply one of the most dependable planes in the air.

But it's also one of the most versatile. It converts from aerial refueling capability to cargo handling in hours, and delivers outstanding performance on either mission.

As a tanker, the Hercules aircraft carries 56,000 pounds of fuel on a typical mission — fast enough for mid air delivery to jets, or slow enough for helicopter refueling.

When the KC-130 is used as a freighter, it can get almost anything almost anywhere. Its 40,000-pound capacity is large enough for tanks and heavy trucks. It can land or take off from runways you wouldn't try with other planes. Even ice and snow.

Best of all, the C-130's impressive performance comes with surprising cost efficiency. That's why you'll find it serving more than 55 governments on every continent, day in and day out, year after year. Getting the job done, no matter what the job may be.

Lockheed-Georgia

Innovation
Giving shape to imagination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

switch to safety!

FET.

India's only electrical tubing tailor made for electrical applications.

Major electricity boards, NTPC and large industrial establishments like Genelec, Bajaj, Philips, Best & Crompton have already switched over to FET.

FET is a light weight, high safety flo coat electrical tubing specially manufactured by the world famous Flo Coat Process, for power distribution in electrical installations, multi-storeyed buildings, hotels, factories and houses.

Superior corrosion resistance
FET is a triple coated flo coat tube with continuous in-line hot dip galvanising and chromate and polymer coatings giving a triple barrier against corrosion.
The interior (I.D.) is given a specially formulated proprietary coating to make wire pulling easier.

Prevents short circuiting
ISO Metric parallel threaded profiles in FET offer efficient electrical continuity.
FET conforms to short circuit test, arc test and flame propagation test, etc.

Greater durability and versatility
The Flo Coat Process enhances tube strength retaining the ductility to facilitate easier manipulation.

The complete package
FET comes with matching galvanised fittings such as junction boxes, inspection elbows, bends and tees, etc. All fittings conform to IS 2667, BS 4568 Part II.

World renowned back-up
The Flo Coat Process was developed and patented world wide by Allied Tube and Conduit Corporation, USA. Apart from a company in Japan, Nagarjuna Coated Tubes is the only other company in Asia to win their prestigious collaboration.

World standards in quality and performance
FET conforms to National and International standards:
The Rural Electrification Code
IS 9537 Part I & Part II
BS 4568 Part I
IEC 614
UL — Underwriter's Laboratory — 1242
National Electric Code — USA
With credentials like that it is easy to see why MSEB, APSEB, MPEB, OSEB, GEB, NTPC and others consider FET ideal for applications like electrical distribution, electrical tubing, service connection brackets, street light fittings, AB switch handles, etc.
And here's some more reassuring news: For all its unique advantages, FET works out far more economical too!

Head Office:
41 Nagarjuna Hills, Panjagutta, Hyderabad 500 482
Tel: 223524/220147

Regional Offices:

Bangalore	: 578420/563832
Bombay	: 2023015/2020726
Calcutta	: 445402/442887
Madras	: 415888
New Delhi	: 604773

NCT
adds life to metals

Nagarjuna Coated Tubes Limited

Contact your dealer or write to us directly.

Sista's/NCT/101/R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Political Stunt

DRESSED in flowing saffron, Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao was in his element. His cabinet had just had a short-notice meeting in Hyderabad's historic Jubilee Hall, the first time that it had met outside the secretariat. And now he was informing the 3,000-strong cheering crowd of supporters of the momentous decision that the Cabinet had taken: to increase the reservation for the backward classes in colleges and Government jobs from 25 to 44 per cent. "You are not backward. The society is backward and we have taken this step to reform the society," he thundered, as fire-crackers greeted the announcement of the hike in reservations. And when Rama Rao added: "The law that prevails today is for big fish to eat small fish and our government has taken the side of the small fish in this battle," he almost brought the house down.

But neither all the brouhaha which surrounded the announcement, nor the subsequent campaign whipped up in favour of it, have been able to hide the fact that this was yet another decision that the populist Rama Rao was herded into taking. And like many other decisions taken by his government in haste, this also has led to a reaction which Rama Rao could not have foreseen. Though a Gujarat-style anti-reservation stir is yet to materialise, students in colleges across the state have been split into "forwards" and "backwards" and the growing antagonism is posing a threat to law and order in over 15 towns where students have gone on strike and called bandhs.

The sequence of events leading to the Government's decision tells its own tale. The Rama Rao Cabinet had its fortnightly meeting on July 1 but there was no mention of this major decision that day. But between July 1 and July 4, Rama Rao received intelligence reports that a convention of leaders of backward classes, mostly owing allegiance to the Congress(I) and scheduled to be addressed by Union External Affairs Minister P. Shiv Shanker, was likely to swing the backward classes solidly behind the Congress(I). With an estimated 200 representatives from each of the 100-odd backward castes in the state likely to attend the convention, it could turn out to be the most impressive collection of backward caste leaders in recent times.

As the backward castes comprise 52 per cent of the state's population of over 60 million, Rama Rao was understandably alarmed. On July 4, he ordered that the N.K. Muralidhara Rao Commission report on reservations submitted in 1982 (before he came to power), be examined. The same day he decided that the commission's recommendation—to raise the percentage from 25 to 44—would be immediately accepted by the Government. Members of the Cabinet were informed of the emergency meeting scheduled for the next day, and of the agenda. Rama Rao added his own bit by stipulating an income limit of Rs 12,000 annually for those eligible to benefit from the new policy.

Rama Rao's decision managed to take the sting out of the convention but Shiv Shanker called it "a political stunt" and warned: "The hike in reservations is a plot to incite people of the higher castes to challenge the decision in a court of law and thus get the whole process stalled." The convention, which ended in the setting up of the Andhra Pradesh Backward Classes Sangham (APBCS) with Congress(I) MP T. Bala Goud as president, instead turned its ire on the income limit, calling for its withdrawal if the "Government was really interested in the welfare of the backward classes".

Opposition from the higher castes also emerged soon enough. The first banner of revolt went up in Osmania University with the formation of the Andhra Pradesh Nava Sangharshana Samithi (APNSS) "to protect the interest of the forward classes". In less than a week the agitation spread to the districts with students boycotting classes and examinations to take out processions and hold meetings condemning the Government's decision. Says APNSS Convenor K. Ravindra Reddy: "We are not against reservations for the oppressed but against the decision to increase it to illogical proportions."

P.V. SIVAKUMAR/Indian Express

Rama Rao announcing reservation policy: populist ploys

With the pro-reservationists launching their own body—the Andhra Pradesh Sama Sangrama Parishad (APSSP)—which has clear support from Telugu Desam leaders—the stage was being set for a battle of attrition. As experience in numerous states—Gujarat, Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Tamil Nadu, Maharashtra—has shown, it is impossible to appease the upwardly mobile and politically powerful backward castes without triggering violent passions in the higher castes who feel that reservations should have been ended long ago. With the APNSS calling for a state-wide bandh this month, the movement against the increase in reservations was slowly—and ominously—gaining in strength.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In banking, industry, government and research what you don't see matters most!

Over 300 state-of-the art Computer Systems in 275 industrial, scientific, engineering and R & D establishments, and over 3000 Business Machines and Ledger Posting Machines in more than 1000 offices, banks and other institutions.

There is probably no major organisation in India today which does not depend on these data systems from Blue Star for enhanced efficiency.

In banking and management information systems. In graphics and design. On-line, real-time applications, data acquisition, measurement and control.

Behind the scene, Blue Star Electronics is at work where it matters most.

Total Electronics Capability

Blue Star in association with Hewlett-Packard, Motorola, Hitachi, Scientific Atlanta, Technicon, Yokogawa Hokushin, Johnson Controls and Jeumont-Schneider—each a leader in its own field—has been in the forefront of Electronics for over 30 years.

Among the products it markets and increasingly manufactures in India are : State-of-the-art Computer Systems and Business Machines, Analytical Instruments, Medical Instruments, Test and Measuring Instruments, Process Control Instrumentation, EPABX Systems and Professional Electronic Components.

These are backed by over 1000 man years of specialised experience of over 200 professionals.

Blue Star also exports Computer Software to technologically advanced countries.

State-of-the-art Solutions

Business, Industry and Government, Defence, Space and Telecommunications, Medicine, Research and Education. Increasingly, they will need Electronics.

And that's where they will find Blue Star.

In the vanguard of technology. With a total package of state-of-the-art solutions to their complex problems.

THE BLUE STAR PACKAGE

- State-of-the-art, high technology products from world leaders.
- Prestigious manufacturing collaborations : Hewlett-Packard, Jeumont-Schneider, Yokogawa Hokushin.
- Systems-engineering capability of foreign-trained Blue Star scientists and engineers, for solutions to customer needs.
- Customer support services: technology update seminars; demonstrations and training programmes; ever-expanding technology applications library; electronics R & D centre; countrywide network of service centres; calibration and workshop facilities; ample stocks of spare parts.

BLUE STAR

the hi-technology Company

JAISONS BS 13285

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why is Bangalore called the Epsom of India ? Well, no other city holds races eight months in the year. A total of 400 races are held, with around 1200 horses and stake money averaging Rs 1.5 crores. Making it the hottest racing track in the country.

But the Epsom of India is not just green turf all over.It's also part of the big race in technology.

With eight industrial estates skirting the city, Bangalore has one of the country's most extensive industrial belts. An estimated Rs.500 crores has been invested both in the public and private sectors, since 1970. Over the last 10 years more than 300 large and medium scale industries have come up, apart from the 9,000 small scale industries in the suburban industrial estates.

The real spread is largely due to the strong public sector base. Name the public sector giant and you'll find it here. BEL, ITI, HMT, BHEL, HAL, BEML... and many other state-owned industries.

So, who's been part of this growth story?

In the growth story of any city, its newspaper institutions play a highly critical role. Not just in news reporting. Or in the reflection of views. Importantly, it's in giving talent and enterprise the wide audience it deserves. For public interaction. And support. Also to give readers a fair and accurate picture of developments.

It's a responsibility The Deccan Herald Group has lived up to in more ways than one. The Group, Bangalore's oldest publishing house, brings out four No.1 publications. Deccan Herald, the mainline English daily. Prajavani, the most popular Kannada daily. Sudha, the complete Kannada family weekly. And Mayura the most widely read Kannada monthly.

The 'listening post' — world-wide

The Deccan Herald Group tunes in to the world through a network of strategically based correspondents covering the US, the UK, Europe, the Middle East, Bangladesh, South East Asia and the UN.

It also widens its canvas with news and feature arrangements, with the Washington Post, the Financial Times, the Los Angeles Times, Asia Features and Gemini.

THE PACE IS HECTIC IN THE PENSIONERS' PARADISE

THAT'S WHY BANGALORE IS THE FASTEST GROWING CITY IN INDIA

Graph indicates the Reach of THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP of publications in Karnataka in their respective categories. (Deccan Herald reaches 76.3% of all adults reachable through English dailies.) Source: NRS III

PML-1879-C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The nerve centre links up with the national network

The Group's Head Quarters in Bangalore is a hive of activity. Buzzing with news stories from all over. Right from up-to-the-minute despatches sent in by its fully staffed news bureau in Delhi, reports from correspondents in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and other state capitals, to news in the pipeline from the national news agencies. All this, co-ordinated by a large bureau of staff reporters in Bangalore.

When a newspaper becomes an 'institution'

What started off as a small newspaper in 1948, is the largest, most modern publishing house in Karnataka ... among the foremost newspaper houses in the country. With sophisticated facilities in design, layout, photosetting and offset colour printing.

All of which means unparalleled state-wide influence. 'EXCELLENT COVERAGE' in other words. To readers it means news. And to advertisers, it means readers.

THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP

75 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week!

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can then fly you to London almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we connect you to key cities in Italy and Europe, as well as New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, Montreal and Toronto. Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. Romantica if you want an unforgettable "Intermezzo Italia" stopover. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week .... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia

daCunha/AL-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Toothless Act

THE Bir Bahadur Singh Government is realising that catching crooks is easier said than done. When it passed the Uttar Pradesh Gangsters and Antisocial Activities (Prevention) Act in January with much fanfare, it had seemed that it was only a matter of time before the state's 2,500 listed gangsters would be behind bars. But with 475 of the 771 gangsters arrested in the last six months successfully securing bail, the state Government last month ordered a freeze on the use of the act, tacitly conceding the brunt of the criticism levelled against it: that it is full of legal loopholes and lacunae which make it very difficult to be upheld in court.

Worse, by uniting the state's gangsters in their opposition to the act, the move has virtually boomeranged on the Government. Before the act was passed, two MLA's from Singh's home district of Gorakhpur—Hari Shanker Tiwari and Virendra Pratap Sahi, who are listed as mafia bosses in police files—were at each other's throat. But on the day the ordinance was issued, the two were seen conferring like long lost friends. In fact, most criminals of the state have joined hands to defend each other. At present there are 350 writ petitions against arrests pending in the state's various courts.

The judiciary's opinion on the act was best expressed in a judgement handed down by the high court in April. Deciding the appeal were Justice Sagir Ahmed and Justice B.L. Lumba. The latter, in fact, had been involved in the formulation of this act as the state's erstwhile law secretary before being appointed to the bench in December. But now, speaking as a judge, he joined Ahmed in ordering special judges to ignore sections 2 and 3 in considering the question of bail.

These sections are the teeth of the act. Section 2 defines a gangster but the definition is so loose that it can apply to virtually anybody in the state. Section 3 lists the procedures to be followed in implementing the act but grants powers to officialdom which cannot but be found arbitrary by the courts. Naturally, the court's observation dismayed the administration. Said Mata Prasad, the home secretary: "The court order amounted to striking down the act without saying so." The Government went in appeal to the Supreme Court, which stayed the high court decision.

But this temporary reprieve cannot hide the basic defects in the act. Daya Shankar Misra, an advocate of the Allahabad High Court who has secured bail for over 70 persons held under the act, says several provisions of the act are ultra vires of the Constitution. Others also concur that the act—which provides for a minimum of two years imprisonment for even minor offences— is violative of Articles 14, 19, 21 and 22 of the Constitution as it gives arbitrary powers to the police against the accused. Says a sessions judge, who wishes to remain anonymous: "The fundamental right of a citizen to have equality before law becomes meaningless when a law itself calls somebody a gangster." Adds a high court judge: "It is the first act of its kind where the police is the sole authority. The executive and the judiciary find no mention in the act as far as implementation is concerned."

Worse, instead of providing for a system of checks and balances, the act vests all the powers in lower-level police functionaries who can use it to settle personal scores. Unlike the National Security Act where the district magistrate issues the warrant of arrest on the recommendation of police superintendent and forwards the case to the state Government for approval, this act can be slapped on anyone by the policemen themselves.

"We had laid down guidelines by a circular in March that no action should be initiated without concurrence of senior police officials, and of the district magistrate when required," says Director-General of Police (DGP), D. K. Aggarwal. But the fact remains that most of these guidelines are not incorporated in the act. A review committee set up by the DGP found that of the 60 cases that came up before it, 33 were too flimsy to justify prosecution.

The Opposition, which had resisted the act from its conception to the passing stage, has been no less vocal in taking it apart. Lok Dal's Virendra Verma, in a complaint to the prime minister, has stated that 25 party workers were being held under the act on "totally fictitious grounds."

Chief Minister Singh, however, refutes all allegations of political misuse. "Go to Etah and Basti and you will find that not one Lok Dal worker has been held under this act without a criminal history," he charges rhetorically. The act has gone a long way in "curbing gangsterism," says the chief minister. Facts, and the Government's moratorium on its implementation, do not bear this out. Hopefully, the Government will come forward with a more tenable act after the ongoing review is completed.

—DILIP AWASTHI

S. PREMI

Bir Bahadur Singh

With 475 of the 771 gangsters arrested in the last six months successfully getting bail, the state Government ordered a freeze on the use of the act conceding that it is full of legal loopholes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Ahmedabad's Agony

THE FINAL toll from this year's troubled Jagannath Yatra in Ahmedabad is certain to go beyond the sickeningly familiar statistics of lives lost and property destroyed. The violence and mayhem that accompanied the yatra has widened the chasm between the Harijans and Muslims of Gujarat, adding a new dimension to the continuing caste and communal conflict in the state and threatening the magical Kshatriya, Harijan, Adivasi and Muslim (KHAM) alliance that saw the Congress(I) romp home in the last two assembly elections.

Tension between the Muslims of Ahmedabad—roughly 15 per cent of the city's 26 lakh population—and Hindus has been festering since the infamous riots of 1969, but the latest conflagration has shown that there is a new solidarity and aggressiveness among the Hindus. Revivalist Hindu organisations have even initiated a move to organise a social and economic boycott of the minority community. As if all this was not cause enough for concern, Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary proved singularly inept in handling the crisis and had to be bailed out by P. Chidambaram, Union minister of state for personnel, public grievances and pensions, who is also holding temporary charge of internal security in the Ministry of Home. Were it not for Chidambaram's post-haste airdash to Ahmedabad, the state's riot toll figure could have well have been much higher than the 46 officially conceded (the unofficial figure is 67).

A young woman hit by a bullet in the Jamalpura area

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Lord Jagannath's temple in the Muslim-dominated Jamalpura area in Ahmedabad is specially revered by Harijans, who constitute nearly a fifth of the city's population, and the rath yatra is the biggest religious event for the city's Hindus. Not surprisingly therefore, the violence at the yatra (INDIA TODAY, July 31)—which also claimed the life of a Harijan home guard—has swept the Harijans into the vortex of the Hindu-Muslim conflict. Said an agitated Kishor Parmar, a street vendor in the walled city: "How can we keep quiet when our yatra is being attacked?"

Though the origin of the trouble at the yatra is shrouded in mystery, the Hindus of Gujarat, helped by highly-charged press reports and official bungling, are convinced that Muslims had attacked the religious procession. Curiously enough, Ahmedabad's Police Commissioner B.K. Jha told the press that the yatra had been attacked but somehow failed to point out that the trouble began on a narrow road lined on both sides by Hindu houses. Claims Ibrahim Sheikh, joint secretary of the Majlis-e-Mushawarat: "There was no trouble in the Muslim area. It began in the Hindu area when some yatris raised provocative anti-Muslim slogans, which

"There was no trouble in the Muslim area. It began in the Hindu area when yatris raised anti-Muslim slogans."

IBRAHIM SHEIKH
joint secretary, Majlis-e-Mushawarat

"If we hadn't called for a bandh, Gujarat would have been in flames."

SAMBHU MAHARAJ
leader, Hindu Suraksha Samiti

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your secretary, naturally. Our client. The user of our electronic typewriters.

Your organisation believes in moving with the electronic age, and you recognise the benefits of office automation. Which is why you chose PCL.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With a special customer orientation that is committed to your total satisfaction, and that of the actual user of the electronic typewriter—your secretary.

Our client concern involves customer education by pre-installation training, usage training and special seminars. And our after-sales services include prompt aid by our trained engineers, quick delivery of original spare parts and advice on proper documentation usage mix. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/d86/PCL/225

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

led to a squabble between the police and the yatris. If the police commissioner had said that the stoning and firing was in the Hindu area, this storm would not have broken in Ahmedabad."

As curfew was imposed in selected areas of the walled city and word spread about the violence, fact soon mingled with fiction and an already volatile situation was made worse by a spate of rumours, the most explosive of which were that Ramharshdasji, the mahant of the Jagannath Temple, had been injured and the raths damaged. The emotional backlash from this became evident two days later when a group of revivalist Hindu organisations led by the Vishwa Hindu Parishad called for a "Gujarat Bandh" on July 12 "to safeguard the cause of the Hindus and protest against the attack on the rath yatra". Rationalised Sambhu Maharaj, silver-haired leader of the Hindu Suraksha Samiti: "If we hadn't called for the bandh, all of Gujarat would have been in flames. The bandh acted as a safety valve for the anger and the indignation Hindus felt because of the attack on the rath yatra."

Though the call for the bandh was given by a cluster of religious organisations largely existing on paper, the state came to a grinding halt—with schools, offices, shops, industries and even places of worship downing shutters. "In all my public life I have not seen this unparalleled a bandh," said Chimanbhai Patel, former Gujarat chief minister and Janata Party leader.

IT WAS in response to the bandh threat that Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary exposed his political immaturity. Known to be a weak and indecisive leader, Chaudhary resisted the demand for a judicial inquiry by Hindu religious leaders, apparently on the advice of senior police officers that it would demoralise the police force. But when the bandh proved successful, with the violence spreading to the classier western parts of Ahmedabad and to Baroda, Bhuj, Bharuch and Palitana, a shamefaced Chaudhary had to perforce change his former stand and agree to a judicial inquiry.

The administration's failure—and the local press' lack of restraint—was also brought out in a series of incidents which spread panic and added to the rumour mill. Two young men from Kallol visiting their ailing father-in-law at the civil hospital were thrown off a second floor corridor and burnt to death in the mistaken belief—echoed by police and hospital sources and broadcast on AIR—that they were carrying knives and had stabbed people. A Hindu sub-inspector was stabbed in the back while breaking up a clash between two groups in a labour colony and the rumour was spread that he had been killed. It was only after some days that the truth was published—that the police officer had in fact been rescued by a Muslim who had rushed him to hospital.

An unemployed Muslim worker was smuggled into the Reliance textile plant at Naroda by a Hindu friend with the promise of a job in the factory. But a rumour spread that the Muslim was armed with a knife and had come to poison the factory's drinking water supply and the youth was attacked by an agitated mob of workers. The police managed to rescue him but only after a pitched battle. While newspaper reports continued to give credence to the rumour, the administration did nothing to correct the misconception.

It was only after a meeting with Chidambaram that some Gujarati dailies carried a front-page appeal for peace. "Think of your task as a doctor's applying an ice-pack on a patient with high fever," Chidambaram told the editors. His three-day stay in Ahmedabad also arrested the drift and indecisiveness in the administration's handling of the situation. In a series of quick decisions, Chidambaram put pressure on the police by telling them to restore peace in 24 hours and publicly making the prediction, ordering them to arrest all anti-socials and to impose curfew with total severity. "Policemen were told clearly that that they should open fire whenever there was serious violence," revealed a police officer.

Chidambaram consoling Muslims in Vegalpura

Chidambaram's stay in Ahmedabad arrested the drift and indecisiveness in the administration's handling of the situation.

But by the time the violence was brought under control, fresh dimensions had been added to the divide between the state's Hindus and Muslims. The Akhil Hindu Sanatan Samiti issued leaflets calling for the economic and social boycott of Muslims in Gujarat. Said one leaflet: "If you have Hindu blood, do not employ Muslims or buy goods manufactured or sold by them. Do not use a knife, you can kill them with a boycott."

Admittedly, such organisations do not yet have widespread acceptability but, as the bandh showed, only the naive would underestimate the silent support they command. Said Pravin Sheth, head of the political science department of the Gujarat University: "Such things were also seen after last year's riots but this time I feel the message may get through. There is no doubt that the Hindu backlash has come to Gandhi's Gujarat." Added Haroobhai Mehta, Congress(I) MP from Ahmedabad: "Now I am an MP of two cities—Hindu Ahmedabad and Muslim Ahmedabad." Ahmedabad is no stranger to communal conflicts but the communal passions that have now been unleashed threaten to unstitch the very fabric of Gujarat society and the future of a commercially prosperous city.

—M. RAHMAN in Ahmedabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He works for us. The perfectionist. Whose first priority is to ensure a zero-error product. And, at PCL, there are many like him in every department.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With computer-aided fault diagnosis, a micro electronic in-house Research & Development facility and a high degree of reliability engineering, we make no compromises on quality. On the production floor, field simulation tests ensure a fault free product. And above all, our user feedback system keeps us abreast with your growing needs.

Our customer service includes intensive pre-installation and usage training; and prompt after-sales service that includes the delivery of original spare parts. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

Finally, it's the dedication of our team that has made us the market leaders in India. 250 talented professionals with valuable experience in the office automation industry. They add the vital edge to our success story.

everest/d86/PCL/226

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRIPURA

Chakma Crisis

BY ALL accounts, it seemed to be a diplomatic non-event. But for the 20,000-odd miserable Chakma tribals from Bangladesh's Chittagong Hill Tracts, now rotting in makeshift refugee camps in the jungles of southern Tripura, Bangladesh President H.M. Ershad's three-day visit to New Delhi last fortnight was of crucial significance. For the hapless Buddhist tribals, many of whom have been butchered, tortured or arrested in the course of state-sponsored violence over the past three months, their hopes of returning to their mountain villages hinged largely on an Indian diplomatic initiative on their behalf.

A bit of that hope was fulfilled as Union Home Minister Buta Singh took up the question of the Chakma's survival with Ershad, and he promised to "create conditions to facilitate" their return to Bangladesh. But this is not borne out by the evidence on the ground. Fresh streams of disconsolate families have continued to pour in as violence continues to break out in the hill tracts. With the Shanti Bahini, the Chakma guerrilla force, intensifying its monsoon offensive, the Bangladesh Government forces have stepped up their reprisals too.

Chakma refugees at a camp (above); and Shanti Bahini guerrillas: grim scenario

The most violent flare up occurred near Tablacheri, a small village across Silacheri on the Indian side of the border. In a raid in the second week of July, the Shanti Bahini destroyed the village and killed all its 126 Muslim inhabitants and the Bangladesh Rifles escort.

The Shanti Bahini is flexing its muscles again after two years of bitter infighting, which left many of its leaders dead, and the failure of negotiations with Bangladesh's martial law authorities. The second round of talks scheduled on December 26 last year were cancelled unilaterally by the Bangladesh Government, which resumed large-scale settlement of plainsmen in the hills taking the total number of settler families to over 60,000. Now, 39 per cent of the population in the district comprises Muslims, compared to two per cent at partition.

The Bangladesh authorities' response to the Shanti Bahini challenge is cast in the mould of General Templer's infamous Malayan campaign. Templer's strategy was to uproot tribals from small, far-flung hamlets and resettle them in large "protected" villages. Between December 1985 and April this year, Bangladesh troops rounded up tribals from 64 villages and herded them in six large regrouping centres.

Since then, the guerrilla raids have followed a pattern—every raid on an army or paramilitary camp is simultaneously timed with bloody liquidation of the nearby colony of resettlers. But every guerrilla raid has also resulted in even bloodier reprisals by Bangladesh troops, who are accompanied by hordes of Muslim settlers driven by vengeance. "They normally ask our men to line up for beating, torture and death while younger women are separated for mass rape," says Prabhakar Chakma, a refugee in the Korbuk camp. According to reliable estimates, violence in the last six months alone has claimed the lives of over 300 tribals and as many Muslim settlers and soldiers.

For India, the problem is the streams of refugees each raid sends scampering into Tripura or sometimes to Mizoram. Despite concerted attempts by the Border Security Force (BSF) to intercept and push the refugees back, large numbers sneak in. At several flag meetings, the BSF officers have asked their Bangladesh counterparts to end the mayhem but to no avail. The Bangladesh officers, on the other hand, blame India for all their troubles and have even claimed one crore takas as compensation from India.

Neither the Bangladesh authorities nor the Shanti Bahini is in any mood to relent. Says Ushadan Talukdar, a front-ranking guerrilla commander: "Over 50,000 settlers have left Chittagong Hill Tracts in the past three months and Bangladesh forces are too scared to even go on long-range patrols. It is time we consolidated our gains and installed a parallel administration."

There is no relief likely in the near future for the Tripura Government, which, in spite of the Centre's decision to pay for the upkeep of the refugees, is finding it hard to manage the five massive camps it runs along the border. Said an exasperated Nripen Chakraborty, the state's chief minister: "This issue is too important to be left to flag meetings between border forces. Why can't the Centre take up the matter with Bangladesh at the ministerial level?"

That the Centre was in agreement was evident from the fact that the Chakma problem was high on the agenda for top-level talks as President Ershad visited New Delhi last fortnight. But with Ershad dishing out platitudes, it seems likely that Delhi could be faced with the spectre of a Sri Lanka-like situation developing along the eastern extremities of the country, a prospect South Block hardly relishes.

—SUBIR BHOWMIK

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our people and our products. At PCL, a team of 250 professionals offer you the best services and the best products. Combining their expertise with a commitment to maximum customer satisfaction. Your satisfaction.

Our people, selected from premier technological and managerial institutes, have valuable experience in the office automation industry. A set of perfectionists to whom nothing matters more than successfully meeting your office automation requirements.

To enhance their expertise and motivate them into more intensive client concern, PCL conducts regular human resource development programmes that update their technical and managerial skills. Ensuring their total involvement in PCL's pre-installation and usage training, and prompt after sales service. Through our all-India network of 43 offices. And that's how we maintain a remarkable 98.5% uptime on our products.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology–from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/d86/PCL/227

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Jail Storm

POLITICS in West Bengal is sacrosanct, and so are its practitioners, whatever their ideological colours. Thus, when undertrial Naxalite leader Azizul Haque was learnt to be close to death last fortnight, his health eroded by four years of suffering as a common criminal in the state's jails, it was not just the Left Front's political opponents who joined in the condemnations. Equally shocked at the state Government's callousness were several Left Front leaders. Minister for Jails Debabrata Bandopadhyaya of the Revolutionary Socialist Party (RSP), even went to the extent of implying that he would have released Haque were it legally possible for him to do so.

Haque, a close associate of Charu Mazumdar, had been released in 1977 but was rearrested in May 1982 as his faction—the Second Central Committee—still continued to espouse the theory of annihilation of class enemies. When news of Haque's precarious health and his request to be released on parole for medical treatment first leaked out from Alipore Jail—Haque claims he was not being given proper medical attention and apprehended a heart attack—Left Front chairman and party State Secretary Saroj Mukherjee remarked that there was no question of releasing any prisoner on parole if he was getting proper treatment.

Stung by the CPI(M)'s insinuation that Haque's pathetic state was primarily due to the condition of the state's jails, two RSP ministers, Bandopadhyaya and Public Works Minister Jatin Chakraborty, rushed to Alipore Jail to take the ailing undertrial to hospital. The RSP ministers later said they were in favour of releasing Haque but Bandopadhyaya pointed out that the state Government could not release an undertrial on parole.

The Haque affair got even curiouser when Congress(I) leader Subrata Mukherjee jumped into the fray. After visiting Haque in jail, Mukherjee piously declared: "I don't believe in Haque's politics but if he is allowed to die without treatment, all of us will stand condemned in the eyes of humanity. We shall see him murdered in cold blood by the Left Front Government." Mukherjee had also apparently found torture marks on the Naxalite leader, who could no longer hold a pen because his fingers had been smashed.

Left Front members point out that the Government could have facilitated Haque's release by simply amending the jail code. Instead, CPI(M) ministers tried to stall matters by saying they would have to wait till the chief minister's return from London. When the PUCL appealed to the Calcutta High Court to release Haque, the state Government's lawyers opposed the move by pointing out that they had appointed four medical experts to treat the Naxalite leader. Chief Justice Satish Chandra rejected the petition.

The smaller Left Front partners feel that the CPI(M) is adopting double standards in its attitude to Haque. One senior Left Front leader pointed out that while the Marxist party had not hesitated to form an alliance with the Naxalite faction led by the late Satya Narain Sinha, it was being adamant about releasing a Naxalite leader on the verge of death.

Moreover, the CPI(M) was still insisting on treating arrested Naxalites as ordinary criminals and not as political prisoners entitled to first class treatment. Says Forward Bloc leader and former minister Bhakti Bhushan Mandal: "It is most regrettable that political prisoners are being detained for years without being tried." This attitude, they say, is a complete reversal of the CPI(M)'s democratic philosophy which had resulted in amnesty for all political prisoners when the Left Front had first come to power in 1977.

Not surprisingly, Haque, a founder of the CPI(M-L), has become something of a cause celebre—especially after his rebuff of both the Left Front ministers and of Subrata Mukherjee. Accusing these politicians of trying to make political capital out of his plight, Haque reminded a delegation of the Indian People's Front that it was during Mukherjee's tenure as home minister in S.S. Ray's regime that over 5,000 Naxalites had been murdered. Haque also criticised Jatin Chakraborty for boasting that he was instrumental in providing a government flat for his wife, Monideepa, when the truth was radically different. By embarrassing the politicians, Haque has showed that he expects no quarter from the system he has been fighting against. His only trump card is the Hobson's choice before the Left Front Government: release Haque or create a martyr.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

AAJKAAL

The fact that Naxalite leader Azizul Haque's health has been eroded by four years in the state's jails, has shocked several Left Front leaders.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

softwear by dinesh

Fabrics programmed for comfortable fashion.
With a design print out that ranges from the finest checks and pin-stripes to cavalry twills and remarkable plains.
With computer co-ordinated colours.
And a finish that feels just as good as it looks.

designs programmed for fashion

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today homemakers no longer paint their walls. They create the atm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls

Now for the first time a wall finish that helps you create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls. In the shades that you choose. In the mood that you want. Because Dulux Velvet Touch is a wall finish beyond compare. For it combines the richness of velvet and the inimitable glow of pearls. To give you the most luxurious atmospheres.

Dulux

Velvet Touch

the feel of velvet, a glow of pearls

The magic of Dulux. No one else has it!

IEL

IEL Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE WORLD CHAMPION

Over one million Rosemount Pressure Transmitters already sold.

Overwhelming, Outright Victory, leaving others far behind.

Rosemount 1151 Solid State Electronic Pressure Transmitters are the most trusted and best selling transmitters of its kind in the world today.

At the heart of 1151's success, is an ingenious design, measuring changes in pressure by variable capacitance technique, perfected by Rosemount over the last 20 years of its field experience. Rosemounts mastery of this technique, coupled with 1151's design innovations, signify the state-of-art-in pressure sensing transmitters. It is no wonder, that today, many instrumentation companies world-wide, have switched over to capacitance sensing technology, pioneered by Rosemount, more than 2 decades ago.

Thousands of these reliable Transmitters are manufactured at Rosemount (India) Ltd., (RIN), as per Rosemount's International Quality Standards. RIN, a joint venture company in India, with international approvals of RIN's facilities by FM (USA) and BASEEFA (U.K.), prove high standards of RIN's Quality Assurance Programmes and Implementation.

To satisfy customer needs for greater reliability and performance in other basic process measurements, RIN offers a full range of Rosemount Analytical Instruments, Beckman's Infrared Analysers and Kay – Ray Non-contacting type of Level Measurement Systems.

Our dedication to your complete satisfaction, and Commitment to Excellence has made us the Market Leader today.

The 1,000,000 th transmitter

Rosemount (India) Ltd.

H.O.: 26, Maker Chambers VI, 2nd Floor, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 231552, 231383 Tlx. 011-3757 JSGR IN

Regd. Off: Taj Bldg, 3rd floor, 210 D.N. Road, Bombay-400 001. Tel: 204 2044 (4 lines) Tlx: 011-4253 JSCO IN. Gram: CHEMTECH

Branches:

- 803 Chiranjiv Towers, 43, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Phone: 6417056, 6436921 Tlx: 031-65778 JSGR IN
- Azimganj House, 4th Floor, Office No.2, 7, Camac Street, Calcutta 700 017. Tlx: 21-4132 CTF N IN.
- Suite 103, Jhaver Plaza, 1-A, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 476252, 479334 Tlx: 041-8005 JSGR IN
- 205 Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Circle, Vadodara 390 005. Tel: C/o. 65698 Tlx: 0175-559 JSGR IN
- 342, Al Karim Trade Centre, M.G. Road, Secunderabad 500 003.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TARIQ

Srinagar Times

BHAWAN SINGH

"For the first time no contravention of any economic law will go uninvestigated."

M.L. WADHAWAN
director general, Economic Intelligence Bureau

"Raids are part of the game but it was as if they had come to nab a terrorist."

NAZIR AHMED TRAMBOO
chairman cum managing director, Tramboo Enterprises

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Treasure Hunt

IT WAS one of the most meticulously planned operations—from arranging quiet transfers of senior policemen having links with the targets to chartering aircraft from the hush-hush Aviation Research Centre, providing sweaters to the taxmen as they landed at Srinagar and catering for packed lunch as they swooped down on unsuspecting victims in raids that sent shock-waves through the Kashmir valley last fortnight and unearthed a Rs 51-crore booty.

In Delhi, 335 officers drawn from all departments of the economic law enforcement wings, had received orders to report at the Indira Gandhi Indoor Stadium at 5.00 a.m. on July 14 from where they were herded to the airport and flown to Srinagar. A total of 71 raiding parties swooped simultaneously on seven leading business families in Jammu and Srinagar at exactly 8 a.m. the next day. Economic Intelligence Bureau chief M.L.Wadhawan was coordinating the operation via wireless.

Raiding Kar business premises (left); the Tramboo and Kar residences

The hit list had been pared down to the seven families after preliminary screening by the EIB, of the initial list of 15 business houses in Srinagar and seven in Jammu. Fifty officers from the IAS, IPS and Forest Service in the state were handpicked for their ability to keep the raids secret. Each was assigned a family and asked to identify the entire family tree, business links, headquarters, all premises used, links with official agencies and any other information. On July 5, Wadhawan reached Srinagar. The hit list was then finalised to seven families—The Mahajans (of the K.C. Group of industries) and the Trehans in Jammu; the Tramboo family, Jamal Siraj, Khwaja Saifuddin, G.M. Khan and Krishan Lal in Srinagar.

Interestingly, not much cash and jewellery was seized during the raids. All told, the amount of cash and jewellery would not exceed a couple of lakhs in the total haul of Rs 51 crore. The bulk comprises unaccounted assets in Srinagar and, in Jammu, unauthorised timber. EIB officials are convinced that reports of impending raids had leaked out in the local press on July 12. This they feel must have warned targets. At one place the taxmen found Rs 95,000 in cash hidden in a car. But the house-owners claimed that the car belonged to a tenant called Raja Ram who was then also raided. The major gold haul was in a trunk lying between the houses of Dr G.R.Tramboo and his sister Mrs G.R.Kar, which contained 240 gold sovereigns. Initially both parties refused to claim the trunk but finally Mrs Kar confessed to have thrown the trunk out of the window in panic when she saw the taxmen coming. In Jammu, the K.C. Group and the Trehans were found to have large timber stocks even though contracting of forests has been abolished after it was nationalised last year. Much of the stocks were yet to be cleared and in both cases a lot of it was unaccounted for. "It was as though they had come to nab a terrorist," says Nazir Ahmed Tramboo, who at 38, heads the Tramboo empire of industries. "Raids are a part of the game, but I strongly object to the manner in which they were conducted," he says, protesting against the entry of Sten gun wielding policemen into his bedroom. "This is absolute falsehood," retorts police chief Colaso."I deny that the police entered the houses at all leave alone bedrooms." Krishan Lal, whose Allied Motors was raided, insists that the raids were part of a vendetta: "The raids

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROFITABILITY THROUGH PERFORMANCE.

NATIONAL HYDROELECTRIC POWER CORPORATION LTD.

Backed by an outstanding track record in hydro-power development... NHPC is heading for still higher performance levels in this area of vast potential.

From a meagre 1,700 MW in 1950, India's installed power generation capacity has shot up to 47,000 MW by March 1986. The power deficit, however, is still large . . . and growing. By the close of this century, the total installed capacity is planned to rise dramatically to 1,40,000 MW–of which hydro-power will have a significant 35% share.

The Key to Growth
With demand for power fast increasing, hydro-power has acquired paramount importance, thanks to its high economic viability and vast potential of 1,00,000 MW –of which only 15% has so far been exploited. Rapid hydro-power development is thus the key to accelerated power growth . . . and the use of latest technology will help shorten substantially the gestation of hydro-power projects.

NHPC: Outstanding Performance
Prominent in the hydro-power sector is NHPC–which, in just ten years, has built up an impressive track record: 3 projects commissioned, 5 under construction, 8 on the anvil and many more under investigation. Employing the latest in technology, construction methods, equipment and management systems . . . NHPC has achieved remarkable results and today has projects in hand involving investment of over Rs. 3000 crores.

NHPC has maintained exceptionally high standards in performance–and profitability. With a capacity utilisation of 80%, the Corporation earned a gross profit of Rs. 36 crores in 1985-86. Profit is expected to rise to Rs. 40 crores in 1986-87 . . . and still higher in the coming years.

Backing this performance is a professional, result-oriented team which has total capability in the fields of investigation, research, development, construction, operation and maintenance of hydro-power stations . . . and complete expertise covering EHV transmission and sub-stations.

A Confident Future
With an impressive project line-up, NHPC looks confidently to the future. And to guiding the country towards an era of self-sufficiency in power . . . through the clean, pollution-free, renewable and perennial power potential of water.

NHPC. Generating power... profits... prosperity.

nhpc

NATIONAL HYDROELECTRIC POWER CORPORATION LTD.
(A Government of India Enterprise)
Regd Office: Hemkunt Tower, 98 Nehru Place, New Delhi-110019.

Sohanpal/442/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

were vindictive. We've been chosen when crorepatis have been left out." The Saifuddin family, whose Saifco flour mills, Alco pencil factory and downtown cinema hall, Neelam, were raided, would not comment on the raids except to claim that the Toyota seized on their premises belonged to a friend.

G.M.Khan of Soura enterprises seems to have been the only one to take the raids in his stride. A day after the raids, he called press reporters over for dinner and talked openly about how he entertained the raiders with lassi and tea while they searched his premises.

In the last raids in 1981, there were clear political overtones and Sheikh Abdullah had himself reacted violently, stating that the raids were directed at him. This time the choice was made carefully. While the Mahajans have a son-in-law, Janak Raj Gupta, as a Congress(I) MP, Nazir Tramboo is a close friend of Farooq Abdullah and the Saifuddin family is known to be close to former chief minister G.M.Shah. The result is a confused reaction in the lush green valley which is used to colouring any event in political shades. Says G.M.Shah: "I don't know if they are politically motivated or not but they have left out the sharks."

According to Governor Jagmohan, nearly Rs 100 crore are due to the exchequer by way of direct and indirect dues from the industry. Businessmen have made a habit of obtaining stays to delay payments, while tax authorities look on helplessly. So, politically motivated or not, what is evident from the choice of people, the manner in which raids were conducted and the booty collected, is that this time the intention was to reinstate the respectability of the tax enforcement agencies in the state.

—TANIA MIDHA in Srinagar and Jammu

LOK DAL

Family Struggle

Gayatri Devi addressing workers

Not merely is the Lok Dal a family affair but there is a sordid struggle for succession on within the family.

EIGHT months after Charan Singh suffered a paralytic stroke, leaving the Lok Dal rudderless, nemesis finally caught up with the Chaudhury's party. The suspension of two prominent Uttar Pradesh leaders by the state unit's president—a decision later endorsed by the central leadership—plunged the party into a prolonged crisis that split the top leadership down the middle, brought bus loads of slogan-shouting dissidents and supporters to the capital and laid open the deep-seated differences between Charan Singh's son, Ajit Singh, and daughter, Saroj Verma. With the Chaudhury's wife, Gayatri Devi, also demanding that the suspensions be revoked, not merely is the Lok Dal a family affair but there is a sordid struggle for succession within the family.

This set of events, coming within weeks of Singh's election to the Rajya Sabha and appointment as the party's general secretary, caused a severe setback to the carefully-laid plans for the launch of Charan Singh's political heir. The former computer expert, who formally entered politics two months ago, had hoped to make an immediate impact in the party and outside by addressing meetings of party workers in the four Hindi-belt states where the party has a substantial following and by building up an informal think-tank of intellectuals who would help him make an impression in Parliament.

Instead, Singh joined party leaders in trying to resolve the dilemma of upholding the authority of its Uttar Pradesh strongman Mulayam Singh Yadav without throwing out Rajender Singh, former leader of the Opposition, a Jat leader of some standing and a close associate of the Charan Singh family. A three-member committee comprising Singh, Karpoori Thakur and Devi Lal decided to uphold the suspension.

The family drama began later in the day. Saroj Verma, the ambitious and strong-headed elder sister of Singh who resents her brother's status as his father's political heir has been the brains behind the dissidence of Rajender Singh. Verma, backed by 200 slogan-shouting supporters of Rajender Singh, persuaded Gayatri Devi to issue a statement asking the leadership to revoke the suspension.

When Singh reached his father's house, he was gheraoed by the suspended leader's supporters demanding that he carry out his mother's wishes. The gherao was lifted two hours later when, Rajender Singh's supporters say Singh gave the assurance that his mother's wishes would be honoured. But Singh denied this and the crisis only deepened.

Three days later, the 20-odd MLA's backing Rajender Singh brought a 1,000-strong crowd of supporters to the residence of the ailing Charan Singh and got a written assurance from him that the suspensions would be revoked. It was against this background that Party Working President H.N. Bahuguna and eight of the party's top leaders met for seven hours but with Bahuguna choosing to remain neutral and the other eight split equally for and against revoking the suspension, no final decision emerged.

Now that there is a vacuum in the central leadership, disgruntled elements refuse to accept arbitrary decisions of state leaders. Says K.C. Tyagi, party general secretary: "There is a virtual free for all in the party." Till Singh succeeds in establishing his authority in his father's party, the Lok Dal will continue to have convulsions.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Sabre Rattling

IT WAS classic theatre of the absurd, even down to the setting. The stage was the temple city of Madurai festooned with arches and posters welcoming Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran and his flock of party MLA's who arrived in the city astride horses, elephants, tableaus and a variety of other transport. Supporters sang sycophantic songs for their "Anna" and his heir-apparent, film star-turned-politician Jayalalitha.

But it was the dialogue that abruptly cut off the festive mood. MGR, speaking through 1,000-watt loudspeakers, startled even the most faithful of his AIADMK fans when he asked them to carry a knife "for their own protection". His inexplicable statement created a furore in the state and, in political terms, threatened the collapse of the AIADMK-Congress(I) alliance in Tamil Nadu. But more than that, it once again raised questions about the mental capacity of the chief minister. MGR's sinister-sounding fiat was sounded during his largely incomprehensive and disjointed 30-minute address at the concluding session of the All-World MGR Manarams conference attended by over a lakh of his enthusiastic fans, including members of his entire cabinet.

For a chief minister in a democratic country, who himself holds the crucial home and police portfolios, to announce such a call in public was incomprehensibly irresponsible. It invited all-round condemnation from the AIADMK's ally the Congress(I) and its arch political adversary, the M. Karunanidhi led-DMK. Charged P. Thangabalu, a former state Youth Congress president and Rajya Sabha member: "If the ruling party workers have to carry a knife, then who else is safe in this state? Does it mean that the chief minister has lost confidence in his own police and law enforcement authorities? If it is true, then it is a dangerous drift in the administration." Added Karunanidhi: "MGR has lost the right to govern the state. He cannot be trusted as a person who can keep the state together. He has given an open call to lawlessness. He should be sacked."

Similar sounding condemnations appeared in all the leading newspapers. Demanded The Times of India in its editorial: "Is it not time to save Tamil Nadu from politicians who, having failed to govern the state, are now encouraging violence as a substitute for politics." But MGR himself remained unmoved by the storm he had created and said that his workers could not depend on police help "which may not be possible because the violence may come too suddenly from the squads being raised by the DMK".

A month earlier, Karunanidhi, while addressing a rally of party workers, had directed his party to raise a parallel army to defend themselves from the "AIADMK rowdies". Karunanidhi justified his stand on the plea that his party's public meetings were being disturbed by AIADMK people and the police was unable to control them. MGR's retaliatory gesture about the knives signalled an ominous warning that political scores could in future be settled through armed street battles between the two rival regional parties. Said a senior leader of the Congress(I) from Tamil Nadu: "It is an invitation to chaos. It is becoming evidently clear that MGR's actions defy any logic and justification."

But MGR's statement at the Madurai jamboree was not the only gaffe he committed in the short span of a week. Soon after his return to Madras, he was confronted with the exposure of his government's non-performance record by the state Governor Sunder Lal Khurana in a letter to the chief minister (INDIA TODAY, July 31). Immediately after the publication of the letter, MGR drove down to the Raj Bhavan and asked Khurana to remove T.V. Anthony from the sensitive post of chief secretaryship of the state and appoint him as chairman of the state

MGR at the Madurai meet: irresponsible

MGR's retaliatory gesture about the knives signalled an ominous warning that political scores could in future be settled through armed street battles between the two rival regional parties. Said a senior leader of the Congress(I) from Tamil Nadu: "MGR's actions defy any logic and justification."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

planning commission. At the same time, he went and sought the governor's approval for instituting a thorough probe into the leakage of highly confidential and important correspondence.

ANTHONY'S ignominous exit within 18 months of his appointment was a serious blow to the already demoralised bureaucracy in the state. During MGR's regime, two other chief secretaries were moved out of office under controversial circumstances. But Anthony's removal came at a time when MGR has been gradually losing control over the administration. Due to his speech problems, he has been unable to convey his instructions and advice to the chief secretary effectively and Anthony had to depend on MGR's personal staff on various administrative decisions. According to senior officials, Anthony had conveyed his unhappiness to the chief minister's office over the delay in certain decisions and lack of adherence to constitutional requirements for taking policy decisions. Admitted a frustrated senior official: "Earlier, the chief minister would speak to all important heads of departments either personally or over the intercom and they were able to put across their point of view, but that communication is completely snapped now. Most of us are totally cut off from him now and we have no means of cross-checking anything or to confirm which decisions are his own."

MGR's health problems have also done serious damage to vital institutions like the state cabinet. According to the governor's letter, which has raised questions about various administrative actions (like the decision to abolish the Legislative Council which can normally be taken only after the Cabinet has approved it), the cabinet has not been meeting regularly to take policy decisions. Earlier, cabinet meetings were generally held once a week but even after Khurana's letter, MGR has not conducted regular meetings.

With an indifferent and increasingly insecure bureaucracy on the one hand, and a chief minister whose health is seriously impaired on the other, it was the Congress(I) which was in a state of panic last fortnight. Aware that its political future was linked to MGR's fortunes, it was busy reviewing its alliance with the ruling party in Tamil Nadu. The DMK has emerged as the main benificiary of MGR's quixotic handling of the political and administrative situation and is now being billed as an alternative to the AIADMK in the state.

Now, however, the Congress(I) seems to have decided to play the role of an opposition party in Tamil Nadu, which, technically, it is. This was evident at the Congress(I)-sponsored panchayat office-bearers conference held in Tamil Nadu last fortnight. For the first time after a lapse of almost five years, various Congress(I) leaders attacked state Government publicly, led by youth leaders like Lok Sabha member Rangarajan Kumaramangalam and Thangabalu.

Even Congress(I) Legislature Party Leader Subramanian gave a call for launching a campaign against the ineffective government. Said he: "We are not in power yet we are accused of mismanagement in the state." Added Kumaramanglam: "If we allow this mess to continue, we will be doomed. Let us tell the people that the regional parties can't perform and now it is time to choose a national party. We should not hobble on the crutches of a regional party."

Sensing the rebellious mood, AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar meekly gave his conditional support to the state party's plea for a review of the alliance with the AIADMK saying: "We have no objection to the Congress(I) playing the role of a constructive opposition to the AIADMK Government till the high command takes a decision in this regard." The rethinking in the Congress(I) has also been inspired by the total rout of the AIADMK in the panchayat and council elections. And the Congress(I) is not willing to gamble against the odds in the assembly by-elections likely to be held in the next two months.

But oddly enough, the Congress(I)'s growing alienation with the AIADMK is proving to be a blessing in disguise for MGR. While the chief minister himself is keeping aloof from the developments, his senior cabinet ministers have started a campaign alleging that the Centre is out to topple the state Government by encouraging the governor to prepare a record against the Tamil Nadu Government. According to AIADMK leaders, the Congress(I) leadership's decision to ease out the MGR Government followed soon after MGR's support to the Janata Party candidate in the Rajya Sabha elections and his refusal to support the new education policy.

In addition, it is also claimed that MGR refused to oblige the Congress when it demanded the dismissal of Agriculture Minister K. Kalimuthu for his diatribe against Union Minister of State for Personnel P. Chidambaram. Reacted a senior minister in MGR's Cabinet: "If recent actions of the Central Government nominees and utterances of the various Congress(I) leaders are any indication, it is clear that a decision has been taken destabilise our government."

Congress(I) leaders were equally quick to refute the allegations. Retorted Thangabalu: "It only shows that they have a guilty conscience and are trying to camouflage their own misdeeds by crying wolf. If they are honest and efficient, no one can topple them and if they are not able to govern then not we, but the people will throw them out." But the more pertinent question being asked last fortnight was whether MGR would survive in office till 1990, when the state's electorate is given the option to eject him from the chief minister's chair.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Madras

SUBHA NEWS/Photo Service

"He has given an open call to lawlessness. He should be sacked."

M. KARUNANIDHI
DMK party leader

"If the ruling party workers have to carry a knife, then who else is safe in this state?"

P. THANGABALU
Youth Congress(I) leader

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAKTHI FINANCE LTD

Regd. Office: 475 Dr. Nanjappa Road, Coimbatore-641 018.

"Fantastic growth during the year 1985-86 Set to create a new record in 1986-87"

Extracts from the Statement of Mr. S.N. Pai, Executive Chairman at the 30th Annual General Meeting held on 7th June 1986

Ladies and Gentleman,

It has indeed been a momentous year for the Company, packed with so much of activity. From almost a non-entity a couple of years back, your Company has made a quantum jump during the year and become a force to reckon with. Indeed, its rapid all-round growth has literally astounded all observers.

SPECTACULAR PROGRESS

In my Statement made before you on the 15th June last year, I had referred to the Company working virtually on a war-footing. During the year, the battles that were fought had indeed turned fiercer. How else could have one achieved the magnificient results that are before you, which are as under:

A 207% increase in Deposits (68%), 166% in Advances (91%), 291% in Gross earnings (124%), and 550% in Net Profits (117%) over the previous year's figures.

The percentages shown in brackets above are the corresponding ones relating to the year 1984-85. If the above does not represent a "Fantastic growth rate", as I have been stating for sometime now, I wonder what else is? Ofcourse, the Press has termed it as 'Spectacular'.

Voluntarily fixing for itself at the beginning a high target of Rs. 10 crores for mobilising deposits during the year, announcing it from several platforms during the period, persistently working for it and ultimately achieving it, require, Ladies and Gentlemen, besides human endeavour, quite a lot of divine blessings, which, it is apparent, your Company has been bestowed with. The said factor has enabled your Company to reach an advances figure of almost Rs. 15-crores, comprising of Stock-on-hire (Rs. 8.32 crores), Leased Assets (Rs. 5.18 crores) and Other Loans and Advances (Rs. 1.11 crores).

WITHOUT PARALLEL

This judicious mixture of business, quick utilisation of funds and the remunerative, though competitive, rates obtained and last, but not the least, the hard work put in by the staff, have all brought for your Company a handsome gross profit of Rs.1.60 crores, which is about six times more than what it earned in the previous year. The net profit of Rs. 1.17 crores is over six times more than that of Rs. 18 lakhs earned in the previous year. This has enabled your Company to accumulate Reserves to the extent of Rs. 1.11 crores, as against a Paid-up Capital of Rs. 97 lakhs only, which is a record. These achievements, I assert, are without parallel in the industry and a landmark for your Company.

DIVIDEND:

In the light of what has been stated above, I know that some of you may feel that your Board should have stepped up the dividend from the 20% now recommended. Your Directors did consider this aspect of the matter at length, but felt that there are over-whelming advantages in maintaining steadily a reasonably good dividend of 20% and building up reserves rapidly, which is so essential for a finance company like yours, rather than fall a victim to the present practice of declaring higher dividends even in the formative stages by many a leasing and finance company. While taking the said decision, your Board had also in mind the long term benefits that will be accruing to the shareholders by pursuing such a policy. They had also taken note of the fact that the Company is paying the said dividend at an extraordinarily short time after the close of the financial year, which is to the advantage of the shareholders. It is the intention of your Board to hasten this process still further in future, by paying the same as an interim dividend, even before the close of the year, whenever possible.

UNLIKE OTHERS

It is a matter of pride, for me to say that at present your Company has about 17,000 depositors and 5,000 borrowers, most of them from middle income group. By this wide mobilisation of large funds and their utilisation for assisting mainly small road transport operators and to some extent the consumer durable industry. I feel that your Company is really playing its part in the Nation building activity, resulting in economic growth, which is what is expected of a hire purchase company like yours. This is unlike many other units in the industry. By widely spreading the advances, the risks to your Company have been minimised, ensuring better security to the depositors' funds.

BRANCH OFFICES/SAKTHI SAFE VAULTS

Apart from the above mentioned normal operational features, during the period under review, your Company had engaged itself in a tremendous developmental activity too. The result has been the opening of seven more Branch Offices and the setting up of three Safe Deposit Vaults out of the long chain of Vaults your Company proposes to establish throughout the South. In doing so, that your Company is ful-filling a long felt need by the public, which the Banks have found it difficult to meet with, is abundantly clear, arising out of the very good support that the Company is receiving in this regard. During the year, your Company also held a series of functions to publicise its activities. This process is continuing with greater vigour and several more Branch Offices and Safe Vaults will be opened during the current year at short intervals.

FUTURE OUTLOOK

In the Industry, things do not appear to be as rosy as many would like to make them, due to the several adverse factors that are obtaining at present, giving room for uncertainity. Too many finance/leasing companies continue to surface too often from too many places, while even a large number of the existing ones appear to be groping in the dark. Surely, it is high time the country gets a respite from this rush and the industry is allowed to settle down, before mushrooming further. Certain policies, especially in the matter of dividend, followed by many a company cannot be considered as contibuting to the health of the industry. It is time that a code of conduct is prescribed and observed by all, so as to enable growth on healthy lines. It is hoped that the authorities concerned would act in this regard before it becomes too late.

While on this, I, however, continue to be optimistic in-so-far as your Company is concerned, in view of the several special infrastructural facilities enjoyed by it.

The target for mobilisation of deposits during the current year has been fixed at more than Rs. 20 crores, which, if achieved, will take the advances to about Rs. 30 crores, by which your Company will be creating further history. More innovative schemes and methods are proposed to be introduced to achieve this objective.

Let God bless us all!

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting of the Company referred to.

UIPC:SF:9:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Double Shuffle

WHEN Raghunath Singh, Rajasthan's director-general of police (DGP), opted for voluntary retirement last month, he became yet another casualty of the political power game in the state. Singh had everything going against him: he was tough, honest, brooked no nonsense from the powers that be and, most of all, was said to be a confidant of former chief minister Shiv Charan Mathur. He crossed swords with Chief Minister Harideo Joshi when the latter went on a transfer spree last year and started shuffling policemen like chesspieces. Singh took umbrage and wrote to the chief minister that it interfered with the working of the force. Within days, the post of DGP was split into DGP-I and DGP-II and Singh was made DGP-I with his powers severely eroded. Singh shot off yet another defiant missive offering to take on a non-police job. A week later, he was shifted to an even lower post: DGP, Home Guards. But the Government obviously doesn't forgive or forget easily. On July 3 this year, two months before he was to retire, Singh was shifted to officer on special duty in the Home Department: an insult he couldn't stomach. Said a disillusioned Singh: "Everybody talks of reforming the police. The least they can do is extend support to an honest police official."

Singh: victimised

Warrier's War

KRISHNA Warrier is the man in Kerala who first shot to dubious fame last year when he "banned" the national anthem in a local school, saying it was "not nationalistic". Well, he is obviously not one to sit quiet. The official of a small temple in Palazhi, near Trichur, Warrier has now declared war on the backward communities and banned their entry into the temple. Up in arms, groups of backward class men, backed by Hindu leaders, staged a mass fast before the temple recently and even made offerings. Though the temple's head priest is not averse to offerings from lower caste men, Warrier says: "We will accept offerings only from Nairs and other caste Hindus as per the Gita and I don't intend to go against it." Ever since Warrier became the secretary of the temple's managing committee 13 years ago, he is said to have been running the temple like his personal fiefdom. Even the Nirmalananda Mandal, which owns the temple, has little say. With 395 of the 432 Hindu families in Palazhi belonging to the lower castes, and there being only one temple in the whole village, Warrier's war is obviously going to go on.

Warrier (inset); and devotees on dharna: caste worship

Blind Alley

THE EERIE silence of Ranchi Mansik Arogyashala in Bihar is often broken by the insane screams of its raving inmates. So when the screams of inmate Subodh Singh, 22, rent the air one afternoon last fortnight, the four warders and one nurse on duty dismissed it as a routine cry. It was, in fact, a cry of pain: someone had gouged out Subodh's eyes and he was found lying unconscious in a puddle of blood. The asylum officials said that it was another inmate, Harendra Singh, who had attacked Subodh; and the four warders were duly dismissed for negligence. But Subodh's eyes had been sliced clean out of their sockets, giving rise to the suspicion that it was the handiwork of a professional, maybe an eye surgeon. What would have been otherwise dismissed as a fit of madness thus became a spine-chilling story that has been spilling out of the asylum's corridors for quite some time: that there's a gang of professional "cornea-smugglers" operating inside. However, the asylum's angry young Superintendent B.P. Sinha hotly denies it: "It is impossible as it requires expert hands and proper conditions, neither of which exist here." But Narain Chand De has something else to say. De, a retired warder who used to cremate the inmates who died, says: "Whenever I went to dispose of the body, I found the eyes missing." But so far, it has been hard to prove De's charge.

K.M. KISHAN

Subodh Singh: blinded

Running Oath

COME rain or shine, there are times when one just has to make it. July 21 was one such day in the life of Ras Behari Behera. He had just heard that he'd been made the Orissa's agriculture minister and was to be sworn in at 2 p.m. the same day. And there he was, stranded at Nayagarh, 90 km from Bhubaneswar, with flood-waters swirling all around him. As the hands of his watch inched towards the deadline, Behera began to get the jitters. Governor B.N. Pandey, he knew, was leaving for Delhi, so he just had to make it. He did, finally, in a helicopter and reached Bhubaneswar airport just in time to find Chief Minister J.B. Patnaik and others waiting to see the governor off. So they improvised an impromptu oath-taking ceremony there and then, and Ras Behari Behera thus became the first Indian minister to be sworn in at an airport lounge.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

Giving Peace a Chance

LAST fortnight a mellow moon of peace seemed to be finally shining down on Sri Lanka after the seemingly endless summer of ethnic discontent. Over detailed and intricate negotiations spanning 10 days, the Sri Lanka Government and the representatives of the Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF) had, according to inside sources, worked out several delicately balanced points of agreement in Colombo on the new provincial council proposals.

The political parties conference in Colombo also drew to a close after further liberalising the provincial autonomy proposals outlined by Sri Lanka President J.R. Jayewardene. It was clear that much more common ground was established this time than at any other previous attempt. As Jayewardene told INDIA TODAY during the hectic negotiations: "I am very hopeful of reaching an accord with the moderate Tamils this time."

Though the TULF was non-committal about the prolonged discussions, it was quite evident that the party representatives had been eminently reasonable and accommodative during the talks. While carefully adding the qualifying statement that no finality had been reached on any of the proposals in the discussions, TULF President M. Sivasithamparam said: "It appears that by and large a fair settlement on the law and order issue is possible." TULF Secretary-General Appapillai Amrithalingam also spoke about the imperative need to find a negotiated political settlement. Observed a Sri Lankan minister: "It warmed our heart to hear Amrithalingam say after seven long years: our country. He is not talking about a Tamil Eelam, but about 'our country', which includes both Sinhalese and Tamils."

Investigations by INDIA TODAY revealed that the TULF representatives had confidentially expressed broad agreement with the provincial council proposals regarding the law and order set up envisaged. The proposals envisaged that the provincial police commission would comprise of three members—the deputy inspector-general of police (DIG) of the province, a nominee of the President, and a nominee of the chief minister of the province. While the chief ministerial and presidential nominees would balance each other, the TULF apprehended that the DIG would tilt the balance in favour of the Central Government, because he would belong to the national police division. The Tamil party, however, wanted a 1:1

"I am very hopeful of reaching an accord with the moderate Tamils this time."

J.R. JAYEWARDENE
President, Sri Lanka

"It appears that by and large a fair settlement on the law and order issue is possible."

M. SIVASITHAMPARAM
President, TULF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

weightage for the province vis-a-vis the Central Government in the recruitment of provincial police personnel.

The Jayewardene Government was not willing to give in on that point. For one, its contention was that although the DIG of the province would belong to the national police division, he was expected to be neutral. Also, the provincial council proposals explicitly laid down that the DIG would be under the control of the provincial chief minister in the maintenance of public order. For another, this particular proposal about the constitution of the provincial police commission had been sorted out in great detail with India's Union Minister of State for Personnel, Public Grievances and Pensions P. Chidambaram, who had led a delegation to Colombo three months ago. Chidambaram, according to Sri Lanka Government sources, had been convinced that the Government had been fair to the Tamils on this point. It was only a question of time, therefore, before the TULF overcame its reservations and concurred with the law and order proposals after speaking to New Delhi.

ON THE land settlement proposals, the former TULF member of parliament from Trincomalee R. Sampanthan, opposed the existence of a category of state lands which could only be allotted by the President. Said a highly placed source: "Sampanthan initially argued that all land had to be vested with the provincial councils which would allot land to the Central Government depending on requirement. But again, thanks to New Delhi's intervention, the TULF hardliners were silenced and Amrithalingam more or less acquiesced."

The only major hitch in a possible settlement seemed to be the issue of the merger of the northern and eastern provinces. The TULF has always been insisting on the merger as a pre-condition for their signing any settlement. And in its counter-proposals presented some time ago, the party had suggested the formation of one Tamil linguistic state. The Jayewardene Government has been insisting that merger is not possible under any circumstances. Argued Jayewardene: "I am opposed to the merger because the majority of people in the eastern province are themselves opposed to such a merger."

But even on this highly sensitive merger issue, there was considerable give and take in Colombo last fortnight. Colvin R. de Silva, leader of the Lanka Sama Samaja Party said: "While the latest proposals have not explicitly provided for a merger of the northern and eastern provinces, suitable institutional arrangements have been proposed. These will provide for provincial councils, especially those in the northern and eastern provinces, to consult with each other and act in coordination on matters of mutual interest. This is the most that we can go. If we merge the north and east, we will only end up by duplicating on a provincial scale the national ethnic problem, because in the merged unit, the Sinhalese and the Muslims will be in a minority compared to the Tamils."

The TULF secretary-general, in a striking volte face, also claimed that what the Tamil groups were demanding was not the merger of the provinces, but the creation of a single administrative unit consisting of the northern province and those areas in the east where the Tamils were in a majority. And he explained: "Whatever non-Tamil speaking areas can be detached from the eastern province may certainly be detached." This was certainly a dilution of the TULF's stand all along.

There were also other conciliatory hints from the Sri Lanka Government. It was informally made known that the Government would be prepared to accord Tamil the status of an official language apart from Sinhala. The Government was also understood to be prepared to repeal the controversial sixth amendment to the Sri Lankan Constitution, which required every member of Parliament to take an oath pledging allegiance to the state, and because of which the TULF leaders had lost their parliamentary membership.

The Government was also learnt to be not sticky about a repeal of the Prevention of Terrorism Act under which, it was alleged, Tamil youth had been indiscriminately arrested. Revealed a top Sri Lanka minister: "We explained to the TULF leaders our problems in giving more concessions to the Tamils. We told them we could go only as far as our unitary constitution permitted. Anything more would make a national referendum necessary, which would defeat the whole exercise."

The political parties conference held in Colombo last fortnight also, if anything, improved on the concessions to the Tamils promised in the latest provincial

S.H. VENKATRAMANI

"There is a large section of middle opinion among Sinhalese and Tamils in favour of a settlement. I see a lot of hope in this for a solution."

COLVIN R. DE SILVA
leader of Lanka Sama Samaja party

S.H. VENKATRAMANI

"The Government would be able to get the provincial council proposal approved by Parliament irrespective of the SLFP's opposition."

LALITH ATHULATHMUDALI minister for national security

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

council proposals. But for the Sri Lanka Mahajana Party (SLMP), the other registered political parties which participated in the conference even went to the extent of endorsing the idea to make Tamil an official language. And the SLMP and its leader, actor Vijaya Kumaratunga, have been trying to establish their own direct equations with the Tamil militant groups. "I have held discussions with the groups in Tamil Nadu to persuade them to talk on the basis of the latest proposals, and I must say I have been able to vibe with them," he told INDIA TODAY in Colombo.

COMMENTED Colvin de Silva of the LSSP: "There is a large section of middle opinion among both the Sinhalese and the Tamils in favour of a settlement. And I see a lot of hope in this for a solution." Even the boycott of the conference by former prime minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike's Sri Lanka Freedom Party (SLFP) was not perceived as an obstacle. Said President Jayewardene: "The SLFP boycott did not defeat the purpose of the political parties conference to arrive at a Sinhala consensus." Added high profile Sri Lanka Minister for National Security Lalith Athulathmudali: "The Government would be able to get the provincial council proposal approved by Parliament irrespective of the SLFP's opposition." The ruling United National Party has 138 seats in the 168-member Sri Lankan Parliament. The SLFP has only eleven.

The till now muted opposition by the Buddhist clergy to the provincial council idea is also not being seen as an insurmountable problem by the Government. Said Minister for Lands and Land Settlement Gamini Disanayake: "We are asking the clergy to cooperate with us in this endeavour to find a settlement."

So last fortnight, a negotiated political settlement of the Tamil problem seemed certainly within the realm of possibility. The Jayewardene Government showed itself as being determined to somehow push through a negotiated settlement with the moderate Tamils and try its best to get over the problems posed by hardline Sinhala and Buddhist opinion. The TULF, on its part, was being subjected to the right amount of pressure from Delhi to be reasonable. So much so, that Amrithalingam told the Sri Lankan press that even the boys (the Tamil militants) were not averse to a negotiated settlement provided it fulfilled the aspirations of the Tamil people.

Opinion among both the Tamils and the Sinhalese also favoured an early peace. Said a professor of Jaffna University: "The people of Jaffna are now more worried about getting their foodgrains and essential commodities at affordable prices than about the merger of the northern and eastern provinces."

Sources in the northern peninsula confirmed that last fortnight's strike to protest against the Government's new lorry permit issue system had a greater impact than the small procession to protest against the Colombo talks. In the east also, the popular vote is for peace. Says K.S. Sodinathan, administrative officer of the paddy marketing board in Trincomalee: "We are all desperately waiting for a peaceful settlement and for the restoration of normal conditions of life. I am waiting for the day we can live and move around normally again."

The average Sri Lankan's vote for a negotiated settlement and peace is all right, but as Kumar Ponnambalam says: "The success of a negotiated solution should lie in its implementation." And for successful implementation of any settlement, it is absolutely imperative to enlist the cooperation of the Tamil militants. Already the militants have expressed their resentment of the negotiations by blasting a bus carrying Sinhalese passengers from Mahamadua to Vavuniya last fortnight, and reports put the Sinhalese civilian death toll at 39.

President Jayewardene has publicly promised to pardon the militants if they laid down their arms. He told INDIA TODAY that "the question of asking the Government of India to restrain the militants from creating problems in the implementation of the provincial council proposals will be considered later". But in spite of the implied Indian promise to contain the militant threat if the Jayewardene Government is able to hammer out an agreement with the TULF, there is no denying the fact that the tigers and the other militants are the most crucial factors in the ultimate denouement of the Sri Lankan drama.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI
in Colombo and Trincomalee

S.H. VENKATRAMANI

"We are all desperately waiting for a peaceful settlement. I am waiting for the day we can live and move around normally again."

K.S. SODINATHAN administrative officer, paddy marketing board, Trincomalee

S.H. VENKATRAMANI

"People have had enough of the militants' guerilla attacks which invite army reprisals."

LT. COL. LAKSHMAN WIJAYARATNE military coordinating officer, Trincomalee

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Yes, with kangaro®
Staplers & Index File Clips, manufactured with West German Technology.

Even in this modern push button era of computers, little things mean a lot.....

Small things like Staplers & Index File Clips are part of every day office efficiency. Precision engineered 'KANGARO' Products, crafted with WEST, GERMAN Technology, offers you a distinct advantage of trouble free service at much lesser cost.

How about trying a 'KANGARO' Stapler and a file fitted with 'KANGARO' Index File Clip with Nylon Roller?

JAIN MANUFACTURING CO.,
840, INDUSTRIAL AREA-A
LUDHIANA-141 003 (INDIA)
PHONE : OFF : 23976, 35116
CABLE : 'KANGARO'

kangaro® – An efficient way to Staple, Punch and File.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMONWEALTH

Empire Strikes Back

"We danced the fox trot in Lusaka. I believe she will dance a flaming tango in August."
President Kaunda on Prime Minister Thatcher

IT SEEMS an eternity since President Kenneth Kaunda and Margaret Thatcher—who made an incongruous couple as they foxtrotted at the Zambian capital—toasted the end of white minority rule in what was then Rhodesia. Today Kaunda is the most truculent and for many reporters, the most quotable of African leaders on the issue of mandatory sanctions against South Africa, who doesn't flinch from dishing out one public dressing down after another to visiting British emissaries. His latest outburst was reserved for the hapless British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe sent on "mission impossible" to South Africa by his prime minister.

President Kaunda greeted him last fortnight thus: "As a fellow human being Sir Geoffrey you are most welcome. But as a messenger of what you have come to do in southern Africa you are not welcome at all." He added that the reason he agreed to see Howe was out of "love and respect to that young lady, Queen Elizabeth," and since he was in effect representing the EEC. Continuing his admonishment, Kaunda said: "I'm telling you that because this thing is about to explode, and that you should be encouraging it and pushing it along, is to me completely unacceptable. You and Reagan are kissing apartheid, embracing it and I can't accept that, Sir Geoffrey." Thus when Kaunda threatened a "flaming tango" at this fortnight's mini-Commonwealth summit in London there were not many in Whitehall who doubted him.

As for Howe's doomed mission to South Africa, one British commentator was kinder to him than to his leader: "In his safari through southern Africa ricochetting comically from snub to snub, he has displayed once again his unmatched ability to absorb political punishment." As for his boss who launched him on this disastrous mission, Thatcher has tenaciously refused to comment until the summit, itself began at London's elegant Marlborough House. On the eve of the summit, the British prime minister seems to be in conflict with much of the Commonwealth, directly at odds with the queen at Buckingham Palace, in disagreement with some senior Tories including it appears with her foreign secretary, out of step with much of western Europe and is only backed by arch conservative loyalists and US President Reagan.

It is against this background that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and six other leaders will begin their discussions over sanctions against South Africa which could ultimately pressurise the Afrikaner-dominated regime to dismantle the abhorrent system of apartheid. In fact, some observers feel the London summit could well decide the future of the Commonwealth—a group of 49 sovereign nations located in every continent and ocean.

Ramphal: under pressure

Shridath 'Sonny' Ramphal, the live wire and much maligned secretary-general of the Commonwealth Secretariat, despises suggestions about the possibility of the disintegrating Commonwealth. Time and again he reminds his interviewers that the British prime minister had committed herself at the last conference in Nassau to the "adoption of further measures if adequate progress has not been made". The principal question is what economic measures, what economic sanctions should be applied now. Ramphal feels, to be effective, sanctions must be substantial and concerted but they, need not at this point, be comprehensive or 'general'. Commonwealth Secretariat officials discount that a major row could seriously threaten its future. They recall that South Africa's racism has been at the centre of the Commonwealth's greatest storms over the years: over Sharpeville and South Africa's continued membership of the Commonwealth in 1961, over the Simonstone naval base in Singapore in 1971 to over a decade of conflict on Rhodesia.

Ramphal—who in recent weeks has received an unsympathetic press and been portrayed along the lines of UNESCO's avaricious Amadou Mahtar M'bow, warns that he was speaking "not with some facile belief that we can muddle through things by managing to be nice to each other. The situation is too serious for that." What political observers here are speculating is that if Thatcher refuses to concede ground, will the more hardline African states like Nigeria and then perhaps India, pull out of the Commonwealth altogether? And what would happen to the old "empire" club if it falls apart?

Tory critics are of the firm belief that few would shed an honest tear. Instead in recent weeks, there has been a searching review of the human rights record of those African nations advocating sanctions where political repression is as brutal as in South Africa. Those who have come under the media glare are Gambia, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Nigeria, Swaziland, Sierra Leone, Uganda, Zambia and Zimbabwe. But here there were supportive voices too. In a much quoted editorial, The Guardian argued: "The Commonwealth, for Britain, has been a living

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Queen Elizabeth (right) and Prime Minister Thatcher: at odds symbol that affairs can be better ordered: a collection of ex-colonial states gathering year by year, with some affection, to trade blows and ideas and aspirations. That affection matters. The queen, toiling over years, has done much to cement it. The manner of our colonial departure helped. We are not, in the broad, hated. The people who took up the reins were (and still are) often people educated in Britain, trained here, influenced here. Of course, some aren't terrific democrats. Of course some of them feature in amnesty chronicles of shame....But together—the Canadians, the Australians, the Indians, the Zambians and the rest—they put their joint heritage to benign use and positive dialogue." But there was not a lot of this much-vaunted "affection" in evidence as one Commonwealth nation after another pulled out of the Edinburgh games citing naked British self-interest in its refusal to impose sanctions against South Africa.

Whilst the leaked "news" about the queen's disapproval of Thatcher's stance was being bandied about, and the Edinburgh games headed for a catastrophic financial loss, 10 Downing Street steadfastly stuck to its arguments: that sanctions do not work and ultimately it would be the black children who would die as a result. Against the immorality of apartheid, Thatcher was casting the immorality in southern Africa of throwing blacks out of work and depriving starving children out of food, while also bringing economic hardship on her own people by the application of measures that will not work. Thatcher foresees the South African Government hardening, not softening, in its resistance to change, while inflicting heavy reprisals on frontline states whose economies are vulnerable. She is appalled at the thought of banning purchase of strategic minerals from South Africa when the principal alternative source and beneficiary is the Soviet Union.

However 'Sonny' Ramphal thinks it would be delicious irony, if, after all these years of the South African saga, any Commonwealth leader (viz Thatcher) succumbed now to the Afrikaaner propensity of retreating into the laager of intransigence. The problem—as many observers who have gathered here for the summit see—is that she has painted herself into a corner with perhaps one option for a dignified retreat. That is her distinction between general "punitive" sanctions and minor economic measures. She could then fall back to such further measures as those already imposed: arms sales, inter-government loans, recall of military attaches, a ban on buying gold coins or selling computers to South Africa's security forces. But she "totally rejects" the argument that even black leaders in South Africa and frontline states are ready to accept tougher measures at the cost of greater economic distress. As several commentators have pointed out, the British prime minister stubbornly sticks to this argument even when a whole range of personalities and institutions prefer sanctions. Amongst them: Bishop Desmond Tutu, Nelson Mandela, Oliver Tambo, Kenneth Kaunda, Robert Mugabe and others, whose constituencies could be ruinously affected by sanctions.

Kaunda: fearing an explosion

Amongst the opponents of mandatory sanctions in London, there is much talk of rich nations joining together in a new Marshal aid programme to assist black South Africa to "educate itself", to establish its own businesses, trade unions, cooperative ventures and to generally outwit the apartheid structures. This is under the naive belief that Pretoria would passively sit back whilst this great Marshal plan gets underway with the express purpose of implementing a multi-racial democracy.

However, in all these weeks of intense activity, the Thatcher Government did relent briefly to meet with the African National Congress (ANC) leader Oliver Tambo last month. The ANC, founded in 1912 on the model of Gandhi's Natal Indian Congress and whose spiritual leader is Nelson Mandela, had been previously dismissed as a terrorist organisation with communist connections. The British Government seemed to have belatedly realised that the ANC would be the dominant force in South Africa's future. But even now the Botha regime resolutely refuses to negotiate with the ANC for the release of Mandela.

As London prepared for the crucial summit, the daily and rather dismal diet of entertainment on television has been the Commonwealth Games. Presaging the bleak state of things to come, the games opened on a grey and overcast day, and for many of the events, there were just a handful of spectators. The games—branded the "white games" or the "Persil games" (after the advertisement—Persil washes whiter than white) seem headed towards a massive loss. Robert Maxwell, the man who came to rescue the games, is threatening to send a bill for £1 million each to countries like India and Nigeria for not competing.

However, the question in everyone's minds was whether the summit could be salvaged? Commentators predict a patchy agreement, followed by an emergency full-scale meeting of all the Commonwealth nations before the year end. And amongst the venues considered equipped to deal with an emergency session might be New Delhi. What no one seems to want is a scenario where the mini-summit ends in disagreement and a country like India—whose population outstrips the rest of the Commonwealth put together—might even consider leaving the "club".

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Udyog Bandhu has friends at High Places

Udyog Bandhu
One contact that is very well connected
The single source that has access to several departments and bodies to speed up your sanctions and clearances, including Financial Institutions, Directorate of Industries, Electricity Board etc. etc.
A unique cell that provides guidance, technical information, and even liaison services to entrepreneurs of large and medium scale industries.
Udyog Bandhu is your valuable contact.
To get speedy clearances for your project.

Make use of our connections

UDYOG BANDHU

UDYOG BANDHU
Chandra Bhanu Gupta Smarak, Nav Chetna Kendra,
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001
Phones : 34615, 31395 Cable : BANDHU Telex : 0535-274

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHANDRASWAMI

The Con-troversy

RANJAN BASU

INDIAN godmen make good copy and there has been an endless stream of swami's strutting on to centre-stage and capturing media attention. The latest in the saffron star-line is Chandraswami who leaves Rajneesh, Mahesh Yogi and Dhirendra Brahmachari looking like poor relations. Chandraswami's stardom was heralded by London's The Observer, which, two months ago, hinted that an Indian guru was involved in the sale of the prestigious Harrods, London's most celebrated departmental store.

The newspaper, in a sensational story, alleged that the guru was responsible for bringing together the Sultan of Brunei and Mohammad al Fayed, the Egyptian millionaire who finally bought Harrods for £615 million. The sale had come as a bitter defeat for The Observer's owner, and business tycoon Tiny Rowland, of the Lonhro Group of Companies who tried to buy Harrods. Rowland stuck to his guns even after al Fayed slapped a libel suit against him. The Observer also gave an undertaking that it would not go back on its allegations, including the one that Mark Thatcher, son of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, was involved in the sale.

Taking the cue from The Observer story, editors Pritish Nandy of The Illustrated Weekly of India and Rajat Sharma of Onlooker hot-footed to London, to pick up the trail of the elusive swami, who has, in his own country, managed to keep his affairs under wraps. Their efforts, including a joint interview where Nandy, masquerading as an Onlooker correspondent while the swami swore to "get that Nandy", finally introduced Chandraswami to Indian readers. "Sensational," screamed the Onlooker cover. The Weekly followed with an equally forceful "Exposed".

The swami reacted with lightning speed. Within two days, notices were delivered to the two editors demanding retraction of the story, failing which each would face a defamation suit of Rs 1 crore for libel.

Chandraswami's lawyer denies the fact that the swami took $2 million to introduce al Fayed to the Sultan of Brunei and asserts that this is a story being circulated by Rowland. He also denies that the swami taped conversations with al Fayed and used them to blackmail him. Chandraswami claims he has never said that he was close to Rajiv Gandhi. Sharma refutes the charge. "We met him five times and though not all the interviews are on tape we certainly have the part in which he claims that Rajiv Gandhi respects him and is close to him."

Chandraswami (top); Sharma (left) and Nandy: joint effort

Nandy, on his part, bluntly denies having received any notice. He sticks to his story saying: "There are lots of people who are quite willing to go on record in support of the pay-off charge."

As regards the fact that he sat through the interview with Chandraswami pretending to be somebody else, Nandy says: "I tried umpteen times to contact the swami and when it failed I had to resort to this. I went with Rajat Sharma and told the swami that I am Rajat's chamcha." Adds Sharma: "We thought we would end up telling the truth but throughout the interview he kept abusing Pritish; so we decided that it would be best not to tell him that Pritish was sitting in front of him. The man's a fraud so what's wrong with using his own tactics on him."

The swami used every trick up his saffron sleeve to prevent Nandy from publishing the expose. Frantic messages were sent to Ashok Jain, owner of The Times of India group that publishes the Weekly. Among those who pleaded for him were members of Jain's family, film stars and politicians. And the swami, who in the early stages of his career was reportedly assisted by Jain's father, would have succeeded in his mission but for the fact that Onlooker splashed the same story.

Whatever be the truth in the accusations, one fact is clear that the swami's key to the ethereal world of heads and ex-heads of state, filmstars and jetsetters is the mega rich arms dealer Adnan Khashoggi, who he reportedly cured of a disease. He is an integral part of Khashoggi's entourage and has obviously taken advantage of the connection.

When asked why he is keen on making friends with heads of state, the swami mouths platitudes. Says he "I want universal peace and brotherhood and the best way to achieve it is through heads of state of important countries." Notwithstanding his quest for peace, the access that the swami has to an international array of luminaries and the business interests he promotes through them—reportedly for fabulous five figure sums—is going to keep the media interest in him alive for quite some time to come.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UB-MEC
TRACTION BATTERIES

DON'T LET A LOAD BECOME A BURDEN

Specifically designed for industrial vehicles like fork-lifts and platform trucks, UB-MEC Traction Batteries are used as original equipment by Voltas and Josts. Exported to USSR since 1968, the batteries excel at bearing heavy loads and pursuing rigorous material handling operations.

Toughness, efficiency and reliability ..... that's what UB-MEC Traction Batteries are all about.

You need MEC Power

UB-MEC Batteries Limited.
REGD. OFFICE & WORKS: MEC FACTORY ROAD, YESWANTPUR, BANGALORE - 560 022.
TELEPHONE 360161-3 TELEX-845-341 GRAMS: MECWORK

venkchu

UB-MEC Batteries Limited,
Adarsh Ice Factory Compound,
Marve Road, Malad West,
Bombay-400 064
TEL: 693579, 691743

UB-MEC Batteries Limited,
FF-5, Stutee Building,
Bank Street, Karol Bagh,
New Delhi-110 005.
TEL: 5726918, 5728002

UB-MEC Batteries Limited,
8/1B, Chowringhee Lane,
Calcutta — 700 016.
TEL: 241963

UB-MEC Batteries Limited,
122, Mowbrays Road,
Alwarpet,
Madras-600 018.
TEL: 451319

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEFORESTATION

An Environmental Holocaust

The destruction of India's forests has brought the country to the brink of environmental disaster. As they disappeared, the Government—and the people—slumbered, lulled into somnolent complacency by misleading government statistics. But recently—after shocking satellite pictures of India's receding forests and consequent desertification came into focus—ambitious new reforestation programmes were put on government drawing boards. Even though a creaky bureaucracy is now limping into action, it may already be too late to reverse the horrendous consequences of past neglect and inaction. Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR reports:

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WATER is the essence of earth, plants are the essence of waters." This seminal environmental wisdom, expressed in the Chhandogya Upanishad thousands of years ago has been stood on its head in modern India which is rapidly entering the twenty-first century not as a grainbowl but as a dustbowl.

In the savage ecological havoc which now envelops the country like an ominous shroud, India, ultimately, is engaged in a race against time. Within the last decade—thanks to the effects of reckless deforestation which has pummelled and pulverised the earth into millions of hectares of waste land—there has developed a discernible desert that stretches from Rajasthan to west Madhya Pradesh to Maharashtra and Karnataka. At stake is the very survival and continuity of the country's agricultural livelihood.

At the present rate of environmental assault, India is steadily losing more than 1.5 million hectares of good forest land each year. In other words, every five years, forest cover the size of Haryana vanishes, leaving behind constantly eroding soil that can hold neither water nor nutrients. This apocalyptic scenario is not the projection of some distant Jonahs but of experts and scientists. Kamla Chowdhry, chairman of the National Wastelands Development Board warns: "The Gangetic plain could well turn into a desert within the next 15 years if a massive reforestation programme fails to take hold."

Says N.D. Jayal, head of environment for the Indian National Trust for Art and Cultural Heritage: "Sub-Saharan conditions have already begun to plague several parts of the country which were only recently green and fertile. People sitting in the comfort of their Delhi homes don't seem to realise that every tree that falls or landslide that occurs in the distant Himalayas deepens the survival crisis." Restoration of the land to even a small percentage of its original state, he notes, "is the single most important anti-poverty programme that the Government can take up."

But the Indian Government, until a few years ago kept fiddling with misleading statistics while the forests burned and crumbled. The state forest departments continued to issue optimistic figures about the nation's forest wealth—that more than 22 per cent of the land was under forest cover. But with the onset of satellite imagery the Government received a frightening jolt. B.B. Vohra, now chairman of the Energy Advisory Board, who interpreted the satellite statistics, pointed out that the area under good forest cover was no more than 10 per cent of the country's geographical area. "This trend severely threatens whatever gains may have been made by the Green Revolution in agriculture," notes Vohra. "We are already losing about 50 million tonnes of foodgrains each year on account of the loss of topsoil caused by this devastation of our land. This represents an average of about Rs 6,000 crore each year in loss of food production. Do you wonder then why there is such chronic poverty?"

The Himalayas are dying with the sound of dynamite and axes and scarred by remains of what were lush forests.

According to the National Forest Policy adopted in 1953, one-third of the country's geographical area of about 266 million hectares should be under good forest cover. Official statistics boast that about 70 million hectares are "forest lands". But this is a grand illusion. The stark reality is that only 30 million hectares of these are under some kind of tree cover while the rest are denuded or degraded "forests". Altogether—including the non-forest agricultural land—about 175 million hectares of the country's total area, about 66 per cent, are degraded.

The destruction of natural vegetal cover causes the loss of topsoil. It is virtually irreplaceable and takes nature 1,000 years to build an inch. Annual loss of topsoil erosion is estimated at Rs 12,000 crore. In addition, because of the inability of the land to store water which is a natural function of green cover, the country has suffered, according to the National Commission on Floods, losses totalling more than Rs 5,000 crore during the last five years. Floods during the monsoons—because of erosion—and droughts during the dry spells—because of nature's inability to store groundwater—have now become India's man-made legacy to its environment. Over the last seven years one out of every 7 km of area under forest was denuded.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As a consequence, the entire Himalayan ecosystem is threatened and under severe imbalance as snow-lines have thinned and perennial springs have dried up. In Andhra Pradesh, temperate forest areas turn into hot-houses at night and are lashed by hurricane-like torrents of rain. Rajasthan's already poor land is getting further degraded, turning large portions of the state into a wasteland. Chronic droughts have begun to plague areas like Tamil Nadu and Himachal Pradesh where they were unknown. And the water levels in the Ganga have begun to decrease at an alarming rate.

Chart & Map by B.K. SHARMA

According to a briefing document prepared by the Centre for Science and Environment (CSE), no part of India has escaped the wrath of this environmental holocaust: In Sonepat district, Haryana,—once the heart of the Green Revolution—the village of Akbarpur, surrounded 20 years ago by impenetrable forests, has been reduced to water-born gullies and bare patches of land. In North Arcot, Tamil Nadu, the villagers of Guruvarajapalayam struggle to grow one crop a year because there is no surface water. In West Kameng district in Arunachal Pradesh, vegetation on mountain slopes has disappeared and subsistence agriculture has become impossible. In Ranchi district in Bihar, the robust sal forests have turned into scrubland and naked rock after contractors felled the trees. Whatever the reasons for deforesta-

India loses 1.5 million hectares of good forest each year. Every five years, green cover the size of Haryana vanishes, leaving behind constantly eroding soil. Closed forests are only 10 per cent of total area.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tion—commercial plundering, organised smuggling, treating forests as commercial timberlands rather than as an ecological resource, overgrazing, overcultivation, lopping and chopping of trees—the Government's attitude to the disaster that has overtaken the land so far has been one of tinkering, its reaction to suggestions lethargic. In response to an urgent SOS on the subject from Vohra in 1972, Mrs Gandhi sent an emergency directive to her Cabinet urging immediate action to begin a process by which the land could be saved. "Unfortunately, nothing came of the PM's initiative because people in power refused to appreciate the importance of the subject," Vohra says. A decade later, in June 1983, the Central Government issued a strong recommendation to the Uttar Pradesh Government suggesting a moratorium on cutting green trees in the Himalayas. But the Government carried out only a modified programme under which loopholes are still provided for cutting forests. "This was clearly the handiwork of forest officials who have always been in collusion with the contractors and forest mafias," says Jayal. "Unfortunately, the Government's handling of the problem has been one of confusion and ad-hocism," says T.N. Khushoo, former environment secretary.

The despondent note, significantly, is struck by these administrators at a time when the Indian Government—under a directive from Rajiv Gandhi—is embarked on what is widely considered to be the most ambitious reforestation programme in the world. The plan calls for the reforestation of five million hectares of waste lands each year. The project is being coordinated by Kamla Choudhury, a passionate believer in the need for a massive "people's movement".

"Rural poverty and ecological imbalance", says Choudhury, "have a common nexus. Poverty increases with environmental degradation. This cycle can only be broken through social forestry, which should be aimed at meeting the fuelwood and fodder needs of the population." The current need for fuelwood and fodder is about 133 million tonnes a year. Availability is no more than 36 million tonnes. "Some women spend an entire night on the hilly roads searching for these necessities. Men have begun to desert their villages. And women in the Garhwal area have even begun to commit suicide because they are no longer able to cope. Providing for their requirements, developing fast growing tree and bush species, while at the same time giving them employment, is the most important development programme in this country as far as I am concerned," she stresses.

But the stark reality is that the entire programme is sputtering for want of centralised command, lack of pertinent data bases, inadequate scientific knowledge and research, bureaucratic turf battles and confusion over the most basic necessity—acquisition of waste lands for reforestation. Some of the most successful reforestation programmes have, indeed, been those in which village communities, in voluntary cooperation, have fenced off forest areas, stopped the felling of trees

One method of illegal felling is to saw a healthy green tree half-way into its girth at the bottom. The saw-mark is barely discernible but the tree quickly dies. It is then marked for "legal" chopping by forest officials.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and prohibited grazing. In many areas, the forests, without any new planting, have regenerated as if by magic. But to raise the environmental consciousness of villagers and give them a vested interest in the trees and the land they protect requires a tremendous effort.

BUT THE bulk of the degraded lands and waste lands, however, are in the control of forest departments which so far have been extremely reluctant to part with them or make them available for social forestry schemes. Other such lands —revenue lands, village commons, and panchayat lands—are often legally disputed territories or controlled by upper caste sarpanchs.

Even after Rajiv Gandhi's directive on the issue of reforestation the forest departments, this year, could plant no more than a half million hectares before the onset of the monsoon. And government officials readily admit that in all probability only less than 10 per cent of all the saplings planted will survive. They will either be eaten by cattle or die for want of adequate care. These officials candidly admit that some of the elementary questions—who will do the planting, where to plant, on which land—have still to be answered.

The Government, so far, lacks a committed and all-powerful organisation to take up the task of reforestation. And reforestation so far has not been administratively linked to the management of water resources which are an integral part of the ecological baggage of reforestation. While government policies stress the planting of trees, they do not recognise the importance of preventing floods through appropriate land management. The emphasis so far has been on controlling floods through engineering works. Major irrigation works, government studies show, have been a disaster. Surface irrigation has put as much land out of production due to water logging and salination each year as is brought under production through new projects.

Says Maheshwar Dayal, secretary of energy: "The whole system needs to be revamped at the district level. Forestry is essentially a state subject and in order to take up social forestry in a big way there must be an integrated administrative apparatus at the district level." No such organisation is in sight. Hundreds of departments and sub-departments at the state and district levels receive funds from a plethora of government sources, each going its own way. The creation of forest development corporations in 1976 to take up reforestation schemes have made no headway. In fact, forest lands have steadily disappeared since their creation.

And, as the needs of the poor and the industrialists keep increasing, forests continue to disappear. The annual requirement for industrial wood is about 35 million cubic metres as against an availability of about 13 million cubic metres. One of the main causes of the disappearance of forests in recent times, says a CSE study, is indiscriminate exploitation by the organised sector in collusion with the state forest departments. The Madhya Pradesh Forest Department has leased huge bamboo tracts to a private paper mill at a low price of Rs 10 per tonne. In Kerala and Karnataka, bamboo has been sold to private companies at "the throwaway price of Re 1 a tonne".

While government policies have often worked hand-in-glove with vested interests in the cause of commercial deforestation, they have failed to create the scientific infrastructure which is now essential in guiding the reforestation programme. According to a Delhi University Botany professor, Dr H.Y. Mohan Ram, reforestation cannot be left entirely to a people's movement "because it requires a lot of knowledge, technical knowhow for surveys of water and soil conditions on degraded land. There is no universal species that can be grown on all land. Unfortunately, right now, even if you want to plant on a limited scale, planting material is not available. We need seed orchards, tree breeding institutes. What is sad is that even though we have an embarrassment of riches in indigenous trees there is little or no research on their growth patterns." And adds Dr V. Jagganathan of the Tata Research Institute: "Our approach should be to select suitable species, pick out the fastest growing, and then choose the elite. But there has been no integrated work in this. The technology of tissue culture for multiplying seedlings is still in its infancy. And there is no extension mechanism yet capable of taking research work out of the laboratories and into the field as was the case with the Green Revolution."

Until now, 80 per cent of all seedlings supplied under reforestation-related programmes are of two exotic species——Leucaenia and Eucalyptus. The latter has some limited commercial value but creates plantations and not a forest with its multiplicity of mixed flora which is so essential for maintaining nature's balance.

But if the target of planting 5 million hectares is to be achieved, even with the few exotic species that have shown results, the seedling requirement is about 1,000 crore against the availability of 250 crore. "The infrastructure required for production

The struggle of saplings, newly-planted on barren slopes, is a sign of life and hope amidst gloom.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIMACHAL PRADESH

Harvest of Shame

HIMACHAL Pradesh conjures up visions of mighty deodar trees, of babbling brooks and perennial mountain streams. But the reality in this ecologically-beleaguered state is harsh and uncompromising. It is one of miles upon miles of denuded mountain ranges, of forests brutally devastated by population pressures and the unrelenting avarice of forest contractors. In the high ranges, once described as India's emerald belt, trees and vegetation have disappeared as if by a perverse stroke of nature. Laments Major Vijay Singh, a Congress(I) MLA from Shahpur near Dharamsala, whose boyhood was spent in and around Shimla: "Only a few years ago we were told not to venture out too far because the sunlight could not penetrate the thick forests."

The devastation of forests has created an acute water scarcity. Himachal now lives year to year on the Rs 25 crore doled out by the Centre for drought relief. The higher regions of the state have already begun to experience seasonal changes. Winters are warm. The snow-line has become lean. Freak hailstorms appear in September and October and cut a swathe of devastation through standing crops.

According to official statistics, Himachal is supposed to be under more than 30 per cent green cover. But even Chief Minister Vir Bhadra Singh admits this is an exaggeration. Unofficial estimates put it between 15 and 20 per cent. Officially, the state still legally fells more than 5 lakh cubic metres of wood each year. Nearly and distribution of seedlings is sadly missing," a recent government report candidly admits. In addition, only Rs 450 crore has been allocated for reforestation during the current year—far below the Rs 2,000 crore required.

"Our whole approach is wrong," admits a consultant who has been advising the prime minister's office on environmental matters. "We have to start small, select species, select elites, multiply them, parcel them out and then tackle the political question of what to do with the land. The work cannot be left to the traditional departments. We have to build from the bottom up with plantations and small forests to thousands of plantations. One successful hectare, one family saved, is of infinitely greater use than millions of hectares of failures." But if the present trend in deforestation continues, Indians may well find that, within the next five years or so, they will be running charity marathons, not for the starving in Africa but for those starving around Delhi, Bombay, and Madras.

For 90 per cent of Himachal's 46 lakh population living in small villages, deforestation has brought misery and suffering. Fuelwood and fodder are rapidly disappearing. Women bear the hardship.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

half is used to make crates for the state's booming apple industry, which has become a major ecological threat.

Though there are no accurate estimates, sources say that close to Rs 200 crore worth of wood is cut each year under the guise of catering to the industry which the state sells at a heavy subsidy—Rs 9 per wooden crate as against the actual cost of Rs 30 per crate, thereby providing an incentive of Rs 21 per box to the state's deforestation. According to Maj. Singh the state's apple industry was hit hard by the "scab disease" during the 1983-1984 season. The state, with assistance from the Centre, disbursed about Rs 2.5 crore as compensation to the growers and bought their crop to destroy the scab-infested crop. But during this same period, the Forest Department sanctioned the felling of timber for 73-lakh wooden boxes. He asks incredulously: "If most of the apples were 'bought' by the Government to be destroyed, then why did the department still sanction the timber when there should only have been a nominal requirement for wooden boxes?" The current year's requirement for packing cases has been projected at one crore, which means that the Government is committed to paying Rs 21 crore simply for the felling of trees.

The Government says that only 98 lakh crates are moved out of the state but this is based on 1976 estimates. Today, the industry has increased ten-fold. Says Singh: "I am convinced that government officials in connivance with the forest mafia and smugglers are fudging figures and misleading the Government."

Himachal's growing light industrial sectors and the forest wealth amassed by organised tree fellers has brought a new consumer culture to its towns. But for 90 per cent of Himachal's 46 lakh population living in villages, deforestation has brought misery and suffering. Fuelwood and fodder are rapidly disappearing. And village women have to bear the brunt of the hardship.

The state has taken several steps to begin reforestation designed to place Himachal under 50 per cent green cover within a decade. But results have been poor. Because of grazing and other pressures, the survival rate for trees planted in degraded areas has been less than 20 per cent. Says Sitaram, 80, former pradhan of Matli village: "The land is suffering and the forestry people do little or nothing. The programme is only on paper. Even when they distribute wire fencing to prevent grazing, it winds up not with farmers but for sale in the black market."

GARHWAL HIMALAYAS

Plunder in the Hills

THE DEHRA Dun and Garhwal Himalayas are dying with the sound of dynamite explosions, earth-moving machinery, axes and power-saws. These hills are cruelly pock-marked—scarred by the remains of what were once deodar and raunsli pines, chestnut and rhododendron and oak forests. The entire area, comprising five districts and covering an area of 29,968 km of land, is now under less than 10 per cent of dense forest cover. A decade ago, good forest cover was double this amount. The ecological blight has taken a toll not only of the quality of lives of individuals but also of the environment. Every tree that is felled now ultimately damages the life-support system—the soil water and the climate—of the Indo-Gangetic plain.

Essentially, these central Himalayan ranges are like a gigantic sponge. The forests, through roots, leaves and mosses catch rainwater and release it gently into the ground for storage in aquifers—nature's own cave-like storage tanks—which ration the water in trickles into rivulets supplying the Ganga and the Jamuna. But, because of the denudation of mountain slopes, most of these aquifers are now dry. During the rainy seasons the water simply cascades down the slopes into river valleys, carrying with it huge amounts of topsoil causing landslides and floods. In the dry weather, because the storage system is depleted, there are droughts. The Doon valley—particularly Dehra Dun—was legendary for its seemingly interminable supply of water. Streets and places—Karwapani, Guchhupani, East Canal Road—were named after sources of water supply. Today, Dehra Dun, still bountifully endowed with 2,000 mm of rainfall a year, shuts down periodically for lack of water. During the last five years, the water level in the Rajpur Canal has dropped by 80 per cent and in the Bijapur Canal by 40 per cent. And Mussoorie, the "Queen of the Hill-stations" an hour's drive uphill, receives no more than 50,000 gallons per hour each day though its need during the peak tourist season—when the population soars to one lakh—is 150 lakh gallons per hour per day. Because of the loss of forest cover, Mussoorie's average temperature has soared from 25.8 degrees centigrade in 1950 to nearly 33 degrees.

This massive shock to the environment is due to a combination of limestone quarrying and mining, shifting cultivation by migrant farmers, allocation of land for commercial cropping, and the ille-

Avdesh Kaushal has organised students to replant mined hillsides inch by inch.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

gal felling of trees by organised forest mafias in league with officials of the Forest Department. Both the state and Central governments bear a portion of the blame.

THE EFFECT of mining on the lives of the poor in the Doon valley has been devastating. Jhamri, a poor cultivator in his 70s, is a living victim of the ecological ruin that has engulfed the Doon valley during the last decade. Three years ago his village, Jhandukhala, once an ethereal settlement in the Doiwala Block in Sahasradhara, was completely wiped out by a landslide set off by a mine above the village which was being cleared for quarrying. "It came in the middle of the night," recalls Jhamri, "and we all ran out of our houses with only the shirts on our backs." The village is now a rubble of stone and Jhamri's nine-member family has moved out of the area. He now fends for himself inside a small shelter nearby surviving on an old-age pension of a miserable Rs 60 per month.

But Jhamri's plight helped galvanise many citizens groups into action. Political leaders, the Save Mussoorie Society, the Friends of Dehra Dun Society made common cause against the miners. Earlier, it had been impossible to dislodge the mines because the contractors were securing stay orders from the courts through lawyers.

The power of the miners' lobby even attracted the attention of prime minister Indira Gandhi in 1983. She expressed her frustration in a letter to Sita Devi of the Save Mussoorie Society: "I am terribly worried by the continuing quarrying operations in the Doon area. I know of the extensive damage caused...I have asked the CM of UP to look into the matter and ensure urgent action to have the stay order vacated." Notwithstanding Mrs Gandhi's concerns, most of the mines closed down in 1985, thanks largely to a quixotic battle waged in the Supreme Court by Avdesh Kaushal, a social worker and coordinator of the Nehru Yuvak Kendra.

Says Prem Thadani a Mussoorie hotelier and member of the Save Mussoorie Society: "We were really sleeping until Kaushal jolted us out of our complacency. He is a tenacious fighter. His life was threatened, he suffered a heart attack, and he used money from his own provident fund when finances were low. But he fought the miners paper for paper in the Supreme Court." Fify-five mines were closed down but they left a trail of destruction and devastation in the Mussoorie Hills. Occupying over 1,000 hectares of land—more than 800 of them in reserved forests—the mines had eroded the hillsides, destroyed leaf mould—a valuable organic fertiliser—polluted seasonal streams and caused agricultural production to plummet by 50 per cent. At one time, limestone dust particles from the quarries and factories was measured at 360 micrograms per cubic metre as against the safe level of 100. And loss of grazing land has destroyed traditional occupations like farming and dairying. In the Mussoorie Hills, miners have literally chopped of the peak of the famous Hathipaon mountain and reduced most of the Banog mountain to a series of patchwork rubble-beds.

Still, six mines and cement factories have been left to operate in the Doon valley and the Mussoorie Hills. The most destructive of them—the Lambidhar mine—is owned by the state Government and provides raw material for the Government's calcium carbide factory in the Doon valley west of Rajpur. The Lambidhar mine, which has totally destroyed more than 40 hectares of forest and mountainside, is a chilling spectacle. It resembles a gigantic skeleton. It is as if the earth has turned into a rotting, putrefying corpse contaminating everything within reach. And as the mining continues, the metallic sounds of grinding and crushing reverberates from valley to valley. Says General Prem Chand (retd), who lives in the area: "They're killing a whole mountain range. They've raped it and now they're killing it."

Several cost-benefit analysis made by the Government have noted that the Mussoorie and Dehra Dun Hills provide less than 2 per cent of the total limestone reserves in the country and that industry would not suffer if all the operations were shut down. Yet, the Government—notwithstanding statistics showing Dehra Dun to be the second-most economically developed district in the state—declared the valley a "backward area", ostensibly to attract non-polluting electronics industries, but brought in the quick-profit limestone quarries. What conservationists find inexcusable is that just one month after the Doon Valley Board—in which the state Government participates—recommended that the state issue an ordinance declaring the valley an ecologically fragile zone, the Industries Department began operating its calcium carbide plant.

While conservationists have made some headway in Dehra Dun and Mussoorie, they have yet to make a dent on the quarrying that is eating into the Garhwal hills further north. Even where there is no quarrying, government policies and human Jhamri's village, now a rubble, was wiped out by a landslide set off by a mine located right above it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARC CEMENT

Volcano in the Valley

THE CONTINUING operation of the ARC cement factory near Rajpur in the Doon Valley is a potent illustration of the power of cement and limestone lobbies which are often aided by government regulations.

Operating since 1981, the plant is often likened to a smoking volcano whose noxious fumes pollute not only the valley and choke the surrounding green forest cover but also rise into Mussoorie, polluting the mountain air. Says Florence Pandi, member of the Friends of Dehra Dun: "This is a closed valley and we have an inverse airflow, making it hard for pollutants to escape. One plant like this can hold the valley to ransom." Adds Anand Jauhar, proprietor of Mussoorie's Savoy Hotel: "Sometimes the pollution is so bad your eyes water. And the dust clogs the pores of the leaves and causes forests to die."

Local opposition to the plant—one of the six mining-dependent factories still operating in the Mussoorie hills—reached such heights that the prime minister wrote a personal letter to former Uttar Pradesh chief minister N.D. Tiwari in April 1986 requesting "immediate appropriate action, including closure of the plant." "The plant," Rajiv wrote, "is causing considerable public nuisance and posing a health hazard."

But more than a year later, the plant continues to belch out chimneyfulls of odious smoke which hangs like an ominous shroud over the valley.

Opposition to the cement plant caused Rajiv to send a stiff note to UP's chief minister urging its closure. But the plant still operates.

Though the Government has a good case for closure, it apparently has no regulatory muscle to carry out its intention. Citizens groups are unable to file direct complaints in the courts since the Air Pollution Act does not give them the right to file third party judicial complaints. They can only petition the subdivisional magistrate to declare such a plant a public nuisance. And the SDM, acting on complaints, did issue ARC a show cause notice. But ARC's owners immediately appealed to a district judge who granted a stay order.

Undeterred, environmentalists then complained to the Uttar Pradesh State Pollution Control Board which had issued ARC a "no objection certificate" (NOC) in 1981 with certain conditions for setting up the factory. When the board discovered that ARC had not followed several pollution control standards, it withdrew the NOC. This should have been enough to close down the plant—a Central Government licence to establish an industry is given only on the basis of an NOC. But that did not prove to be the case.

The district administration, despite acknowledging the withdrawal of the NOC, insisted they were helpless in closing down the plant since the licence to operate it was given by the Government. The Government responded that the Air Pollution Act does not give it the power to close down a plant even after a NOC has been withdrawn.

The question then arose, who is to close the plant? The pollution board was left with only one remedy—to file a complaint with the chief judicial magistrate (CJM). But under the law, the CJM is only empowered to impose a maximum fine of Rs 10,000 and jail the equipment operator—not the owner or the management—for three months. This was yet another ineffectual remedy.

Finally, the valley's Rural Litigation Centre filed a writ petition in the Supreme Court. "What we have asked the court is, we as citizens have no power to litigate, no one seems to listen to the prime minister, you tell us what recourse we have?" said a centre activist.

The Supreme Court has issued show cause notices to several other plants in the area in conjunction with the petition. But the miners are taking their own time to respond. A final decision may perhaps be made in a year. And until then, ARC will continue to operate.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give your team some of the finest things in life.

When you give your team a gift of Nuware, you give them joy.

Many wonderful moments.

Simply because it's the finest tableware there is.

We've even brought in Swiss technology in melamine tableware. So you can be sure there's none better.

A feast for the eyes. It makes every special occasion just a little bit more special.

Every time they serve their guests on Nuware they'll say:

"Gracious! You've got style."

Call us for tie up promotions too.

NUWARE
Melamine Tableware

NUWARE INDIA LIMITED, 14, COMMUNITY CENTRE, NEW FRIENDS COLONY, NEW DELHI-110 065. PHONES: 636622, 636487

SPEER/A/155

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

greed are destroying virgin forests. According to several high-level government sources, illegal felling of trees is the joint handiwork of forest officials and smugglers and there are several ways in which they collaborate. The felling of healthy green trees is forbidden by law. But illegal fellers use a plethora of devices to get "legal" permits to chop. One common method is to use a blow torch to burn the roots of a tree. The healthy tree dries up in no time and is marked for "legal" felling by forest officials. Another method is to saw the tree halfway into its girth at the bottom. The saw-mark is barely discernible but the tree quickly dies.

FOR EVERY tree that is legally marked for felling," says S.C. Singha, former commissioner of Garhwal and now resident in Kanatal, Tehri district, "there are 10 trees which are cut illegally during the operation. The Forest Department has been a failure in protecting forests and in reforesting degraded land." The Kanatal-Tehri area represents a microcosm of what has happened to the nation's forests and groundwater and the Government's inability to deal with the problem. Virgin deodar, rhododendron, chestnut and wall-nut forests are disappearing. In Dhanolti a storm recently uprooted some deodar trees which were marked by the Forest Department for removal. But in the process, more than half the forest has been "removed" and healthy trees felled and smuggled out for commercial purposes. In Kanatal, a recent forest fire—the first of its kind in living memory—partly burned some trees in a 1000-acre deodar and chestnut forest. Those trees could have regenerated themselves. But the fire provided a handy excuse for chopping down almost the entire forest. In the Chamba-Mussoorie Hills, thousands of acres of trees have been felled in the last decade because the Government decided to allocate 300 plots, roughly 3,000 acres of land for apple orchards. The scheme did not succeed because the area is prone to hail storms. Most of the farmers have shifted to potato cultivation and encroached on standing reserve forest land.

The north face of the Bhagirathi river's catchment area lies in virtual ruin because of shifting cultivation and the Government's inability to cope with the problems of migrant cultivators and their herds. And the Government's performance in reforestation has been miserable. The Doon Valley and Garhwal are replete with examples of Forest Department "plantations" which have withered within two years and thriving private and community plantations. Says Singha: "The survival rate for trees planted by the Forest Department is less than 5 per cent. Besides, they do not have the required saplings. We could not even get them to plant cedar in our area so we had to settle for surai trees."

Devastation of forests has created water famines. Many states live on Central drought relief funds.

"No reforestation scheme will succeed," Kaushal points out, "until individuals or communities are convinced that they have a vested interest in protecting their forests." This is ably demonstrated deep inside a Tehri valley called Saklana. There, four villages have agreed among themselves that there will be no grazing or felling in selected areas and that villagers will travel only to certain selected portions of the area for their fuel and fodder needs. No fancy Forest Department schemes or elite tree saplings have been transported there. Within the protected areas—through natural self-regeneration—thick oak forests have mushroomed as if by magic. Says Chhatar Singh, a shopkeeper of Jaar village: "We did this after we became conscious that our lives were being destroyed by deforestation. Our children are even more conscious than we are."

It is this rising ecological consciousness—among poor village folk as well as the elite—which is, ultimately, the ray of hope in the Garhwal Himalayas. Kaushal has now organised bands of students from all over the country to begin replanting the mine-devastated mountainsides belonging to both the Forest Department as well as to gram sabhas. His teams are working on the worst kind of degraded forest, literally trying to green the rubble slope by slope in a 100-hectare area in Sahsradhara where Jhamri's village disappeared under a landslide. On slopes which still have some topsoil left, Kaushal and his volunteers—funded by a host of agencies including the Ministry of Community Development—have now successfully planted tun, vimal, and silver oak. Among the most poignant sights in the Dehra Dun and Garhwal Himalayas are the plantations of kala banja shrubs—a hardy plant which is an excellent soil-binder—which have been planted on barren limestone hillsides. Their struggle to survive in an environment clouded mostly by gloom is a sign of both life and hope.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE

Under Pressure

Dhirubhai Ambani wipes his forehead at Reliance's annual meeting: heated controversy

NAMAS BHOJANI

AS a soap opera plot, it would have had instant appeal: a rags-to-riches tycoon with a reputation for having built his booming business partly on the strength of political contacts is suddenly laid low by a disabling stroke; a media baron decides for a variety of reasons to start investigating the tycoon's various business deals; a change of government brings a new coterie into power, and the political nexus changes; an aristocratic businessman who believes that his own business has floundered because of torpedoing by the johnny-come-lately tycoon suddenly finds that he can start settling scores; the tycoon's young, inexperienced sons unexpectedly find themselves in the thick of battle to save their empire from the marauders. And almost overnight, a corporate juggernaut that seemed unstoppable has a large question mark hanging over its head.

As soap opera, it might have been enjoyable fare. As real life drama, it is edge-of-the-seat excitement. Reliance Industries—which has grown from next to nothing a decade ago to becoming the third largest company in the country, with sales last year of Rs 711 crore and profits of Rs 71 crore—has rarely been far removed from controversy. But the screaming headlines, angry questions in Parliament, unfriendly government decisions and stock-market crashes of the last few weeks have been something quite unprecedented even for Reliance.

Till the fireworks started, Reliance had seemed to be coasting along effortlessly to a 40 per cent growth in sales this year, and a further 200 per cent growth in the next three or four years, taking the company to the Rs 3,000 crore range, uncharted by any private sector company in India's history. New plants were getting commissioned, others were getting erected, yet others were getting cleared by the Government, fanciful financial goals were turning into reality and hard cash, and the rags-to-riches Ambanis seemed set to reach a scale of operations that would put them on the world stage and a place at last in the Fortune 500.

But now, there was a visible nervousness and tension in the company's plush headquarters in Bombay's Nariman Point. Anil Ambani, 27, younger son of Reliance's founder-chairman Dhirubhai Ambani, would normally have sat through a three-hour session with a journalist, undisturbed. Now, even an hour-long meeting was perennially disturbed by telexed messages, whispered consultations and the sense of action all around.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Anil's elder brother Mukesh, 29, had winged his way to New Delhi for what he had thought would be a day trip. Instead, he stayed on for five days as each new dawn brought fresh developments in the capital. Dhirubhai himself was busy in Switzerland, burning up the telephone wires to India with advice to his sons and senior executives.

Businessmen in Bombay who used to say they were Dhirubhai's admirers now referred to him in disparaging terms; others said Ambani had annoyed virtually everybody in the textiles and petrochemicals industries (Reliance's areas of operation). And the Ambanis seemed shaken. For though they were far from friendless in the corridors of power, Mrs Gandhi had gone, and both R.K. Dhawan and Pranab Mukherjee were in the wilderness.

So, quite suddenly, the country's most ambitious corporate juggernaut seemed in trouble. In sharp contrast with earlier accusations that the Government was bent on dispensing all manner of favours to Reliance, New Delhi now seemed almost eager to delve into Reliance's cupboards in search of old and new skeletons. Reliance investors were visibly nervous, the profitability of at least some of the company's operations had been sharply reduced, a new polyester fibre plant had run into unexpected teething problems, and controversies raged over Reliance's proposals for new projects, with rivals lobbying in government offices to stall Reliance. A company that had been racing towards seemingly impossible goals was suddenly rocked back on its heels.

There was plenty for the Ambanis to be fretting about. The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) reported that Rs 60 crore of bank loans to a variety of companies allegedly linked to the Ambanis had violated RBI guidelines. Finance Minister V.P. Singh announced the setting up of a special committee to go into the possible misuse of the loans, warned that the bank money would be recalled if any wrongdoing was established, and promised action against the culprits, be they "prince or pauper".

THE RBI also suspended three Canara Bank officials for back-dating letters of credit meant to finance imports by Reliance; the back-dating was meant to help Reliance get past a change in import policy. The Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) was conducting its own inquiries into the affair, while officials of the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence scoured through Reliance books and their counterparts in the Enforcement Directorate tried to trace possible links between the Ambanis and some of their non-resident investors. Reliance was well and truly under the Government's microscope.

On the stock-market, nervous investors began unloading Reliance shares, and the management tried for a couple of weeks to shore up the share prices, but then the stock exchange authorities clamped financial restrictions on Reliance share buyers. The result: Reliance shares crashed from Rs 366 to Rs 317—their biggest fall ever in a single day's trading. A further fall was unlikely, though there was little doubt that the Rs 10 share was still over-valued on the market.

Back in New Delhi, the Finance Ministry abolished a customs levy that had provided polyester yarn manufacturers (Reliance being the biggest among them) with a certain level of protection against imports. Yarn prices crashed to levels that were 20 per cent lower than they were a year ago, and Reliance's yarn operations suddenly became much less profitable.

CHARGES AGAINST RELIANCE	WHERE DO THEY STAND?
■ Back-dated letters of credit to escape import policy restrictions, which were allegedly leaked to Reliance	▶ Three bank officers suspended after RBI inquiry CBI investigations continuing into alleged leakage of information
■ Loans taken by companies belonging to Ambanis were used to buy debentures; the loans violated RBI guidelines	▶ Interim RBI report says its guidelines were violated; committee set up to go into details of how loans were used
■ Ambanis bought debentures with intent to convert them into shares at substantial profit	▶ Charge not proved; conversion of debentures into shares stopped by the Government
■ Reliance evaded excise to the extent of Rs 27 crore	▶ Issue gone for arbitration
■ Pranab Mukherjee gave Reliance unwarranted duty protection on polyester yarn from 1982	▶ Duty protection removed by V.P. Singh in June after yarn manufacturers delayed study of yarn production costs
■ Industry Ministry allowed product flexibility to yarn and fibre manufacturers in a manner as to benefit only Reliance	▶ This decision does not help Reliance
■ Ambanis' non-resident companies bought Reliance shares in 1982, and recently shifted to new tax haven to escape Government scrutiny	▶ Enforcement Directorate officials still conducting investigations into this
■ Ambanis shoring up Reliance share prices on stock market	▶ Stock market authorities impose special trading margin, Reliance share drops

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Earlier, hours before the Reliance board was to meet in Bombay to consider applying to the Government for permission to convert debentures worth Rs 323 crore into shares, the ministry announced that no such conversions would be allowed. The prices of the debentures too had crashed (INDIA TODAY, June 30).

The man who had so effectively set the cat among the pigeons was an 83-year-old media patriarch, Ram Nath Goenka, who used the front page of his 11-edition Indian Express (circulation: over 6.5 lakh) plus a variety of regional language newspapers to focus the country's attention on what were billed as a series of scandals, forcing the Government to take notice and finally swing into action.

Ram Nath Goenka of the Indian Express fixed a meeting between Ambani and Nusli Wadia to sort out their differences.

Magazines and week-end tabloids took off from where the Express left off, coming out with yet further allegations against Reliance and its chairman Dhirubhai Ambani: that Ambani had lied while writing to the prime minister about his company's affairs, even that an unnamed Bombay industrialist (obviously Ambani) had teamed up with a businessman in London to try and unseat Rajiv Gandhi. The reported budget for this grand exercise: Rs 100 crore.

If Goenka had seized the initiative by setting the stage, picking the battleground and choosing the issues to be debated, Reliance found itself strangely handicapped in mounting a defence, let alone a counter-attack. For years the word had been whispered around that the company's management got its way in Government, Parliament, the media and elsewhere by the effective deployment of hard cash, judicious placement of Reliance shares and debentures in people's pockets (which promised instant rewards because of the unusually high Reliance share price) and by the handing out of its own suit lengths.

So now, when matters had come to the crunch, there was hardly anyone who felt he could afford to stand up and defend Reliance—for fear of being branded as being in Reliance's pay. In a sense this was now the biggest problem that the company faced. Despite its amazing growth, despite achieving what no other Indian company had been able to do, the company now had a serious image problem that proved a major handicap.

HARI OM GULATI

Nusli Wadia, the chairman of Bombay Dyeing, said that he saw little point in the meeting, which proved fruitless.

Meanwhile, the questions tumbled over one another: Why were Ram Nath Goenka and the Indian Express so intent on their Reliance campaign? How serious were the charges against the company? Was Reliance really in trouble with the Government? What did this mean for the future of the business world's brightest and yet most controversial star?

It quickly became clear that apart from the rags-to-riches Ambani, the com-

MUKESH AMBANI

"We have not broken any rule"

FEW YOUNG men in their 20s have been put in as hot a seat as the Ambani sons—Mukesh, 29, and Anil, 27. Forced to battle it out up front while their father Dhirubhai, victim of a stroke in February, recuperated in Switzerland and advised them over long-distance telephone, the younger Ambanis were visibly nervous last fortnight. Mukesh spent five days in New Delhi, ceaselessly doing his rounds, and sat down to an interview with Executive Editor T.N. NINAN shortly before returning to Bombay. Excerpts:

Q. How do you see the various charges against you and Reliance?

A. What are the charges?

Q. One, that you took Rs 100 crore from the banks to buy your own debentures, with a view to converting them into shares later at a profit.

A. I totally deny this. Our family companies have only taken Rs 16.5 crore, and we haven't bought a single debenture of 1985. So where is the question of profit? This allegation is calculated to mislead decision-makers. The loans are perfectly legal, and in order. There is no rule whatsoever...I don't see the charge. What is the charge?

Q. Did you take bank loans to acquire Reliance debentures in violation of Reserve Bank guidelines?

A. The loans our family companies have taken are for working capital and other business purposes. We have not violated any rule. The Government has taken the right decision in appointing the RBI committee. Let us wait for its report.

Q. What if the Finance Ministry asks you to repay the money?

A. As far as our family companies are concerned, the loans are backed by more than 300 per cent collateral and we have not violated any rule or law. But we will abide by the Government's decision.

Q. The second charge is that the recent Industry Ministry decision to broadband industrial licences in polyester yarn and polyester fibre was designed to help only Reliance.

A. This is totally false, absurd.

Q. How is it absurd?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A. How does it help us? Broadbanding helps only those units which have either a yarn or a fibre licence; they can switch from one to the other under broadbanding. But we already have both the licences. So how does it help us?

Q. None of your competitors has the stipulated minimum capacities, so they can't take advantage of it. Only you have that capacity.

A. No. Indian Organics, India Polyfibres, Orissa Synthetics and several others can take advantage of this. The minimum capacity has been deliberately misrepresented in a section of the press. As I understand it, the Government wants industry to operate with economies of scale. This has nothing to do with the approved capacities of Reliance.

Q. The CBI is looking into charges that information regarding a policy change on imports was leaked to you, and you back-dated letters of credit to take advantage of this.

A. I know they are looking into the policy leakage question and surrounding areas. We will assist the investigation.

Q. Non-resident companies from the Isle of Man invested in your shares in 1982, and they have now shifted to the British Virgin Islands to escape scrutiny. The indication is that these are your companies. What do you have to say about this?

A. We have no connection whatsoever with these companies.

Q. You haven't looked into them?

A. We have no control over them, and have no reason to look into them.

Q. Has the Government asked you any questions about this?

A. No, no one has asked us any questions.

Q. How do you see the recent drop in the prices of Reliance shares? Are your shareholders getting nervous?

A. This is a reaction to reports in a section of powerful media suggesting that the Government is against Reliance, and misrepresenting government decisions to give credence to this propaganda.

Q. Nevertheless, some government decisions will affect your profitability: the removal of anti-dumping duty on yarn, refusal to convert your debentures into shares...

A. There is a lot of propaganda to this effect. The debentures were raised for specific projects which will yield additional production. The interest liability will be automatically absorbed by the additional production, which in turn will generate additional profit.

Q. Do you think the Government is acting against you in any way?

A. No. Some newspapers have levelled certain charges and made non-issues into issues. The Government has a right to investigate any allegation, whether it is against us or anyone. And we are accountable both to our shareholders and to the public at large.

Q. Questions have been raised in a number of ways about the way in which Reliance does its business. How will this affect your operations?

HEMANT PITHWA

"The idea is to prove Reliance guilty somehow. The issue remains the same, the charges keep changing."

A. We've faced this in the past. We've faced attacks. Parliament is supreme, it can discuss anything in the public interest. But we'll be on target on sales and profits. This whole thing has been going on for one-and-a-half years, but we built our fibre plant in record time. And we don't believe business rivals should take their fight into Parliament.

Q. How do you see the press reports on Reliance?

A. By and large, the press has always been fair to us. But a certain section of the press has started looking at us rather differently and the idea is to prove Reliance guilty somehow. Take the PTA (purified terephthalic acid) import case. The first charge was that customs duties had been evaded. When that did not stick, they said it was a policy leakage. When that did not stick, it moved on to the back-dating of letters of credit. That didn't stick, so it moved on to finding fault with the banks' procedures. So the whole approach is that Reliance is guilty: the issue remains the same, the charges keep on changing.

Q. The RBI report does say that the loans violated RBI guidelines.

A. The RBI report is preliminary. Please wait for the final committee report. I can talk only of our family companies. Reliance has got nothing to do with the other companies. The whole idea is to somehow malign Reliance.

Q. The RBI may not indict Reliance, but it indicts the banks.

A. It's too early to say that. The committee is still going into it.

Q. You mentioned business rivalries. Is all this a result of business rivalries?

A. It's very difficult to say. This kind of attack is unprecedented anywhere in the world, the press going after a corporation in this fashion.

Q. Why are these wars perennially going on in the synthetic textile industry?

A. We really don't believe in a battle. We're implementing our projects and doing our business. I don't know how you call it a battle. It's just one-sided.

Q. Do you think Ram Nath Goenka has anything against you?

A. I don't think Babuji has anything against me.

Q. Or against Reliance?

A. Only Babuji can answer this.

Q. A number of meetings took place between you and Goenka to arrive at a settlement.

A. There is no question of a settlement. What settlement? We have great respect for Babuji. I've been meeting him always. This is not new.

Q. Nothing emerged from these meetings?

A. (Pause) What do you mean by that?

Q. Well, in terms of a truce.

A. (Pause) What do you mean by truce?

Q. Well, if the Indian Express is carrying a campaign on some issues, will this continue, or stop?

A. Why don't you ask Babuji?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Murli Deora, local Congress(I) boss and a friend of the Ambanis, tried to mediate between Ambani and Wadia, but failed.

Jamnadas Moorjani of the Crimpers' Association campaigned tirelessly to remove duty protection for Reliance yarn, and succeeded.

Pranab Mukherjee had given Reliance yarn extra duty protection despite senior officials noting that this was unwarranted.

bative Goenka and the unimpeachable V.P. Singh, the fourth important player in this saga was the aristocratic Nusli Wadia, chairman of Bombay Dyeing and long-time Goenka friend. Wadia had complained over the years that his projects had been torpedoed by Ambani, and his business operations hamstrung by Reliance's machinations. And in recent months he himself had been the focus of considerable media attention, with charges that he had been siphoning money out of Bombay Dyeing to his privately-held companies, cooking up Bombay Dyeing's account books, and controversy over his land deals.

But quite unlike the Swraj Paul-H.P. Nanda slanging match—when the tycoons themselves slugged it out for the media to report—this time the war was being fought second-hand. Neither Wadia nor the Ambanis said anything on the record about each other; instead, both leaked information to the press, which gleefully took up the battle.

Indeed, the war as a whole began late last year when a flurry of press reports on both Ambani and Wadia persuaded Ambani to sue for peace. The telephone rang one December morning as Goenka sat in his Express Towers penthouse lair, in Bombay's Nariman Point. Ambani was on the line, he wanted Goenka to fix a tripartite meeting with Wadia so that they could sort out their differences and end both their business rivalry as well as the growing flood of press reports on each other's activities.

Goenka—who had a reasonably amicable relationship with Ambani till then—telephoned Wadia in his office at Ballard Estate, close to the docks where Wadia's forefathers had two centuries ago built the oldest ship still afloat in the world. But Wadia demurred, pleading that he saw little point in a meeting that would only result in mutual recriminations. Undeterred, Goenka called him back later in the day to inform him that a meeting had been fixed with Ambani for that evening, in Goenka's penthouse suite. Unable to back out, Wadia finally went at the appointed hour.

Accounts of what happened at the meeting vary. One version is that Ambani proposed ending his rivalry with Wadia in the market-place (both had been trying for similar licences in the past, and both were about to start producing alternative raw materials for making polyester yarn), and suggested that they carve up the raw material market between themselves so that both could make hay at everybody else's expense. A second version is that Ambani merely suggested ways to help Wadia find a market for his troubled dimethyl terephthalate (DMT) plant.

Whatever the case, little came of the meeting, which ended with Ambani

Media reports on Ambani and Wadia: second-hand war

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

clamping Wadia in a bear hug and extending a very belated invitation to his daughter's wedding the next day. At the wedding itself, the Ambanis were effusive in their welcome to Wadia, who was duly photographed with Dhirubhai.

SEVERAL accounts now do the rounds on the provocations that led to the Indian Express finally launching its unprecedented campaign against Reliance. Ambani allegedly told Goenka that he went around "with a silver shoe on one foot, and a golden shoe on the other: everyone got one or the other depending on his price". By another account, Ambani told Goenka that everyone had a price, that Express reporters were on his pay-roll, and that even Goenka had a price. This was later explained away by an Ambani friend as having been said in jest, but the 83-year-old patriarch took great offence. By a third account, Goenka is supposed to have been incensed by the Ambanis putting out a story through the Press Trust of India (PTI), contradicting an Express report to the effect that the CBI had been asked to investigate Reliance's affairs. Goenka, apart from owning the Indian Express, is also chairman of PTI, and decided that Ambani had to be taken head-on.

Nevertheless, no friction was in evidence on the day Dhirubhai suffered his stroke in February, for Murli Deora—president of the Bombay Regional Congress(I) Committee and one of Ambani's most trusted friends—recalls that Goenka was among the first to send Dhirubhai flowers. Deora later tried to act as mediator between Ambani and Wadia, but nothing came of this either.

Finally, it was young Mukesh Ambani who decided to take the bull by the horns and sought a meeting with Goenka. But his calls to him were not returned. Dhirubhai then asked Mukesh to barge into Goenka's flat in New Delhi's secluded Sunder Nagar, even without an appointment if necessary. Mukesh did just that, and was kept waiting at the door before being told Goenka could not see him. When he was on his way down the stairs, however, he was called back up, and thus began the first of a series of meetings between the aging press baron and the young inheritor.

Goenka hurled charges and recriminations at Mukesh, who is said to have apologised for mistakes the Ambanis may have made. He also pleaded with Goenka that in the interest of his father's health, the Indian Express should stop publishing reports about Reliance till Dhirubhai

V.P. SINGH

"We can ask back the money"

WHENEVER there is a business controversy, Finance Minister V.P. Singh is in the eye of the storm. Singh spoke last fortnight to Executive Editor T.N. NINAN and Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA on recent government decisions about Reliance. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. How does the Government see the issues raised by what has been called the Reliance 'loan mela'?

A. The Reserve Bank has submitted its preliminary report. A committee has now been formed to go into the issues in detail, with straightforward people on it. They'll go into whether the Reserve Bank guidelines were violated, whether bankers exceeded their lending powers, and whether the money was used for the purpose it had been asked for.

"There is no breach of faith with Reliance. Their debentures were not convertible to start with."

Q. If there is a violation of the guidelines, what can you do about it?

A. One thing we can do is ask back the money.

Q. Why did you decide not to allow the conversion of Reliance's non-convertible debentures into shares?

A. Such conversion was not desirable in itself. The Reliance debentures were not convertible in the first place. Only two companies have got such conversion in the past, so this is not a general issue for the corporate sector.

Q. Why did you take the decision at that point in time? This suggested that it was aimed at Reliance.

A. There is no breach of faith with Reliance because their debentures were not convertible to start with. And it was better to stop talk of a conversion as early as possible because people were being taken on a path to believe these debentures would be converted. Hopes were being fanned and investors were getting drawn into more transactions. The market was getting inflated by the promoters.

Q. So this did relate to Reliance.

A. The Government felt it was unfair to do this to only one company. So we made a statement across the board. It was not aimed at one company. That would be if I allowed other companies to convert but not Reliance.

Q. You recently removed the anti-dumping duty on polyester yarn, produced by Reliance and others.

A. This has generally been welcomed by consumers and the press. This had been going on, and we said we would go by the report of the Bureau of Industrial Costs and Prices (BICP). But the BICP report was delayed, companies were not providing information. So I had to take a decision, and I told them if you drag things out you will have to swallow the bitter pill. If you try to stall a government decision, you can't get away with it.

Q. Will this lead to increased imports because these have become cheaper with lower duty?

A. Prices have dropped, but there are no reports of indigenous stocks piling up. Stocks are moving. They might be biting into the margin of profit, but that is different (laughs). I think it has done a lot of good.

Q. Why was the duty imposed in 1982 in the first place?

A. Even originally, it was strongly opposed by officials. But the duty was imposed.

Q. What action have you taken on the charge that some banks back-dated Reliance letters of credit?

A. The CBI report has not come. But the Reserve Bank came across evidence of back-dating by Canara Bank at the request of the party. Three officers of Canara Bank have been suspended because the Reserve Bank inquiry proved it was back-dated.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

went abroad after chairing Reliance's annual shareholders' meeting in June.

BUT THE most important meeting was to follow. Apparently realising that Mukesh was not making much headway, Dhirubhai himself now asked for a meeting with Goenka and offered to go across to Express Towers. But Goenka said the mountain would come to Mohammed and went across to Ambani's office in the nearby Maker Chambers. The meeting lasted 45 minutes, turned out to be predictably stormy, and although Goenka said he would not publish anything till July (when a new editor was taking charge of Indian Express), no no-war pact resulted.

Nevertheless, the fragile three-week truce might well have been extended were it not for a fresh media blitz, with magazines and week-end tabloids launching blistering attacks on either the Ambanis or Wadia. Most of the publications trained their guns on the Ambanis, and it was left to the fortnightly Onlooker to fire back at Wadia in June. However, the Ambanis seem to have been anxious to try and stop the Onlooker report at the last minute because Deora made a desperate attempt to prevent the story from getting printed. Unfortunately, the magazine's proprietor was away in Tirupati and the editor in Cork, and the presses kept rolling. So war was declared again, and the Express screamed on the front page that Dhirubhai had lied when he told his shareholders that the Ambani family had not used bank funds to buy the Reliance debentures issued in 1985.

By then, Ambani was away in Switzerland for further rest and recuperation, and his sons took time to find their feet in the new battle. After weeks of vacillation, parleys and back-room lobbying, Reliance finally came out with a series of 15 advertisements in 10 major newspapers across the country, including the Indian Express, seeking to address Reliance's basic image problem. It was not the best strategy to adopt—given the inherent credibility problem that an advertising campaign has in the face of negative reports in the news columns—but the advertisements nevertheless talked of Reliance's 'concern for truth', 'allegiance to ethics', 'commitment to growth' and much else. Goenka hit right back with a fresh hail of newsprint.

As the battle got more vicious, information leaked out that while Goenka and his accountant brain S. Gurumurthy (who authored at least some of the Express articles) had been campaigning on the Reliance debenture issue, both of them and their relatives, friends and employees had been allotted Reliance debentures. It was difficult to establish whether these had been sold at a profit or loss. Also, it turned out that Imprint, a magazine that had carried a negative report on Ambani, had till last year been part-owned by Nusli Wadia and his father Neville.

Still, the crucial question remained: How much substance was there to the various charges against Reliance? Many of the accusations relate to events of the past, and had no great impact until the Express dropped a bombshell in mid-May with what it called the Reliance 'loan mela', charging the Ambanis with using bank funds to buy Reliance debentures which they then intended to convert into the company's overpriced shares at great profit to themselves. That finally set the snowballing controversy rolling.

The Ambanis continue to insist (see interview with Mukesh Ambani) that they did not buy any of the debentures issued by Reliance in 1985. But as V.P. Singh pointed out (see interview), the Ambanis had been deliberately beating up the debenture prices by leading investors to believe that they would be converted into shares. If nothing else, this betrayed an arrogant confidence in the ability to swing the necessary government decision. But Singh stood in the way. Reliance also stands implicitly indicted in the case concerning the back-dating of letters of credit last year, because three bank officials have been suspended following an RBI inquiry.

V.P. Singh also confirmed that when Pranab Mukherjee had imposed additional customs duty in 1982 to give extra protection to Reliance yarn against imports, he had done this in the face of opposition from the officials who dealt with the matter. And Jamnadas Moorjani, former president of the All-India Crimpers Association, who has tirelessly campaigned to remove this duty, recalls pointing out to Mukherjee in 1982 that all the officials had opposed the additional duty burden. By Moorjani's account, Mukherjee retorted that the Crimpers had bought up the officials. Moorjani retorted: "Sir, we know who has the money to buy whom." Mukherjee could not be reached for his comment.

Nevertheless, the duty was finally removed by V.P. Singh last month after he discovered that yarn manufacturers, including Reliance among them, were dragging their feet in providing cost data that could be used for a proper study of yarn-manufacturing costs.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SO FAR, at least, not enough has emerged to provoke the Government to appoint a commission of inquiry to look into Reliance affairs (as was done in 1969, when the then Congress Young Turk Chandra Shekhar carried on a campaign in Parliament against the Birlas, or when the Vivien Bose Commission was set up to look into the affairs of the Sahu Jain group).

Meanwhile, what did all this mean for Reliance's operations? The Government decision to not allow the conversion of Reliance debentures into shares limits the company's financial reach, but the Ambanis have already announced that they will get around this with a fresh Rs 400-crore convertible debenture issue that they propose to apply for. Similarly, the reduced protection against polyester yarn imports has resulted in domestic yarn prices dropping, and this will affect Reliance's profitability. Finally, the teething troubles faced by the company's new polyester staple fibre plant have meant that there has been very little production of the fibre in the first four months of the plant's operations. But the Ambanis claim that the overall profitability of their expanded operations will not suffer noticeably, and that despite being embroiled in a variety of controversies, the company has been able to implement its fibre project in record time.

What of the future? To the extent that the company has depended in the past on government favours, the Government's attitude to Reliance could be crucial. There seems little sympathy for Reliance in the Prime Minister's Secretariat and V.P. Singh can be expected to be his usual, uncompromising self. But the Ambanis have their allies in the Government, and two ministers are understood to have said last fortnight that the attack on Reliance was in reality an attack on the Congress(I)—because both Wadia and Goenka were Janata sympathisers and the Ambanis had been steadfast Congress(I) supporters. This was precisely the message that the Ambanis themselves carried to party MP's. And (in an oblique criticism of recent government measures against Reliance), one of the ministers remarked to a friend that "Dhirubhai Ambani is more than a match for Goenka, provided the Government is neutral". Meanwhile, in the thick of battle, the Industry Ministry cleared Reliance's application for expanding its purified terephthalate acid (PTA) project's capacity from 75,000 tonnes to 1 lakh tonnes, while a similar application from Bombay Dyeing for expanding its DMT capacity from 60,000 tonnes to 1 lakh tonnes of either DMT or PTA had been pending for a year.

Wadia has his friends too, of course, among them Minister of State for Railways Madhav Rao Scindia, who indirectly has a shareholding stake in Bombay Dyeing. INDIA TODAY confirmed last fortnight that Scindia had spoken to the Finance Ministry on Bombay Dyeing's problems.

So the key question was whether Reliance would continue to get government clearances for its various projects and financing arrangements. The company already has approvals from the Government for projects with a total investment budget of Rs 1,500 crore: for manufacturing TV glass shells and picture tubes, for a series of petro-chemical products, and for expanding some of its existing projects to reach new minimum economic capacity levels stipulated by the Government. The company also has applications pending with the Government for a naphtha cracker unit, is in the running for the aromatics joint sector project in Uttar Pradesh, and is pushing for a variety of other projects as well. The total investment proposed in all these: Rs 1,200 crore.

These are staggering sums for any company, and Reliance can't get there without money to invest. Two crucial applications with the Finance Ministry will indicate how secure the financing pattern is. One is already pending—for a Rs 125-crore share issue by the proposed Reliance Capital Finance Trust, a leasing company that will give the Ambanis enormous financial leverage (leasing companies can borrow up to 10 times their share capital, compared to a 2:1 ratio stipulated for manufacturing companies). The second application will be for the new Rs 400 crore debenture issue.

Reliance's Patalganga complex: teething troubles

Reliance's future will, quite clearly, be determined by the fate of these applications to the Finance Ministry, by its getting approvals for some of the industrial licence applications, and equally crucially, by the fate of the various inquiries being conducted right now by a number of government investigating agencies. Reliance should be able to ride out the present storm if no criminal offence is established, and if no fresh scandals hit the headlines, for then any government crackdown on Reliance will look like a witch-hunt on a company that has been too successful for its rivals' liking.

Nevertheless, the Ambanis are bound to have got a jolt, and will almost certainly have to ask themselves questions about their style of operations, the reasons for their being constantly embroiled in controversy, the weaknesses and strengths that have come to light in a battle that was fought with Dhirubhai far removed from the scene, and the need to adapt to a situation where they are getting bigger and more high-profile, and therefore under constantly closer scrutiny than they have ever been in the past.

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Individually, We Pioneered The Computer Industry.

Burroughs

Together, We Intend To Reshape It.

The merger of Sperry Corporation with Burroughs Corporation begins a new chapter in a long, proud history of two great international companies.

Sperry and Burroughs pioneered the computer age, and have for four decades invented and delivered advanced electronic systems to the world's most sophisticated customers.

The partnership of Sperry and Burroughs creates a major new force in the world's information systems industry—a powerful entity whose combined talents mean greater ability to compete in every market we serve.

Our partnership provides new challenges and opportunities—and we will respond with a renewed commitment to excellence.

To our customers, we pledge to protect your investment in our respective product lines, to use our combined resources to accelerate delivery of new and upgraded products and services, and to strengthen those relationships valued and nurtured over many years.

To our employees, we pledge expanded opportunity for personal growth and to continue to reward quality, innovation and excellence.

To shareholders, we pledge to work for even greater return on your investment.

This partnership is committed above all to the needs of its customers. We are eager to launch our combined business into a new era—of growth, innovation and international competitive strength.

In India Burroughs is Tata Burroughs Limited

© 1986 Burroughs Corporation

11/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YEN TO INVEST

LARGE Japanese companies are showing a new interest in India because of the problems posed to Japan by the rising yen. The immediate objective of companies like Mitsui and Mitsubishi, which are among those that have been pouring into the country to talk to trade and industry circles, is to try and find avenues for investing yen in Indian projects, and to identify Indian projects in which Japanese companies can invest their funds. A number of Japanese companies have already had discussions with organisations like the State Trading Corporation. But unlike in the past, when the Japanese were able to make a quick entry into sectors like automobiles and electronics, the Government is being more cautious in vetting the Japanese proposals. What results the new Japanese initiative will produce, therefore, remains to be seen.

RAISING EXPORTS

CONCERNED by the poor export performance last year and the fact that many companies do not fulfil the export obligations stipulated while granting industrial licences, the Government is now formulating a new scheme to ensure that companies do not escape from their export commitments. The new scheme is also designed to ensure that the large companies—most of which have a negative foreign exchange balance due to poor export performance—pay more attention to earning foreign exchange. Its details are still being finalised, but Commerce Ministry officials say that it will leave no loopholes for errant companies.

FUTURES TRADING

AFTER many years in which the Government frowned on futures trading in commodities, the sun seems to be shining again on futures trading. This was allowed in as many as 19 items in the 1950s, and was whittled down to 15 in 1963 and a mere three in 1983. Now, however, the Government is gradually veering around to the view that dealing in futures is not the reprehensible instrument for speculators it has long been considered. Castorseed got the go-ahead in May last year, and potatoes some months later. Now the Forward Markets Commission has recommended that similar permission be granted to raw jute, hessian, sacking, cotton, coconut oil and silver. The assumption is that after the inevitable time-lag involved in official consideration, the proposal will eventually get the green signal.

CUTTING COSTS

WHILE the Government wrestles with the details of its new automobile policy, it is simultaneously considering a proposal to review the tax burden on two-wheelers so as to bring down the prices of motor-cycles, scooters and mopeds. Many of the new 100 cc two-wheeler models introduced on the market cost substantially more than older models that have a much greater engine displacement: the Rajdoot-Yamaha 100 cc machine, for instance, costs more than the older Rajdoot 175 cc. The new models' high costs are attributed to high customs duties on imported parts and on the rising value of the Japanese yen (most of the new machines are being manufactured with Japanese collaboration). The Government is therefore considering a move to reduce the tax burden so as to bring down the prices of the new models.

DIPPING RESERVES

INDIA'S foreign exchange reserves have held up remarkably well despite a growing foreign trade deficit. At the end of June, the reserves at Rs 5,504 crore were Rs 103 crore higher than last year. They had been dipping after October last year, but saw a sudden upsurge after February this year, probably due to increased non-resident investment inflows. But with the Government deciding to lower the interest rates on non-resident deposits in line with global trends, such inflows may soon shrink. This is precisely what happened in June, which saw the reversal of the uptrend since March.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

SMOKING WAR

CIGARETTE wars keep erupting in the unlikeliest of places, and the latest round has been fought before the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Commission over ITC's Now brand of cigarettes, introduced in late 1985. The charge by 27 smokers (many of whom ITC said were connected with the rival cigarette company GTC Industries) was that ITC had introduced the Now brand name which belonged to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of the US, and which had already registered this as its trade mark in India, and that ITC was deceiving smokers by selling a relatively high-tar high-nicotine cigarette with the brand name of a low-tar low-nicotine American cigarette.

ITC replied that its Now packaging and design were different from those used abroad by Reynolds, that ITC had not known Reynolds had registered its trade mark in India and had never linked its cigarettes with Reynolds in any way. It had also applied for a rectification of the trade marks register. In the first round, the MRTP Commission has allowed ITC to continue selling and advertising its cigarettes, but skirmishes will continue before the trade marks authority and in the courts, where Reynolds has sued ITC.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHAW WALLACE

Fresh Charges

SUDDENLY, the Government has mounted an offensive on the Shaw Wallace front. The celebrated face-off between Dubai-based entrepreneur Manu Chhabria and Shaw Wallace Chairman S.P. Acharya, took a fresh turn last month when the Finance Ministry's Enforcement Directorate followed up on months of investigations by finally filing a criminal complaint charging Chhabria, his brother Kishore and Bangalore-based liquor baron Vijay Mallya with having conspired to acquire 38.7 per cent of Shaw Wallace shares offshore, in violation of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act (FERA).

Offstage, the directorate was baying at the heels of senior Shaw Wallace executives, including Chairman Acharya: ironically enough, they too are accused of having violated the same FERA law. Meanwhile, the West Bengal Government arrested a Shaw Wallace official in an excise evasion case (INDIA TODAY, June 15, 1985) before letting him out on bail. And to top it all, the Company Law Board (CLB) in Calcutta was busy compiling a report on Shaw Wallace's account books last fortnight after subjecting them to careful scrutiny.

That was not all. The Calcutta High Court ordered that Acharya should not chair the next annual meeting of Shaw Wallace shareholders, and appointed a neutral chairman in his place, but the date of the delayed meeting—critical for Chhabria to exercise his overwhelming voting power—is yet to be fixed. Yet Chhabria seemed dissatisfied with the pace of events in the high court, and was readying late last fortnight to go directly to the Supreme Court.

Offstage, the Enforcement Directorate was baying at the heels of senior Shaw Wallace executives, including Chairman Acharya: ironically enough, they too are accused of having violated the same FERA law.

Meanwhile, Kishore Chhabria was pleading with the financial institutions to replace Acharya with their own nominee as an independent chairman till the whole dispute was sorted out. He attended an 'open house' session organised by Finance Minister V.P.Singh and complained that non-residents would not invest in India if investments like his ran into trouble. And finally, he asked S.Gurumurthy (who has been writing in the Indian Express on Reliance affairs) to investigate the accounts of Shaw Wallace and detect wrongdoing.

Clearly, the Shaw Wallace affair was bubbling over yet again. Some of the more recent events were probably unconnected with the Chhabria takeover bid (for example, the FERA and excise cases against the Shaw Wallace management), and those accused were anxious to underplay the significance of the latest developments. A Chhabria spokesman claimed that the Enforcement Directorate's criminal complaint was merely meant to comply with the stipulation that such a complaint must be filed within a year of a raid: Chhabria's and Mallya's offices and homes had been raided in July 1985. And a Shaw Wallace spokesman was equally quick to suggest that the CLB investigation was "routine". It is true that the local CLB office conducts periodic investigations of company books, but this time the investigation had been ordered by New Delhi.

The Shaw Wallace spokesman also claimed that he was unaware of any FERA case. But Enforcement officials confirmed that there was an unpublicised case for which hearings were held last April. The issues involve commissions Shaw Wallace had availed of in the 1970s for importing chemicals or fertilisers. And a ruling is awaited.

Clearly, the heat is on. The Government seems convinced that a link exists between Mallya and the Chhabrias in the offshore acquisition of Shaw Wallace shares. The criminal complaint that the Enforcement Directorate filed last month at the special court for economic offences in Bangalore cites a litany of sins. Some of the charges and evidence have already been aired in the press, but some cover fresh ground.

Among the fresh evidence was the fact that three months ago, J.M. Rajan Pillai, a Clearly, the heat is on—the Government seems to be convinced that a link exists between Mallya and the Chhabrias in the acquisition of Shaw Wallace shares.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UK resident who used to live in Singapore, had told the Enforcement Directorate that he had sold Wotan and Tentura, both Singapore-based companies, over two years ago to a client of a law firm in Singapore for 29,000 Singapore dollars. One of those present at the discussions was Vittal Mallya, Vijay's late father. (Questions were later raised as to whether Tentura had helped finance the acquisition of the Shaw Wallace shares by borrowing cash from the State Bank of India (SBI). Responding to an Enforcement Directorate notice, Mallya denied all the allegations and asked the directorate to furnish the documents on which it had based its conclusions.

While follow-up action on the criminal complaint is now awaited, Chhabria's latest missive accuses the Shaw Wallace directors of planning to promote new brand names for its liquor products at the expense of established brand names. The new names, the argument goes, will not be owned by Shaw Wallace but by other companies controlled by the Shaw Wallace management. So if Chhabria does eventually get control of Shaw Wallace, he will be left with brands whose value has diminished in the market-place. This follows an earlier accusation that the company's popular Hayward brand had been sold.

A THIRD charge is that the Shaw Wallace directors are filing one petition after another in court in order to stall the main proceedings, which relate to the Shaw Wallace management's appeal against the dismissal of their case before the CLB last year. Last fortnight, Acharya filed an affidavit questioning Kishore Chhabria's appointment as a director of R.G. Shaw and hence R.G. Shaw's petition in the court. Acharya declined comment on these and other allegations, pleading that they are sub judice.

Meanwhile, what substance there was to the various Chhabria charges against the Shaw Wallace management remained difficult to establish. A company official dismissed the allegation that Shaw Wallace was promoting new brand names at the expense of existing ones as being simply untrue. And though a senior company source claimed that the goodwill of the Hayward brand name had been sold to the wife of senior Shaw Wallace executive K. Srinivasan, the latter flatly denied any such transaction.

Acharya gave the impression last fortnight of not being worried by the continuing skirmishes and said blandly that the management was doing its duty. And he argued that the court has first to take up Shaw Wallace's petition against the CLB order before fixing a date for the shareholders' meeting. In other words, he still had time. Meanwhile, the Chhabria move to take the matter to the Supreme Court seemed to suggest that he himself was unhappy at the speed with which things were moving. In the interim, the appointment of an independent chairman for the shareholders' meeting represents a moral, but not a strategic, victory.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Calcutta

THE MONSOON

Mixed Fare

FOR OFFICIALS of the Indian Meteorological Department (IMD) poring through the scores of telex messages and telegrams received from its 550 weather observatories and 1,200 rain-gauges dotted throughout the country the monsoon was heartening. By mid-monsoon, two-thirds of India had received normal rain (see map) while wheat, maize and paddy crops in Orissa, east Madhya Pradesh and Punjab had exceeded expectations.

But the worrying news was that rainfall in Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Bihar, Rajasthan and the north-eastern states was deficient. Officials hope that when the monsoon ends in September, the position would improve. Dr R.P. Sarkar, IMD director-general, said: "So far in most parts of the country the rainfall has been good."

With 74 per cent of the cultivated land in the country dependent on rains, the south-west monsoon is crucial. Farmers in Kerala scanning the sky through the relentless summer for the dark monsoon clouds to gather had a heartstopping moment when it showed no signs of arriving on June 1—the day the south-west winds bring the first showers. To their relief, it came three days later, but while it moved swiftly towards coastal Karnataka it showed no signs of proceeding further north.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

A fortnight later it moved up the coast and apart from putting many Bombay streets under knee-deep water, brought rain to the parched table lands of central Maharashtra. Then it lashed down on Madhya Pradesh sending river levels to dangerous heights before hitting Uttar Pradesh, Punjab and J&K.

Only Rajasthan and Gujarat, suffering from severe water shortages, found themselves fairly dry till 10 days later when the rain gods decided to end their agony and blessed them with a few showers. It has, however, detoured New Delhi so far, leaving the capital an island of dryness while adjoining states have had plenty of rain.

In most of the north-eastern states, the rains are taking their time coming. The meagre rainfall in Nagaland, Manipur and Tripura are already 46 per cent below normal. But for many of these states it is a mixed blessing because excess rainfall could lead to highly damaging floods.

But if the rains came on time for coastal south India, it flattered only to deceive. Paddy farmers in Kerala and Tamil Nadu who were anticipating a good crop suddenly found the rains petering out. Like the rest of the farmers in the country, they are now keeping their fingers crossed till September when the rains start abating. And for once the weather bureau refuses to predict the outcome.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JOHNSON & JOHNSON

Free For All

THE SANITARY napkin industry in the country, which has witnessed a lot of petty skirmishing in recent times, seems set for another round of bloodletting. The main adversaries are Johnson & Johnson Ltd, subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson of USA, and the J.K.Malhotra group's Christine Hoden India (CHI), along with its sister concern, Primella Sanitary Products. The bone of contention: a new beltless sanitary napkin which Christine Hoden has introduced under the brand name, Comfit Always.

What has sent J&J hotfooting to counsel and court is the fact that the new brand uses the word 'Stayfree' nearly seven times on its packaging. Stayfree is a label under which J&J has been marketing its products for some time.

What has sent CHI and Primella on an even faster trot down the same road, albeit to a different court, is their contention that J&J is making "unlawful and illegal threats" and forcing dealers to stop offering Comfit Always to customers. They have also produced before the court J&J's 1960 permission from the then ministry of commerce and industry allowing it to manufacture sanitary products. As the letter makes clear, J&J was not supposed to make additions to plant and machinery, market the product only under the trademark already in use or without any trademark and not import any raw material for the purpose. But the Modess brand in existence at that time has given way to Carefree and Stayfree, fresh equipment has been installed and there has been no stinting on raw material imports.

Oddly enough all this is above board and with Government permission. "But how"?, asks CHI chairman Jayant Malhotra. Sanitary napkins are reserved for the small scale-sector and Malhotra contends that J&J is being allowed too much rope. "Instead of giving us protection it is the multinationals who are being protected."

He points out that the Government has also turned down a J&J application to become registered users of Carefree and Stayfree. The registrar of trade marks vetoed this "in the interests of the general public and the development of indigenous industry in India".

While J&J executives were unavailable for comment because of "our worldwide policy of not talking to the press", their grouses are well known. CHI and Primella have been accused of trying to ride piggyback on J&J, which commands some 60 per cent of the Rs 10-crore market (Comfit has another 25 per cent). When J&J introduced Carefree, their rivals introduced Comfree. Though the Bombay High Court allowed the latter brand in an early 1970s ruling, the final judgement is yet to be delivered. Besides, the latest Comfit Always package is a carbon copy of a similarly-named brand owned by US giant Proctor and Gamble, which has put out feelers to enter the Indian market.

What has sent Johnson & Johnson hotfooting to court is that the new brand Comfit Always uses the word 'Stayfree' no less than seven times on its packaging.

In the increasingly acrimonious battle it is Malhotra who seems to have drawn first blood. Comfit Always was launched by Primella in late 1985 and was followed by a flurry of legal notices. In April this year Primella approached the Bombay city civil court and obtained an ad interim ex parte injunction restraining J&J from causing any obstruction to Primella's business activities.

J&J then made a bee-line for the Delhi High Court. In an interlocutory order on July 8, Justice D.P. Wadhwa, after consulting half a dozen dictionaries, came to the conclusion that Stayfree was a coined word and Primella's use of it could not be innocent. The packaging, however, was distinctive and the judge was unconvinced that Primella was trying to pass off its products as J&J's. The application was dismissed.

On the other war front, the shops and stores spread over the country, Comfit Always is making inroads. The market share of J&J's competing Stayfree has declined from 14 to 10.6 per cent. Comfit Always is priced Rs 2 lower and offers dealers a higher margin. And J&J's argue that because most women are embarrassed to be seen buying sanitary napkins no one inspects the product on the spot. Thus Comfit Always can be passed off as Stayfree because it says so seven times.

The legal battles have been on for some time, and no one is about to throw in the towel right now. A new generation of less troublesome Stayfree sanitary napkins may have come to the country but the industry itself has not matured enough to stay free of trouble.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

यदा यदा हि धर्मस्य ग्लानिर्भवति भारत ।
अभ्युत्थानमधर्मस्य तदात्मानं सृजाम्यहम् ॥

A matter of perfection

"Whenever, O descendant of Bharata, righteousness declines and unrighteousness prevails, I manifest Myself" said Lord Krishna to Arjuna at Kurukshetra. The ten Avatars of Vishnu are proof of God's infinite mercy towards man and his desire for perfection.

Today, in our TV industry, sets are being assembled through an uncaring screwdriver technology, where profit motives overrule quality considerations.

But, we at Konark TV work towards perfection because we strongly believe that quality will always prevail. Our excellence in craftsmanship, dedicated research and sophisticated technology, help produce Konark TV sets that match the best in the world.

KONARK TV

The image of quality

Konark Television Limited (A Govt. of Orissa Enterprise) B1 B2 & B3, Industrial Estate, Bhubaneswar 751 010

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The splendid new rc at The Taj Mahal Hotel Bombay await a single distinction. Your presence.

The original Taj – the graceful "Caravanserai of the East" – is undergoing a splendid transformation. It includes 90 brand new rooms, each a newly minted original. From fabric, colours, carpets and furniture to lampshades, bathroom fittings, down to details as slight as drawer handles, no two rooms are alike. Ceilings are higher. Rooms are larger. And there are exclusive touches designed, quite frankly, to pamper. Phones are moveable. TVs are operated by remote control. Every wardrobe has a discreetly camouflaged refrigerator and – cheers! – a small bar. Even the bathrooms have channel music.

And while our designers drew from the very finest traditions of England, France, China and our own many-splendoured heritage, they have not forgotten the original inspiration: the new rooms are worthy successors to their illustrious predecessors.

To make the experience complete, only one thing remains – your presence.

THE TAJ MAHAL INTER·CONTINENTAL BOMBAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

THE TAJ GROUP OF HOTELS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Neo-swadeshis

WHEN Gandhi first formulated his theory and practice of swadeshi, it was based on a coherent world-view whose sight was aligned with the Upanishadic seers but whose feet were firmly at the grass-roots level of India's villages. "In this structure composed of innumerable villages there will be ever-widening, never ascending circles. Life will not be a pyramid with the apex sustained by the bottom. But it will be an oceanic circle whose centre will be the individual..." In the '30s, when the focus of Gandhi's fire was the economic imperialism of the Lancashire mills, it made sense to talk of a village economy and to promote the charkha and the handloom. I wonder how the Mahatma would have reacted in the '60s when the economic hegemony of British imperialism was replaced by multinational piracy.

Today, the wheel has come full circle. A swadeshi revolution is taking place, quietly in the market-place and noisily in the media. It is not based in Gandhi's villages, but in cities and small towns across the land. Operating from sheds, labour-intensive and relatively un-mechanised, a new breed of formulators and packers is steadily eroding the base of giant, multinational manufacturers. Our new economic overlords bear familiar names: Nirma and Vimal, Pan Parag and Lijjat, Dabur and Vicco, Zandu and Hamdard. They are not out to smash the market economy: they are its beneficiaries as the reach and cost-effectiveness of television grows geometrically and the new markets become increasingly price-sensitive. This is no generation of benign, meditative charkha-spinners in a pastoral Eden. The neo-swadeshis will brawl, knee and elbow for market share as hard as the fiercest multinationals.

Who could have envisaged that Surf would be overtaken in volume by two yellow 'desi' detergents? But it has happened. First Nirma (Rs 100 crore annual sales) and then Vimal have galloped ahead of Surf. Promise, a white toothpaste made by the relatively unknown Balsara's with an indigenous-ingredient-base claim (clove oil), is ahead of the established Binacas and Close-ups, Signals and Forhans and sits in second place, behind Colgate. Vicco, a yellow turmeric-based vanishing cream challenges Ponds. Gopal Zarda, Pan Parag and other branded 'pan masalas' have taken a massive chunk out of the oral satisfaction market once dominated entirely by cigarettes. Fryums and Gits compete on equal terms with Maggi and Rex.

The swadeshi phenomenon cannot simply be measured in gross tonnage. The battle is not only for market share but for share of mind, not merely for changing brand percentages but for a changing life-style. Ethnic chic is not a new occurrence. It began in the late '50s, spearheaded by Handloom House and the Sarabhai women and the Calico Mills colour campaigns designed by Shilpi. In the '60s, the torch of ethnic revival would pass to the ITDC under Romesh Thapar and Sunil Roy. But the spread of the phenomenon was limited to a five-star world of pichwais and tankhas.

> "A swadeshi revolution is taking place, quietly in the market-place and noisily in the media. It is not based in Gandhi's villages, but in cities and towns across the land."

With the advent of television (12 million adults covered by a single 30-second spot at the rate of Rs 10 per viewer), the picture has changed radically. Everyone is now aware of the Festival of India, Jaya Bachchan's khadi fashions and Pupul Jayakar's Shyam Ahuja dhurries. A new powerful class of consumers is emerging whose life-style is a hybrid mix of safari suits and silk churidar-kurta, based on a bizarre amalgam of Khandaan and Air Hostess. Witness the new swagger with which a tin of 'pan masala' is flaunted as a life-style symbol in much the same way that people flashed a packet of State Express 10 years ago.

There are pieces of tell-tale evidence everywhere (the Vicks herbal range, herbal soaps and toothpaste from Ponds, ayurvedic shampoos) that the multinational giants are, as always, bending to a wind which promises to take on hurricane proportions. So today's boutiques are not called 'Guys and Dolls' but 'Khazaana' and 'Memsahib' and 'Malabar'. 'Cezari' suitings are yielding to 'Vichitra' and 'Taarika' sarees, and to 'Bichhona' linen.

"I found the crown of France lying in the streets," Napolean said. Advertising and marketing do not deal in royal crowns but in the ducal coronets of commerce, and there is a gigantic set of commercial opportunities lying about in the new swadeshi field. Nirma is already exploiting this with its Rs 2.5 crore annual advertising budget, of which a sizeable chunk is in television. The Nirma jingle is arguably the worst ever made, yet it begins to transform at the numbing frequency of four exposures a week. A dreadful jingle gets burnt into the brain's mnemonic circuits and you end up humming what you hated.

That the swadeshi segment will grow at a faster rate than the overall market is now certain as new manufacturers enter, as smaller manufacturers expand their distribution, as new categories financed by exports (incense sticks, herbal products, papads, masalas) enter the branded market at home, backed by heavy promotion, and as the price differential on goods made in low-overhead shed operations increases with their quality level held steady.

There is a vacant slot, an opportunity for the right advertising agency as well. A grassroots 'network' type agency with 20 branches instead of four, with conceptualising in swadeshi terms, campaigns worked out in Indian languages and client presentation made in Hindi. The swadeshi opportunity for an agency is open but it requires pioneering work, a fundamental change of working ethos and large investment ratios. As things stand, I see no takers.

KERSEY KATRAK, 49, is a professional advertising man besides being a playwright, poet, columnist and critic. He will be writing a periodic column for INDIA TODAY on advertising and marketing trends.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DID YOU NOTICE OUR LAST AD WHERE WE LISTED ALL OUR FIRSTS BUT DIDN'T SAY A WORD ABOUT OUR GERMAN COLLABORATORS: ARNTZ-OPTIBELT?

Mudra-D-HRL-2593

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Arntz-Optibelt. From West Germany. Our technical collaborators. They make the world's finest power transmission Belts. Because they're a little fanatic about quality.

Like us.

And Arntz-Optibelt have spent years and millions of Marks on R&D to perfect yet newer technologies for the manufacture of power transmission Belts. Because Arntz-Optibelt believe in constant product innovation. At whatever cost.

Like us.

Fanatic as they're about quality, Arntz-Optibelt weren't in a rush to part with their technology. There were offers for their raw-edge plant from industrial Belt Units in USA. And South Africa.

And us.

And Arntz-Optibelt chose us to collaborate with. Because they found our zeal for product innovation a little similar to theirs. And they found our list of firsts (India's first Polyester Cord reinforced V-Belts, first Synthetic Fabric reinforced Conveyor Belts, first Heat Resistant Special Belts) complementing the zeal.

So today, at Hilton Rubbers, we have the state-of-the-art plant & equipment and we have the world's best Industrial Belt makers helping us. To give India the only world class raw-edge cogged and classical Belts.

To go into your 2 or 4-wheelers.

HILTON Industrial Belts.
We do it first.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

100 YEARS OF ALUMINIUM

FOR THE WORLD IT'S A CENTENARY.

FOR INDAL IT'S A FAMILY AFFAIR.

In 1886, a 23 year old American, Charles Martin Hall discovered the electrolytic process of producing aluminium. At almost the same time, Paul Heroult in France discovered the identical process. Both were of the same age, discovered the same process, in the same year, unknown to each other. The Hall-Heroult process remains fundamental to the industry even today.

In 1888, the world's first commercial production of aluminium began in the Pittsburgh Reduction Company, USA under Hall's direction. Assisting Hall was a 21 year old youth, Arthur Vining Davis—one of the true champions of the metal, long before it grew to become the giant global industry of today.

Through the decades, the Davis connection has been integral to the aluminium industry. In 1928, the world's first international aluminium company was formed: Aluminium Limited, headquartered in Canada, under the leadership of Edward K Davis, brother of Arthur Vining Davis. In 1966, the company acquired its present name of Alcan Aluminium Limited (ALCAN).

Charles Martin Hall, USA

Paul Louis Toussaint Heroult, France

The original specimens of pure aluminium produced by Hall in 1886

In the hundred years since the Hall-Heroult process, the global output of aluminium has grown from 13 tonnes to 13 million tonnes. The use of the metal has grown from toys and trinkets to spacecraft, power transmission, high-rise constructions... the list grows daily. And ALCAN, today, is the world's largest international aluminium company.

Within the first decade of its formation, ALCAN came to India: The Aluminium Production Company of India was formed in 1938, marking the beginning of the Indian aluminium industry. In 1944, the name changed to the Indian Aluminium Company, Limited. INDAL. Riding the crest into aluminium's second centennial, proud of its lineage, ready for the future.

INDAL

Indian Aluminium Company, Limited

Indian Aluminium is Indian aluminium

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CONTAD/INDAL-A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NTPC

Tender Trouble

IF THE "foreign hand" is a much-abused scapegoat for governmental failures, there is yet another foreign hand whose operations the Government sometimes doesn't seem to mind: the hand of lobbyists for foreign suppliers of equipment sought to be imported into the country.

The prize to be won in the latest case is a contract for the supply of turbine equipment for three power stations in Gujarat, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh based on gas despatched through the Hazira-Bijapur-Jagdispur (HBJ) pipeline. The tussle, however, is not between the eight bidders for the contract but the Power Department and the National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC).

At the centre of the storm is the British firm Hawker Siddeley, which had cobbled together a consortium of turbine and ancillary equipment manufacturers and backed its offer with an attractive financial package for the project. Siddeley had the support of the Department of Power, but the NTPC would have none of it since the firm does not make turbines. According to the NTPC's tender (total capacity: 1,500 mw), only manufacturers are to be given tender documents to make their bids.

Why the Department of Power stood by Siddeley when the technical requirements of the tender automatically ruled it out is unclear. But, as an official at the Ministry of Energy pointed out: "Firms which function as managing agents have more clout in the higher echelons of power, as their survival depends on the right contacts." Was Siddeley using its lobbying clout to stay in the bidding for the multi-crore contract? But a top-ranking official in the Power Department denied any succumbing to pressure: "There might have been some misunderstanding with NTPC, but Siddeley did not make any representation against their exclusion."

But NTPC Chairman M.L. Shishoo has a different version: "In spite of representations, we asserted our position and rejected Siddeley as it was not competent to provide the equipment." After technical evaluation, tender documents were issued to eight firms. Siddeley was left out, and John Brown, a member of the Siddeley consortium to which the NTPC raised no objection as it was a gas turbine manufacturer, taken in.

And officials in BHEL added to the controversy when they pointed out that the company has signed an agreement in which General Electric (US) will provide the technical know-how for the indigenous manufacture of gas turbines. But the NTPC says that under the terms of the loan agreement with the World Bank, only companies with "experience" in the field will be allowed to bid for the tender. This rules out BHEL, which is just entering the turbine market. However, is this interference another example of the government succumbing to World Bank pressures? For there is no other reason why foreign companies should supply the turbines when they can be manufactured by BHEL.

If the NTPC's firm handling saw off the early hurdles put up by the Power Department, the latter's delay in the appointment of a foreign consultant may yet stymie the project, since unless this condition is met soon, the World Bank may withhold the Rs 600 crore loan committed for the project. No pre-bid meeting of the prospective tenders for the contract can be held without a consultant. The Power Department has been sitting on the NTPC's recommendations for a consultant since March 1985.

Despite the road-blocks, Shishoo seems keen to play down the delay. "In the present system, delays are inherent. The ethos of working in the ministry is different from that in the NTPC," he said.

That may be so. But a delay of over a year virtually defeats the purpose of opting for a gas-based power plant in place of a conventional coal-fired one. The former was preferred because of its higher energy saving potential and shorter gestation period, that is, half of a thermal plant's 48 months start-up time.

Otherwise, the cost per unit generation of power at 90 paise is nearly double that from a thermal power plant. The higher power tariff is mainly a result of the sudden hike in the administered price of gas which at Rs 2,250 per 1,000 cubic metres is much higher than NTPC's earlier estimate of Rs 1,800.

An NTPC official alleging discrimination by the Petroleum Ministry said: "Why are the fertiliser plants given special treatment and supplied gas at a much lower rate of Rs 2,150?" Surprisingly, the beneficiary states have not raised even a whimper of protest. Their choice is limited to either buying expensive power or not having any power at all. But with the states and their electricity boards in the red, NTPC officials are apprehensive about their ability to pay the high tariffs.

However, even the high tariff would have been justified if the generation of power would have begun within the stipulated time. But, by sitting on its hands, the Power Department has put paid to all such hopes. There is now little possibility of the original cost estimate of Rs 1,350 crore being adhered to. The benefits of a shorter gestation period too have been lost: six months after an engineering task force was set up in January this year to set the ball rolling, the project doesn't even have a consultant to guide its destiny.

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA

Map by B.K. SHARMA

"In spite of representations, we asserted our position and rejected Hawker Siddeley as it was not competent to provide the equipment."

M.L. SHISHOO
NTPC chairman

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO gone on ONGC
Bangal its subs
Isn't it

INDONET change the way
computers and them, it's going think about you operates. It's go greater efficiend operations. Imp productivity, p giving you con accurate inform over your comp

What does IN

INDONET
computing pow non-IBM) oper variety of sophi packages togeth information net reasonable price

Apart from Calcutta and M
Robotron 1055
PDP 11/44 at D
also link Pune, to the network.

How can you

Because IN
can access any o
— no matter wh simply through or through any using. A dedica will link your te course, if you p
of CMC's comp
computers direc

Does INDON contemporary

While INDO a standard inve packages, its ma
specialized softw

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDONET, India's first commercial multi-city information network has gone on line with IBM 4361 computers at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras. ONGC, Geological Survey of India, Hi-Tech Consultants, SAIL and Bangalore Development Authority, to mention just a few, are already its subscribers and reaping its benefits.

Isn't it time you plugged into it too?

INDONET. It's not only going to change the way people think about computers and what can be done with them, it's going to change the way you think about your company and the way it operates. It's going to tone up and bring far greater efficiency to every aspect of your operations. Improve cash flow, raise productivity, performance and profits by giving you continuous, up-to-date and accurate information and far greater control over your company's operations.

What does INDONET offer you?

INDONET gives you state-of-the-art computing power, the latest IBM (and non-IBM) operating software and a wide variety of sophisticated application packages together with a multi-city information network. All of them at a reasonable price.

Apart from the IBM 4361s at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, INDONET has a Burroughs 1055 system at Hyderabad and a PDP 11/44 at Delhi. Cluster controllers also link Pune, Ahmedabad and Bangalore to the network.

How can you use INDONET?

Because INDONET is a network, you can access any of INDONET's computers — no matter where they are located — simply through a terminal from your office or through any system you are currently using. A dedicated telecommunication line will link your terminal to the network. Of course, if you prefer, you can come to any of CMC's computer centres and use the computers directly.

Does INDONET's software match its contemporary hardware?

While INDONET offers a wide range of standard inventory and other application packages, its major strengths are in specialized software for Management Information Systems (MIS) and Decision Support Systems (DSS). Designed as invaluable aids to complex decision making, control and problem solving, what these packages do is to allow you to see problems as well as solutions from different perspectives by offering you alternate scenarios. And the truly marvellous thing about INDONET is that any of its packages can be used from anywhere in the network.

INDONET's utilities and application software include:

* VM/CMS: operating system which allows several users to use real time machine resources simultaneously.
* CICS: powerful transaction processing system which runs under DOS/VSE.
* DL/1: hierarchical data base management package.
* SQL: relational data base management package.
* PROJACS: project analysis and control system for planning new projects, resource allocation, PERT/CPM.
* MPSX: mathematical programming system for production and capital investment planning, product mix decisions, etc.
* INDO GKS: Graphical Kernel System for 2-D and 3-D computer graphics.

What kind of users stand to gain from INDONET?

* Any company which needs state-of-the-art computing facilities with the latest IBM software can get these through INDONET without having to make large capital investments.
* Any organisation with multi-city operations. For instance, consumer perishable, durable and heavy industries having national distribution systems and factories and offices in different parts of the country. Service industries like transportation and insurance. Financial institutions like banks and chit funds. Marketing organisations. Mining industries.
* One other industry that will find INDONET a boon is the software industry. Software export houses can now work on the latest IBM systems and design software for the largest software market in the world — IBM and IBM-compatible system users. CMC offers a special 10% discount on all software export work done on INDONET.

Come over to CMC and get a first hand feel of what INDONET can do for you. Once you are hooked on to INDONET you will wonder how your company ever managed without it.

INDONET. Get hooked on it.

For further information, please contact the Divisional Manager (Systems) at:

CMC Limited
(A Government of India Enterprise)

F-14, Maker Towers, Cuffe Parade, Bombay-400 005. Phone 219186

28, Camac Street, Calcutta-700 016. Phone 432444

A-5, Ring Road, NDSE Part I, New Delhi-110 049. Phone 618189

Seethakathi Chambers, 688 Anna Salai, Madras-600 006. Phone 812385

MLS:CMC:143:86 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANKS

Wooing the Non-resident

SWRAJ PAUL is back in London licking his wounds. Manu Chhabria is slogging it out in Calcutta. But the average non-resident Indian (NRI) who will contribute his nest egg and make no waves is more welcome in this country than ever before.

NRI's in the Gulf, the United Kingdom and Canada are suddenly finding themselves on half-a-dozen mailing lists. Advertisements enticing them from newspapers and television. Seminars where experts tell them how best to deploy their funds have become a regular affair. Banks by the score, particularly the foreign ones, have realised how lucrative a business cornering NRI funds is.

And everyone is thinking big. "One billion dollars," say executives of Citibank. That is their target for the next five years. "One billion dollars," echoes Anil Bhandari, vice-president of one of the leading US investment companies, Bear and Stearns. He estimates that the five million NRI families in the US alone can annually contribute this amount to an Indian fund which Bear and Sterns is soon planning to start, and the State Bank of India, which already has practically a billion dollars in its NRI kitty, is upgrading its services to retain its share of the investment market.

But it is the foreign banks who are really into the hard sell. Citibank has already flagged off two centres for non-resident Indians in Calcutta and Bombay and a third one is on the anvil at Delhi. "We set ourselves a target of Rs 100 crore for 1986," says Jerry Rao, vice-president of the Consumer Services Group and originator of the NRI scheme, "but we are going to comfortably overshoot it." Adds Steven Pinto, marketing director: "We get about 12 customers a day and many of them open an account on the spot. It may be for a nominal amount, but then our follow-up teams abroad take care of the bigger investment later." Apart from India, the bank has active NRI cells in nine countries and is gearing up operations in seven others. "It's not just banking," says Rao. "We focussed on it as a consumer marketing problem, identified needs and augmented the product. Thus we have the Citincome Certificate, Citinews (a magazine meant exclusively for NRI's) and even a group insurance scheme called Citilife. The fact that we are the biggest among the foreign banks in this proves that we deliver."

This is a claim that others are quick to refute. "With the $15 million we have collected since we started off in 1983, we are way ahead," claims Arun Prasad, who heads the non-resident division of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI). The bank has set up India desks in nine countries and expects to rake in a substantial Rs 200 crore in 1986. Grindlays, another of the front-runners, has formed young teams to aggressively market its schemes. "We have Rs 300 crore to Rs 400 crore in NRI deposits," says general manager Jayant Yardi confidently.

With everyone jumping on the bandwagon it is obvious that collective figures should reflect the spurt. NRI bank deposits in the country have increased from Rs 3,503 crore last year to Rs 6,100 crore this year. The foreign banks, with various restrictions on operations in this country, have found in the NRI's a fertile avenue to raise funds. With the cash reserve ratio and the statutory liquidity ratio (which dictate the percentage of its deposits that a bank must keep liquid) considerably lower for NRI deposits, the banks have so much the more to lend. And unlike the nationalised banks they do not have to give cheap loans to priority sectors, thus profits have been galloping.

For the non-resident investor, on the other hand, it is an equally attractive proposition. The interest rates offered are practically the highest in the world. At 8.5 per cent for a one-year deposit, it is considerably more than the 6.5 per cent prevalent elsewhere. "Besides," adds Prasad, "with the uncertainties prevailing everywhere, particu-

NRI bank deposits in the country have increased from Rs 3,503 crore to Rs 6,100 crore this year. The foreign banks have found in the NRI's a fertile avenue to raise funds.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

We've come a long way...

burning ourselves in dedication, sacrifice and silent endeavour.

It's a legend fifty years long.

We are now talking of centuries. How about building up a bright and big 21st. century that our progeny of the 22nd. will talk about!

At MEI, we have already set ourselves to the task. Dedicated to building up a robust technology base on which the super-structure of a stronger, more advanced tomorrow can stand proud. Come, let the spirit catch on.

Let us burn ourselves a little more.

The Mysore Electrical Industries Limited,
Post Box No. 2221, Tumkur Road,
Bangalore 560 022.

Professionals in power protection.

mareech 4476c 14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE NEVER FORGET HOW IMPORTANT YOUR TIME IS.

You're a winner on both fronts—at home and at work. And you know what's behind this success: the value you attach to your time.

We never forget this. That's why we lay down a strict standard for each and every service we offer you. For instance, your personal cheques must be encashed within 5 minutes flat. Your letters must be attended to within 48 hours.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But that's not all. We also control our service. With spot checks on every branch every 90 days. And with a special team of Service Inspectors sent in from London to double check once every 12 months.

You know how serious we are about your money.

You can now also be sure that we value your time.

Personal Banking from

Grindlays Bank p.l.c.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Ha

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"To be a success in business, be daring, be first, be different."

And be practical too. Because just being daring, original and different won't get you far, if it's rooted in the improbable.

The same applies to your wardrobe, whether for business or leisure. By all means, choose original designs. But make comfort and quality your priority. Choose a suiting that is famous for its performance. In one word, choose Graviera.

Graviera is quality fabric that fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour. There's a wide range of suiting and shirting to choose from. Deep sober colours and soft pastels, in a variety of superb weaves and soft textures. Lightweight summer businesswear or darker shades and warmer weaves for winter. You'll be able to get the exact suiting and shirting to match your requirements. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Be as daring and different as you wish to. With Graviera, the fabric that really knows its business.

* (Marchant. Business Management Expert)

Nothing succeeds like success!

GRAVIERA SUITING

Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

larly in the Gulf, most non-residents would like to have one foot in this country."

While the foreign banks have been grabbing a bigger slice of the cake, the big boys in the game have not been losing out. State Bank of India has maintained its growth and has facilities on par with any of the others. "Only, we are not making so much noise about it," says an official. Bank of Baroda, which has a Rs 500 crore share, has launched various schemes including a special NRI saving certificate, netting Rs 200 crore.

Meanwhile, the Unit Trust of India (UTI) and the US-based securities firm Merrill Lynch have launched a £60 million India fund. (The money will be invested in UTI units and hence in shares, debentures, etc.) Waiting in the wings is the Birla Mercury India growth fund which expects to raise $30 million in the first year. Bear and Stearns is planning a $74 million to $100 million India fund. Only 20 per cent of this, however, will be invested in India.

"Everybody wants to come into India," explains Yardi, "it's the most attractive market in the world." Estimates vary on the potential, from Rs 10,000 crore to much higher figures, and India has tapped only the tip of the iceberg. The funds so far have come mainly from West Asia—the wealthy communities in the United Kingdom, Canada and the Far East are yet to contribute their mite. If they can be persuaded to pitch in, the sky is the limit.

All the euphoria, however, is not without its critics. So many people are going gaga over mutual funds, but asks Yardi: "Is the Indian equity market big enough? Where are all these funds going to be invested?" The foreign banks have also come in for their share of flak. "Such fast growth," says an Indian banker, "is not possible without some shady methods. With their margins they can afford to pay the NRI's even more than the stipulated interest and cook the books."

The non-resident scheme itself has its detractors. The Government had to reduce the interest rates on foreign currency non-resident deposits in May because hot money was flowing in. NRI's were being used as front-men to make deposits and cash in on higher returns than available elsewhere. The country's need for foreign currency is undeniable, the fact that it is getting it in increasing quantities is evident. But the question remains: Is the price too high?

—PARTHASARTHI SWAMI with INDRANIL BANERJIE and PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

PEPSICO

Fresh Fizz

THE SOFT drinks industry is fizzing over again. A year after the Government rejected Pepsico's last bid to re-enter the Indian market—the company had operated in India in the 1950s and then pulled out—Pepsi is now making another bid to get back into the country. Last time around, the project had been shepherded by R.P.Goenka's Agro Products Export India. This time the formal application for a joint venture with Pepsico has been put in by Punjab Agro Industries Corporation, with Voltas the third partner in the venture.

The Punjab Agro-Pepsi-Voltas bid is different from its still-born predecessor, and also far more ambitious. Last time, the proposed investment was no more than Rs 2 crore. This time it is Rs 22 crore. Then, Pepsico had wanted to use its own brand names in India, including Pepsi Cola. Now the brand name will be Indian, or more likely a hybrid brand name like Ind-Pepsi. Earlier, the company had wanted to import the crucial soft drink concentrate for handing out to soft drink bottlers. This time the concentrate will be manufactured in India, with imported raw materials.

The investment in the cola and soft drink operation will, however, be only about Rs 5 crore. The remaining Rs 17 crore investment will be in facilities to process fruit juices and vegetable products for export, and for turning out potato products (like wafers and finger chips) for the domestic market. Punjab Agro says it will export Rs 55 crore in the first five years, for which the imports required will be Rs 18 crore.

Though the cola and soft drink business is designed as a relatively small part of the total operation, the proposed concentrate manufacturing capacity equals half the total national capacity now in soft drinks. And those pushing for the proposal argue that Pepsi's entry into the Indian market will result in improved quality, better rural marketing, the development of new product categories, introduction of 'state of the art' soft drink technology, expansion of ancillary industries, and a great deal else. Besides, the project will be located in Punjab, whose agriculture needs to diversify from foodgrains to horticulture and other related fields. The Punjab Agro proposal for processing fruit, vegetables and potatoes ties in with this.

AJIT NINAN

The proposal is bound to be controversial, and existing Indian soft drink manufacturers have major criticisms levelled against Pepsi:

- Despite claiming to manufacture the soft drink concentrate in India, Pepsi will not disclose its secret formula, which will continue to be imported;
- The Pepsi proposal involves spending 32 per cent of export earnings on imports, whereas Coca Cola had limited this to 20 per cent before it left the country in 1978;
- The import requirements that Pepsi is asking for are far in excess of what is allowed under the export-import policy;
- There is no reason why a proposal for manufacturing and exporting fruit juices and vegetable products should be linked to one for producing soft drinks;
- There already exists a healthy, local cola industry which makes do with locally produced flavours, and there is no need to spend foreign exchange on a non-priority item.

While some of these contentions may be valid, others can be countered, for the foreign exchange to be spent will be covered three times by foreign exchange earnings. It now remains to be seen what the Government will decide.

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Fortunately Qantas have 3 non-stop flights every week to London from Bombay. Otherwise I don't think my boss would bother going."

Now you can fly non-stop to London every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday on Qantas.

On nothing less than a spacious Qantas Boeing 747.

With a choice of First Class, Business Class or Economy service.

And be able to choose from our wide range of vegetarian cuisine.

Of course no matter which class you choose you'll still enjoy warm and friendly Australian hospitality every step of the way.

(Your Qantas experience doesn't have to end in London, you can also fly Qantas non-stop on your return trip.)

Call your travel agent or your nearest Qantas office at Bombay Tel: 2020410, Calcutta Tel: 440718, Madras Tel: 478649, New Delhi Tel: 351434.

QANTAS
THE AUSTRALIAN AIRLINE

QF 69/MDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Power Panic

THERE was a time when Kerala was about the only state surplus in power. That situation changed dramatically last fortnight when the state electricity board imposed a 100 per cent power cut on high-tension and extra high-tension consumers. Meanwhile delays in the implementation of new power projects have compounded the problem. With industrial and domestic consumers up in arms and a consumer watch-dog body threatening court action if there was no reduction in the steep power tariffs, the state Government began fiercely lobbying for a nuclear power station as a solution to an unexpected crisis.

The unprecedented power cuts are the result of Government short-sightedness. Even when the water levels in the state's reservoirs were already touching rock bottom, Electricity Minister Balakrishna Pillai and officials of the Kerala State Electricity Board (KSEB) continued to maintain that there would be no power cut. Their assurances were based on the weatherman's prediction that the monsoon would set in by May-end. When the rains did set in—10 days after the predictions—they were a disappointment. With barely enough water to generate 150 million units—the state's requirement for a week—in Idukki and other reservoirs, Pillai panicked, slapped a 100 per cent cut on industries and ordered heavy load shedding.

Within weeks the state suffered a production loss of over Rs 100 crore and more than one lakh workers lost Rs 10 crore in wages. The foreign exchange-earning seafood industry lost heavily, starving for lack of ice. Said leading seafood exporter C. Cherian: "Though we have broken all records in seafood exports this year, the continuing power crisis will cripple our export earnings."

Fortunately, the Central Government intervened, releasing 3.5 million units from the Kalpakkam nuclear station and the Neyveli and Ramagundam thermal stations. Maharashtra was asked to provide one million units via Karnataka. But there are problems in getting this power to Kerala. The National Thermal Power Corporation has yet to lay transmission lines to bring power to the state and the existing lines cannot carry such heavy loads. And both Tamil Nadu and Karnataka are experiencing acute power shortage. Still, Pillai claims a solution will be found at a conference of the chairmen of the southern power boards in the presence of the Central Electricity Authority.

But these temporary arrangements do not help towards a permanent solution. And the snail's pace at which new projects have been implemented has ensured no significant increase in installed capacity in recent years.

Pillai: false hopes

The unprecedented power cuts are the direct result of Government short-sightedness. Within weeks the state suffered a production loss of over Rs 100 crore.

The KSEB has nine completed projects with a total installed capacity of 1,011 mw, which generated 4,739 million units in 1984-85. While eight projects, which can produce 710 mw are in various stages of implementation, delays have led to a massive escalation in costs. And estimates put the current demand at 6,000 million units, which by 1990 will be nearly 9,000 million units. Said Pillai: "The only way out is for the speedy implementation of ongoing projects and implementation of new ones."

That Kerala could find itself in such a pathetic situation seemed unimaginable as, not long ago, it used to earn Rs 12 crore by selling power to neighbouring states. Charged K. Krishnakutty, Janata MLA: "The present government has failed to press for fulfilment of the Central Government assurance following the shelving of the Silent Valley project."

Kerala, totally dependent on hydel power, was promised a thermal plant by the Centre after the Silent Valley project was shelved a few years ago following environmentalists' protests. But the plant may never take off since bringing in coal from eastern India will be expensive. With nothing tangible in sight, Chief Minister Karunakaran and Pillai announced that the Centre was considering locating an atomic power station in the state.

There was nothing new in this announcement since a proposal last year to locate a nuclear power station in Kothamangalam, 50 km from Cochin, had drawn fire from environmentalists fearing radiation leakage. Anticipating a similar effect, Pillai sought to scotch fears by pointing out that such plants in neighbouring states would pose the same threat. But he admitted: "After the Chernobyl disaster people are wary of nuclear plants but it is a necessity."

Debate on the pros and cons of nuclear power acquired a wider dimension when the Cochin Chamber of Commerce organised a discussion on the subject at a workshop on "Power Supplies and Tariffs". A report of the study conducted by the chamber was done by M.K.R. Menon, retired chief engineer, Madhya Pradesh Electricity Board, who concluded that nuclear power would have to be Kerala's mainstay.

Meanwhile, harassed consumers got cold comfort when the Kerala Consumer Protection Council threatened to sue the board if it did not reduce electricity charges on domestic consumers who, surprisingly, must pay a minimum charge whether power is supplied or not. The council has also alleged that the KSEB is losing nearly 25 per cent of its energy during transmission through theft.

Menon minced no words in blaming the state Government: "No excuses can exonerate the state Government for its inactivity in forward planning and utter disregard of the state's economy and welfare." The state Government is now making energetic efforts to bring nuclear power to the power-starved state, even though the estimated 3,000 mw of hydel potential is lying untapped. Meanwhile, Keralites will have to sweat it out for a few more years.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODELS FOR SUCCESS

Navin Budhiraja
ALL INDIA FIRST
IIT – JEE 1984

Sanjeev Arora
ALL INDIA FIRST
IIT – JEE 1986

Both Navin Budhiraja & Sanjeev Arora took the same route to supremacy in IIT-JEE. Taking Brilliant's FOUNDATION COURSE while in Std. XI, they ensured they were in good shape for the final assault while in Std. XII, when they had 'dress-rehearsal' with Brilliant's famed Y.G. FILE. No wonder they won the jack-pot, the Top Spot in IIT - JEE.

The mental muscle-training that the Y.G. FILE problems put you through can keep you brimming with confidence in the face of this 'merciless' exam.

In 1985, the All India First, Vineet Gupta combined our REGULAR COURSE during Std. XII with the inevitable Y.G. FILE Experience.

Vineet Gupta
ALL INDIA FIRST
IIT – JEE 1985

Moral: TO BE TREBLY SURE,

- ★ TAKE BRILLIANT'S FOUNDATION COURSE WHILE IN STD XI.
- ★ FOLLOW UP WITH BRILLIANT'S REGULAR COURSE WHILE IN STD. XII.
- ★ AND ABOVE ALL GIRD YOURSELF FOR THE REAL EVENT, WITH THE BATTLE EXPERIENCE OF THE Y.G. FILE

If you have a high score in Std. X, you may take Brilliant's non-stop 2 YEAR ELITE COURSE spanning Std. XI & XII, replacing the Foundation Course (Std. XI) Regular Course (Std. XII). ELITE COURSE includes 2 years' Y.G. File.

Admission to ELITE COURSE on basis of marks of Std. X

LEST YOU FORGET! These 5 ELITE COURSE students (1984-86) won ranks within the TOP TWENTY in IIT-JEE '86.

Amit Baranwal
TENTH

Rajeev Gupta
THIRTEENTH

P. Srinivas
SIXTEENTH

H. Ramesh
SEVENTEENTH

Ranodeb Roy TWENTIETH

BRILLIANT TUTORIALS

12, Masilamani Mudali St., T. Nagar, Madras – 17.
Ph : 442099, 443308

EMINENCE THROUGH EXCELLENCE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Efficient/BT/40/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PEERLESS

Corporate Coup

IT CAME as a bombshell. Last fortnight, in a coup that caught both the West Bengal Government and corporate circles in the state by surprise, the high flying National Insulated Cables Company (Nicco) group of firms bought 18 per cent stock in the controversial Peerless General Finance and Investment Company. The Peerless board was reshuffled to accommodate Nicco nominees, and the managing director's slot was filled.

That dramatic series of events seemed to offer instant hope to Peerless. The company has been put in the dock by the state Government, which had asked the Centre to nationalise it. The Rs 78-crore Nicco group has diversified interests in cables, electronics and leasing, an enviable track record and a good relationship with the Government.

In a bid to mend fences with the Government and put the Rs 167-crore turnover Peerless on the fast track, the Nicco group commissioned the State Bank of India to study whether the deposit collecting company could function in line with government norms. And in a move that was kept under wraps, the new team sued for peace.

This flurry of activity was preceded by weeks of closed-door parleys among the three sides involved in this drama: Nicco head Rajive Kaul and Abhijit Sen; principal Peerless shareholder S.K. Roy whose family held 80 per cent of the company's stock; and P.C. Sen, chairman and managing director of Burn Standard, whose late father-in-law was Peerless chairman. According to Abhijit Sen, the new Peerless chairman, the two Nicco firms involved in the deal paid "a little less than the book value" for the shares. All agree that P.C. Sen, who joins Peerless as managing director, was the common factor that brought the two sides together. Says Sen: "I wanted some professional backing and the Roys were willing to talk to a West Bengal-based group." Adds Roy: "We wanted to professionalise the company which we could not do before because my brother died. We wanted a West Bengal-based group." Roy still retains control with his 62 per cent stockholding but has opted out of its day-to-day running, probably because he did not wish to tackle its militant unions or its myriad problems.

If inducting new men made sense to Roy, it made equal sense to the Nicco group to buy into Peerless. With around Rs 600 crore in deposits, Peerless is flush with funds. The company is required by the RBI to invest some 80 per cent of its deposits in government securities and bank deposits, but can legally invest the remaining 20 per cent (around Rs 120 crore) in any manner it wishes to. That makes Peerless a worthy prize for any corporation to snare—and the Nicco group has heady growth plans without the big money needed for them.

However, Kaul is quick to dismiss suggestions that the Peerless coffers were the prime attraction: "We've been around for four decades. We're not a fly-by-night company which will rip off Rs 600 crore. If Peerless does well, Nicco's credibility will be high, helping us in our future growth."

That may well be true, but the road to growth for Peerless is paved with problems. The death of Peerless strongman B.K. Roy and numerous legal battles plunged the company into uncertainty. Then, both the state Government and RBI have been gunning for the company. The state Government ordered the firm to wind up, arguing that its business fell within the purview of the Prize, Chit and Money Circulation Scheme (Banning) Act, while the RBI concluded in a study that over 70 per cent (an astonishing Rs 93 crore two years ago) of the firm's first year premia collected from depositors was paid to its agents and that an inordinately large number of "certificates" or policies lapsed every year. But a recent high court ruling has vindicated the company's stand that its functioning is legal. Still, newspaper reports have interpreted a coda to the verdict as suggesting that it has to work within RBI rules as a loan company. If that is correct, its operations would be severely curtailed. The rules among other things specify that loan firms cannot retain deposits for over three years: Peerless's run from 10 to 30 years.

Clearly, the Government and RBI would have to give the nod for the firm to get moving in top gear again. Indeed, many believe that Nicco talked to the Government before taking the plunge. Kaul however denies this, arguing that the Government would permit Peerless to function "if we come up with something that falls within RBI norms." That remains to be seen, but Peerless is hedging its bets. Says Nicco's Sen: "We'll approach financial institutions like the Life Insurance Corporation to invest in the company's share capital."

But the new management could face hassles on another front: the Peerless unions view Nicco's entry with dark suspicion. The 4 lakh-odd field agents have struck work in the past. If they do so again, Nicco's big gamble may take years to pay off.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Calcutta

"We wanted to professionalise but we couldn't because my brother died. We wanted a West Bengal-based group."

S.K. ROY
principal Peerless shareholder

"We've been around for four decades. We're not a fly-by-night company. If Peerless does well, Nicco's credibility will be high,."

RAJIVE KAUL
managing director, NICCO

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Smile. Skypak has just placed four aircraft at your disposal!

And this can revolutionize the way you've been doing business. These aircraft will help give your package a flying start to a guaranteed delivery within 24 hours for at least 70 destinations all over India!

How are we going to do it? Well, imagine this for a start.

Every day. Yes, every day 4 Vayudoot aircraft touching eight major airports, will converge at Nagpur.

They will exchange notes. And they will exchange documents and packages. And before the dust can settle they will be on their way back to their respective starting points.

Your packages therefore will be very close to their specific destinations while the night is still young! And at no point in transit will they be out of our total control.

So it's only obvious that we're calling it the Skypak Overnite. A special service that has suddenly taken the courier business beyond the horizons. Almost overnight.

SKYPAK OVERNITE

We've put time on your side.

SKYPAK OVERNITE: Off M. Vissanji Road, Marol, Andheri (E), Bombay-400 059.
Ph: 6342853/6348226/6320881/6320354.

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFLATION, as measured by the wholesale price index, is currently running at around 4 per cent, but consumer prices have been rising much faster. Meanwhile, the foreign trade sector presents a mixed picture with falling exports partially offsetting the advantages to be gained by falling imports. Bank credit continues to expand, and gold prices are steadily rising.

All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the last one year's data on which regressions are fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
4.0% p.a.

Wholesale prices rose marginally by 0.3 per cent between June 14 and July 5. The inflation rate at 4 per cent is reasonable.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
9.8% p.a.

Consumer prices rose by 2 per cent between February and May. A 10 per cent trend rate of growth should be cause for worry.

Money Supply

Rs crore

Current Trend
11.0% p.a.

Despite a 1.6 per cent rise in money supply from May to June, the long term trend declined further from 11.7 per cent to 11 per cent.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
19.2% p.a.

The expansionary phase in bank credit continues with the long term trend rate steadying at 19 per cent through June.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
18.6% p.a.
IMPORTS
-17.8% p.a.
IMPORTS

A 7 per cent decline in imports and exports offset each other from November to December. Foreign exchange reserves too fell at the start of 1986.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crore

Current Trend
11.8% p.a.

Despite a decline of 4.7 per cent between May and June, foreign exchange reserves are growing at a long term trend of 11.8 per cent.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
-23.1% p.a.

Share prices fell by 3 per cent in June. A negative trend rate of 23 per cent reflects the substantial drop in prices since February 1986.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
14.2% p.a.

Despite a marginal dip of 0.15 per cent between late June and early July the trend rate gold prices increased further by 2 percentage points.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of Items in June, 1986

	% Growth
Timber	17.82
Betel-nuts	12.80
Eggs	10.86
Coir Yarn	10.44
Mustard Oilcake	9.80
Tea	9.48
Arhar	8.80
Jute Textiles	5.80
Gingelly Oil	5.58
Mustard Oil	5.37
Raw Silk	5.28
Grounded Oil	4.82
Khandsari	4.94
Rape Mustard Seed	4.20
Cotton Seed	3.92
Maida	3.85
Gur	3.48
Ghee	3.42
Vanaspati	3.00
Groundnut Seeds	2.94
Masoor	2.80
Tobacco Raw	2.52
Tapioca	2.52
Electricity	2.17
Wheat	2.06
Linseed Oil	1.98
Handloom & Powerloom Products	1.74
Cars	1.47
Cement	1.46
Coir Fibre	1.24
Electrical Motors	1.21
Aviation Spirit	1.14
Cashew-nuts	1.07
Mining Machinery	1.06
Tubes	1.04
Bolts & Nuts	1.02
Rails	1.02
Machine Tools	0.88
Transformers	0.86
Limestone	0.85
Pig Iron	0.82
Kerosene	0.81
Silk & Artificial Silk Fabrics	0.80
Industrial Instruments	0.79
Zinc	0.79
Cycles	0.78
Soda Ash	0.66

Of the 139 series considered, 87 of them with a total weight of 53.792 had a positive growth and 51 of them with a total weight of 32.446 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal Thousand Tonnes, June	11740	10810
Saleable Steel Thousand Tonnes, June	457	533
Cement Thousand Tonnes, June	2720	2633
Crude Petroleum Thousand Tonnes, June	2482	2280
Petroleum Refinery Products Thousand Tonnes, June	2483	[illegible]

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/[illegible]

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PATH FINDER

That's IPCL – the flagship company. Leading the way in taking petrochemical technology to people. And taming complex, hazardous petrochemical reactions.

Integrating 16 modern technologies from different countries at one site, efficiently and safely to produce over 40 useful, cost-efficient products, relevant to the economy – plastics, synthetic rubber and fibre, detergents and chemicals.

A firm commitment to self-reliance that has resulted in the maximum use of Indian engineering, technical skills and hardware to design, fabricate, erect, commission and run all our plants.

A Rs. 30 crore Research Centre, continuously working to improve process economics and product quality.

The result. Over 90% capacity utilization. 22% reduction in specific energy costs in less than 6 years. New records for productivity and safety. And a daring breakthrough in the commercialisation of indigenous technology, to manufacture Acrylates and in the use of isomerising catalyst.

No wonder we think of ourselves as Path Finders.

Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Limited. (A Government of India Undertaking)

P.O. Petrochemicals 391 346. Dist. Vadodara.

Shilpi IPCL 3/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details, rush to the nearest Dealer

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Bearish Phase

AFTER a period of lull and uneventful trading—marked by the usual quota of ups and downs—the stock-market came to life late last fortnight when Reliance shares crashed from around Rs 367 to Rs 317 in a single day's trading, and then sought still lower levels on the following days. Other counters also saw losses, and a market that had been inching upward was into a bearish phase.

The Reliance crash was the direct result of the various controversies about the company's activities, the finance minister's announcement that loans taken from banks by companies owned by Reliance's promoters might be recalled, and by the stock exchange imposing heavy margins on Reliance buyers. This inevitably affected the general sentiment on the market, which also came under heavy bear pressure following reports that the Finance Ministry had blacklisted several leading companies because of their excise dues, and that the ministry had held up several proposals for share and debenture issues from the defaulting companies. Among the shares that lost ground in the process were TISCO and Premier Automobiles.

Before the bad news hit the market, it had been inching its way upwards, and the Economic Times share index climbed from 510.2 to 517.6 in the space of a fortnight. The buoyancy was partly the result of expectations that the Government was about to liberalise the guidelines for issuing bonus shares, and Bajaj Auto—which has a lot of spare cash lying around—was one of the shares that gained substantial ground, moving up by Rs 425 to Rs 3,950 in the space of a week before falling back. The company's latest share price of Rs 3,700 is almost twice as high as the year's low of Rs 1,950. Several cash-rich FERA companies also saw bullish trading.

Then came the crash, and the stock-market index fell sharply to 504.8. Several companies, in fact, lost even more heavily than Reliance over the fortnight, among them SPIC, Vulcan Laval, Ingersoll Rand, and Hindustan Dorr-Oliver.

Nevertheless, there could well be a recovery in the near future. After an uncertain phase, the monsoons seem to have improved in many parts of the country. The stock-market authorities are unlikely to want any further drop in prices and could well tailor their decisions to help a recovery. And the flow of corporate news is good, with Pfizer, East India Hotels and others either maintaining or improving their dividend payments. But as in the past, the stock-market is influenced more than anything else by decisions in New Delhi, especially by Finance Minister V.P.Singh. And many marketmen will wonder what new rabbit he will produce next out of his hat.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 23.7.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	25.75	27.00	1.00 –
Asian Paints	280.00	130.00	225.00	6.25 –
Associated Cement	389.00	228.00	245.00	15.00 –
Atlas Copco	97.00	64.00	96.00	17.00 +
Avery India	146.00	100.00	127.00	8.25 +
Bajaj Auto	3975.00	1950.00	3700.00	190.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	285.00	290.00	15.00 –
Bata India	82.50	54.00	70.00	4.00 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	620.00	80.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	78.00	10.00 +
Blow Plast	160.00	90.00	99.00	3.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	90.00	nil +
Bombay Dyeing	123.00	77.00	101.00	5.00 +
Britania Ind.	149.00	85.00	146.00	6.00 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	56.00	60.00	1.50
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	490.00	70.00 +
Century Spinning	1690.00	745.00	770.00	25.00 –
Chloride India	132.00	86.00	122.00	4.00 –
Chorgia	65.00	42.00	53.00	8.00 +
Colgate	350.00	200.00	315.00	20.00 +
DCM	58.50	32.62	41.50	4.50 –
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	67.50	1.25 +
Elecon	127.00	80.00	110.00	7.00 –
Escorts	117.00	69.00	104.00	1.00 –
Finolex Cables	97.00	36.00	83.00	9.00 –
Food Specialities	375.00	215.00	361.00	41.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	42.50	1.50 –
Glaxo	87.00	61.00	65.00	2.00 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	21.00	22.00	2.00 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	182.00	92.50	150.00	13.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	72.50	4.50 –
Hindustan Lever	183.00	124.00	173.00	10.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	38.60	38.60	3.30 –
Hind. Dorr	660.00	330.00	375.00	245.00 –
IEL	84.50	61.50	65.00	2.00 –
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	130.00	5.00 –
Indian Organic	97.00	63.00	76.00	2.00 +
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	127.00	12.00 –
Indrol	455.00	200.00	422.50	2.50 +
Ingersoll-Rand	505.00	250.00	297.50	47.50 +
ITC	76.50	53.00	68.00	1.25 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	118.50	3.50 +
Kinetic Engineering	385.00	220.00	370.00	15.00 +
Lakme	195.00	120.00	150.00	7.50 +
Larson & Toubro	204.00	124.00	127.00	2.00 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	54.00	3.00 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	35.00	36.00	2.00 –
Madura Coats	92.00	51.00	54.00	0.50 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	51.00	53.50	2.50 –
Motor Industries	1000.00	605.00	875.00	15.00 –
National Organic	840.00	530.00	765.00	22.50 –
Nirlon	77.00	35.00	37.00	3.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	192.00	111.00	160.00	18.00 –
Peico Electronics	104.50	48.00	54.00	1.25 –
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	87.00	1.00 –
Ponds	390.00	200.00	360.00	32.50 +
Premier Auto	960.00	555.00	877.50	35.00 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	148.00	14.00 +
Raymond	97.00	72.00	82.00	3.00 –
Reliance Industries	392.00	226.00	317.00	46.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	49.00	50.00	3.50 –
Sandoz	135.00	62.00	132.00	21.00 +
SPIC	184.00	57.00	62.50	80.50 –
Tata Steel	1610.00	1090.00	1280.00	160.00 –
Telco	910.00	575.00	640.00	40.00 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	58.75	58.75	46.25 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.0345	7.9575
Austria	Schilling	100	84.0891	83.2343
Bahrain	Dinar	1	32.4930	32.4237
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.2830	41.1718
Canada	Dollar	1	9.1154	9.0441
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5737	1.5611
Egypt	Pound	1	14.8517	14.7232
France	Franc	1	1.8365	1.8181
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6086	1.5959
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0930	1.0081
Iran	Rial	100	15.7830	15.7110
Italy	Lira	100	00.8439	00.8110
Japan	Yen	100	8.0431	7.9796
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7570	0.7430
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.3237	41.8190
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.7258	4.6827
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9230	0.9180
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5901	0.5870
Netherlands	Guilder	1	5.2368	5.1963
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7360	0.7219
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.7387	5.5202
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0890	0.0793
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4308	0.4291
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7856	1.7711
Switzerland	Franc	1	7.3086	7.2478
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7080	0.6810
Thailand	Baht	100	47.3700	47.0018
UK	Pound	1	18.7687	18.6445
USA	Dollar	1	12.5775	12.4750
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3409	3.3301
USSR	Rouble	1	17.6775	17.6010
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.9136	5.8582

These rates were indicated by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi on 23.7.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

J.R.D. TATA

"I've been very frustrated"

Jehangir Ratanji Dadabhoy Tata—who turned 82 last month—is the grand old man of Indian industry. Still alert and very involved in his giant group's diverse businesses, he conveys a certain old-world charm that is rare, especially in the bustling world of go-getting businessmen. His uncompromising views on what is good and bad in economic policy may seem equally old-world, and very cut-and-dried, but there is a pride in his group's achievements and traditions that sits better on J.R.D. Tata than on almost any other businessman in India. Excerpts from an hour-long interview with Executive Editor T.N. NINAN.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Q. To start by looking back, what do you think are the major changes in Indian business in the 50 years that...

A. When I started in business—nearly 60 years ago—the conditions were very different to what they became. There was no licensing system, so there was nobody to bribe. Business was reasonably honest. The taxes were reasonable. So there was no great inducement to evade taxes.

But then came a controlled society, under the impulse of Jawaharlal. The Government needed money to run elections, and the whole culture changed. Along with this came punitive taxes of 98 per cent. When you have a licence-permit raj and very heavy taxes, you get tax evasion, black-marketing, and corruption.

Q. Are things now moving back?

A. Yes, undoubtedly, but only since Mr Rajiv Gandhi came. During the whole of the last 30 or 35 years, the business world was suspect. To a large extent yes, deservedly so. Knowing all the black money that has been made. But the private sector was not trusted and everything was thrust on the public sector.

Q. You don't see any benefits of having created this public sector?

A. Assets were created. But the time they took to blossom, the lack of return...

Q. You think controls and political corruption went together?

A. We know that enormous fortunes were made, enormous sums were sent abroad. During those 30 years, I haven't heard of a single businessman who was sent to jail.

Q. So you don't criticise V.P. Singh's cracking down on corrupt elements?

A. No, this must be done in a dignified and fair way. What happened to Kirloskar was an outrage on human dignity.

Q. How about the Voltas case? This was one of your companies.

A. These are big companies. It's possible at various levels. Sales people are told to sell more. There's always a reason for this, I think. Voltas is a clean company, it's a part of the Tatas. If they've done something wrong, why? Voltas makes air-conditioners. The Government charged heavy excise duty on air-conditioners made in the organised sector and on the smaller sector no duty at all, or not much duty. And in a very competitive market. So what do we do? Close down or sell? So they try and find some way in without breaking the law...their lawyers advised them, that's how it is done.

Q. In the Voltas case, the lawyers had said that this would be contravening the law, but the company went ahead.

A. Well, I don't know. (Tata Sons Director S.A. Sabavala: The chairman of Voltas contradicted the finance minister's statement in the Rajya Sabha; that was totally incorrect.) But why do these things happen? Because laws put people in the position of saying: all right, we're going into liquidation or compete. This does not involve moral turpitude...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. To what extent have you achieved what you set out to achieve in industry?

A. I must confess that I've been very frustrated. When I was young I was an angry young man: we were under foreign rule, people were oppressed. Now I'm an angry old man because of all the opportunities that have been missed.

Q. This has been your biggest frustration?

A. Yes of course. And even on things that were not business. I was the first in India 35 years ago to sound the alarm on the population. I made a speech. I was wrapped on the knuckles, whom do you think by? Nehru. His words will always ring in my ears: "Nonsense, J. A large population is the greatest source of strength of any nation." And after that, we've added 350 million people.

Q. Didn't you argue with him?

A. You don't argue with Jawaharlal. He didn't want to discuss it. But the interesting thing was I was a good friend of his. He trusted me. He knew I admired him. But he knew I disagreed with all his economic policies, and I even didn't agree with his foreign policy. I felt that Krishna Menon and others like that were pro-Soviet. So I never was able thereafter to discuss economic matters.

Q. Did you try?

A. Yes. He and Mrs Gandhi later developed this similar little polite way of telling me to shut up. Jawaharlal, when I started to bring up the subject of economic policy, would turn around and look out of the window. Mrs Gandhi did something else.

Q. She doodled?

A. Yes, she doodled. Doodling I didn't mind so much. She started picking up envelopes, cutting open the envelopes and pulling out letters. It was a polite indication that she was bored.

Q. That's not very polite.

A. Well, never mind. Once she got angry...I was talking, she was picking up envelopes, and Russi Mody whispered loudly to me: "I think she's bored." And she said, "No please go on, I'm listening very carefully." But I had a good relationship, very friendly. Rajiv would have been different. But now I am an old man of 82. Rajiv is a young man; naturally, he wants to talk to young people.

Q. Does Mr Ratan Tata see him quite frequently?

A. Yes, that's right. But I've never had that opportunity. All these years since freedom, no one in the Government of India, any of the prime ministers, ever came to me, or sent for me, and said, J, what do you think? Just this question. The only time I was not frustrated, funnily enough, was with T.T. Krishnamachari.

Q. Why?

A. He was in many ways a terrible man, very authoritarian. But he was the only one who ignored this socialism thing and did what he thought was right. He's the one who encouraged TELCO to manufacture trucks. He almost instructed Tata Steel to put in another million tonnes, double capacity, in 1954.

Q. You and G.D. Birla are the two great personalities in Indian business. What did you think of him?

A. We never got together in anything. Except that I recognised that this was a thinking man and a man of vision.

Q. He was so different from you. How did you see him in his role, his genius?

> "Both Nehru and Mrs Gandhi developed polite ways of telling me to shut up. Jawaharlal would look out of the window. Mrs Gandhi doodled, or cut open envelopes and pulled out letters."

A. I don't think that I'm anyone to criticise his system or his approach to business life. But we know the ethical standards of some people or some groups or some communities are different from others. His family prospered. Birla became almost as big as Tata.

The Congress party needed funds, and we'd do it openly. But those who paid more, who paid beyond the need, got the rewards. And we were not among those.

Q. Would you put Reliance Industries in the same category?

A. I don't know enough about it. He (Dhirubhai Ambani) has tremendous drive, tremendous capability, tremendous novelty of ideas. I respect that. But I don't know enough. It seems that too much has been done too quickly. And my view has been the same that the Government ultimately acted upon, on this question of converting non-convertible debentures. Things of that kind, I felt, were wrong. But I have no particular views.

Q. What would you like to do now?

A. I'm 82. I'm still group chairman. I'll help the group to stay united and to follow Jamshedji Tata's ideals.

Q. Do you see the group breaking up? There are only two or three Tatas...

A. There's no family really. But I don't see the group breaking up at all. However independent TISCO, TELCO or Tata Chemicals are, there is an advantage in belonging to a group with such a high reputation. It's something that's worth it, to make a Tata product.

Q. Your companies have strong, independent chairmen. If it's your personality that binds the group together...

A. Well, some people say that, but I don't think...Mr Moolgaokar is the creator of the modern TELCO. His way of management is strongly independent. Sometimes I wished he would consult me more, but it was working so well, and this was the way to get the best out of him.

Q. Talking of your group's traditions, there have been charges of insider trading in Tata Tea shares.

A. I had made H.N. Sethna of the Atomic Energy Commission, chairman of TOMCO, which had investments in tea. It needed money, I was abroad and Sethna sold some investments that were not specific to TOMCO. We sold a tiny percentage of the capital of Tata Tea. There was an uproar in Calcutta, that the Tatas were playing the market. When I came back I sent for Sethna and he said, frankly I didn't know...I said, you might have consulted me. That's all.

Q. Why did you pick Mr Ratan Tata as your heir apparent by making him chairman of Tata Industries?

A. Mr Ratan Tata is a young man with a young mind, and he said, "Let's make use of Tata Industries, let's sponsor new industries. It bears a good name, it's a good instrument." So I said, "Yes, you go ahead and be chairman of it."

Q. You were not signalling that he would be your successor as chairman of Tata Sons, the mother company?

A. It can be interpreted in any way. But my successor as what? When I die, or if I retire, the chairman of Tata Sons will be appointed by the board. I can't appoint.

Q. You haven't indicated your preference?

A. Well, we know that I think that this is a young man with modern ideas...

Q. Do you see him already slipping into that role?

A. Yes, I think he's doing what he can. He's introducing new ideas, new strategic planning. He's brought new business to us. And I think he'll do well.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you a wide range of energy-saving Outdoor Luminaires.

BJPTI-80-125

BJEF-1000 H

BJSLA-140

BJMIP-250-400

BJEF-21 (S)

Suitable for Fluorescent, HPMV, HPSV Lamps, Bajaj Streetlighting Luminaires are designed for the wide and uniform illuminance of roads and traffic junctions — and to withstand all extreme weather conditions.

The other outdoor luminaires include Post Top Lanterns for entrances, parks, campus lighting, HPMV/HPSV/Halogen Floodlights for general area lighting, marshalling yards, airport apron lighting, sports, monument landscaping, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road, Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-779 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection,

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone From HELENE CURTIS

The Hair Dye you can trust

New Easy to apply! Tru-Tone Self-spreading Hair Dye.

Self-spreading action:
Just apply the dye and lather it in.
It spreads evenly by itself.

Longer lasting, deep-dye action:
New Tru-Tone comes with the unique deep-dye action to give you a natural colour that stays on longer.

Pleasantly perfumed, with conditioner:
Tru-Tone keeps your hair soft and manageable.
Looking younger was never so easy!

New

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/85/JKHC/603

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARISHI MAHESH YOGI

Coming Home

FOR Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, self-styled messiah of world peace and leading exponent of Transcendental Meditation(TM), the day was crucial. He had chosen to announce that he was shifting the capital of his World Government of the Age of Enlightenment from the snow-clad Alps of Seelisburg in Switzerland to the plains of the New Okhla Industrial Development Area (NOIDA) on the outskirts of Delhi. It was also the day that he was to launch his global programme for world peace.

But the importance of the occasion seemed to have been lost on the 5,000-strong crowd which had assembled last fortnight in the brightly lit Indira Gandhi Indoor Stadium in New Delhi. They had gathered to witness the first international yogic flying competition in the Age of Enlightenment and to see if man could fly as the title of the competition promised.

An expectant hush descended over the audience as six participants took up the classic lotus position at one end of a 50-metre foam mattress. Then at the tinkle of a bell, they hopped like rabbits to the other end. Some rose hardly four inches and the others at best a foot. "What we were demonstrating is only the first stage of yogic flying in which the participants can only hop " explained a portly Bevan Morris, Minister of Education and Enlightenment in Maharishi's World Government. He added that so far no one had been able to demonstrate the second stage (floating) and the ultimate stage (flying).

But if the Maharishi failed in his first attempt to convince a sceptical Indian populace, he is not giving up easily. In his closely guarded "capital", stretching over 600 acres, the Maharishi has been laying elaborate plans to entrench his movement firmly in India. Maharishinagar, as it is called, is a hive of activity. He has already started a school with 1,200 students to train them in the Vedic sciences. A 1,200-bed Ayurveda hospital for treating patients and conducting research in traditional medicines is almost complete. And also coming up is a giant fibre-glass roofed hall, appropriately called the "Flying hall," for 7,000 people to practice TM.

But seated on a deer skin topped chair, bedecked with his favourite marigolds, the balding Maharishi, with his Santa-Claus beard, is looking far, far beyond. Although his followers claim that "he has no pockets to keep money", in the last five years his organisation has been busy buying up land in all parts of the country and now has 22 ashrams apart from 75 centres for training people in TM. Apart from that it has two colleges and 11 schools. So quietly has his multinational organisation been buying up land, hiring buildings and opening schools and hospitals that its total investments have grown to an estimated Rs 50-crore in the country.

Immediately after his unpublicised return to the country in November 1984, the Maharishi has been busy trying to spread his movement. Last year, he launched what he called the Ajay Bharat programme for teaching TM to school students. By December his organisation had taught 7,000 students in 200 schools spread all over the country. He has also

Last fortnight's yogic flying competition was a renewed effort by the Maharishi to shift his operations to India and spread TM to every nook and taluk of the country.

The Maharishi (left); and yogic 'flying'

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

B.K. SHARMA

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Maharishinagar: an expanding empire

not the Indian industry interested with public-sector companies like NTPC and IPCL apart from private companies like Modis and Escorts getting their executives to enroll in TM programmes.

In fact, Maharishi has been able to successfully market TM the world over. Using mantras gleaned from the teachings of Patanjali, the Maharishi proved that by meditating a person can transcend the thought process and reach a state of "alert restfulness." Regular meditation reportedly improved one's personal life.

His global empire has been growing at a fantastic rate and now spans 110 countries with assets totalling several million dollars. Already more than three million people have been trained in TM and the movement has more than 20,000 teachers on its payroll. A physics graduate from the University of Allahabad, Mahesh Yogi moved west in 1959 and took America by storm through his TM technique.

The TM movement caught on so rapidly that soon American business schools and even prisons were running courses. Understanding that the "coin of the times" was science, the Maharishi attracted eminent scientists to study the effects of TM and, in the process, set up 10 universities spread across the world. Convinced that TM was an answer to world peace, he established the World Government in the Age of Enlightenment in 1976 and seven years later at Geneva gave the world "a taste of utopia" by assembling 7,000 TM practitioners and asking them to meditate for three weeks. Although the Maharishi's followers claimed that the world behaved more positively in those weeks, few believed them.

Last fortnight's renewed effort to bring world peace was also meant to launch his plan to spread TM to every nook and taluk of the country. Called Adarsh or Invincible Bharat, it is the most ambitious of his projects. In the next five years, the Maharishi plans to set up centres in 5,000 revenue blocks in the country each having a 15-room Ayurveda hospital apart from 10 rooms to teach 300 children TM.

Already 50 such centres have come up. Bramachari Shailendra, president of the Adarsh Bharat programme and a Delhi University physics graduate, said: "By this we hope we could train 10,000 people in TM and make India an invincible force in the process." Predicts Dean R.Draznin, a TM teacher: "It would be like a great big Eureka. Maharishi would be ringing the bell of pure knowledge in the country." They hope to raise the Rs 120 crore needed for this through donations.

But while moving to India Maharishi has been careful to keep a low profile shunning press interviews and getting leading religious leaders and Ayurveda practitioners to lend credence to his movement. For the flying competition held last fortnight, Maharishi kept away and it was Shri Jagad Guru Shankaracharya of Jyotirmath who presided. He had Dr Brihaspati Dev Triguna, president, All India Ayurveda Congress, to inaugurate his World Centre for Perfect Health. And for developing astrology he has been able to interest well-known astrologer Dr B.V. Raman in his World Centre for Jyotish.

The plan was clear. Unlike Rajneesh, who had shocked Indians by his advocacy of free sex, Mahesh Yogi was keen not to offend any religious or social sentiments in his efforts to woo India. On the other hand, he is trying to revive interest in the Vedas.

Meanwhile, he is gearing his well-oiled publicity machine towards carrying out a publicity blitz. Already the Age of Enlightenment Press in Jabalpur has been fitted with the latest in printing technology to cope with the movement's mounting propaganda.

In May this year he released a video recording where he outlined his plan to make India "the supreme power of the world" and reportedly circulated more than 1,000 copies, some even to government officials. But in his efforts to shift to India with his men and money he has already run into trouble. Maharishinagar has now become a subject of dispute with officials in charge of NOIDA sending him a legal notice for acquiring land that had been earlier earmarked as the green belt area.

But these would hardly deter the Maharishi's move to India which is seen by his followers as his final attempt to speed up the process of attaining world peace. Already touching 65, the Maharishi realises that he has little time left to realise his goal. As he told his followers last fortnight: "Time demands the rise of the supreme power of coherence in world consciousness. Every nation will rise in fulfillment. Every government will experience real freedom." Right now India would be quite happy if Maharishi brought some peace in the strife-torn Punjab or riot-hit Ahmedabad.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DRUGS

Rich Haul

FOR OVER two years the Delhi police had waited for this moment. And Sub-Inspector Rajinder Bakshi was not going to let it slip away. He rammed his car into the olive-green Maruti manoeuvring its way out of the Vikram Hotel parking lot in south Delhi. Following behind, Inspector L.S. Brar timed his move to perfection, jumping out of his car with the pistol cocked. The balding, tall and dark figure running out of the now battered Maruti had no chance.

Thus ended yet another chapter in the saga of Ashok Solomon, Delhi's widely suspected white collar drug don. For months the police had looked for a scrap of evidence to nail him and despite a thick Interpol dossier which was circulated among the police top brass, it had been impossible to link him to any recent crime. Now, some of that evidence was visible: 100 kg of hashish packed in Pakistani newspapers lying in the car.

Within hours he was leading the investigators to his factory shed in Okhla where they found another 327 kg cache. "This is perhaps our biggest catch in a long time. Not so much in terms of the amount of hashish caught as in the sense that we have caught one of the major brains behind the drug racket," said a beaming Maxwell Pereira Kamath, the south Delhi deputy commissioner of police. Solomon promptly admitted that the seized hashish was meant to be shipped to Europe and the US in gift packages to be sent through a handling agent. It was part of a 900 kg consignment sent to him from Pakistan across the Punjab border.

But even more than the magnitude of the drug haul, what made the story so headline-worthy was Solomon's background. A second-year economic honours drop-out from St Stephen's college in 1968, Solomon is an old acquaintance of Delhi police and a familiar figure in the capital's social jet-set, living in his mother's imposing house in the exclusive locality of Golf Links and owning a number of private companies and boutiques. The poor drop-out who began his career by driving a DLY taxi in 1968 has come a long way. This, the late '60s, was the time when many American soldiers returned from Vietnam via India and they needed hashish. Solomon came in contact with them and his career began in right earnest. A year later he was arrested for forging a cheque on behalf of Jeanne Daniel, a European woman, by the Defence Colony police. Four years later he had moved into the big league: he was caught in connection with the recovery of 400 kg of hashish. But he secured bail, jumped it and was back in jail under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act. The hide-and-seek game continued with Solomon succeeding in securing his release from the Delhi High Court and then, after his arrest for illegally carrying about DM 3 lakh, defying a COFEPOSA warrant during the Emergency for seven months till he was able to procure a new passport under the name of Dev Raj. He escaped to the US but could not stay quiet for too long. In Minneapolis, the Drug Enforcement Authority intercepted a 600-kg hashish parcel from India addressed to him and Solomon was in the Minneapolis prison on a 10-year sentence later remitted to six. Even after he returned to India in 1983 and apparently engaged himself in business, suspicion of his remaining in the drug racket remained. "My husband is a victim of his past. He always knew he would never be allowed to live a normal honest life," his wife claims.

HARI OM GULATI

In the drug haul, what made the story so headline-worthy was Solomon's background.

Solomon's residence in Delhi: affluent

Solomon went into business with gusto: his garment and real estate firm, Chintel India, cashed in on the stock-market boom and saw its Rs 1 crore share issue oversubscribed by 60 per cent. For Clarex India, his television manufacturing company, he had already sold promoters' quota shares worth Rs 13 lakh. Among documents recovered from Solomon are three cheque-books, belonging to G.S. Sethi, Harbhajan Kaur Sethi and Mahesh Sharma. Each leaf in the cheque-books is blank but signed by the account-holder.

While the police have called in the Income Tax Department for help, Solomon's family is crying foul. "I will not say that my husband had nothing to do with drugs in the past. But now he has been framed. Having seen an American prison for six years he knows the real meaning of the word freedom. He could never have indulged in crime again," says Chandralekha.

The police deny the frame-up charge and, instead, are trying to crack the burgeoning drug business in the capital. Police Commissioner Ved Marwah points out with concern that the hashish seizures over the past 12 months have exceeded the 6,000-kg mark while the figure for 1985 was just about 400 kg. Even more worrisome was the discovery that the drug trade is now being run by the super-rich who have influence in political circles. A fact that was obvious from the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence look-out notice on Harnam Singh Toofan, an influential transporter of the capital, whose parties in the past had been attended by President Zail Singh and Home Minister Buta Singh, after 1,400 kg of hashish was recovered from a Mehrauli farm house belonging to his alleged business partner K.M. Virmani.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rent-a-Plane

Vayudoot. It has brought you many firsts. From taking you to hard-to-reach places. To holiday package tours. Giving you Night Flight Charters and now the most innovative concept of all ... the Rent-a-Plane service.

A boon to Tour Operators, in India and abroad, to Industrial Houses and to Businessmen. Soon they can charter a plane from Vayudoot individually or collectively. To fly 'anywhere' in the country. At nominal costs.

The Rent-a-Plane service. Just one of the innovations to come from the fastest growing airline in the world ... Vayudoot.

For details, please call or contact:
The Commercial Department
Vayudoot
Safdarjung Airport
New Delhi-110 003
Phone: 699272

Or any of our regional offices at Bombay: Ph. 6121405.
Calcutta: Ph. 576582.
Hyderabad: Ph. 72855.

Mutual-4319A

वायुदूत
Vayudoot
We fly for you

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The 93-inch Kavalur telescope: Asia's largest

KAVALUR OBSERVATORY

India's Eye to the Sky

FROM a distance, the Vainu Bappu telescope appears like a giant thimble against the tapestry of a moonlit sky in Kavalur in Tamil Nadu. Inside the glistening aluminium dome, the telescope —120 tonnes of finely-crafted steel suspended on a horseshoe and steel yoke—resembles a medieval sling-shot. Through the prime focus lens, its 93-inch reflector, the largest in Asia, looks like a giant shaving mirror. Crouched inside the prime focus cage, a cylindrical tube three feet in diameter, Indian astrophysicists are suddenly finding themselves light years ahead in their quest to explore earth's final frontier—space.

Built by the Indian Institute of Astrophysics (IIA) at a cost of Rs 6.5 crore, the telescope is the largest in Asia and the 18th-most powerful optical telescope in the world. Named after the late Vainu Bappu, the legendary Indian astrophysicist and a former director of IIA, whose brain-child it was, the 93- inch telescope is twice as powerful as any telescope built in the country. Says Dr J.K. Bhattacharya, IIA's bespectacled director: "It's an Indian eye to the universe and would enable us to work in the frontiers of astronomical research."

Globular star cluster pictured by the telescope

The giant "Indian eye" is a triumph of indigenous ingenuity. The technicians manning the control panel below depress a button on the computer console and the shutters of the dome slide noiselessly open—leaving a slice of the night sky visible. The telescope moves with a gentle, floating motion as it tracks a heavenly body and the giant dome rotates with a low hum. A few coordinates typed into the control system and the telescope tracks Alpha Aqlulae, 35 light years away—a blob of flame blue energised by a thousand twinkling specks of light.

A little later, Mu Cygni, which appears through the naked eye as a bluish green star, can clearly be seen as two stars rotating around each other. And then, in response to another

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The technology is Binatone. The success, worldwide.

Binatone technology combines the best of the East and West. This has made Binatone the single largest independent Electronics company in England.

The same technology that has planted Binatone's roots throughout the rest of the world, with production and R&D set ups in Japan, Korea, Hongkong, Taiwan, Germany and England.

Today, Binatone products are sold in 50 countries the world over and the corporate quest continues—to turn out products that meet the ever rising demands of a technology conscious world.

No wonder then, Binatone has outsold even Japanese products in England.

Since you buy a Colour TV only once in your lifetime, buy best, buy Binatone.

You won't find a better deal.

Binatone

Built better to last longer

Binatone Electronics Private Limited,
B-58, Site IV, Sahibabad Industrial Area,
Sahibabad-201010 (U.P).

Arms Communications 185

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Building the Colbun Dam involved a slight problem:

The site is hit by an earthquake once every 15 days.

SKF technology helped provide a shock-proof solution.

Associated Bearing Co Ltd
Hoechst House
Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021

Skefko India Bearing Co Ltd
Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Bldg
Netaji Subhash Road, Bombay 400 002

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Designing Chile's 500 metre long Colbun Dam was something of an engineer's nightmare. Because, being in an earthquake-prone area, the Dam was subject to serious and persistent vibration – which would naturally cause dangerous misalignments in the assemblies supporting its flow-control gates.

That's why SKF was called in, at the design stage itself, to help work out a solution to the problem.

Our solution was a set of non-conventional 850 mm spherical bearings specially designed for the support assembly – bearings that would actually compensate for the inevitable misalignment caused by an average of 24 earthquakes a year!

The use of large spherical bearings for dam projects is an application that SKF is today pioneering worldwide. (It also results in major savings of construction time and cost.)

It is this kind of technology that has given us the reputation of being the world leaders in bearings.

And it's this same technology that goes into everything we do – whether it's a bearing for an electrical motor or a truck, for a sugar mill or a nuclear power plant.

SKF. Behind every bearing, a world of technology.

SKF

The World's No. 1 Choice

ontract-ABC-38/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now you can stay in a deluxe Singapore hotel for 4 days and 3 nights at a price you normally pay for 1 day.

At the Oberoi, you can ask for the Oberoi Special which gives you 4 days and 3 nights at a price you can afford.

Package rates for 3 nights:
US$55 per person	3 to a room
US$70 per person	2 to a room
US$95 per person	1 to a room

Such savings mean you have more money to shop around in Singapore.

That's not all. You can choose between a free continental, western or Indian vegetarian breakfast.

There are also special 6 o'clock checkout privileges (subject to early confirmation). Not to mention the many recreational and social opportunities the hotel provides.

The daily shuttle bus service to Orchard Road gives you a real look at Singapore's exciting shopping facilities.

So if you're planning on a trip to Singapore, here's chance to stay in a deluxe hotel at a price you thought w never possible. And you'll go home with more than j memories.

For immediate reservation and confirmation, ple contact the Oberoi Hotels Instant Reservation Office your local travel agent.

OBEROI Imperial SINGAPORE

1, Jalan Rumbia/Oxley Rise, Singapore 0923. Tel: 7371666. Cable: Imperhotel. Telex: OBHOTEL RS 216 Facsimile: 7374761. Owning company Hind Hotels Int Ltd.

Corporate Sales & Marketing

7 Sham Nath Marg Delhi 110054
Phone: 2525464 Telex: 66303, 66461 OMDL Cable: AHI

NEW DELHI
Phone: 699571 Telex: 31-2372 & 3829 OBDCIN

AHMEDABAD
Phone: 464451 Telex: 0121-692 OBAD IN

BANGALORE
Phone: 573444 Telex: 0845-725 MERC IN

BOMBAY
Phone: 202443 Telex: 011-4153 & 4154 OBBY IN

CALCUTTA
Phone: 292323 Telex: 021-7248 & 7854 OBCL IN

MADRAS
Phone: 478156 & 473430 Telex: 6281 OBMA IN

COLOMBO
Phone: 20001/21171 Telex: 21201 OBHOTEL CE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

command, the telescope starts scanning objects trillions and trillions of kilometres away, almost above the centre of the galaxy, about 9,500 light years away. M15, a globular cluster of stars so densely packed that its core looks like a fuzzy glowing ball, comes into view. Any spaceship sent from earth at present rocket speeds would take more than a million years to reach it.

M15, Mu Cygni and Alpha Aqlulae are just some of the millions of stars in the Milky Way, apart from those in other galaxies, that the giant telescope now being readied for research would bring more clearly into focus for Indian astronomers to study. Already, astronomers have lined up a whole series of experiments, including:

- A study of the physics of quasars or quasi-stars found in other galaxies that emit very strong radio emissions
- Probing the star-forming areas in the Milky Way galaxy
- Looking at distant galaxies to determine their evolution and content
- Trying to discover what constitutes the chromosphere or outer layers of stars.

All this would make it the busiest telescope in the country and the institute has worked out that each night's viewing would cost Rs 40,000. Building the Bappu telescope itself was a mammoth task that took 10 years to complete. Its most essential components—the giant reflecting mirror, the yoke and the horseshoe on which it rests, and the mechanisms that control the movement of the telescope—created initial problems because of their sheer size. In the mirror, for instance, a ceramic circular reddish-brown blank having a diameter of 93 inches was imported from West Germany and then had to be ground and polished to precision thinner than a hair split several times. It took four years for scientists to obtain the right precision—after they set up special facilities in Bangalore to grind the mirror first with diamonds bits, then with glass and finally coating it with less than a millimetre thick aluminium foil to give it the reflecting surface. Such accuracy was necessary because even the slightest variation would distort the image.

The giant yoke and the horseshoe which holds up the telescope and enables it to swivel in any direction, had to be floated on two pads which had oil pumped in under high pressure to allow completely frictionless movement—making the telescope so sensitive that even the push of a little finger could move it. And control mechanisms had to be developed to ensure that the telescope moved with an accuracy of less than a micron. All this makes the telescope so powerful that it is able to define a 25 paise coin placed 40 km away. In space, it is able to pick up light from some of the faintest stars, both in the Milky Way and in other galaxies.

Diagram by B.K. SHARMA

Schematic diagram of the telescope (above): and on its yoke

The most crucial aspect in development terms is image recording. Astronomers no longer trust their eyes to observe heavenly objects. Photographic plates are still the most commonly-used technique to take pictures of faint objects. But these plates have only a 1 per cent efficiency for recording light from distant objects: the Bappu telescope, however, uses sensitive microchips called charge couple devices that are 50 times more efficient than plates. Exactly 1,85,440 of them are lined on a platform the size of a thumbnail and are able to pick up even very faint light rays and convert them into small electrical charges which are recorded in the form of digits. However unromantic it may seem, these digits are of prime interest to astronomers for finding variations that would give them clues about a star.

Although there has been tremendous progress in the field of what is called the "invisible bands" of the spectrum—ultra violet, infra-red and radiowaves—optical telescopy still holds its ground.

And, while the power of a telescope does make a difference, the individual ingenuity of the researchers is equally important and this is where Indian astronomers hope to score. Using the 40-inch telescope in Kavalur, Indian scientists were among the first to discover atmosphere on Ganymede, Jupiter's satellite, and the rings of Uranus. As Dr Bhattacharya says: "Till now we were handicapped but with the Bappu telescope, we will be able to study some of the faintest objects that our existing telescopes couldn't see." And hopefully, the 93-inch Indian eye peering into distant galaxies would give Indian researchers the edge they require to unravel some of the mysteries of the universe. —RAJ CHENGAPPA in Kavalur

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A natural for the corporate success.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Executive Ladder

RSW:3182

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAYUR® Sulz Suitings

Sulzer Woven
Perfect-Symmetry
Suiting

The natural corporate wear.

ESQUIRE SULZ

A product of the Rajasthan Spinning & Weaving Mills Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COURT TRIALS

Historic Heroes

JUNE, 1908. Bombay. In the back, Tilak lies sleeping, oblivious of his flustered friends and colleagues in the front room. The police have come to arrest him. Tilak, dark, and intense-eyed, gets up with alacrity, as if waiting to go to jail.

1922, Sabarmati Ashram. A car drives up, the diffident and respectful British police officer tells Gandhi he has come to arrest him. Gandhi can't contain his mischievous little smile. This is the moment he was waiting for.

1928 Lahore. Bhagat Singh's parents regret that he never married. He replies: "My marriage will not take place in ghulam Hindustan. If it does, then death will be my bride and my funeral procession will be like a shaheedon ki barat.

Red Fort, 1945. Bhulabhai Desai visits the accused, Sehgal. He says: "If, in the course of the trial, our lives go, let them go. If death didn't come to us then (in Burma), it is not our fault."

These men knew what they wanted; fear was alien to them. Now, Amal Allana's magnificent and well-researched 16-part series (Raj se Swaraj) on four famous court trials of pre-Independence India—to be televised shortly—will transport viewers to the times when ideals were not the prerogative of the foolish. Says Allana: "While doing these trials we were reliving history. We tried to understand what is happening today from a historical perspective.... After all, our political values have come from this period."

Director Allana

For TV viewers, history has been made a little easier: the personages from the drama of the independence movement come dramatically alive. Allana has recreated the court trials of Tilak, Gandhi, Bhagat Singh and Bose and the Indian National Army (INA) captains Dhillon, Sehgal and Shahnavaz Khan and also depicted both their characters and the events which led to the arrests.

It was not easy. Allana and her husband, Nissar Allana, the producer as well as the series' sets designer, worked on the project for nearly two years before filming began. There are over 50 locations; some in the very places where the event took place. They have worked together in theatre: Amal directed some outstanding plays, Mahabhoj, Aashaadh Ka Ek Din. Nissar did the set designs and both worked on Attenborough's Gandhi.

It started simply enough. Walking past an old bookshop in Pune, Allana came across Gouba's book on 20 famous trials and realised that they were ideal for TV. Foraging for facts and insights led her to Sehgal in Chandigarh and Dhillon in

R.K. NARAYAN

Malgudi Days

MALGUDI does exist. It has been made, recreated for television. Mr Lawley, 18 ft tall with his pedestal and Rs 28,000 worth of plaster of Paris, lords it over Agumbe, a once-prosperous town in the middle of vibrant green forest country near Udipi. R.K. Narayan's little world ingrained in the minds of his readers the world over has been superimposed on Agumbe for Malgudi Days, a TV series which is based on his short stories and novels and will shortly be telecast. Agumbe and its people will never be quite the same again. Not only have Malgudi station, Malgudi hotel, Malgudi bank, and plain Malgudi signs on the main road come up in blue and red—causing some motorists believing themselves in Malgudi to take a few U-turns—but the people of Agumbe comprise half the cast of the series. Says the series' Director Shankar Nag: "We had the streets at our disposal....An old woman even came up to us when she saw Lawley and said that it was good that the British had come back. They certainly have a sense of humour. When puzzled motorists stop, they are often told that Lawley was the man who built Agumbe...." In fact, Agumbe also has a new, working fountain, courtesy the unit. And R.K. Narayan's younger brother, cartoonist R.K. Laxman, has immortalised Malgudi further in his drawings which are used in the titles of the series.

Sketches by R.K. LAXMAN

The 23-minute film (35mm) adaptations (the English version is 26 minutes) of Narayan's stories are so good, "touching the heart more than the head", as someone in the preview audience last fortnight remarked, that it is a wonder nobody thought of it before. The TV series are a faithful rendering of stories from Malgudi Days, Under The Banyan Tree and Lawley Road. Narayan's almost made-for-television. The stories are about any and everyman. The postman, the sweeper, the driver, the shepherd

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(Clockwise) Sadashiv Amrapurkar as Tilak; Anupam Kher as Gandhi; Ravi Khandwilkar as Bose; and Pramod Moutho as Nehru remote farm in Madhya Pradesh. Details of the trials as well as the small details to add versimilitude, such as what their wives wore during the trials, were provided by them. It is these touches that make these trials memorable.

Each trial is treated differently. Says Allana: "For (Amrapurkar's) Tilak I wanted it to be urban and claustrophobic. I wanted dark sombre colours.... There is Tilak and his friends." The Gandhi episode is different—out in the open, airy and light. Even the music is different (Louis Banks has done a marvellous job). Anupam Kher plays Gandhi like Sarojini Naidu's Mickey Mouse: humorous, shrewd, and human. Says Allana: "I wanted to show Gandhi relaxed, his sense of humour....He made everyone wear a Gandhi cap, he never wore one.... "

Tilak and Gandhi were leaders, Bhagat Singh and the INA men represented the people. Says Allana: "In the INA trials, I wanted to show the predicament of an Indian man in the army: how it was possible for them to defect and form their own army to fight for independence." This episode is stark and bare, even the Bose bit in Singapore and the Red Fort....The Bhagat Singh episode is basically conspiratorial. The pace is fast. There is murder after murder; it is action-oriented. But it has the lyrical element as well. It is very moving because they were all so young. This episode has to be more personal: there is nothing beyond Bhagat Singh and his group.... He teaches us how a young man with passion can awaken people to violence...."

The series end with the INA trials. "This is the only trial the Indians won. It is the dawn of independence..it ends with Nehru, thoughtful, but proud and quiet," says Allana. For her, the biggest lesson of history is that the ideals these men were fighting for have not really changed.

—MADHU JAIN

the little village boy. Narayan is low on melodrama and high on humour (scarce and getting scarcer in Indian writing) and irony. His stories are funny, yet sad and extremely endearing. Most important of all, Narayan is a marvellous story-teller, and does not pretend to be anything more. Says producer, T.S. Narasimhan: "The stories are scripts in themselves...there was not much we had to do...."

To get Narayan to agree to give his stories was probably the greatest hurdle. After the author's experience of Dev Anand's film version of his novel, Guide, many a hopeful producer was snubbed by Narayan. Narasimhan was not sparing either: "When I called him a few years ago for permission to make a film on The Financial Expert (which he did make), he abused me and banged the phone down." But later, quite obviously pleased with Narasimhan's efforts, Narayan agreed to the TV series. Meanwhile, Contract Advertising had a similar brain-wave and contacted Narayan in Mysore. The author put Contract and Narasimhan together and Malgudi Days was launched. Each episode of the series has cost over Rs 3.50 lakh to make, since most of the shooting is on location. There are two versions of the series: Hindi and English. The series will probably be marketed in Europe, the US and Australia. Ten of the episodes will be screened at the Frankfurt Book Fair in October.

Malgudi then does exist. And it will for long because the 80-year-old indefatigable author gives his stories a certain timelessness: little boys will always try to be heroes, although their hearts pound away; there will always be a talkative man in a small town, with a tall tale for every incident; encounters between poor Indian shepherds and Yankee tourists wanting to buy large chunks of ancient Indian culture will always be much the same. And Narayan, he too will remain the same. When the lights in the auditorium came on again, there he was, his eyes twinkling. He had laughed at his own jokes. —MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Now I see what I'd been missing."

TC-2160MR
PAL-System Colour TV
- 21 (54 cm) Grey Square Picture Tube
- 35-Key TV/Video Dual Remote Control
- Top Tuning
- Deluxe On-screen Indicator
- Audio/Video-In Terminals

*TC-2160XR 8-System Model Available.

"Watching TV is important to me because it's part of my profession ... so I just naturally want to watch the best quality whenever possible. That's why I watch National. The 54-centimeter (21) TC-2160MR, for example, has a square-cornered picture tube that virtually eliminates distortion and image cropping ... and a cool, grey screen makes viewing easier on the eyes. Auto Tuning allows preset tuning of up to 30 channels. And a 35-key infra-red remote control controls not only the TV, but many National videos, too. And if something does go wrong, the National Service Network is there to back me up. Now I see what I'd been missing. You can see it too, at a shop that sells quality National electronics."

FULL SERVICE National NETWORK

Mithun Chakraborty

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Indus Airconditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only)
• 371, Cadell Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 4303719/4309270

Associated Electrical Agencies (For audio/video products only)
• Anugrana Apartments, "B" Block, Ground Floor 19, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 478559

Esquire Distributing & Servicing Co. Pvt. Ltd. (For video-related products only)
Unit No. 3 & 13, Ground Floor, Sethna Hall, 75 Veer Nariman Road, Churchgate, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 234226/230311

National

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MiG 29

Sky Master

THE INDIAN Air Force (IAF) has finally found the answer to Pakistan's F-16s. At least two IAF squadrons are being equipped with the the redoubtable MiG 29, the latest and most secret frontline fighter in the Soviet inventory, whose existence was known to the western world but not much else, till last fortnight when the first clear pictures of the plane were published.

The agreement for the purchase of the MiG 29s was signed in Moscow in May by a high-level team of the Defence Ministry. According to this agreement, the IAF will receive 40 planes in fly-away condition, with the option to later build the plane within the country. A decision on indigenous manufacture will be taken after the air force completes its assessment of the long-term requirement of MiG 29s. As part of the agreement, the Soviet Union has agreed to transfer the technology to manufacture the R60 M air-to-air missile in India.

Delivery dates are being kept secret but it is reasonably certain that the planes will not arrive before the beginning of 1987. Indian pilots have to be flown to the USSR for training, and six months is the minimum time needed to introduce a new aircraft type.

The MiG 29, whose raised cockpit makes it look like a hooded cobra, is a versatile air defence fighter which should give the IAF complete mastery over South Asian skies. It has two engines which develop 45 per cent more thrust than the F-16's single engine, greater range (850 km compared to the F-16's 630 km, according to a US Defence Department publication) and, more importantly, a very powerful radar which give the plane Beyond Visual Range (BVR) capability. Its pulse doppler radar can track hostile aircraft 100 km away in the look-up mode and 60 km in the look-down. The MiG 29 carries missiles with a 30 km range. Comparatively, the F-16's radar can see barely 30 km and its Sidewinder missiles have only a 6 km reach. With this kind of radar and missile, one MiG 29 can mount a combat air patrol for three airfields like Amritsar, Pathankot and Adampur.

Air Chief Marshal D.A. La Fontaine opposed the acquisition of the MiG 29 as he favoured continuing with the Mirage 2000. "A decision should have been taken long ago whether we need the Mirage 2000 or the MiG 29. We don't need both," said a senior IAF officer. Why then has the Government decided to go in for the MiG 29? It appears that the debate raging between two schools of thought among defence planners—one favouring multi-role aircraft and the other single-role ones—may be finally getting resolved.

The Mirage 2000 is a genuine multi-role fighter with armaments carrying capacity, dogfight ability and the range to carry out escort missions. The IAF visualises using it as an escort plane for deep-strike missions by Jaguars. And when attacked it can look after itself.

But the Defence Ministry's decision to acquire the MiG 29 could mean that it favours the other concept of having dedicated single-role aircraft. The MiG 29 acquisition is therefore seen as a logical step in the wake of the earlier decision in 1982 to manufacture the MiG 27, a pure ground attack aircraft which will be deployed in the frontline airfields to provide close air support to army columns. Just as the MiG 27 is a dedicated ground attack fighter, the MiG 29 will take on air defence duties. Defence planners think six to eight squadrons may be required to ensure the air defence of Delhi, Bombay, Tarapore, Bombay High and the Kashmir Valley.

If that many planes are required, it makes sense to manufacture it in the country. And the MiG 29, being a conventional aircraft, will be easier to manufacture compared to the Mirage 2000 which has complex electronics for its fly-by-wire system and composite materials in its structure. The MiG 29 components have a fair degree of commonality with the MiG 27 which has just started rolling out from the Nasik factory of Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd.

Moreover, the Mirage 2000 at approximately Rs 20 crore a piece, is inordinately expensive. The MiG 29 is cheaper—the Soviet Union is asking Rs 14 crore a piece, very expensive as Russian equipment goes, but the air force thinks the agreed price will be about Rs 11 crore.

With the acquisition of the MiG 29, the IAF will have virtually all important members of the MiG family in squadron service—the still effective MiG 21, two squadrons of the air defence version of the swing-wing MiG 23, half a squadron of the high level long range intercepter MiG 25, which it is using merely for reconnaissance, and the MiG 27.

Russia has kept the plane pretty much under wraps since its induction into the Soviet Air Force started in 1985. The first clear pictures and an eye-witness description of the plane were published only last fortnight after the Soviets sent six of them on a sales promotion tour to Finland, obviously to show the West that they had closed the technology gap in the matter of fighter aircraft. India is the first country to be offered the MiG 29 which has not been supplied even to the Warsaw Pact countries.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

The MiG 29, the latest and most secret Soviet fighter, is a versatile air defence aircraft which should give the Indian Air Force complete mastery over South Asian skies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

43, Dickenson Road (Road Opp. Webb's Garage) Bangalore 560 042 Tel: 578718/578452 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.3
92, G. N. Chetty Road (Opp. Vani Mahal) T. Nagar, Madras 600 017 Tel: 441192 Open: Mon-Sat 10 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can lay your hands on some of the best computers at Computer Point.

We've just made choosing a computer very, very easy.

We stock some of the best computers available – along with a great range in accessories and consumables.

So you don't have to waste precious time running from manufacturer to manufacturer.

Just walk in and see the various systems on display. Feel their worth. Touch them. Work with them.

And if you feel like having a second opinion, just ask us.

At Computer Point, we offer you the convenience of a single, unbiased source for everything you need.

Including software, consumables, accessories, books and magazines and personalised after-sales service.

Our professionals talk your language, not Basic or Cobol. And if you want to buy a computer right away, you'll find our prices very, very attractive, and our delivery schedules a pleasant surprise !

We'll even train you to use your computer. And provide expert advice whenever you want it – free !

If it's computers you're thinking of, you can't come to a better place than Computer Point.

Because, while everyone else looks at your need from their angle, we see your point of view !

COMPUTER POINT

We see your point of view !

Sista's-CP/1366

DON'T BE A PARTNER IN SOFTWARE PIRACY

BUY GENUINE

Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025 Tel: 4936716/4930543 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.30 pm

South Extension Part I, New Delhi 110 049 Tel: 624370 Open: Mon-Sat 10 am – 1.30 pm & 2.30 pm – 7 pm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRASHANT

CHAMBAL VALLEY

From Guns to Tractors

Chambal farmer: transformation

NO LONGER is the gun the most visible symbol of the Chambal valley. Today, it is the tractor, ploughing the field in the sowing season, carrying the produce in overflowing trailers during harvesting or, most often, transporting farmers and their families to the bustling mandis and towns of Bhind and Morena districts. For the better part of this century, the two districts have been the breeding grounds of a host of dacoits ranging from the legendary Man Singh in the 1950s to Malkhan Singh in the 1980s; but today they are in the throes of an agricultural upsurge that promises to make dacoity a mere milestone in their history and to establish the valley as the latest success story in Indian agriculture.

Evidence of the new affluence is to be seen everywhere: in the power-driven threshers that are almost as common as tractors, in the TV antennae that are sprouting in the villages, in the eight-fold increase in bank deposits and loans in the last decade. Says Bashir Ahmed, who works for a tractor agency in Amba: "People here have so much money they keep wads of notes hidden under bricks in their huts." Adds Arvind Joshi, collector of Morena: "You can see a dramatic change in people's attitudes. In Amba block—the home of Putlibai—most people had not even seen the face of wheat till a decade ago. Today, the same people harvest over 30 quintals of wheat per acre."

Map by B.K. SHARMA

As recently as the early 1970s, there were more than 50 gangs of dacoits listed in the police files of the two districts; today Morena has just one gang, and Bhind has none. Where murder and kidnapping were common, Morena had only two such instances this year, and Bhind has had none. Not long ago, guns were a common sight; today, says Anand Kumar, a general merchant of Amba: "People just don't carry guns any more."

The Chambal valley, with its rich alluvial soil, has always been relatively prosperous, and the rudiments of a canal system were laid as early as the 1920s, then expanded in the 1950s and 19... But the canals leaked or were choked w... weeds. Then, in 1974, came the Cham... Command Area Development Autho... (CADA). And the Rs 80 crore that the C... has spent for the 1.7 million residen... Bhind and Morena has spurred agri... tural growth.

Meanwhile, law and order has b... maintained. The 10 companies of arm... police posted in the region when Malkh... Singh and Ramesh Sikarwar were a... are still in place. Says Joshi: "Now I de... most of my time to development-rel... activities, and much less to law and o... problems."

Pritam Singh Patel, 56, is the m... prosperous landowner of Rayatpur... village of Sikhs, which is 6 km o... Gwalior-Bhind highway. Life was a... till CADA came up and the supply of w... became more assured. Today, the ... odd acres of land that Patel and his f... of five sons own give them enough in... to own two tractors, a bio-gas pla... sprawling house, a refrigerator, a t... sion set, two Alsatians, a dozen h... cattle and the luxury of half a d... "bhaiyas" who work the fields for Rs... day. Says Patel: "Five years ago, it w... rare farmer who grew 100 kg of w...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...the same farmer grows ...2,000 kg."

In nearby Sherpur (pop: ...), Subhran Singh ...mar, 67, draws the same ...ure of a dramatic change in ...quality of life as he relaxes ...his drawing-room, where ...most striking co-occupant ...Bajaj scooter. Where barely ...per cent of the villages had ...tricity a decade ago, now ...per cent have light connec-... Where telephones were ...known, the village now has ...dozen connections. Says ...mar: "Once farmers here ...to resist fertiliser, now ...fight for better fertiliser. If ...neighbour gets 10 ...unds (roughly 375 kg) of ...eat per bigha, you want to ...w 15 maunds."

The CADA has not dug any ...canals; it has merely tried ...ensure that the irrigation ...stem works to its full poten-...—prodded by the World ...k, which has largely fi-...nced its activities. Since ...mers at the tail-end of the ...nals always complained of ...getting any water, CADA is ...w spending nearly Rs 3 crore ...digging 75 huge tubewells ...t will go more than 250 ...res into the ground and ...ch water that will then be fed ...the canal system. This is ...only irrigation system in ...country to go in for this ...nology.

Again, since reforestation ...the only way to stop the ...nes from advancing at the ...e of 800 hectares a year, ...A has had aircraft over from Delhi's ...dardjung airport and even roped in the ...force for aerially seeding over 30,000 ...ares of land last month. The figures ...k of CADA's success. Over the last ...ade, it has:

- More than doubled the gross value of ...CADA area's agricultural produce, ...Rs 75.62 crore to Rs 168.5 crore.
- More than quadrupled the number of ...ors in the area: from 656 to 2,981.
- More than doubled the number of ...wells: from 1,803 to 3,881.
- Nearly doubled agricultural pro-...ivity per worker as well as fertiliser ...sumption.

But perhaps the most striking success ...been the increase in the yield of seven crops, including coarse grains and oilseeds. Chambal now has yields which are well above both the state and national averages. In bajra and gram, for instance, Chambal's yield per hectare is 47 per cent and 43 per cent higher than the all-India average. In wheat, which is almost entirely a post-CADA phenomenon, the Chambal yield is almost as good as the all-India figure. Double cropping was earlier practised in barely 30 per cent of the area. Now four out of five farmers take two crops. Says Baldev Singh of Rayatpura: "The canals have made the fields come alive."

No one has the time for dacoity any more; farming is more paying and decidedly safer. Says Ran Singh, 30, of Saintra village in Morena: "Earlier, marriages were big social occasions for us. Today, people find it difficult to get time for them. If the Government were to give us water round the year, only grooms will have time to go for their marriage." Porsa, in fact, is the symbol of Chambal's progress. A small town of barely 10,000 residents, it has a rich hinterland which has seen the number of trucks registered sky-rocketing from less than 50 a decade ago to over 500 now. Says Ayodhya Nath Pathak, deputy-inspector general of the Gwalior range who has spent the best part of the last decade in the area: "Till a few years ago you could not find a light on in Porsa after 7 p.m.—people were so scared of the dacoits. Today, the place is buzzing with activity.

Long-time observers of the Chambal region feel the greatest change that has come about is the absence of fear: Mohammed Hussain, 56, superintending engineer of CADA, has been associated with the Chambal irrigation scheme for over two decades and says: "Earlier, even if people had a tractor they would not display it lest the dacoits came to know of their affluence. Now, the first thing they buy is a tractor, which they proudly park outside their gate." Adds Ajay Shanker, commissioner of Gwalior who was till recently doubling as the commissioner of Chambal "As you drive into Bhind and Morena the most heartening thing you notice is the tremendous amount of construction activity going on."

And yet, the full potential of the Chambal area is only beginning to be tapped. Even now, as much as 69 per cent of the land in the CADA area is left fallow during the kharif season. Chambal's commissioner and executive head of CADA, K.S. Swaminathan, feels that if Bhind and Morena can raise their produce to their full potential they can feed all of Madhya Pradesh plus another state as well. And the experts in Gwalior feel that day is not more than a decade away. When that happens, the Chambal region will truly have become Madhya Pradesh's granary.

—AJAY KUMAR in Bhind and Morena

"Five years ago it was the rare farmer who grew 100 kg of wheat. Now, the same farmer grows over 2,000 kg."

PRITAM SINGH PATEL
landowner, Rayatpura village

"The canals have made the fields come alive."

BALDEV SINGH
farmer, Rayatpura village

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT STATE FERTILIZERS COMPANY LTD.

P.O. FERTILIZER NAGAR, DIST. BARODA - 391 750.

SILVER JUBILEE YEAR

Shri Moosa Raza

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

- GSFC ENTERS THE SILVER JUBILEE YEAR WITH A RENEWED PLEDGE TO SERVE THE NATION
- AN ALL ROUND PEAK PERFORMANCE MARKS GSFC's RECORD GROWTH IN 1985
- NATION FORGES AHEAD WITH CONFIDENCE UNDER THE DYNAMIC LEADERSHIP OF THE PRIME MINISTER
- FRESH THRUST FOR TIME BOUND ACTIONS AND PROGRAMMES IN ALL WALKS OF LIFE WITH A DEEP CONCERN FOR A RAPID SOCIO-ECONOMIC TRANFORMATION GIVES A NEW HOPE TO THE COUNTRY
- BUDGET FOR 1986-87 REFLECTS A HIGH DEGREE OF PRAGMATISM AND REALISM WITH COMMON MAN AS THE FOCAL POINT OF ALL PROGRESS
- BLENDING OF LONG TERM AND SHORT TERM ECONOMIC AND FISCAL MEASURES LENDS A NEW PERSPECTIVE AND DIRECTION TO FUTURE DEVELOPMNET
- FAI AWARD HAT-TRICK FOR THE BEST PERFORMANCE IN PHOSPHATICC FERTILIZER PRODUCTION AND AWARD OF HONOUR FROM THE U.S. SAFETY COUNCIL FOR MANAGEMENT AWARENESS TESTIFY TO GSFC'S COMMITMENT TO PRODUCTIVITY AND SAFETY
- SUCCESSFUL APPLICATION OF BIOFERTILIZER TECHNOLOGY, INNOVATED SEED-CUM-FERTILIZER DRILL AND EXPERIMENT OF THE RICE GARDEN TECHNOLOGY ARE NEW ADDITIONS TO GSFC'S PACKAGE OF SERVICES TO FARMERS
- GSFC IS WELL POISED TO IMPLEMENT AND COMPLETE ITS RS. 60 CRORE EXPANSION PLAN ON TIME
- GSFC PREPARES A PERSPECTIVE PLAN FOR INTEGRATED GROWTH TO MEET THE CHALLENGES OF THE 21ST CENTURY.

The following is the text of the Statement made by Shri Moosa Raza, Chairman, Gujarat State Fertilizers Company Limited at the Twenty-Fourth Annual General Meeting of the Company held on the 19th May, 1986 at the Registered Office of the Company.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is my great privilege and pleasure to extend to you my warm and hearty welcome to this 24TH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of your Company. The year 1985 has been a significant year in the history of your Company. It is in this year that your Company has completed about 2 1/2 decades of its dedicated service to the farmers and the nation and has entered the momentous period of the SILVER JUBILEE YEAR. I and my colleagues on the board rejoice in extending special greetings to all of you who have all along stood by your Company and supported its developmental programmes.

HIGHLIGHTS

The perfomance of your Company during the year is marked with enviable records. Your Company has achieved a high growth rate never reached before. The production has achieved new peaks, sales have crossed new milestones, logistics have achieved new breakthroughs, abatement of pollution has maintained the environment and industrial safety and health have achieved new standards of excellence. Your Company has achieved the rare distinction of securing a quantum jump in turnover and gross profits. His Excellency Giani Zail Singh, the President of India inaugurated the Modern Computer Centre of your Company. Two distinguished Awards won by your Company - the FAI award from the best performance in the phosphatic fertilizer production consecutively for the 3rd year and the Award of Honour from the Safety Council of the U.S.A. for displaying management awareness towards safety and health of the workers have added feathers to its cap. Your Company has also entered the export market by commencing export of Melamine. Also the continued efforts of your Company in transfer of agricultural techonology by successfully implementing the novel idea of Rice Garden for continuous production of rice crop throughout the year has opened new vistas for development of Rice Garden technology in India. Your Company also gave a new dimension to farm implement technology by developing and manufacturing on a commercial scale the two coulter and five coulter Seed-cum-Fertilizer Drill especially for the small farmers. The development of nylon safety helmet and nylon box strappings from Gujlon are a part of your Company's pioneering market development efforts for the benefit and growth of the plastic industry.

ECONOMIC SCENARIO

As you know our country has turned the corner under the inspiring guidance of our Prime Minister. Our country's economy has been forging ahead with a new thrust on all round growth, thanks to several socio-economic and fiscal measures which have provided tremendous fillip in the recent past. The Union Finance Minister's budget for the year 1986-87 has reflected a high degree of pragmatism and dynamism imbued with a deep concern for the uplift of the common man. The liberal import policy will augment the pace of growth in selected sectors. The long term fiscal policy has given a new perspective and direction to future development. The trend towards lower taxation and tax reliefs followed by a series of exemptions and relaxations in controls are aimed at providing the much needed boost to the economy and industrial activity in the country.

Some of the budget proposals will have a far reaching salutory effect on the economy. The basic exemption limit for gift tax and standard deduction on salary income is raised. So also is the exemption limit for deduction of expenses on medical needs. The rules for valuation of assets are simplified. All these steps are ideed a welcome departure in the country's fiscal po[illegible] Likewise the post-budget new concessi[illegible] announced by the Union Finance Minister [illegible] excise duties, customs and direct taxes are wi[illegible] welcomed. They will certainly instil a new [illegible] sure of confidence in small enterepren[illegible] Indeed the "open budgetting" system th[illegible] dialogue and interaction wth the taxpayer[illegible] promised by the Government as a part of the [illegible] fiscal regime is both rational and fair. Ho[illegible] there are still some snags hindering the pa[illegible] growth. They are replacement of investment [illegible] wance with a funding scheme, postponem[illegible] abolition of surtax on corporate income and [illegible] allowance of capitalisation of interest for the [illegible] pose of income tax. It is hoped that the Gov[illegible] ment is aware of these difficulties and the va[illegible] representations made by the trade and indu[illegible] would be given due consideration in the [illegible] of the rapid growth of the economy. The [illegible] light of the Union Finance Minister's relief [illegible] kage is the retention of the existing concess[illegible] inter-corporate dividend, which is largely [illegible] mended by all quarters including the stock [illegible] ket. The concessions and reliefs to small [illegible] sector are also well received and I am sure [illegible] would go a long way in giving an impetus [illegible] economy of the country. The introduction [illegible] MODVAT scheme has now enabled the [illegible] ufacturers to take credit for the duty paid [illegible] against the duty payable on the final prod[illegible] However the scheme has not been able to [illegible] about the desired results as it involves [illegible] payment of duty and also increases the [illegible] impact of duty on products, which the Gov[illegible] ment has never intended. Some of the mod[illegible] tions announced with regard to MODV[illegible] exempting capctive consumption of inputs [illegible] duties alongwith some other exemptions [illegible] relaxations to the small scale sectors would [illegible] helpful. While the intention behind the MODV[illegible] scheme still requires to be translated o[illegible]

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

at the field level, it will succeed with more understanding, more positive and pursuasive efforts at all levels.

SOCIO-ECONOMIC MILIEU

As you know the new dispensation in the country is imbued with a deep concern for a rapid socio-economic transformation. There is a new urgency, a sense of impatience and a kind of heightened haste for a more positive and constructive approach to solve all problems. The fresh thrust for time-bound actions and programmes in all walks of life has provided a new perspective to plans and schemes. The anxiety for an ideal blending of the short term and the long term planning to make a multi-pronged assault on the overwhelming problems and find permanent solutions has infused the country with a sense of new awareness and action. The eagerness and the anxiousness to know the hardships and aspirations of the people through first hand knowledge and to initiate fast action to mitigate their griefs has created a new hope in the country. The emphasis on high tech with our feet on earth is no doubt relevant to the demand of the contemporary times but high tech would have to be compatible with the grassroot philosophy and the interest of the millions of people of this country. Let me assure you that your Company deeply shares these national concerns, agonies and aspirations and would seize the first opportunity to participate, as in the past, in any socio-economic resurgence programme within the framework of its resources and in keeping with the interest of the shareholders.

YEAR OF RECORDS

You will happy to know that your Company has accomplished several records during the year 1985. Fertilizer production has hit a new high of 7.35 lac metric tons with a capacity utilisation of 108%. Sales have crossed a new milestone of 9.13 lac metric tons of fertilizers with a record handling of pool fertilizers. The peak turnover of Rs. 328.12 crores representing an increase of 43% over the previous year is a new feather in your Company's cap. The maiden export of Gujarat of 628 M.T. to Korea and Japan earning 4.76 lac $ of foreign exchange has opened a new horizon in your Company's export activity. In the light of the overall progress of your Company, the rate of dividend has been increased to 27% which is the highest in the fertilizer industry. You will also be happy to know that your Company has earned the rare distinction of winning the FAI trophy for best performance in production of phosphatic fertilizers for the 3rd consecutive year in 1985. The gross profit of your Company has reached a new watermark of Rs. 56.78 crores with an increase of 48% over the previous year.

I am happy to inform you that Company has maintained this upward trend of production during the current year and I am confident that if every thing goes well, your Company is well poised to achieve new heights in productivity and establish still higher records during the current year.

FUTURE PLANS

You must have noticed from the Directors' Report the corporate planning of your Company with regard to furture projects. Your Company has initiated work with regard to expansion of its urea-ammonia plant from the present 20,000 tons to 50,000 tons per annum. Preliminary work with regard to replacement of the old Ammonia plant by a large capacity 1350 TPD Ammonia plant has started. The work on the coastal DAP project at Sikka has reached an advanced stage of progress. It would be of interest for you to know that the schedule of commencement for the Sikka project has been advanced with a view to taking advantage of the investment allowance which is proposed to be withdrawn from April, 1987. Your Company has geared up its efforts and fully concentrated its energy for early commissioning of the project. The major civil and other related works are in progress and necessary manpower and materials are also mobilised. The financial tie up to the tune of Rs. 70 crores with the IDBI will further help in speedy implementation of this project. With the dedicated efforts of the staff and officers at al levels and the active co-operation of all concerned, I am sure that your Company will be able to achieve an early completion of this project and set a new record in project completion. The progress on the Gujarat Industries Power Company in which your Company has a major share is proceeding satisfactorily. Your Company is also planning to make equity participation in the Gujarat Nylon Limited - a Company promoted by the Gujarat Industrial Investment Corporation. The participation in this project will provide adequate control at the Board and management levels and a further outlet to Caprolactam and Nylon-6 products of your Company. Your Company has also shown interest in the petrochemical project coming up in Gujarat.

The on-going and future plans would involve a total capital outlay of about Rs. 600 crores in the next five years. The resources for capital investment are proposed to be met through institutional and market borrowings in future. At present your Company has succeeded in tying up with financial agencies to the tune of Rs. 70 crores for the DAP project out of which loan agreement for Rs. 50 crores has already been executed with IDBI as lead institution on behalf of other financial Institutions and the banks have agreed to participate in the cost of the project. Similar arrangements are envisaged for the other projects. However, inspite of these, more resources would be required for which your Company looks forward to your continued support in its effort for mobilisation of resources. All these projects, when commissioned would auger a new era of growth opportunities for your Company in the coming years.

SPECIAL AGRICULTURAL SCHEMES

Your Company has made pioneering efforts in the development and commercialisation of biofertilizers by making a major breakthrough in the application of biofertilizer technique. Biofertilizers tend to augment the yield by about 20%. In order to mitigte the scarcity of fodder in drought-hit Gujarat, your Company has planned fodder cultivation through distribution of the biofertilizers to farmers growing fodder on their fields particularly in Surat, Valsad, Banaskantha, Mehsana and Junagadh districts as part of its scarcity relief programme. The free distribution of 75,000 packets of biofertilizers to the farmers is likely to yield around 2,25,000 tonnes fodder in the irrigated areas during the scarcity period. Your Company has continuted the Rice Garden technology programme and has taken up experiments to try cold resistant varieties on its research farm.

Your Company's success in developing the 2-coulter and 5-coulter seed-cum-fertilizer drill is acclaimed by farmers, academicians, farm experts, and Government circles. Your Company has organised the commerical production through mobilisation of village artisans to meet the increasing demand of the farmers. The new seed-cum-fertilizer drill has come as a boon to the small farmers to whom the drill is made available at a competitive price. Government of Gujarat has also extended subsidy on this drill to the farmers. The Leap Forward Project meant for betterment of the backward and tribal areas operating for the past several years is doing well. Similarly the Dry Farming Project whose importance and significance cannot be underestimated in unirrigatd areas is being implemented by your Company are vigorously. The benefits of both these projects are being made available to newer areas and larger populuation than in the past. Your Company's participation in the Government sponsored Intensive Fertilizer Promotion Scheme is being intensified and the areas under this scheme have indicated achievement of higher levels of fertilizer consumption. Seed Development programme is another area where your Company has done commendable work. A sizeable quantity of high quality and new varieties of seeds were produced and made available to farmers. Still other varieties are being brought under experiment for the benefit of the farming community.

PERSPECTIVE PLAN- 21ST CENTURY

Our country is preparing for entry into the 21st century. Your Company cannot remain far behind. To enable your Company to meet the future challenges successfully, a Perspective Plan is being prepared. This plan would cover different aspects of your Company's activities- production, marketing, finance, human resource development, agriculture development, innovation and research. The perspective plan of different areas would make a Corporate Perspective plan which would help in a total integrated approach to the future growth of the Company to meet the needs of the 21st century. This is not an easy task but your Company is known for 'taking the time by forelock' and it is fully equipped in terms of human resources, finance, technical expertise and capacity to absorb technologies. With these inputs, it expects to accomplish this mission and be a part of the emerging national milieu.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am glad to convey on your behalf my appreciation to Government of India, Government of Gujarat, Financial Institutions, Banks and other agencies for their wholehearted support in the furtherence of our objective by rendering very valuable assistance, support and help. I am grateful to my colleagues on the Board for their valuable contribution and guidance from time to time. I would also like to thank the team of staff and officers of your Company for their loyalty, dedication and untiring efforts which they have been making for upholding the reputation and continuous growth of your Company.

JAI HIND

Note : This does not purport to be a record of proceedings of the Twenty-Fourth Annual General Meeting of the Company.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UPPER KRISHNA PROJECT

An Expensive Mess

THE UPPER Krishna Project (UKP) began in the late 1950s as a relatively modest irrigation scheme designed to cover about 2.6 million acres of parched territory in Karnataka's drought-prone areas of Bijapur and Gulbarga. Today, it has bloated into a monstrously expensive white elephant—the victim of widespread waste, mismanagement and corruption.

The bungling has resulted in a mind-boggling cost overrun: the original cost was Rs 100 crore. But Irrigation Department engineers estimate that when the project is finally completed in 1990, the final bill could skyrocket to over Rs 2,000 crore. Already, more than Rs 300 crore—three times the amount estimated for the entire project—have been spent. But only one-sixth of the area under the scheme has been covered.

The whole mess was brought forcefully out into the open last fortnight when the state's Public Accounts Committee (PAC) released a blistering report: "The committee finds that the officers have not acted with diligence and have failed to protect government interests." The PAC report noted that contractors were awarded work even before estimates were sanctioned; and when work was delayed, no action was initiated either to blacklist them or impose the heavy penalties provided for in the contracts. The report added: "Departmental inefficiency and lapses in individual works are the causes of the inordinate delay in extending irrigation benefits to people."

The project's critics charge that both the planning and execution of the scheme have been reckless and lethargic. The project report was prepared in 1958, but government approval took five years, and work finally began in February 1964. It was to be taken up in two stages, with the first stage estimated to cost Rs 58.2 crore and the second stage a little less.

Two months after work began, the dam to be built at Narayanpur was considered too lengthy and expensive. So the dam was moved three miles downstream. Work stopped and a fresh project report was prepared—the cost going up to Rs 115 crore. Work began and stopped again after engineers realised that shifting the dam would submerge an unnecessarily large area. This stop-go pattern was to become the story of the UKP's life.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

The original cost was Rs 100 crore. But the final bill is expected to cross Rs 2,000 crore when the project is completed in 1990.

Faced with mounting criticism, Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde promised last fortnight that "we will complete the project." But serious doubts remain as to how he will do this. Until 1978, when Rs 47 crore in World Bank assistance was given to the project, successive state governments had allocated no more than Rs 5 crore a year for the scheme. But even with the added bonanza only 44,000 acres of land were brought under irrigation by March 1983 against the targetted 2.63 lakh acres.

Part of the reason for the delays was the constant bickering and arbitration between engineers and contractors over design and cost estimates. Contractors argued last fortnight that the root cause for arbitration was the engineers's "faulty line estimates," which made the contractors realise that they had more work to do than originally planned. For example, a rough estimate prepared after inadequate homework put the cost of a tunnel at Gundalegere at Rs 7.8 crore. But when completed by the contractors its cost escalated to nearly double this amount.

Politics too, dogged the project in the initial stages. Says its former chief engineer I.M. Magdum: "In the early 1960s, the then chief minister Veerendra Patil forced the engineers to change the course of the canals so that his native Gulbarga district could benefit more." Of the 10.5 lakh acres to be irrigated in the first stage, only 3.37 lakh acres are under Bijapur, which is more drought-prone than Gulbarga.

For three decades, successive state governments neglected the project because the area carried little political clout. Hegde claims that it was only after the Janata took over, and more funds began to be allocated for irrigation projects and the UKP that the project was speeded up. In his first year, Hegde allocated Rs 50 crore which was increased to Rs 76 crore for 1986-87.

But even Hegde's increased allocations appear niggardly, considering the amount of work still to be carried out. Last fortnight, his government was still answering questions on the financial and technical viability of a Rs 545 crore estimate sent to the Centre for getting a second loan from the World Bank. Hegde plans to spend this amount in the next five years for the completion of the 220-km-long Mudbal and Indi canals. This means the Government has to allocate a minimum of Rs 100 crore a year to the project and, considering the limited resources of the state Government, Hegde will be hard-pressed to put the money where the mouth is.

L.B. Kolur, a 46-year-old farmer and father of five whose land was to have been irrigated by one of the yet-unfinished canals was more distraught: "During elections all parties make grandiose promises. But I wonder whether we will have water even after my sons inherit my land." The assessment of this illiterate man seems to be the most accurate.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"New India Assurance? Of course."

"I know New India... that's the company which insures satellites for millions of dollars. And satellites help us watch live cricket from all over the world. They even insure test match weather ... Imagine!"

And there's more, much more that New India cover. Such as Passenger Flight insurance, freak cycle accidents, Antarctica and Everest expeditions, water from new wells, medical expenses to fight cancer... Just some of the many innovative facets of the services offered by New India.

As leaders in General Insurance, New India provide the widest range of covers to meet any and every insurance need... whether urban or rural, business or personal — adding upto more than 74 different policies.

Over 700 offices in India and abroad ensure that New India is always at your service... to answer all your insurance problems. Assuring you the security you need and improving the quality of life.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India.

So much security. For so little.

The New India range of assurance covers:
Cancer Insurance, Personal Accident, Hospitalisation and Domiciliary Hospitalisation Policy, Domestic Package Policy, All Risks Insurance, Burglary and House Breaking, Fire Insurance, Combined Fire and Theft, Passenger Flight, Public Liability, Carrier's Liability, Horse Insurance, Engineering Insurance, Professional Indemnity, Workmen's Compensation, Multi Perils, Fidelity Guarantee, Plate Glass, Business Interruption, Cash in Transit, Marine, New Well Insurance, Bullock Cart, Pump Set, Pedal Cycle and many more.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contour Ads-NIA-834 D/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(Clockwise) Shah as the subedar; Smita Patil in the chilli factory and with Raj Babbar; and Om Puri as the chowkidar

MIRCH MASALA

A Lyrical Ballad

KETAN MEHTA talks like a cafe Marxist. He spouts the classic phrases: lumpenised proletariat, internalised fascism, alien oppressive systems. But his new film, Mirch Masala, has jumped the tall walls of any Indian Marxist school of thought or in fact any other school of thought. Labels, do not stick to him. The film, his third, is a tour de force in Indian cinema. Mirch Masala has the lyricism of the ballad about it, a certain myth-like quality and a stunning use of the colour red. In his two earlier films, Mehta tapped Indian tradition for structures to tell his story: Bhavani Bhavai used the Gujarati folk form to treat the subject of untouchability, in Holi, Mehta turned to tribal narrative structure to talk about youth. The latest film is more eclectic. And the seams don't show, so effective has been the synthesis of all the elements: stylisation, melodrama, folklore, circular movements and groupings....But the concerns in all films are the same: oppression.

Mirch Masala based upon a short story by Chunilal Madia ("stretched both ways") is set in the early 1940s. It is Rann of Kutch country—the typical famine landscape of Saurashtra and parts of Rajasthan as the lushly embroidered cholis of the women and the complicated turbans of the luxuriantly-moustachioed men indicate. A quiet, almost sleepy village, is suddenly transformed with the entry of the subedar, superbly played by Naseeruddin Shah. The subedar is attracted to the fiery village belle (Smita Patil at her best), who escapes from him and hides in a factory in which women grind red chillies. The factory's chowkidar is Om Puri, in a very difficult role poised as he is on the brink of melodrama—"a la Sohrab Modi", as Mehta says.

The story moves with the inevitability of a fairy tale: the beautiful maiden being lusted for and chased after by the dragon-like subedar. The chowkidar with his flaming, henna-tinted leonine hair style (not too unlike a character out of the Wizard of Oz) protects her to the end. The characters of the film— whether it is Mukhi, the patel of the village with the 16 tonnes of false pride he carries, embodied in his moustache, the greedy seth, the idealist khadi-clad masterji dreaming of Swaraj, the loquacious pujari who can twist religion to suit his material ends, the pure young lovers, and of course the villianous subedar—are all familiar and exaggerated, almost to the point of caricature. But it is the complexity Mehta invests them with which makes this film a little milestone in Indian cinema.

Naseeruddin has a very difficult role indeed; tyrannical and nasty he is, but insanity flickers beneath the tough exterior, as does his vulnerabilty and awkwardness. His ridiculous moustache is wonderfully apt. The subedar installs in a beautifully furnished tent by the sea. A shining gramaphone plays the songs of the '40s, as he listens, misty-eyed, to which makes the tyranny chillingly menacing. The gramophone, is the disembodied voice of the sarkar, which stunts and subdues the people; technology equals magic in other words, and power.

Where the film hits the hardest is the apparent emasculation of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12892
12891
12890
12889

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

The Hidden Persuaders

They are the hidden persuaders, manipulating massive arms deals and commercial contracts through carefully-cultivated contacts in government and bureaucracy. A report on the growing tribe of lobbyists who prowl the parlours of power.

COVER STORY 62

The Rajiv Rage

Last fortnight's Youth Congress jamboree in Delhi revealed the sea change that has taken place in the party. Gone are the rowdy Sanjay squads. In their place, sophisticated and affluent yuppies fervently swearing loyalty to Rajiv Gandhi.

CURRENT EVENTS 25

A War of Nerves

August 14 marked the start of Benazir Bhutto's bid to dethrone General Zia ul Haq. But as her supporters took to the streets, the Government arrested her and the rebellious fervour cooled down with both sides claiming victory. An on-the-spot report.

NEIGHBOURS 56

The Tribal Farce

The crash welfare scheme for the poverty-stricken tribals of Kalahandi in Orissa is a farce. The Orissa Government has misled the prime minister's office in its claims. INDIA TODAY investigations reveal that the condition of the tribals has not changed.

INVESTIGATION 74

A Desperate Dilemma

The continuing terrorist actions in Punjab and elsewhere have sent tremors of insecurity and fear through the ranks of the Sikh community living outside Punjab. A wide range of interviews analyses their trepidations and their future plans.

SPECIAL FEATURE 86

The New Nightmare

The world's biggest law suit may end up the world's biggest legal mess. After 20 months, the costly Bhopal gas tragedy compensation battle involving the Indian Government, American lawyers, and Union Carbide, has now assumed mind-boggling dimensions.

SPECIAL REPORT 128

CONTENTS

Opinions Today: Poll 5 3
Opinions Today: Results of Poll 2 8
COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
CURRENT EVENTS
Indian Youth Congress: The Rajiv Rage 25
Ghani Khan Chowdhury: Tough Tactics 30
20-Point Programme: Rural Thrust 32
Punjab: Startling Confessions 34
Article 249: A Legislative Gaffe 41
Charles Sobhraj: A Cool Customer 42
Congress(Indira Gandhi): Rebel Rousing 46
Mizoram: The Other War 48
Bihar: Panic Ban 53
Andhra Pradesh: A Devastating Deluge 54
NEIGHBOURS
Pakistan: A War of Nerves 56

COVER STORY
Lobbyists: The Hidden Persuaders 62
INVESTIGATION
Kalahandi: The Tribal Farce 74
STATENOTES 85
SPECIAL FEATURE
Sikhs Outside Punjab: A Desperate Dilemma 86
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
P.C. Sethi: "I am not crazy" 92
TRADE WINDS 97
ECONOMY 99
BUSINESS
Tax Policy: Rewriting the Books 100
NTC: Smokescreen 102
Stock Markets: Crash of '86 107
Telecommunications: Importing Trouble 113
Leasing: The New Boom 116
The Markets: Bearing Down 120
SPECIAL REPORT
Bhopal Gas Tragedy: The New Nightmare 128

RELIGION
The North-East: Search of the Lost Tribe 134
DEFENCE
Advanced Light Helicopter: Designed Delays 138
CRIME
Vaidya Case: The Killer Trail 149
SNAPSHOT 152
VIDEO
Films: A New Dimension 156
ART
Corporate Patrons: Culture Conscious 158
EYE-CATCHERS 160

Cover concept by M.G. MOINUDDIN
Cover illustration by ANUP GUPTA

Opinions Today: Poll 5 3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

4.9.86
3.9.86

Asian Paints: flying regularly across the Pacific Ocean

Asian Paints has set up paint factories abroad. At Fiji, Tonga, Solomon Islands and neighbouring Nepal. The same technology that wins in the international market place also goes into every can of our paint you buy in India.

Asian Paints has been the largest paint company in India since 1967. Achieving leadership was a proud moment for us; but it was only a moment in our quest for excellence.

asian paints
Leadership through excellence

OBM / 7100

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Who should get the Padma Vibhushan for achievements in art & culture? You decide.

Would you give it to Amitabh Bachchan? Or, say, R. K. Narayan? What about Mrinalini Sarabhai, M.F. Husain, Pupul Jayakar, Raj Kapoor, Bhimsen Joshi, Lata Mangeshkar?

These eight persons are among the many who have contributed a lot to Indian art & culture. Some obvious personalities have not been considered because they have already received the award in question. In this fifth Opinions Today poll, you now have the rare opportunity of assessing their contributions.

Your task: to rank them on a table from 1 to 8.

Thus when you finish, each name will carry a number from 1 to 8 beside it.

Since this is a ranking and not a grading system, no two persons can have the same number.

Explain your first choice.

If person 'X' is your number one choice, then in not more than 50 words, you have to tell us why.

The entries will be evaluated by a computer to determine the national average.

If your entry ties in with this average, you'll also become a contender for the awards associated with Opinions Today.

The entry form, and a list of rules and regulations, are at the back of this page.

The awards.

For this poll:

First	: Weston Colour TV and VCR, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Second	: Encyclopaedia Britannica.
Third	: Weston 2-in-1, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Consolation	: Annual subscriptions to INDIA TODAY.

Across six polls:

First	: Return First Class air tickets for two to Los Angeles, courtesy PAN AM.
Second	: A specially commissioned painting (30"× 40") by M.F. HUSAIN.
Third	: PC Junior computer with printer, courtesy EIKO COMPUTERS.
Consolation	: The World and its People – a twenty seven volume set.

Turn overleaf to express your opinion.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

Rules and regulations

Since the entry forms will be processed by computer, it is important that you follow these procedures carefully. Incorrect or incomplete entries will be rendered invalid.

1. You can voice your opinion only through a valid entry form, such as the one below.
2. In case you have difficulty in obtaining the entry form, please mail a stamped, self-addressed envelope marked 'Opinions Today' to us at INDIA TODAY, 316 Competent House, F-14 Connaught Place, New Delhi-110 001.
3. An individual can send in only one entry form per poll.
4. The entries will be evaluated by means of a software package, specially designed by Tata Consultancy Services. The package will be run on a Burroughs B 6900 mainframe.
5. Important : while filling in this entry form, please ensure that you leave one square blank between the various units in your name and address.
6. All the eight options in each poll have to be ranked from 1 to 8. No two options can have the same ranking.
7. The name should start with the family name, followed by the first name.
8. Also ensure that you enter your first two or three initials in the space provided.
9. The date of birth should start with the date (two digits), followed by the month (two digits) and the year (again two digits). For example, if your date of birth is February 9, 1956, it should be entered as 090256.
10. Please tick the appropriate square, for other details such as sex, education, occupation.
11. In your address, please also give the pin-code number.
12. Please ensure that you fill in your particulars consistently across all polls.
13. In every poll you will have to explain the reasons, in not more than 50 words, for your No. 1 ranking. This is the 'tie-breaker'. Be sure to write the tie-breaker. You can miss out on the big awards if you don't. However, if your entry ties in with the national average, you will still be entitled to receive consolation prizes.
14. The entries will be evaluated by a panel of judges.
15. The results will be published in the forthcoming issues of INDIA TODAY. The winners will also be notified separately by post.
16. Employees (and their relatives) of Living Media India Pvt. Ltd., its associate companies, Tata Consultancy Services, and Interface Communications Pvt. Ltd., are not eligible to participate in this opinion poll.
17. INDIA TODAY will not be responsible for any postal delays.
18. The decision of the judges will be final and binding and no further correspondence will be entertained on the decisions.
19. ALL ENTRIES MUST REACH LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD., P.O. BOX NO. 29, N.D.H.O. NEW DELHI-110 001, BY THE LAST DATE INDICATED ON THE ENTRY FORM.

ENTRY FORM : 5

Please fill in BLOCK CAPITALS

NAME : Mr./Mrs./Ms. _____ Surname _____ First Name

DATE OF BIRTH: D D M M Y Y SEX : M [1] F [2] INITIALS : _____

EDUCATION : Professional [1] Post-graduate [2] Graduate [3] Matriculate [4] Others [5]

OCCUPATION : Service [1] Business [2] Housewife [3] Student [4] Others [5]

ADDRESS : _____

CITY _____ Pin-code _____

Have you participated in any previous Opinions Today poll? Yes [1] No [2]

PERSONALITIES	RANKING
AMITABH BACHCHAN
M. F. HUSAIN
PUPUL JAYAKAR
BHIMSEN JOSHI
RAJ KAPOOR
LATA MANGESHKAR
R. K. NARAYAN
MRINALINI SARABHAI

Please give reasons for your No. 1 ranking _____

Signature of participant : _____

Your opinion must reach us by 20.9.1986.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 17
FOR THE FORTNIGHT SEPTEMBER 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN, PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN, SURYA GANGADHARAN, MOHAMMED ASLAM

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-4145 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II. NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2020415. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 11-C CONNAUGHT CIRCUS. NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312091, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS. 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD. MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD. BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD. CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA. CALCUTTA
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

HEINOUS CRIME

The assassination of General Vaidya ("Killing of a General", August 31) has put the country's security system under a cloud. It has become clear that the spectre of Sikh terrorism is not confined to the north-west. How many more innocents will be killed by the terrorists before our security system can grapple with the situation? It seems the terrorists are endowed with a carte blanche to perpetrate one murder after another.

Bangalore S. NAGESH KUMAR

■ The heinous and dastardly assassination of General Vaidya has left the nation paralysed and created a fear psychosis. Terrorism seems to have reached its acme and attempts to demur the upsurge by the Government have been miniscular. It is essential that people in the hit-list be protected. Every breach of security must be sealed promptly and care taken to ensure that similar incidents do not recur.

Bangalore V. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ What a dirty way have our politicians treated this brave, true son of India. General Vaidya's death is a mockery on every Indian true to his salt. While lakhs of rupees are spent on Rajiv Gandhi's security, is the life of a top Army general so insignificant that he was given only a head constable? On top of it, neither the prime minister nor the President thought it important enough to attend the funeral of a true martyr.

Bombay SHASHI VARDARAJAN

RELIANCE OBSESSION

Suddenly the whole world is against Reliance ("Under Pressure", August 15). Do they want a flourishing industry to go into ashes? It seems that people who rule the roost have gone mad in an anti-prosperity drive against one company. None of the charges against Reliance have been proved and none is so serious that it cannot be enquired into without screaming headlines. If the Government has now turned its guns against Reliance, was it sleeping earlier?

Jodhpur VINEET KOTHARI

■ Regarding your story on Reliance, though Ambani may have involved himself in crooked deals, yet he remains probably the most talented person in the country: he has converted credit into wealth, for himself and for others and created any number of jobs. What the country should be worried about is not whether he has done anything wrong, but why such talented people have to resort to such activities.

Berlin P.V. INDIRESAN

FINAL OPTION

It was disheartening to read about the demand for Gorkhaland by the GNLF ("A New Belligerence", August 31). The responsibility for this situation lies entirely on the so-called national parties and the Government who are responsible for the growth of regional parties and groups. Individual demands are not met until they form a group—strikes, satyagrahas and terrorist acts are the only effective steps to achieve anything.

Ahmedabad P.V. RAGHUNATHAN NAIR

Snapshot (Page 152) is a regular feature introduced in the last issue which will reproduce candid, offbeat black and white photographs that portray India with a touch of humour. The magazine invites photographers, professional or amateur, to send in their contributions. There is no restriction on the subject matter as long as it is Indian and the photographs are of an acceptable quality for printing. INDIA TODAY will pay Rs 1,000 for every photograph published. The print should be in the size of 21 × 33 cm. in either horizontal or vertical frame. The magazine, however, does not accept responsibility for returning the photographs.

Send entries to
SNAPSHOT
Picture Editor
F-14/15 Connaught Place
New Delhi 110001

—Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One million people across the country are saying Good Knight to mosquitoes.

Are you?

The safe and trusted way to fight mosquitoes.

Good Knight has been tried and tested by over a million users all over the country. It's the safest, most reliable mosquito repellent ever.

No health hazards, no mess.

No choking fumes, no ash, no cream. Just a gentle fragrance that keeps away mosquitoes. Night after night. For years.

Easy to use.

Good Knight is simple to use.

Just place a Good Knight mat on the heater plate, plug in and switch on... freedom from mosquitoes.

For better results close the doors and windows for a while.

Specially treated Good Knight mats.

For best results use only Good Knight mats with your unit. We process them carefully in our own laboratory, from imported Japanese chemicals so they remain effective the whole night through.

Japanese technology from Sumitomo.

Good Knight is the mosquito repellent made with world famous technology and superior components imported from Sumitomo Chemicals Ltd. of Japan.

And so it's hardly surprising to know that Good Knight is the largest selling electrical mosquito repellent in the country. With so many advantages, everybody wants to have one!

Good Knight

"Switch-on" Freedom from Mosquitoes

Sweet Dreams and Good Knight folks

Manufactured by: Transelektra 22 Oasis, Vakola Masjid, Santacruz (East), Bombay 400 055. Tel: 6128202.

Creative Unit 6517

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WOUNDED FEELINGS

Your cover story ("Born to Die", June 15) has titles like 'Kallars are killers' and 'Kallars: Savage traditions'. The story is about female infanticide, which we condemn in unequivocal terms. Such stray instances of female infanticide are perpetrated in every community and this cannot be generalised to tarnish the image of the entire community. We can quote innumerable instances in every community of such barbarity and savagery.

But, with reference to these instances, the author blames the whole Thevar (Kallar) community of Tamil Nadu, which has been discredited and its image tarnished. The Thevars are a warrior community of royal descent, and are not savage. It is unbecoming of a journal of your reputation to publish, magnify and give publicity to isolated cases of barbabrism.

So, I request you, on behalf of the Tamil Nadu Thevar Peravai, to publish our objection and record your regret for using these terms as this has wounded the feeling of the people of the Thevar community who have contributed to the Independence struggle.

Madras — Dr V. RAMAKRISHNAN
general secretary, Tamil Nadu Thevar Peravai

■ The purpose of our report was to focus attention on a problem of infanticide. Nowhere have we said in any headline that 'Kallars are killers'. Our report did not talk of the Thevar community as a whole, and was specific in talking of the Kallars from one particular area. We also took pains to portray the parents not as ruthless murderers but as hopeless victims of circumstance. And we have quoted a local activist as saying that the community has descended from the warriors of the Chola emperors.

In fact, one of the positive results of our story has been that Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity have adopted a few Kallar children from Usilampatti taluk. And the Indian Council for Child Welfare is also considering opening a centre in Usilampatti.

—Editor

DEFORESTATION SCARE

It was a matter of profound satisfaction to the officers of the Indian Forest Service Association that you have highlighted the grave consequences of deforestation ("An Environmental Holocaust", August 15). It is not however, the smugglers-cum-forest officials combine, but the large population of human beings and the numberless herds of cattle that have been the main cause of the destruction of tree vegetation and the formation of wastelands. Non-recognition of technical advice rendered by foresters at crucial times have demoralised their cadre and they are fighting a lone battle.

Dehradun — R.B. LAL
secretary, IFS Association

■ Your article on environment has put the onus of destruction of forests on the forester. The common man presumes all forests are under his control which is not true. The reserved forests are getting degraded because they take the brunt which was meant to be borne by the community forest land. When reserve forests were constituted, gomal lands were meant to meet grazing needs and district and civil forests the fuel needs of the rural population. Now both these demands are met by reseved forests.

Bangalore — S. SHYAM SUNDER principal chief conservator of forests, Karnataka

LACK OF LEADERSHIP

Your Comment ("A Failure of Leadership", August 15) has rightly underlined the demonstrable lack of our national leadership on the communal issue. While our prime minister is busy resolving international problems, he is doing precious little to arrest the deteriorating communal situation in the country. The Congress(I) must shed all its electoral illusions and realise that communal polarisation only helps communal parties, and eventually it will be their party which will suffer. The present failure of the Congress(I) to check communalism will herald the sad end of the strategic superiority of the party which is fast loosing its mass appeal.

Aligarh — TARIQ WALI

EYE OPENER

Your article on the sordid medical crime enacted in Uttar Pradesh was very heart-rending. A common feature of such ill-fated eye camps seems to be the failure of the organisers. It is sad that tragedies of this nature might inevitably trigger public reaction to such an extent that humanitarian service rendered by voluntary organisations might suffere undeserved disrepute.

Dharwad — VISHWESHWAR BHAT

UNRESOLVED CRISIS

The Tamil militants ("The Militant Mood", August 31) have started to sound their bugles, which was not at all an unexpected move. Even as the TULF was hoping to reach an agreement, the militants are creating trouble because of some impressive terrorist successes against the Sri Lankan Government's security forces. If they continue their militant tactics, this would put the Indian Government in an awkward predicament. The Indian Government has often advised Jayewardene not to resort to a military option; but they have hardly ever done the same with the Tamil militants. So long as these people are free to move to and fro between India and Sri Lanka and violate India's immigration rules in the process, they can continue to play havoc with the situation in the troubled island. Unless India deals firmly with the militants, the Lanka problem will remain completely unresolved.

Pune — P.S. NARAYAN PRASAD

ELUSIVE GOALS

Your Comment ("The Challenge of Change", August 31) rightly commends Vasant Sathe on breaking the "perverted theorem" for contorted socialism. The dictates of socialism, so preoccupied with an equitable redistribution of wealth, remain silent when confronted with the corrupt, inefficient and wasteful variety which has emerged in India.

Calcutta — SUNIL GARODIA

CHARMED CIRCLE

It is indeed refreshing to know that our prime minister is surrounded by a select group of talented, proven MP's who are trustworthy and yet not sycophants ("Changing Orbits", August 31). Also, these politicians are also competently handling their respective ministries, thereby proving that their ideas are more than mere plain talk.

Bangalore — KALYAN KUMAR BANERJEE

CORRIGENDUM

In the article "Swap Success" (INDIA TODAY, August 31), the photograph of Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation Chairman S.V.S. Raghavan and that of State Trading Corporation Executive Director S. Jayaraman were inadvertently interchanged. The error is regretted.

—Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

POLL 2 RESULTS—CHOICE OF EIGHTH PRESIDENT OF INDIA

A Difficult Choice

IN THIS, the second in the series of opinion polls, INDIA TODAY invited its readers to nominate their candidate for the eighth President of India from a list of eight names. Approximately 22,000 readers responded to the poll, slightly less than the number of respondents to the first poll on Political Competence. For an independent assessment of the results, INDIA TODAY commissioned Dr V.L. Mote, a founder professor of the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad. Professor Mote holds a doctorate in statistical methods from the State University of North Carolina in the US. His analysis:

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

THE RESULTS revealed that Vice-President R. Venkataraman was the most preferred choice while Congress(I) Working President Kamalapati Tripathi was the least preferred candidate. Significantly, President Zail Singh ranked third from the bottom, just above former prime minister Morarji Desai and Kamalapati Tripathi.

The computerised analysis of the results showed that there was a greater agreement on the choice of the least preferred person (43.5 per cent) than there was on the most preferred candidate (35.5 per cent). Apparently, it is far more difficult to decide who the next president should be than to decide who should not be.

Table 1 illustrates the preferences expressed as a score by the respondents for the eight candidates listed in the poll (for a description of the methodology used in scoring see India Today, August 31, 1986).

Table 2 gives a region-wise pattern of the responses for this poll while table 3 is a performance appraisal which gives the percentage of the total respondents who ranked each personality at the various positions. Table 3 also indicates the average score obtained by each candidate which has been worked out by dividing the total score in each case by the total number of respondents.

The reasons given for the choice of candidate is an indication of the kind of qualities the eighth president should ideally possess. Venkataraman was given top ranking because he is perceived as a man who acts independently and has clarity of thought and vision while Justice Bhagwati scored heavily because of his knowledge of the Indian Constitution and his apolitical and non-controversial nature. Field Marshal Sam Manekshaw, who ranked as fourth choice, was preferred for his courage, discipline and values. There was, in fact, a marked consistency of opinion among the respondents regarding the qualities that a presidential candidate should have. The four preferred qualities that stand out are:

► Independence both in thought and action ("should not be a rubber stamp").

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

▸ A strong sense of values and ability to shape the values of the nation.

▸ Vision and the ability to lead the nation under "unusual circumstances".

▸ Ability to subordinate the interests of the party and self interest to the national interest ("shall be above politics").

What could be the reason for the unanimity among the readers regarding the qualities that they would like to see in the president? It is not possible to answer this question from responses given by the readers since the responses were too brief because of the limit of 50 words imposed by the rules of the poll. We have, therefore, to look at history to see if the developments in the past can provide an answer to the expectations of the future.

The Sino-Indian conflict took place soon after Dr. Radhakrishnan was appointed as President of India. During his visit to Tejpur in the eastern sector he told the jawans: "We were living in a dream world. Now we are waking up to a reality." Compare this sharply worded indictment of the Government by Dr. Radhakrishnan with a justification of the actions of the Congress(I) Government on imposition of Emergency in the country in 1975 by former president Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed. He said: "We were sliding towards anarchy because of the dominance of permissive politics in our national life. Drastic steps were called for to curb political adventurism and indiscipline in all walks of life. The Emergency which was promulgated under the provisions of the Constitution has not only been approved by

PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL

The figures represent the percentage of total respondents who ranked each personality at the various positions.

Average Score*	Candidates	Rank	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	Total
6.31	R. Venkataraman	1	35.5	22.4	15.2	9.5	6.6	4.8	4.8	1.2	100.0
5.84	Justice P.N. Bhagwati	2	18.3	24.1	21.3	15.8	9.3	5.3	2.4	3.4	100.0
5.34	P.V. Narasimha Rao	3	9.8	19.5	18.9	20.8	16.6	8.7	3.7	2.0	100.0
5.26	Field Marshal Manekshaw	4	18.1	13.9	15.6	15.9	16.0	10.3	5.7	4.6	100.0
4.48	Arjun Singh	5	6.3	9.0	14.4	17.6	21.9	16.3	9.4	5.2	100.0
3.36	Zail Singh	6	6.7	4.4	5.4	7.7	12.1	22.5	23.5	17.6	100.0
3.21	Morarji Desai	7	4.5	3.8	6.7	9.5	11.6	18.7	22.8	22.4	100.0
2.21	Kamalapati Tripathi	8	0.7	3.0	2.5	3.2	5.8	13.4	27.8	43.5	100.0
		Total	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

*Maximum average score attainable is 8.

TABLE 3

A total of 51 readers sent in entries that corresponded with the final national score. To select the three winners, a panel of four judges assessed the reasons they had given for ranking R. Venkataraman first. The judges selected the winners on the basis of their assessments of the presidential qualities perceived in R. Venkataraman, the present vice-president and chairman of the Rajya Sabha, and the manner in which these were presented.

First Prize: Vinayan Varrier
Bakrol road, Vallabhvidyanagar, Gujarat.

Assessment: "Venkataraman is a worthy presidential contender because he is an able administrator, great parliamentarian, eminent scholar, uncorrupt leader and, in general, a personality of high calibre, apart from being the vice-president."

Second Prize: Dulcine Lobo
Loudale, Mangalore, Karnataka.

Assessment: "His choice will assure a smooth transition into the Presidency without unpleasant political vibrations. He is a gentleman politician, mature in administrative affairs, has remained non-controversial, and can conduct himself with honour and dignity at ceremonial functions."

Third Prize: Neeraj Kulshrestha
C-2/249 Janakpuri, New Delhi.

Assessment: "He has vast administrative experience, having served in various capacities in the Government. An asset to the august office of the President. As vice-president and chairman of the Rajya Sabha, he enjoys a good reputation amongst the members. An intellectual with a clean image, he is also well-known internationally."

Consolation Prizes: Yash Parekh (Bombay), Venkatachari Prasad (Madras), Mohan Menezes (Mangalore), Pramod Nagpal (New Delhi), Soumitra Sankar Samaddar (Calcutta), Balveer Singh (Zawar), Pradeep Narang (Delhi), Balwinder Singh (Ludhiana), Suryam Champati (Hyderabad), Madhu Sethi (Bombay), Jogesh Sachdev (Calcutta), Gopalan Ramachandran (Tiruchirapalli), Jaya Raju Yeggoni (Kurnool), Tridib Sen (Bombay), Jayanta Chaudhry (Shillong), Diwakar Khanna (Cambay), Ramjilal Pareek (New Delhi), R. Chandra Sekaran (Salem), Gopal Swaroop (Jaipur), Gurudutt Kishore Kamath (Bangalore), Surendra Gupta (Kanpur), Devender Sharma (Bombay), Debabrata Banerjee (Calcutta), N.R. Jayaram (Bangalore), Susheela Menon (Cochin), Vikram Kumar (Chandigarh), Suraj Bhan Sharma (New Delhi), Raman Ramachandran Iyer (Madras), Nitish Khanapure (Pune), Prashant Sahu (Jabalpur), Pushpa Sonwaney (Aurangabad), Ramesh Nagappa Shetty (Bombay), Satish Modi (Narwana), Vinay Pande (Lucknow), S. Bala Krishnan (Delhi), Dilip Kumar Mittra (Bhopal), Rajan Kumar Gianey (New Delhi), Dushyant Jain (Jodhpur), Venkatramana Achar (Bangalore), Alka Mahajan (New Delhi), Gulshan Mirchandani (Agra), Nandkumar K. Menon (Bombay), Rajendra Bahadur Singh (Shahdol), Alok Gupta (New Delhi), Gayatri Tandon (Faridabad), Santosh Kumar Mishra (Shillong), Sunil Saxena (Jaipur), Amitabha Basu (Calcutta).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Parliament but also welcomed by the people at large."

The action might have been approved by Parliament but was it welcomed by the people? History would hardly support the assertion that the Emergency was welcomed by the citizens. It is possible that historical developments such as this counted with readers when they preferred a president who was "not a rubber stamp".

BEARER bonds introduced by the former finance minister R. Venkataraman with a view to divert funds from the parallel economy to the official economy: was it an admission of the Government's inability to tame the parallel economy or was it an admission of the fact that the party in power lacked political will to come to grip with the parallel economy?

In an interview with INDIA TODAY (July 15, 1982) H.R. Khanna, former judge of the Supreme Court, observed: "I believe that despite the limited role of the President, he can make a positive contribution in many spheres. There is a general degeneration of political life. People are losing faith in politicians. The President can arrest this trend by not involving himself in it directly." The readers seem to be echoing his sentiments when they say that they want a president who has a sense of values and can shape the values of the nation.

Former president N. Sanjiva Reddy dissolved the Lok Sabha after the fall of the Government headed by the former prime minister Charan Singh. Commenting on this decision, N. Palkhiwala observed: "The President's decision to dissolve the Lok Sabha is, to use the language of studied moderation, unjustified to the point of constitutional impropriety."

Palkhiwala then pointed out three other options that the President could have considered to the one which he actually followed: namely, that of dissolving the Lok Sabha. This particular incident could, again, have influenced readers' preferences for a president who can lead the nation "under unusual circumstances".

We can also speculate on the reasons that led readers to observe that a candidate for the presidential poll should have the four qualities stated above. The speculation will be of academic interest but a more practical question is whether the nation would find such a person. The lack of unanimity among the readers concerning the choice of the candidate for the presidential poll shows that, at least in their opinion, a person with all the desired qualities is not in sight.

Samples of the respondents' comments on the seven candidates other than R. Venkataraman gives some indication of their respective image as leaders and public figures. Some samples:

JUSTICE BHAGWATI

Has translated concern for social needs into precedent-setting actions.
Vishakapatnam — R. Pingali

At this juncture we need a president who is well versed with the Constitution, above party politics and a well-known public figure.
Delhi — Nangyal Tsewang

Has a conscience and a sharp legal brain that will enable him to give judicious counsel on legislation.
New Delhi — Pallav Bhattacharya

ZAIL SINGH

Has maintained the dignity of the office under trying circumstances.
Bangalore — Pushpa Kanekal

He is a deeply religious man.
New Delhi — Uday Singh

India needs a president from a minority community to keep the country united.
Patiala — Inderjeet Kaur

NARASIMHA RAO

A gentleman politician known for his understanding of Indian culture.
Roorkee — Padma Kalavagunta

Distinguished himself as a civil servant, parliamentarian and minister. Respected for his intellect.
Allahabad — Ajay Misra

Is a good speaker who can deal with problems with patience and tact.
Secunderabad — Sankaran Menon

SAM MANEKSHAW

He will at least look authoritative.
Bombay — Samir Jariwala

A non-politician, leader of men and a national hero. Will lend credibility, statesmanship and style to the highest office.
Hyderabad — Virendra Chhikara

To stem the present drift, India needs true soldiers of discipline and dedication at the helm.
Vizianagaram — Siva Prasad Gali

MORARJI DESAI

Strong-willed and independent of vested interests.
Calcuttta — Himanshu Lathia

Principled, steadfast believer in his convictions, and able administrator.
Bombay — Hasmukh Gaglani

He is the only real Gandhian leader of stature. His clean record is itself a big achievement.
Dharamshala — Thakur Swaroop Singh

ARJUN SINGH

He has become the central figure in the country's political horizon.
Jabalpur — Naseer Zuberi

A very competent person. Is in the good books of the prime minister.
New Delhi — Abhishek Verma

His handling of the Punjab accord and dissidents prove he has the prime requisites of a president.
Patna — Divya Singh

KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI

Making him president would be the most honourable way of getting rid of him since it would be dangerous to expel him from the party.
Sambalpur — Soma Gupta

He is the senior-most among Congress leaders and possesses the strength to criticise the party.
Hyderabad — Inani Ramakanth.

Has the kind of moral fibre, tenacity and faith needed to keep current political trends in check.
Pune — Harish Vadgama

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Acting First Thinking Later

AT HIS first formal press conference in New Delhi after assuming office as prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi had said that he would like his government to be known as one that 'works faster'. Twenty months later, Rajiv Gandhi's Government is getting a reputation for acting first and thinking later. The impression that is created in the public mind—of confusion at the top, of a surfeit of advisers talking and acting at cross-purposes, and of mature judgement being at a premium—can hardly help instil confidence in the wisdom and solidity of government when the country is passing through increasingly difficult and trying times.

There have been all too many instances in recent weeks of ill-considered flip-flops for these to be dismissed as stray gaffes by a government led by a young and inexperienced prime minister. The chief ministers of the states that have a border with Pakistan are summoned to New Delhi at such short notice that only half of those invited are able to come in time. Tamil militant leaders invited to New Delhi for talks are made to cool their heels in New Delhi for two days, and within an hour of their heading back to Madras a special government plane flies Central ministers to Madras to conduct talks there. The Government then finds it impossible to decide whether Governor's Rule should be extended for another six months in Jammu and Kashmir, or replaced with President's Rule: the governor is first asked by the prime minister's minions in New Delhi to recommend one course of action, then asked to recommend the other. For good measure, the governor is subjected to the same treatment as the militants: summoned to New Delhi for talks and then forced to return without meeting anyone of note in the Government.

AJIT NINAN

Then, there are the hasty pieces of legislation. The Muslim Women's Bill some months ago was almost certainly a case on which the Government should have considered its course more carefully (as the fall-out of the legislation in the courts makes clear). Before that, the Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid issue was badly handled, kindling the communal tinder-box. The more recent decision to prohibit the denigration of women in films and advertisements has obviously laudable objectives (as with so much else that the Rajiv Gandhi Government attempts), but the precise wording of the law leaves so much scope for varying interpretations and harassment as to reduce this to misconceived legislation. But the most notable case of all is the move to first assume special powers through a Constitutional amendment to Centrally administer the border districts of Punjab. This was dropped when an opposition parliamentarian pointed out what the law minister should have done earlier: that the Government already had such special powers. When the move to invoke these powers in Punjab provoked the kind of protest that should have been anticipated from the Akali Government in Punjab, the move was extended to all the states bordering Pakistan, and then—in a breathtaking turnabout—dropped altogether after the Rajya Sabha had already given its assent.

Sometimes, the gaffes take on the character of bizarre farce, as in the case of the amendment suggested by an opposition member to a Bill that proposed higher salaries for judges: the Lok Sabha could not take this up for consideration because the Government had failed to get the President's assent (as was required) in this case. Speaker Balram Jakhar was forced to ask in the House whether all the MP's should sit "and chat with each other" while the Government got back to the President. At a slightly different level, the ambassador in Washington was interrupted in the midst of his final farewell party and asked to unpack his bags and stay on till further orders.

There cannot be such a list of snafus without something being wrong at the top. The prime minister is young and inexperienced, and this may explain some of the instances when he was hustled into action (for example, the Muslim Women's Bill). The prime minister also seems far too keen to live up to his promise of working faster: he has set unrealistic and unnecessary deadlines in areas where patience might have delivered better results, or at the least avoided the stamp of failure when the deadlines that had been set came and went without anything being achieved. But inexperience and occasional unwise haste are only a part of the problem. For the prime minister's senior ministers and advisers are long in the tooth, grey eminences with many years of experience behind them. Certainly, Rajiv Gandhi has no dearth of advisers, for he has appointed a host of advisory committees, while even more numerous informal advisers and a kitchen cabinet of sorts also manage to get their tuppenny-worth in.

Yet the very plethora of advisers now seems to be the problem: there are crossed wires, cross-talk, and when something goes wrong, no one on whom to pin the responsibility. The commerce minister seems to count for more in legal matters than the law minister, there is confusion in the Home Ministry, Central ministers complain about the demi-gods in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, and the chain of command is confused. The country is now on a short fuse, and there is a sense of looming crisis as communalism raises its head ever higher. There is a clear need at this juncture for firm and steady leadership, and solutions with a cosmetic appeal will simply not do. The people today need to believe in the Government's ability to handle things right. The recent record makes this difficult. It is time the prime minister and his colleagues got their act together.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Serial on Rails

● It would ordinarily have been a great idea: a 13-episode TV serial (Yatra) on the railways by Shyam Benegal. But several questions may need to be answered by Minister of State for Railways, Madhav Rao Scindia about the manner in which the Benegal project has been handled.

The railways provided Benegal a 10-bogey train—free of charge—for 50 days of travel the length and breadth of the country. The official estimated cost to the railways: less than Rs 3 lakh. Unofficial estimate: Rs 50 lakh. Railway officials had insisted that the legal department should prepare a detailed agreement spelling out Benegal's liabilities and contractual obligations. But the project was cleared directly by Scindia without seeking the prior consent of the financial commissioner in the Railway Board.

The film is being sponsored for Doordarshan by Bombay Dyeing, the company in which Scindia has a shareholding interest and whose chairman, Nusli Wadia, is a Scindia buddy. Benegal has said that it was he who chose Bombay Dyeing, but the choice of promoter remains curious as there is a possible conflict of interest between Scindia's roles as a public servant and as a shareholder of Bombay Dyeing.

Diplomat Trapping

● The External Affairs Ministry and the Wildlife Department has been engaged in a furious slanging match. It started a year back, when a wildlife warden in the Sivalik game sanctuary nabbed a party of poachers who had killed a cheetal while hunting at night. The poachers quite surprisingly turned out to be two prominent ambassadors from West Asia. The guard recommended fines and prosecution. Then all diplomatic hell broke loose.

The foreign office sent out a flurry of telexes and letters to the Wildlife Department, demanding withdrawal of the case and suppression of the records in order to avoid diplomatic tension with the countries of the oil-rich poachers. But the wildlife boys not only extracted a handsome fine from the diplomats but refused to cow down to the foreign office. In fact, they recently warned the Ministry of External Affairs that they will not soft-pedal on diplomatic poachers, and currently they have on their surveillance list at least two more suspected poaching plenipotentiaries.

Mr. Tough

● Rajiv Gandhi, who has cultivated the public image of the cool, apparently unflappable leader, has, however, a belly-full of fire which he unleashes with acerbic ferocity on unsuspecting senior bureaucrats. Frustrated by the slow implementation of his programmes, the prime minister let this show recently in a meeting with senior government secretaries. Using the metaphor of the Peter Principle, which holds that officials finally rise to the level of their own incompetence, Rajiv intoned tongue-in-cheek at the meeting that it appeared to him that all mediocre IAS officers ultimately rise to the level of secretary.

Then, at a Planning Commission meeting, Rajiv wanted to know—out of the blue—the exact figures on the total private per capita investment in Punjab. He was greeted by silence which was eventually broken by a few officials who mumbled that this kind of figure was rarely compiled and in any case not immediately available. "I want them now," Rajiv demanded. One official said it would take a few days to compile them. But Rajiv would have none of it. He gave them a deadline: the figures would have to be produced before breakfast the following day. And with that he departed, leaving behind panic-stricken officials scrambling hurriedly for their files.

The Kashmir Tangle

● Internecine warfare within the Congress(I) has become another element affecting the political fate of J&K. To most people it appears the battle to control the state is being waged solely between the Congress and the National Conference(F). But the truth is that factions within the ruling party at the Centre are locked in a wrangle over the method of exerting control. Rajiv favours extending Governor's rule under Article 92 of the J&K Constitution, thereby insulating the Centre from direct political consequences.

But state leaders are pressuring the Governor for implementation of President's rule under Article 356 of the Indian Constitution. Under this, Jagmohan has to seek prior approval of the Home Ministry before taking any policy decisions. The Political Affairs Committee of the Cabinet has approved extension of Governor's rule but the decision has been kept in abeyance due to pressure brought by the Kashmiri lobby in the Congress.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The technology is Binatone. The success, worldwide.

Binatone technology combines the best of the East and West. This has made Binatone the single largest independent Electronics company in England.

The same technology that has planted Binatone's roots throughout the rest of the world, with production and R&D set ups in Japan, Korea, Hongkong, Taiwan, Germany and England.

Today, Binatone products are sold in 50 countries the world over and the corporate quest continues—to turn out products that meet the ever rising demands of a technology conscious world.

No wonder then, Binatone has outsold even Japanese products in England.

Since you buy a Colour TV only once in your lifetime, buy best, buy Binatone.

You won't find a better deal.

Binatone

Built better to last longer

Binatone Electronics Private Limited,
B-58, Site IV, Sahibabad Industrial Area,
Sahibabad-201010 (U.P).

Arms Communications 185

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Join the Fashion Movement and Create History!

JG

Phagwara
FABRICS

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tory

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Whatever the product, Tinplate has got it covered!

Vanaspati, cooking oils, fish, meat, mushrooms, fruit, milk products and cereals are all packed in tinplated containers which conform to vital standards of safety.

Tinplated food containers protect their contents from contamination and toxicity.

Their opacity is proof against chemical reactions through exposure to heat.

Tinplated containers have a long shelf-life, and are easy to display and stack in any storeroom or kitchen. They are also impervious to rodents and pests.

In fact, Tinplate is still the safest, most versatile packaging material known.

The container is as important as the contents.

Issued in the public interest by:

TINPLATE

The Tinplate Company of India Limited
Registered Office:
4 Bankshall Street Calcutta-700 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you a complete range of energy-efficient Industrial Luminaires.

BJHBI - 250-400

BJIW-200

BJIE-140

BJFW-200

BJI-240VP

Engineered for high efficiency and designed to suit any high, medium or low bay application as well as different atmospheres like high ambient temperature/humidity in rolling and textile mills, corrosive vapours in fertiliser and chemical plants, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-780 A

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

Gandhi: What has happened to our bloody aircraft?
Aide: Not yet repaired sir.
Gandhi: What has happened to their bloody aircraft?
Aide: Not arrived yet sir.
Gandhi: Dammit

■ Conversation between RAJIV GANDHI and aide at Moscow airport as reported by The Sunday Observer

● Sometimes I also feel that I could address myself to the national problem, maybe emerge as a Muslim Nehru. But one's energy and time are limited. And even a Doctor Schweitzer keeps busy treating the patients that reach his hut.

■ SYED SHAHABUDDIN, MP in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● It is at sensitive moments like the one we are passing through, that the need is greatest for leaders who talk the language of peace and brotherhood. Mr Shahabuddin is dangerous because at this moment he is instead telling Radio Australia that he fears that blood will flow in street after street as Muslims are forced to protect their interests through violence.

■ M.J. AKBAR in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● I am at my wits' end to understand the motives of Mr Sathe. He has embarrassed us. To my mind, Mr Sathe's exercise is a gross violation of propriety, norms and principles governing the conduct of ministers.

■ K.K. TEWARI, minister of state for public enterprises, in response to Union Minister for Energy, Vasant Sathe's critical articles on the public sector

● My brother was my hero, my beloved, my everything. There were many occasions when I did not agree with him politically, but I had a kind of adoring passion for him which, I realise was not perhaps correct. But to be wrong with him was better than to be right to anyone else.

■ VIJAYA LAKSHMI PANDIT on Jawaharlal Nehru in Gentleman

● Jyoti Basu may call himself a Marxist but his administration in Darjeeling is purely communal. Else why should this democratic movement (the GNLF agitation) invite such brutal suppression?

■ SUBASH GHISING, president, Gorkha National Liberation Front, in Frontline

● Nearly 10 per cent of the faculty of Jawaharlal Nehru University—the Kremlin-on-the-Jamuna—have applied for jobs in American universities. H.N. Bahugana may fume about American perfidy and wax eloquent about friendly USSR, but for by-pass surgery, he went to Houston. No wonder Marxism has no future.

■ SUBRAMANIAM SWAMY in Imprint

● Have you ever seen a woman standing on her head and making love or three men making love to one woman? It is in Khajuraho. All over India you have statues of Shiva lingams and only one of Brahma the creator of the world. But who bothers about him. He retired.

■ RAJNEESH in Sunday

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIMACHAL ECSTASY

It'll take you to divine heights

Himachal. The pilgrims paradise that conjures up feelings of sublime joy. With faith deeply enshrined in its temples and monasteries, this 'abode of gods' offers peace of mind and soul, alongwith spiritual enlightenment for those who believe in things divine.

For information please contact H.P. Tourist Offices at:

New Delhi: Chandralok Bldg., 36, Janpath, Tel: 345320, 352104; 210-211, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, Tel: 344764.
Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Tel: 219191/284
Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Tel: 446867.
Madras: 28, Commander-in-Chief Road, Tel: 472966.
Chandigarh: S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Tel: 26494.
Simla: The Mall, Tel: 3311; Panchayat Bhavan, Cart Road, Tel: 4589

For any complaint write or contact:
The Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Simla-171 001, Tel: 2028, 3136.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

Compacta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Heritage Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collection

Product of the
Vareli Group of Industries
in association with
Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat.

VARELI

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone From HELENE CURTIS

The Hair Dye you can trust

May you always look young!

The Tru-Tone Hair Dye Range.

Choose the one that suits you best.

Tru-Tone Stick

Tru-Tone Regular and Tru-Tone for Men

Tru-Tone Self-spreading Liquid

Drip-proof Tru-Tone Gel

Tru-Tone Powder Hair Dye

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAILOR-MADE

■ What's in a name? Quite a lot actually if the name of the game happens to be an application for employment in Indian Airlines. Take the case of the gentleman who was born in Darzi-kuan, an obscure little hamlet situated in the wilds of Rajasthan. In accordance with traditional village custom, his family name was Darzi which, however, had very little to do with his chosen profession but eventually became an occupational hazard all the same.

Having migrated to Jorhat, in Assam's tea-growing area, and obtained the necessary educational qualifications, Mr Darzi decided that he would apply for a job in the local office of Indian Airlines. Year after year, he went regularly through the "apply, apply, no reply" procedure till, on the advice of a more knowledgeable friend, he decided to tailor his application to the airline's needs.

He employed the simple ploy of getting his name officially changed from Darzi to Tailor and sent in his annual application signed R.K. Tailor. Not only did he get an immediate response from the airline authorities but he now occupies the office of the airport manager at Jorhat having effectively proved the point that a switch in name can save time.

MISSING MEDIA

■ Politicians can offer press conferences at the drop of a Gandhi topi. Except there are times when it can drop with quite a clanger. One rather voluble member of the species arrived at Calcutta airport last fortnight having decided during the flight to air his views on arrival. Having ensconced himself at the VIP lounge, and announced his intentions to hold forth, he waited for the city's press corps to beat a path to his requisitioned abode.

Unfortunately, he had forgotten to inform the uniformed gentleman guarding the portals. When the media arrived and pressed for admittance, the guard put his boot down—only those with a security pass would be admitted.

The VIP's aide then went into a tailspin trying to find someone who could issue the Open Sesame order. Hours passed and the press corps, fed up of waiting, trooped off to have their overdue lunch. When last heard of, the aide was rushing around the airport waving the coveted passes in desperate search of the missing media while the VIP's press conference eventually boiled down to a few choice words.

IDENTITY CRISIS

■ Talking about VIP's, the country's headstrong dash into the 21st century and the induction of a new breed of modern-looking politicians is creating some peculiar problems. And none so peculiar as that of Ashok Nath Verma, a young political newcomer, who recently bagged a Janata ticket to the Rajya Sabha from Uttar Pradesh. Eager to assume his new responsibilities, Verma packed his bags and was due to arrive in Delhi on the Janata Express, travelling, as befitting his new station, in a first class compartment. The Janata Party unit in Delhi had made elaborate plans to welcome him to the city—and a berth in the Upper House. Verma, who was fittingly occupying an upper berth, had, unfortunately, chosen the wrong outfit.

When the train steamed in, a crowd of party workers invaded the compartment, garlanded a portly paan-chewing gentleman dressed in khadi kurta pyjama, and carried him off protesting feebly on their shoulders. On alighting, Verma, who was wearing jeans and a T-shirt, enquired of the porter what the fuss was all about only to be told that the over-enthusiastic crowd had come to welcome a newly-elected Rajya Sabha MP.

DOGGED EFFORT

■ Policing a border can be an invitation to boredom apart from the odd moments of comic relief. And the oddest of all must be the dogged efforts of the Himachal police post on the Dharamshala-Chandigarh road where it crosses over into Punjab, to recover a .303 rifle and some cartridges that were stolen recently from the hut housing the cops. With the terrorist scare in the air, the Himachal police left no stone unturned in their hunt for the missing weaponry and finally decided to roust out a police dog from his cosy kennel in snowy Shimla.

The keen canine arrived on a sweltering day and with his tongue hanging out from the unaccustomed heat, tried gamely to pick up the scent with a huge crowd of locals and policemen trailing behind in eager anticipation. After sniffing around for a while, the dog headed unerringly for a nearby pond and jumped in. The pond was dredged after a round-the-clock operation but no rifle. Only then did it dawn on the mud-caked cops that the dog, used to colder climes, had only jumped into the pond to cool off from the heat.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Did you know 2

The term 'banker' originated in Genoa from the bench on which the money dealer sat!

In those early times, when banking was in its infancy, the banker was a man who, with a capital sum, sat on a bench to transact business.

In India, indigenous banking, was in the form of rural money lending. Conducted as a private family business, money lending assumed even greater importance during the Mughal reign. Western type of banking was introduced in India begining with the second half of 18th century. With British colonisation, a totally new form of banking activity evolved.

Today, Banking Industry is the epicentre of a nation's economy, touching varying needs of all people.

Vysya Bank's own success story dates back to the year 1930. A group of visionaries with a rare foresight of the growth and needs of Bangalore founded Vysya Bank as a small man's bank. Their visions have come true and today amidst the industrious activities of a bustling city, Vysya Bank has risen in stature in tune with the changing concepts of banking. Today, Vysya Bank has spread itself throughout the country upholding its founding objectives of serving the common man and his needs.

With its philosophy to innovate, adopt and excel; with its trail blazing records and achievements, Vysya Bank's future is bright, full of better prospects for growth.

Vysya Bank— from a glorious past towards a brighter future.

Come, let us grow together.

THE VYSYA BANK LTD
Regd. Office: Avenue Road, Bangalore-560 002
Admv. Office: 72, St. Marks Road,
Bangalore-560 001
Chairman: Ramesh Gelli

Premier Bank in Private Sector

KIRON/VBL/12/88

Write for a free booklet "Glimpses of Early Banking" to the Deputy General Manager, Planning & Development Department, The Vysya Bank Ltd., 72, St. Marks Road, Bangalore-560 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Write for a free booklet "Glimpses of Early Banking" to the Deputy General Manager, Planning & Development Department, The Vysya Bank Ltd., 72, St. Marks Road, Bangalore-560 001

Rajiv addressing the session: attracting a new breed

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CURRENT EVENTS

INDIAN YOUTH CONGRESS

The Rajiv Rage

THE INDIAN Youth Congress (IYC) has gone ritzy. In its new avatar, in evidence at the massive jamboree in New Delhi last fortnight, it has come out smelling like roses—and assorted French perfumery. Like the legendary phoenix, the new plumage of the party on display by the 6,000 "under-40" delegates comprising MP's, MLA's and party officials was in keeping with its image as the new Rajiv brigade. Dazzling silk saris and salwar kameezes for the women and custom-tailored kurta-pyjamas for many of the men. Even the party resolutions, neatly wrapped in plastic folders and carried under the arm like badges of loyalty, were invariably typed on electronic typewriters.

For the IYC, the gathering was as much a symbolic farewell to the Sanjay era as it was an orchestrated salutation to their new lodestar—his brother Rajiv Gandhi. Gone were the indisciplined and street-smart college drop-outs and rustic rowdies. In their place was the new breed, sophisticated, with a gleam of idealism in their eyes matching the glint of their Cartier pens and the diamond buttons in their kurtas. Mainly drawn from the rich peasantry, erstwhile royalty and the urban rich, the delegates represent a sea change in the membership of the organisation and in the political mainstream that has started to flow behind Rajiv. Said Bhubaneshwar Kalitha, IYC general secretary: "There is no doubt that the IYC has got a new look. We are an organisation which has a lot of floating population. Now it is full of educated youngsters with drive and confidence." Even Kamal Nath, a key member of the former Sanjay Gandhi

Anand Sharma, 33
president, IYC

"Is there any harm in attracting those young people who can communicate and perform better?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jayanthi Natarajan, 32
member, Rajya Sabha

"But for Rajiv I would not have been in politics. I joined the Youth Congress soon after he did."

Praveen Dawar, 35
member, IYC national council

"I joined politics because I want to help the IYC in combatting communalism and regionalism."

Reena Singh, 28
MLA, Uttar Pradesh

"Joining politics was the best thing which could have happened to me. One doesn't mind sacrificing a bit."

brigade, was moved to admit: "The organisation has changed beyond recognition. It has more educated, disciplined and intelligent people now. And it is better organised."

What was most glaringly obvious was that not a tear was shed for the passing of the Sanjay era. This was the first IYC convention where not even a single slogan was raised in memory of the man who catapulted the organisation on to the national horizon and, in the words of Mrs Gandhi, "stole the thunder" from the parent body 10 years ago. Inside the Talkatora Indoor Stadium in New Delhi, a stark 20"x 30" black and white portrait of Sanjay hung in a dimly lit corner as the only concession to his memory. And he was more than conspicuously absent from the row of huge cut-outs of Nehru, Indira Gandhi and Rajiv prominently displayed at the entrance. Admitted an IYC office-bearer: "We may not agree, but it is a fact that we have made a conscious attempt to delink the organisation from the Sanjay era. Most of us didn't like his style of brashness."

BUT MORE than the seemingly deliberate attempt to de-Sanjayise the organisation, what marked the jamboree was the sudden profusion of educated professionals who have virtually taken over from the Sanjay loyalists. The majority of the 25 Pradesh Youth Congress(I) Committee presidents and 500-odd office-bearers have joined the party only after Sanjay's demise. Over 200 of the 600 district level presidents are sons and daughters of the local rich or aristocracy who have left their urban cocoons or family businesses and plunged into active politics. Defending the change, Anand Sharma, 33, a post-graduate and president of the IYC, argued: "Is there any harm in attracting those young people who can understand better, communicate better and perform better? Under Rajivji's leadership it has been our endeavour to bring out the educated, clean professionals so that politics is not considered to be a bad thing." Added Tariq Anwar, former IYC president: "The Youth Congress is basically a feeder-line service for our parent organisation. When we had to fight our opponents, we needed fighters. Now we have to consolidate and do constructive work, so we need a different set of people. Rajivji wants a much wider involvement from a cross-section of society."

In his address, Rajiv himself harped on the "development of the man" and the involvement of a much larger number of people in building the character of the nation. "It is all right to have faster industrial development but we must aim at the total development and all of you must go back to your areas and participate in inculcating the spirit of Bharatiyata (Indianness). I request

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sanjay finds no place in the row of cut-outs of Nehru, Indira and Rajiv put up outside Talkatora Stadium: conspicuous change the organisation to chalk out a Bharat Banao (Build India) programme," he said.

Undoubtedly, the primary reason for the cultural change by the sudden influx of a new breed of IYC workers is Rajiv himself. Most of the recruits projected at the convention by being selected to speak on important issues displayed an unabashed admiration for their leader and spoke fervently of their desire to "sacrifice everything" for his benefit. Said Jayanthi Natarajan, a 32-year-old advocate and a Rajya Sabha member from Tamil Nadu who moved the economic resolution: "But for Rajiv I would not have been in active politics. I joined the Youth Congress in 1982 soon after he entered into it." Added Mabel Robello, a post-graduate in sociology and a member of the IYC National Council: "I found that under the new leadership, people like me can do better."

THOUGH the ardent, even fawning adulation smacked suspiciously of old-style sycophancy in a new garb, there was also no mistaking the sense of purpose and dedication among the new recruits to the Rajiv brigade. One prime example is Reena Singh, 28, from a Moradabad royal family who became an MLA in Uttar Pradesh and is now actively involved in youth politics. The convent-educated Singh quit her career as a furniture designer to join politics. Coyly covering her head with the end of her saree, she said: "Joining politics was the best thing which could have happened to me. Rajiv Gandhi wants committed, young and clean people. I think it is good to work with such people in politics. One doesn't mind sacrificing a bit for the country and the party."

Singh's colleague, Mitul Pradeep, the 26-year-old daughter of film lyricist Pradeep, says she plunged into politics to help the IYC develop its cultural cell. A graduate and diploma holder in business management, Mitul was appointed chairperson of the Maharashtra Youth Congress cultural cell and was introduced into politics by film actor Sunil Dutt during his Lok Sabha election in December 1984. Said Mitul: "It was entirely due to Rajivji and Sunil Duttji that I am in politics. I want to be a good politician. Earlier girls were afraid of joining the Youth Congress, but I don't see any problems in the organisation". Added Praveen Dawar, a member of the national council of the organisation and a former Indian Army captain: "I quit and joined politics because I want to help the IYC in combating communalism and regionalism. The Youth Congress is the right forum for launching an offensive against these evils."

Clearly, it is people like these who will represent the new force and leadership in the organisation. As was obvious at the conven-

A. Jayamohan, 32
member, Lok Sabha

"Congress politics is irrelevant without Rajiv Gandhi. Our politics begins and ends with him."

Mitul Pradeep, 26
chairperson, IYC, Maharashtra

"Earlier, girls were afraid of joining the Youth Congress but I don't see any problems in the organisation."

Mabel Robello, 33
member, IYC national Council

"I came into politics by accident. I found that under the new leadership people like me can do better."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tion, the traditional party workers from the villages and small towns were studiously kept at a distance and denied any opportunity to air their views. In fact, so deliberate was their distancing—and their sense of alienation—that most of them stayed only to listen to Rajiv's speech and then dispersed. Admitted Suryu Prashad from Bihar: "Everything seems to have changed. There is a premium on image and language and not on political work."

Prashad's was a perceptive comment on the proceedings. The Natrajans, Dawars and Mituls clearly represent the kind of people who have a bright future in the refurbished organisation. Said Vijay Laxmi, a doctor and member of the Madhya Pradesh Assembly: "A political party has to face the people. Those who represent it must be clean, presentable and should be able to communicate convincingly with the electorate. It is due to Rajiv that this change has come about in the Youth Congress." Added A. Jayamohan, 32, a Lok Sabha member and a fiery advocate from Tamil Nadu and chief of the state's Youth Congress: "Congress politics is irrelevant without Rajiv Gandhi. Our politics begins and ends with him."

BUT MORE than a display of the obvious genealogical changes, last fortnight's gathering carried another not-so-subtle message—the exhibition of total support for Rajiv Gandhi by an influential and youthful section of society and a warning to the 'Old Guard' opposing him. The tone was set by the welcome address delivered by Anand Sharma himself. Thundered Sharma: "On behalf of 6,000 delegates I want to warn those who are trying to raise their ugly heads against the leadership that they will remain confined to the dustbin of history, like their ilk in the past who dreamt of throwing out Nehruji and Indiraji." Added Marvin Godinho, 27, an industrialist who is the Union territory's Youth Congress president: "We are here to express our solidarity with Rajiv and his ideals. He represents the sentiments of modern youth and modern India. We will support him with all our might."

Even the resolution made it clear that the convention's primary purpose was a show of strength. "This convention is of the considered opinion that the party will emerge healthier and cleaner with the purge of corrupt power brokers and disgruntled individuals who lack both stature and credibility...History is witness that while Nehru and Indiraji remained undeterred by such attacks, those who acted as impediments were swept away and reduced to non-entities. History will repeat itself again."

History, of course, was also repeating itself at the convention, which was "dedicated to India's unity, development, and clean value-based politics". Ten years earlier, another Gandhi had galvanised the youth into becoming storm-troopers for the Congress(I), and against Mrs Gandhi's opponents. Now, his brother was inspiring another youthful resurgence—and for somewhat similar reasons—to counter his own opponents and form the nucleus of a new force, this time shorn of its earlier destructive character. Said Sharma: "We in the Youth Congress and Mr Rajiv Gandhi are on the same wavelength." Added his general secretary, Jagmeet Singh Brar: "In the Youth Congress it is our duty to put into practice the ideas and directives of our leader. It is Rajiv who represents both change and progress. And no one else matters for the country and the organisation."

That all the stops were being pulled out to accommodate the new force was patently obvious. The organisers faced no shortage of finances or support from the Government. The decision to organise the convention featuring the new Rajiv inductees and to give it top billing was taken by Rajiv himself. The Prime Minister's Secretariat had written to all the Congress(I) chief ministers and the PCC(I) presidents to mobilise both resources and manpower so that Rajiv loyalists were predominant. In addition, all the state bhawans in the capital, the sports stadia and vacant government flats were put at the disposal of the IYC for lodging the delegates. Admitted a senior IYC leader: "We were specifically told that we should put up a better show than the one in Bombay. It should be disciplined, more vocally in favour of Rajiv and a signal for the old guard."

While Anand Sharma and his team ostensibly organised the jamboree, its progress was monitored daily by Rajiv's aides. Even the resolutions which were formally adopted were vetted. In fact, AICC(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh, who is in charge of the IYC, issued instructions on almost all aspects of the convention and sat through most of the deliberations. Singh's involvement was meant to provide the stamp of approval from the parent body, while the party's Working President, Kamalapati Tripathi, was conspicuous by his absence. Said IYC General Secretary and MP Kalitha: "The massive response to our convention is a clear indication that the Youth Congress is now ready to offer workers who can make the party of Rajivji's liking. They are not only honest, hard-working and aggressive, they are also loyal to Rajivji and no one else." If that statement is any indication, Rajiv Gandhi now has his very own outfit, tailor-made for his usage.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

Marvin Godinho, 27
president, IYC, Goa

"We are here to express our solidarity with Rajiv. He represents modern Indian youth."

Jagmeet Singh Brar, 29
general secretary, IYC

"In the Youth Congress it is our duty to put into practice the ideas and directives of our leader."

Vijay Laxmi, 28
general secretary, IYC, MP

"Those who represent the people must be clean, presentable and be able to communicate."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation

"SMIRK SMIRK"

Our competitors' response, when we launched Radial tyres in India

Today with 3,00,000 Radials on the road, we're having the last laugh.

When we decided to launch Radials in India, way back in 1977, it was with a specific purpose. To give you the very best technology in tyres, that the world had to offer.

But our competitors thought otherwise. "Radials?" they smirked, "On Indian roads? Ridiculous!" Radials were good enough for the whole world, but apparently not for India.

The Radial Revolution

Our competitors' scepticism soon turned to dismay, as our radial technology took the country by storm. And hundreds and thousands of JK Radials found their way on to the wheels of Indian and foreign cars. Our customers were impressed.

For the first time they experienced the real luxury and economy of a unique tyre. Comfort. Safety. All weather performance and economy of 2 paise per tyre kilometre. And a fuel saving of upto 7% proven by the Central Road Research Institute.

Follow the Leader

To imitate is to flatter. And that's exactly what our competitors tried, in an effort to catch up with us. But their fabric belted radials were no match for our 'Steel Belted' and 'Jetglas Radials'. A fact that's apparent on the roads today, with six out of every ten radials bearing the JK stamp. JK Radials on Premiers and Ambassadors. On Contessas and Standards. On almost every make of foreign car.

The Special Ingredient

The single most important ingredient for our success has been our commitment to customer satisfaction. It is on the customers' suggestion for instance, that our R&D developed the elliptical butyl rubber tubes for Radials. To hug the contours of the carcass and minimise punctures. And thereby prevent tyre damage.

Today JK Radials give you double the mileage of a normal nylon tyre. Small wonder the JK Radial has been nicknamed 'the incredible Radial' by satisfied customers.

The Road Ahead

Our goal is not only to be No. 1 on the road but also to be No. 1 in performance and customer service. So that when you think of tyres only the JK name looms large in your mind. And you can drive on the roads with total confidence. The confidence of JK.

evoresVdBG/JKU278

JK TYRE

More miles for your money.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

Tough Tactics

A.B.A. Ghani Khan Chowdhury, Union minister for programme implementation, has never been known for tactness. Almost fanatical in his zeal to serve his constituency of Malda, Chowdhury has a reputation for bulldozing any hurdles in his path, as bankers in Malda district learnt the hard way last month.

Taking advantage of a state Government decision to declare parts of Malda district "hail-storm affected", Ghani Khan pressurised the district authorities—say Malda's bank officials—to consider the entire district affected so that banks could disburse loans liberally. As some 53,000 loan applications poured in, all the 125 banks in the district hastened to fall in line—with the sole exception of the State Bank of India (SBI), which has 17 branches in the district.

The reaction was inevitable. Claiming that, "the worst offender was the Shujapur State Bank branch. Out of 2,900 applications received by them, they had disbursed loans to only 60 persons in a month", Ghani Khan promptly drove down to Shujapur, a small market town 15 km from Malda, on August 4 and summoned the bank manager to his car. Recalls Manager N.N. Chakraborty: "The minister got agitated while I was explaining our problems and getting out of his car, he pushed me by the neck to my office." To add to Chakraborty's humiliation, the huge mob that had gathered around was clearly delighted with the minister's dramatic action.

Bank officials claim the minister shouted: "The bank's money is not your father's money." They also alleged that he had demanded a written explanation from the manager for the delays. When one official, Pradip Bhattacharya, tried to explain that delays were inevitable due to the shortage of staff and the bank's guidelines to strictly observe loan disbursement norms, Ghani Khan apparently grabbed him by the collar and shouted: "What norms?" Before leaving, the minister said he would return, and unless the bank cleared all the loans, he would organise a public meeting and ask the people to withdraw their deposits and not repay loans.

But this time, the minister had bitten off more than he thought he could chew. Not only did the well-organised bankers succeed in shutting down all the district's bank branches the next day, but got their powerful association—the All India Bank Officer's Confederation (AIBOC)—to condemn the attempts to use banks for political purposes. The AIBOC also demanded a policy statement on the norms for distress loans to prevent political misuse.

Bank officials say Ghani Khan Chowdhury roughed them up when they tried to explain the reason for the delays but, denying this, the minister charges them with being indifferent to the poor.

Denying that he had used any physical force, Ghani Khan insists there was nothing political about the whole affair. Says he: "The banks are supposed to give distress loans and when they don't do their work, they make all kinds of allegations. The banks themselves had evolved objective criteria for disbursing loans. The only problem was that some were working and others were not." To prove his point, he says that while the SBI had disbursed only a handful of loans, other banks, particularly the United Bank of India and the Malda Gour Gramin Bank, had forked out over Rs 10 lakh by the first week of August. The Union minister feels that his fight is on broader principles: "The banks have been nationalised but their culture has not changed. They are still geared to serve the rich."

Malda's bankers, however, contest the minister's assertions. Says Malda District AIBOC President Nipati Bhattacharya: "It is not an issue between the rich and the poor. The issue is about banking norms and whether they can be flouted just to satisfy a powerful minister. The hail-storm excuse was just a cock-and-bull story. The entire district was not affected yet we were ordered to clear 53,000 applications for distress loans in just three months." It was also discovered that gram panchayat members were recommending applications on a mass basis without even verifying the authenticity of the claimants. Several recommendations did not even have the signature of the applicant.

Besides, argue the bankers, the performance of nationalised banks in Malda has been among the best in the country. According to information with the district's leading bank, the United Bank's Malda branches have consistently achieved or overshot their targets in respect to the annual action plans, the IRDP and other government programmes. The credit-deposit ratio in Malda district is also astonishingly high—80 per cent, compared to the state's average of 30-40 per cent. But loan recovery is alarmingly low—below 20 per cent.

At any rate, for the moment it is Ghani Khan who has won the day. Immediately after the incident, the SBI rushed four extra officers to Shujapur and instructed its Malda branches to clear the loan applications. By last fortnight, even the Shujapur branch had started handing out the loans. And the common peasant in Malda is obviously overjoyed at the snooty bankers being prodded into action by the Union minister's persuasive tactics.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your secretary, naturally. Our client. The user of our electronic typewriters.

Your organisation believes in moving with the electronic age, and you recognise the benefits of office automation. Which is why you chose PCL.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With a special customer orientation that is committed to your total satisfaction, and that of the actual user of the electronic typewriter—your secretary.

Our client concern involves customer education by pre-installation training, usage training and special seminars. And our after-sales services include prompt aid by our trained engineers, quick delivery of original spare parts and advice on proper documentation usage mix. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/d86/PCL/225

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

20 POINT PROGRAMME

Rural Thrust

CARTOONIST Abu Abraham portrayed it as a box of detergent—"power-packed, economy-size, with a fresh new perfume". A Doordarshan commentator called it the Mark 3 version of the older programme, and some editorial writers simply dismissed it as a rehash job.

The sense of deja vu may have been understandable, but as officials pointed out, it was a rehash job with a purpose: the new 20 Point Programme did not range from minimum wages to exercise books; instead, it was a reasonably focused attack on rural poverty.

The first hint of it came in the prime minister's Independence Day speech. Sure enough, five days later (on Rajiv's birthday), it was unveiled in Parliament by Minister for Programme Implementation A.B.A. Ghani Khan Chowdhury. And it was soon obvious that some thought had gone into its drafting. While both the earlier programmes were primarily political gestures—the first to provide a talking point other than the imposition of the Emergency in 1975, the second to try and gain some mileage when Mrs Gandhi seemed to be losing ground politically, in early 1982; the latest 20 points, seemed to flow from genuine concern on the prime minister's part for frontally tackling poverty.

Thirteen of the latest 20 points relate directly to rural development, and many of the others indirectly. Pointing this out, Wajahat Habibullah, director in the prime minister's office and the man responsible for keeping track of the programme, said that several points in the old programme, like augmenting power generation, curbing black money and streamlining industrial policy, had been dropped because, though important in themselves, they did not directly relate to the alleviation of rural poverty.

The new thrust, Habibullah said, had been decided after evaluating the achievements of the two earlier programmes. This monitoring uncovered weaknesses—like bank and block-level delays in sanctioning assistance, poor follow-up action and faulty distribution of aid under the Integrated Rural Development Programme—but also dispelled several prevailing misconceptions:

- that beneficiaries were selected due to political pressure. In fact, 60 per cent were chosen by the gram sabhas;
- that most of the money allocated for buying assets was getting diverted into officials' pockets. In 95 per cent of the cases there was no defalcation of funds, except in Manipur where malfeasance was found in 70 per cent of the cases;
- that there was no real rise in the income of poor villagers. In 78 per cent cases, income had noticeably increased.

In view of the shortcomings that have surfaced the new programme emphasises the need for involving voluntary agencies, panchayats, cooperatives and local bodies. "This means that the attack on rural poverty cannot be the sole responsibility of the bureaucracy," said D. Bandopadhyay, secretary in the Department of Rural Development.

But, as senior officials admit, it will be difficult to change the bureaucracy's entrenched attitudes. Evolving monitoring systems from block to national levels will be an "enormous job" requiring a lot of training and re-orientation if the planned decentralisation is to go hand in hand with accountability.

Won't all this be a tall order? Yes, says Habibullah, but the last programme's target, of providing drinking water to 2.31 lakh problem villages, looked ambitious but was exceeded. Water pumps were installed in 2.44 lakh villages. And assistance under the programme raised 43 per cent of the people over the poverty line. "This time", he said, "there is a heavy reliance on technology in these programmes." The quest for self-reliance in edible oils, provision of safe drinking water in all villages and of low cost housing for the poor, depend on technological breakthroughs. Besides, objectives like eradication of scavenging and ensuring that all sections of society in a village (including the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes) can make use of the village water, will involve a degree of social engineering that has not been tried as yet. The new programme also talks of the two-child norm, and the Government intends to introduce incentives to encourage people to have only two children.

Subtle nuances have been introduced, like the reference to the "supply of electricity for productive use in the villages". So, just extension of an electricity line to the village outskirts will not do: unless villagers actually use it, the village will not be considered electrified.

The concerned ministries have been instructed to finalise targets and action plans in the next two months. The Ministry of Programme Implementation, which has over the last nine months perfected computerised procedures to measure the parameters of the nation's economic health, sends a monthly report to the prime minister on production and productivity in the key industrial sectors, and monitors 264 vital ongoing projects costing Rs 64,448 crore. The new 20 Point Programme will come in for similar scrutiny, said Ministry Secretary P.K. Basu.

In the final analysis, if the programme does get implemented effectively, it will help blunt the criticism that the Government is pro-rich and indifferent to the poor. To that extent, the latest 20 Point Programme, like its predecessors, also has a political objective.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OUR TOUGHEST CRITIC.

He works for us. The perfectionist. Whose first priority is to ensure a zero-error product. And, at PCL, there are many like him in every department.

PCL. Where innovation and foresight have been successfully combined to meet your office automation requirements. With computer-aided fault diagnosis, a micro electronic in-house Research & Development facility and a high degree of reliability engineering, we make no compromises on quality. On the production floor, field simulation tests ensure a fault free product. And above all, our user feedback system keeps us abreast with your growing needs.

Our customer service includes intensive pre-installation and usage training; and prompt after-sales service that includes the delivery of original spare parts. Through our all-India network of 43 offices.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology—from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

Finally, it's the dedication of our team that has made us the market leaders in India. 250 talented professionals with valuable experience in the office automation industry. They add the vital edge to our success story.

everest/d86/PCL/226

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Startling Confessions

HE SPEAKS with no trace of remorse as he narrates his murderous exploits. Sturdy, and bushy-bearded, Manbir Singh, 25, alias 'General Hari Singh' of the 'Khalistan Commando Force' even smiles at the grim-faced Punjab Police officials surrounding him. For the last year and a half they have been at the receiving end—ten members of their force were lost at Manbir's orders—and now sitting at an interrogation centre in Jalandhar, they can barely conceal their elation. "It did not take long to break him, barely three hours," admits a police official.

The confessions of Manbir and Tarsem Singh Kohar, the self-styled chief of the 'Khalistan Liberation Army' also captured last month, has not only blown the lid off several recent acts of terrorist violence, including the Muktsar bus massacre and the raid on the district courts in Jalandhar in which six policemen were killed, but also confirmed police suspicions that the brains trust behind the terrorist violence is the five-member Panthic Committee, all of whom are absconding. Though the Punjab Police have arrested or killed 14 of the 38 top-ranking terrorists, Manbir and Kohar are the first leaders of the killer squads who have confessed.

With the confessions, not only has the chain of command among the terrorists now become clearer, details of their zones of operations, their armoury, their sympathisers and harbourers have also been extracted. And if their confessions are to be believed, then the declaration of Khalistan was made at the instance of Pakistan. The two, but mainly Manbir, have revealed so much information that the Punjab Police were still conducting follow-up raids and arresting several wanted accomplices of Kohar and Manbir till late in the fortnight.

Born in a small peasants' family in Chaheru, near Phagwara, Manbir's life took a fateful turn in 1982, when a tiff with the police over a motorcycle led to his joining the camp of Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale to take revenge. "Sant gave me a new name Iqbal Singh. I was in the inner ring of his security. I slipped out of the Guru Nanak Nivas on June 1, 1984 before Operation Blue-Star," he confesses. After roaming around for a few months in Jalandhar, he escaped to Bombay to join Bhai Mokham Singh, a Damdami Taksal leader.

With Manbir's confession, not only has the chain of command amongst the terrorists now become clearer, details of their zones of operations, their armoury, their sympathisers and harbourers have also been extracted and also the fact that the declaration of Khalistan was made at the instance of Pakistan.

After returning from Bombay, he went to Chowk Mehta, the Taksal's headquarters, and later to the Golden Temple complex. "Initially we were demoralised but the rumour that Bhindranwale is alive kept us going. Soon we had enough arms, money and vehicles," he admits. It was then that the ranks of the terrorists were organised under the guidance of Damdami Taksal leaders Wassan Singh, Gurbachan Singh Manochahal and Dhanna Singh. While Manbir Singh was appointed 'general' of the 'Khalistan Commando Force', Tarsem Singh Kohar was chosen to head the 'Khalistan Liberation Army' which would operate in Amritsar and Gurdaspur and Sukhdev Singh Sakhira along with Gurdev Singh and Gurjit Singh, a relative of Bhindranwale, were asked to function under Manochahal's direction in Amritsar and Ferozepore.

Later, Kohar was assigned Ferozepore and Faridkot, while Manbir himself remained in the Doaba—the prosperous territory spanning three districts between rivers Beas and Sutlej—using two jeeps, one truck, two Premier cars, one red Maruti, scooters and cyles. "There was a steady flow of arms and money from Pakistan via the Gurdaspur and Ferozepore border. Our contacts and sympathisers from Canada, England and America were regularly sending us money and some travel agents and politicians were used as conduits," he says as he reels out their names.

In all, Manbir masterminded a dozen-odd major incidents but participated only in the April 5 Jalandhar court incident in which six policemen were shot dead in the courts in a successful attempt to free top-ranking terrorist Sukhdev Singh Sukha and three others. "I used to meet Sukha in jail and was keen to free him. So after some weeks of planning, I, along with Balbir Singh, Ajitpal Singh, (both killed in Jalandhar later), Jarnail Singh Halwara (killer of Sant Longowal) and Rashpal Singh, went to the courts armed with a Sten gun and four revolvers. When policemen were escorting the detained terrorists on foot, we began shooting. Since Gurinder Singh Bhola and Swaran Singh had also learnt about our plan, they also got in our jeep. We drove upto Suchi village and then took a Maruti and went to a village in Hoshiarpur," he relates. Bhola later went to Bombay and Punjab Police believe him to be one of the killers of General Vaidya.

Other crimes confessed by Manbir Singh include the killing of eight people

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OUR SUCCESS FORMULA.

Our people and our products. At PCL, a team of 250 professionals offer you the best services and the best products. Combining their expertise with a commitment to maximum customer satisfaction. Your satisfaction.

Our people, selected from premier technological and managerial institutes, have valuable experience in the office automation industry. A set of perfectionists to whom nothing matters more than successfully meeting your office automation requirements.

To enhance their expertise and motivate them into more intensive client concern, PCL conducts regular human resource development programmes that update their technical and managerial skills. Ensuring their total involvement in PCL's pre-installation and usage training, and prompt after sales service. Through our all-India network of 43 offices. And that's how we maintain a remarkable 98.5% uptime on our products.

PCL has become the market leader by offering you a range of electronic typewriters that incorporate the world's most advanced electronic office automation technology–from Brother. Sophisticated products that ensure both efficiency and simplicity of operations. After all, 4000 users will testify that PCL Electronic Typewriters are the best.

everest/d86/PCL/227

PCL

Electronic Typewriters

Putting the world's best technology to work for you.

Pertech Computers Limited, 22, Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Lajpat Nagar-IV, New Delhi-110 024 Tel. : 6413002/6412906 • Chandigarh Tel : 21143 • Jaipur Tel : 66862/621325 • Dehra Dun Tel : 28405 • Calcutta Tel : 412424 • Bombay Tel : 230218/230572/4924782/4922771/4924886 • Nagpur Tel : 32384/32385 • Pune Tel : 27673 • Ahmedabad Tel : 400564 • Bangalore Tel : 571502 • Coimbatore Tel : 26293 • Madras Tel : 662324 • Cochin Tel : 367589 • Secunderabad Tel : 73302 • Trivandrum Tel : 65850.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in the Kapurthala shoot-out in March, another seven near Nakodar, a bank dacoity in Jalandhar, attacks on the houses of Inspector Jaskirat Singh and United Akali Dal leader Inderjit Singh Sekhon and freeing of three hard-core terrorists from Kapurthala jail.

Manbir who had been given a hit list of eight Akali leaders, besides seven police officials including Punjab police chief Julio F. Ribeiro, had a large force to command. As many as 38 of his gang members have been arrested but 10 including Sukha, Bhola and Swaranjit are absconding. Last fortnight police raided 30 of his hide-outs spread all over Punjab. Says Ribeiro: "We expect to get the other 10 hard-core terrorists very soon. The revelations are startling as some well-to-do people have been providing shelter, money and arms." Two senior retired army officers, one landlord, an advocate and a doctor are already in police custody.

THE interrogation, which the state CID is now trying to investigate, tells an interesting tale about the April 29 declaration of Khalistan. "Since 1985 the Taksal leadership had been trying to convince the Babbar Khalsa and Bhai Kanwar Singh and Harinder Singh Kahlon of the AISSF to support the declaration. Kanwar Singh, who is now in Pakistan, agreed with the idea but did not see eye to eye with Dhanna Singh and Manochahal. Gurjit Singh, a relative of Bhindranwale who had come back from Pakistan, announced that Pakistan has stopped sending arms as we were not declaring Khalistan but would support us more openly if we carried out the declaration. His argument was that after the declaration our goal will be clear and Sikhs dying for it will be considered proud martyrs. My opinion was that the police would enter Darbar Sahib after the declaration and destroy our major hide-out. I argued that we should wait for six or seven months more but when Gurjit and Balbir insisted, I pleaded with them to postpone it to June 4—the anniversary of Operation Blue Star. No one agreed, and just half an hour before the declaration, I slipped out of the Golden Temple. Gurjit had asked me to keep the declaration secret from the AISSF leadership."

However, the Punjab police has not been as lucky with stocky Tarsem Singh Kohar, 28. Kohar has confessed to organising the Muktsar killings but his account is nowhere near as revealing as Manbir Singh's. Admitted a police officer associated with Kohar's interrogation: "It has been an exhausting affair." Unlike Manbir, Kohar himself led most of the killing squads. "We gave two Sten guns, three revolvers, one .455 bore revolver and one pistol along with ammunition to Waryam Singh and planned the Muktsar bus killings. Others were Raman Singh and Gurjant Singh from Faridkot district and Baljit Singh and Harjinder Singh Jinda from Dhariwal," admits Kohar.

"We expect to get the other 10 hard core terrorists very soon. The revelations are startling as some well-to-do people have been providing shelter, money and arms to the terrorists.

JULIO F. RIBEIRO
director general, Punjab Police

The arrest of these two dreaded commanders of the terrorists has revealed so much that 183 places, including four major gurudwaras in Amritsar and Ludhiana have been raided and 44 terrorists who figure in Ribeiro's 'B' list and 70 other suspects have been rounded up. An impressive arms cache has been seized—including two LMG's, 8 Sten guns, 14 pistols, 29 revolvers, six magazines and 1062 cartridges. Interestingly, many of the arms bear marks of Indian ordnance factories.

But another set of confessions—of 160 Sikh youths who have returned from Pakistan and surrendered in the last two months—have the Punjab police completely baffled. On the face of it, their story is simple. During Operation Woodrose, the post Bluestar clean-up, a large number of Sikh youth fearing atrocities, and some actually tortured, fled to Pakistan. Some 500 of them crossed over, were taken to Faisalabad jail where Bhai Kanwar Singh, Amrik Singh, Atinderpal Singh and Ajaib Singh of Jatha Bhindran asked them to get ready to avenge the attack on the Golden Temple. They were trained in sabotage and while the good trainees were rewarded the majority were branded as useless. Many were tortured and beaten up. On November 22, 1985 they attempted a jail-break in which one of them died. Starting mid-May the Pakistanis started pushing them back after telling them that they will be contacted at the right time.

Even after hundreds of hours of questioning, police officials, state CID interrogators and specialists from RAW have no answer to several questions: Why did Pakistan suddenly start pushing them into India ? Since they have no cases against them and cannot be arrested, will Pakistan assign them their jobs after they have melted into the countryside? Why did they surrender even though they were promised money and arms ? Should they be believed when they say that they want to lead a normal life now?

Most of these boys have been doing the rounds of Chandigarh, seeking jobs or government loans. Last fortnight, over two dozen of them knocked on the doors of Barnala and some even reached Longowal village on the Sant's death anniversary to plead their case. Argues Gurdaspur district police chief J.P. Birdi, who has been pleading their case with Barnala: "We must settle them soon as they have already started receiving feelers from terrorists' leaders." Says Barnala: "I am very keen to help them," but a final decision is still awaited.

GOBIND THUKRAL in Jalandhar.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gone today.

Let's assume, for the moment, that you are overseas and you have American Express Travelers Cheques.

Now suppose they are lost, stolen or they just mysteriously disappear. All you have to do is go to one of our over 90,000 refund locations or over 1400 travel service offices around the world. And we'll replace them, usually within twenty-four hours or the next business day.

Furthermore if your identification papers are also lost we'll replace them with a temporary ID card, following verification. We'll assist in any necessary changes of travel plans such as hotel and airlines reservations. And to advise your friends and associates of your new travel plans, we'll let you send a free cable anywhere in the world.

No other traveler's cheque, of any kind, can give you this much protection.

None.

With American Express Travelers Cheques, you can travel with complete peace of mind. Because no matter what happens today, you know we'll be there to help, tomorrow.

Here tomorrow.

Don't leave home without them.

Available at American Express Bank Ltd. and Travel Service Offices, moneychangers and leading branches of authorised Indian Banks.

OBM/10326

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TURN

Mudra:A:RIL:3231

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

your back on the ordinary

Fabric PERFECTION ONLY VIMAL

FROM THE BEST PLANT SCIENCE CAN BUILD

Silverline is turning your back on ordinary shirtings. And yesterday's technology. Vimal has made it happen. To create Fabric Perfection in shirtings. With a little help from Rs.3500 million worth of science. And art. The combination is Silverline.

VIMAL® A RELIANCE PRODUCT

silverline shirtings

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New York

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week!

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can then fly you to New York almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we connect you to key cities in Italy and Europe, as well as Chicago, Los Angeles, Montreal and Toronto. Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. Romantica if you want an unforgettable "Intermezzo Italia" stopover. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week .... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia

daCunha/ALT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARTICLE 249

A Legislative Gaffe

EVEN FOR a government with a growing record of flip-flops on vital measures, this was something special. In an attempt to cut off terrorists' links with Pakistan, the Centre went through a convoluted month-long exercise, to give itself special powers, which ended last fortnight where it should have begun: in consultations with the concerned chief ministers. The thoughtless handling of the move pointlessly embarrassed the prime minister (who must share some of the blame), pushed Punjab's Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala into a corner where he had no option but to oppose it and alienated an opposition which had started off by showing the way to the Government.

It was never very clear what the Centre wanted to do. Parliament's monsoon session had barely opened in July when the Government called the opposition leaders to discuss its proposal to amend the Constitution to give itself special powers to take over the administration in the border districts of Punjab. Madhu Dandavate, Janata Party leader, pointed out to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi that no amendment was necessary, and that the Government already had the power under Article 249 to make laws on state subjects. Rajiv Gandhi accepted the suggestion.

But nobody—neither Rajiv Gandhi nor the Opposition—had reckoned with the storm that the move would raise in Punjab. After six members of Barnala's Cabinet threatened to resign if the move was pushed through, the Punjab Cabinet passed a resolution unanimously opposing it. Charged Agriculture Minister Harbhajan Singh Sandhu: "Buta Singh wants to rule Punjab by proxy." Barnala's opposition was more reasoned. For him, the application of Article 249 to Punjab would not only erode the state's autonomy, an issue dear to the Akalis, but was bound to be counter-productive as it would create a very confusing situation in the security belt.

Barnala also dashed off a letter to Rajiv Gandhi, pointing out the success of the sectors scheme, which the state has implemented under Director-General of Police J.F.Ribeiro—under which scores of hard core terrorists have been caught in the three terrorist-affected districts of Amritsar, Gurdaspur and Kapurthala. Reiterating his demand for 60 more companies of paramilitary forces, Barnala added: "When we have done so much, the invocation of special powers under Article 249 surely amounts to lack of confidence in the state Government's handling of the situation. Ribeiro and his men will feel demoralised."

The thoughtless handling of the controversy pointlessly embarrassed the prime minister and pushed Barnala into a corner.

The Centre now realised that singling out Punjab would be politically unwise so the proposal was floated that the measure should extend to all the four border states. But the Government was still undecided, and so the resolution introduced in Parliament did not specify the areas of the proposed security belt. The Opposition, suspicious that the Government was trying to infringe upon the autonomy of the states, opposed the move but the resolution was passed with the required two-thirds majority in the Rajya Sabha, thanks to the support of the BJP—which has been demanding army rule in Punjab. And Parliament's session was extended so that the bill could be passed.

But confusion still prevailed as it was now pointed out that the Government should consult the border states as several issues needed sorting out. How would the Centre control a vast belt of even 5 km along 2,097 km of the western border? Will the security forces assume civil and police powers of the state and deal with revenue, taxes, and all related issues?

Meanwhile, it became clear that the Government was not even clear about Punjab. Confidentially, it was telling opposition leaders that there is virtually no administration in the border areas, that judges are scared to hear cases, that Barnala's ministers keep interfering—in other words that the Centre has no option but to assume charge. On the other hand, Rajiv Gandhi told his partymen that the terrorists are on the run. Then, again, the Centre did not seem to realise that pushing through the Bill would bring Punjab back to the pre-accord situation: Barnala would resign—as he indeed threatened to do—and President's rule would have to be imposed.

It was only when Ribeiro lent his support to Barnala's objections that the Government decided to stay its hand. Said Ribeiro: "We need to take strong measures to check infiltration from Pakistan but the area need not be centrally administered; there are other ways and means." The Centre, according to informed sources, has all but abandoned its earlier plan; the attempt now is to provide more teeth to the Border Security Force (BSF). The BSF already has the power to search, seize and arrest in a 15-km belt along the Punjab border with Pakistan. Now, it will also be given the power to prosecute, with the CBI doing the investigation. What should have been a basically administrative exercise had become a political issue with the Union Government at loggerheads with Barnala and the Opposition. Rarely has there been a more avoidable controversy.

—GOBIND THUKRAL with AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHARLES SOBHRAJ

A Cool Customer

FOR THE media, Charles Sobhraj is currently off-limits. Security at Tihar Jail is tight and the proceedings of the jail escape case, hearings for which are held intermittently at the capital's Tis Hazari Courts, are virtually in-camera. Nominally, the hearings are open to the public but the security arrangements effectively rule out the entry of all but judicial officials, policemen and lawyers. INDIA TODAY*'s Senior Correspondent* TANIA MIDHA managed to slip into one such hearing last fortnight. Her report:

HE IS leaner than his photographs suggest, he has a bald patch on his head and his complexion is the anemic white of a man who hasn't seen sunlight for weeks. But his hawklike eyes watch every movement in the courtroom. Noticing an alien presence in the room, his eyes cloud with suspicion. But he relaxes immediately as he is told of the identity of the stranger and a smile replaces the frown. Clad in fashionable baggy jeans and a steel-grey shirt with matching sports shoes on surprisingly small feet, Charles Sobhraj is perfectly at ease in the stiffly formal legal surroundings and acknowledges the "namaste sahib" of court workers with the air of a man who commands respect.

He obviously wants to prolong his stay in court—in jail he has to wear fetters all the time. After the main arguments are over, he interjects with three requests calculated to prolong the proceedings. With the confidence born of experience, he seeks the permission of the court to have food in judicial custody, an interview with his counsel Sneh Sengar and permission to inspect the files. Permissions obtained, he has ample time to socialise. Oozing his famous "bikini-killer" charm, he walks across the courtroom to kiss Rajendra Sethia's wife and sister, who have come to meet Sethia.

> "I escaped last time only because they wanted to extradite me to Thailand. I had already told a few guys in jail before escaping that I would be seeing them again soon."
> CHARLES SOBHRAJ

SNEH SENGAR

Letter Bomb

WHEN the authorities of Delhi's Tihar Jail recently intercepted a letter to Charles Sobhraj—disguised as a writ petition—from his lawyer-cum-confidante Sneh Sengar, the investigating officials could hardly believe their luck. The letter, which makes startling revelations and freely discloses the involvement of David Hall, Gordon Greenhall, Rajendra Sethia, his nephew Daljit Singh Bhalla ('HP') and Sengar herself, is by far the most vital piece of evidence in the Sobhraj case.

Sengar hotly denied having written it. "What letter?" she retorted. "It's the work of some crime branch officials trying to injure my reputation." But the Delhi Police are confident that the 26-page letter, though unsigned, is in Sengar's handwriting. Extracts:

"In the court of Shrimati Kanwal Inder, A.C.M.M. Tis Hazari Delhi.
State vs Charles Sobhraj, P.S. Janakpuri, FIR No. 139/86.

Madam,

The applicant most respectfully submits as under—

1. That...received your message—Mr Ohri came this morning (Sunday 6 July) and gave me this letter... Guess what I got?! A boil in my right armpit—I sure do land up with the craziest things in the world!!

2. And you're right about the revenge decision. I took it while I was at Lalitpur—felt so bitter about everything, everyone and hated the whole goddamned world. Those days all I wanted was a Sten-gun and shoot everybody down—especially the S.P. Lalitpur and Kartar Singh, Delhi—but then thought that shooting down would be no revenge—just get their back-bones and cripple them for lives.

My imagination really used to run wild those days—me going around with a Sten-gun—shooting the bastards and for each corpse/injured there would be a slip saying—Sneh's nemesis, or something like that.

... And you must, please, tell me how to deal with the cops—next time anything happens I'll know how to take them for a ride—I have already learned a lot-a LOT-but still need to know more.

...Went househunting for HP today. I still feel guilty—and want to do something for him and Raj. Please tell them that they can ask for anything—anything that I can do for them would enlighten (sic) the burden of my guilt.

...I was doing fine till this 24,000/- came up ...I was thinking I would tell them that I gave the money to Gordon to buy me clothes and a camera from London.

...There was one (officer) in particular who was specially nice—Surjeet

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After exchanging pleasantries, Sobhraj turns his attention to the chicken biryani brought for him in a polythene bag while an angry Sneh Sengar argues heatedly with him. Calmly, Sobhraj pacifies Sengar with a few words while absent-mindedly toying with the neck of the chicken. As a constable gruffly reminds him of the forgotten food he shoos him away. Another man hovering around is sent off for a Limca.

Clearly, Sobhraj's escape from Tihar jail earlier this year and his re-arrest in Goa have done nothing to dampen his spirits. Last fortnight, the interception of a 26-page letter (see box) addressed to Sobhraj by friend and legal adviser Sneh Sengar made it amply clear that Sobhraj was back to the essential business of winning over officials. The letter was confiscated when R.K. Sharma, another of Sobhraj's lawyers, was trying to sneak it into the jail. The lawyer had first tried to contact Mahabir Singh, assistant jail superintendent, believed to be sympathetic to Sobhraj, to take the letter in. Not finding Singh at home, he decided to take the risk himself and was caught by Deputy Jail Superintendent U.K.S. Chauhan. Sharma has since been disallowed from meeting his client in jail, and Singh has been transferred to another section of the jail.

Significantly, this episode followed the confiscation of a coded letter from David Hall, Sobhraj's accomplice in the escape, to his wife in London asking her to get in touch with the international gunrunner and narcotics dealer, Gordon Greenhall, who is known to have helped Sobhraj and Hall in their jailbreak. Only days earlier, a slip had been found in the pocket of one of Sobhraj's lawyers with a cryptic one-line message: "Gordon is in Malta". And to add to the insomnia of investigating officials, several maps and sketches of Tihar jail were recovered from Hall's cell.

Asked about these developments and the police claims that they had busted a second escape attempt, an unfazed and grinning Sobhraj said to INDIA TODAY: "It's all bullshit. I escaped last time only because they wanted to expatriate (extradite) me to Thailand. They can't do that if they have a case against me here. I had already told a few guys in jail before escaping that I would be seeing them again soon."

In the meantime, the jailbreak case charts its own lackadaisical course. While his lawyers are still arguing heatedly against their being denied the prosecution files by the police, for Sobhraj these hearings are a welcome break from the rigours of Tihar Jail. Since his re-arrest, Sobhraj and David Hall have been made to wear prominent red clothes in prison (in accor-

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

Sobhraj being brought to Tis Hazari courts: confident

Sengar: caught in the act?

Singh. You know when they searched my room (I was under arrest) there was a knife in my room which actually David and Gordon used to carry with them...when Surjeet Singh saw it he quickly put it under some paper and clothes without anyone having noticed it—otherwise I would have been in for the Arms Act too.

I wanted to ring up Dibang and ask who all had been interrogated and what all they said so that there wouldn't be any contradiction...

About K.C.—what she did ammounted to a breach of trust...I never thought of her as a nice person.

...8 pm: Have bought 8 Milkmaids, coffee and yesterday had bought two shirts, 4 sardines and 4 tuna. Sorry—no jeans. Looked into many shops, couldn't find a decent one—even the shirts are not very good—that shop which sells imported shirts and jeans is near the university.

...I donno who all the cops had been interrogating but they know quite a lot—Raghubir Singh during my interrogation said that ..."I know that he's going to contact you and call you abroad, that's why he got a passport for you and he must have left money also with you or with somebody for you. And I know that you'll go join him wherever he is ..." And I replied "...if there's any such contact I'll let you know and you can arrest him." (Had to say that—there was no option.) How did they know so much? Did you leave any letters of Carole or Vaishali about me—her letters were seized from Hyderabad. Maybe that's what gave them so much.

... So happy to know you're getting all the food and feeling better. Will get more tomorrow and send through Sharma. Please keep eating....You think there's any risk involved—what I was thinking that each time I'd buy the stuff from different shops and not the ones which I go to regularly—they all know me so well, their favourite customer (because I buy so much).

...Please keep destroying my letters. I always destroy yours, take down the important things and destroy—you must also destroy them—okay.

...And don't give your real signature at the back of the envelope—use your Chinese one and don't (please) address me as Mr S. Sengar."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My bank? Catholic Syrian!"

Now the pride in your voice adds strength to our numbers

Performance 1985

Deposits : Rs.225 crores
Advances : Rs.130 crores

1985 It's been another good year. Catholic Syrian Bank has topped 1984 results as the growth momentum continues.

The bank started functioning from its new corporate headquarters in Trichur.

Deposits have moved upto Rs. 225 crores. Advances have moved upto Rs. 130 crores.

The 1985 Business Standard study has revealed interesting features.

The performance of Catholic Syrian Bank in the area of social priority registered high growth. Catholic Syrian ranked first among private sector banks in social priority.

Numbers however are not the only way to measure performance. "My bank? Catholic Syrian!" said with a hint of pride is as good a measure.

Catholic Syrian Bank

The Catholic Syrian Bank Limited
H.O. : St. Mary's College Road
P.B. No. 502. Trichur 680 020.

OBM 9541 R

CC-0: In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

dance with the jail manual) and kept in solitary confinement with minimal movement outside. Officially, he cannot bring in food and clothes from private sources, but going by Sengar's letter he is obviously getting both food and clothes.

Sobhraj is contesting each of the jail's restrictions in court, meticulously writing each petition in his own hand, quoting from innumerable earlier court judgements to show that the treatment meted out to him is against the jail rules and far worse than the treatment given to the others who had escaped with him.

Besides Hall and the seven others who escaped with Sobhraj, also implicated in the conspiracy are Rajendra Sethia and his nephew, Daljeet Singh Bhalla, better known as Happy. Sethia has been accused of making an advance payment of $ 20,000 to Gordon Greenhall through Charles Sobhraj for eliminating Swami Satsangi, former assistant manager in Punjab National Bank in London and one of the key witnesses in the Sethia case. With the recovery of a photograph of a slip of paper from the negatives of David Hall's camera saying: "Please pay to the bearer of the letter $ 20,000, many thanks, Raj", the police are confident of proving Sethia's involvement in the controversy. If convicted in this case, Sethia could be jailed for up to seven years as co-conspirator, far more than the maximum of two years under his original case of defrauding the banks.

The Sobhraj case, which involves not just the jailbreak but also offences under the Arms Act and the Narcotics Act, could take years before completion. Unless the Government decides to withdraw the case altogether, his extradition to Thailand, where five murder cases are hanging over his head, will have to wait. And if the wily Sobhraj is again up to his old tricks, the authorities cannot afford to let him gain the upper hand again.

DELHI HIGH COURT

Legal Storm

THE APPOINTMENT of Justice T.P.S. Chawla to the office of the chief justice of the Delhi High Court should have been a formality. The Government's guidelines say that the senior-most judge of a high court will be elevated to the high office should he have less than a year to go, which held true for Justice Chawla. Rajinder Sachar and Dalip Kapur, the two previous chief justices, had stints in office on the same counts.

But when, last fortnight, the Law Ministry merely appointed Chawla as "acting" chief justice, lawyers of the 1,200-strong Delhi High Court Bar Association went on an indefinite strike. They were joined for a day by lawyers of all other courts in Delhi, making it the first time when work stopped in all the capital's courts.

The Government's move drew condemnation all-round. The meeting of the Supreme Court Bar Association, which agreed to join the strike, was presided over by Congress(I) MP Murli C. Bhandare, who said later: "I cannot shut my eyes to the strong resentment on this issue." Added R.S. Narula, former chief justice of Punjab: "There can be no legal or moral justification of the decision."

But Union Law Minister Asoke Sen cited the case of four high courts where acting chief justices had functioned for up to 11 months and maintained: "There is no policy that the Government must appoint a chief justice the day the previous one retires. The strike is an attempt to browbeat the Government about a sensitive appointment."

The confrontation had been brewing. Earlier last month, when sessions judge Mahesh Chandra, who decided the Indira Gandhi assassination case in favour of the Government, was appointed a judge of the Delhi High Court superseding two others, lawyers at the sessions courts had gone on strike. Even the high court strike, lawyers say, was forced upon them when they realised that factors other than merit were at work. Chief Justice P.N. Bhagwati, Asoke Sen and his deputy, H.R. Bharadwaj, they say, told them that they had opined that Justice Chawla should be appointed the chief justice. Sen refused to confirm or deny the assertion, saying: "Only Parliament can question the Government's prerogative in such matters."

Deserted premises of the Delhi High Court: condemnation

RANJAN BASU

The lawyers think that the real reason for the move is the apprehensions in the camp of a senior cabinet minister, known to be in the inner circle of Rajiv Gandhi's advisers, whose son has reportedly been named in an ongoing inquiry into a shady land deal with a former registrar of the high court. With such a sensitive matter likely to come up before the chief justice for framing of charges, the Government, say the lawyers, does not want to take a chance with an upright judge like Chawla. Ironically enough, it was Justice Chawla who had quashed the Shah Commission's proceedings against Mrs Gandhi.

Justice Chawla registered his protest in his own dignified way: declining to take oath, refusing to sit in Court Number 1, declining security and the use of the chief justice's car. With the storm showing no sign of abating, it almost seemed that the Government wanted a return to the 1980-81 days of confrontation between itself and the legal profession.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS (INDIRA GANDHI)

Rebel Rousing

Photographs by MUSHTAQ AHMED

BANGALORE's famous 'glass house' in the middle of the 240-acre Lal Bagh is usually reserved for horticultural shows. Last fortnight, there was quite a variety of colourful foliage on view, except that it had nothing to do with horticulture. The culture on display was what the conveners claim is the 'real' Congress culture, symbolised by the launching of a new political party by former Karnataka chief minister Ramarao Gundu Rao.

In fact, the venue—where the historic split in the Congress took place in 1969—was so important for the expelled Congress(I) leader that he postponed his convention by two weeks because of a pre-scheduled horticultural show. Ever the consummate showman, Gundu Rao performed to expectations. Amid invocations from the Vedas, the Koran and the Bible, whistles and catcalls and deafening oratory, Gundu Rao launched the Indian National Congress (Indira Gandhi) from a heavily flower-bedecked dais to the cheers of a crowd of 12,000, nearly twice the rated capacity of the glass-ceilinged building.

In fact, if the number of people present and their show of enthusiasm are any indication of popular support, Gundu Rao and his comrade in exile, Pranab Mukherjee, have much to crow about. Ten days before Rao's tamasha, Mukherjee held his own state-level convention of supporters at Calcutta's impressive Netaji Indoor Stadium at which Rao was a star invitee just like Mukherjee was in Bangalore. The Netaji Stadium was jampacked with over 12,000 youthful and wildly enthusiastic supporters who gave Mukherjee a standing ovation as he declared: "They can expel me from the party but nobody can snatch the Congress flag from me."

Even in Bangalore, the refrain was the same—they will prove to the people that they, and not Rajiv Gandhi's Congress(I), are the "real" Congress. In his hour-long harangue, Gundu Rao not only asked President Zail Singh to sack the Rajiv Gandhi Government for destroying the country, he also called on all "real" Congressmen to defeat the nakli (fake) Congress in the coming local body elections in the state. Declared Rao dramatically: "Indira's soul is stirring in the grave at what is happening. She is our leader, dead or alive." He had to cut his speech short because of a stampede created by the late arrival of Mukherjee who was delayed at a lunch he was having, significantly enough, with Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde.

Rao announcing the party (above); with Mukherjee and other rebels: buoyant in defiance

Mukherjee and Rao have yet to spell out their strategy but it is clear that they plan to build up their support from the grassroots level, realising that there is little chance of Congress(I) leaders of any note crossing over to them. Conventions, like the one held at Calcutta, are intended not only to demonstrate their growing support but also to build an organisational framework to lean on. In the meanwhile, they will continue to hobnob with their erstwhile detractors. Significantly, Rao said nothing against the Janata Party when not too long ago he was lashing out at Hegde.

Of the two, Mukherjee seems to be going about his task more methodically. He has addressed over 150 public meetings in the last three months, criticising Rajiv and the faction-ridden state unit, and claims to have won over at least half of West Bengal's Congress(I) supporters. Before the next Assembly elections, scheduled for February, he hopes to win over as much as 80 per cent of Congress(I) workers. On the other hand, while Rao is keen on sabotaging the Congress(I)'s chances in the coming elections to the zilla parishads and mandal panchayats, how he will find nearly 57,000 candidates is not clear.

Congress(I) leaders, on their part, claim not to be one bit worried. Asked to comment, Vice-President Arjun Singh said acidly: "They need no comment because they are political nonentities." Undeniably, however, the party units in both states are in turmoil. While 13 out of 19 office-bearers of the West Bengal PCC(I) have resigned en masse, the Karnataka PCC(I) executive committee is yet to be formed and a replacement to be found for S. Bangarappa as the leader of the opposition in the Assembly. Party leader M. Veerappa Moily, however, predicted: "What Gundu Rao has launched is a ship without a rudder and it can only sink." For the moment, however, the ship seems to be forging defiantly ahead at full steam even though it may be headed for an unknown port.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD and INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How safe is the air you breathe in?

TRION
AIR
CLEANER

Invisible air-borne pollutants... dust, smoke, bacteria, pollen etc. cause and aggravate ailments like asthma, hay fever, allergy and T.B.

Trion Air Cleaner traps almost all pollutants even as minute as 0.01 microns. Ensuring absolutely clean and fresh air.

Made in collaboration with Trion Inc., U.S.A.

For more details, write to or contact:

TRION

TRION INDIA LIMITED

7/22 Kirti Nagar Industrial Area,
New Delhi-110015. Tele: 531053 - 531054 - 5417073
Cable: FREEZEKING Telex: 3238

Corcom/FI/0586

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MIZORAM

The Other War

MIZORAM'S political wheel came full circle last fortnight with former underground rebel leader Laldenga taking over as the chief minister. But the significance of the change-over extends beyond that formality. When, standing solemnly at attention, flanked by three ministerial colleagues, Laldenga swore to abide by the Indian Constitution and uphold the unity and integrity of the country, it marked the beginning of a new and turbulent era in Mizoram politics. And nobody knows this better than the chief minister.

Later, addressing the 500-odd Mizo National Front (MNF) returnees bivouacked at the Remna camp on the outskirts of Aizawl, Laldenga explained: "You are no longer soldiers. Now you are political workers facing a task that is as demanding as fighting." Laldenga's allusion was clear: the MNF has a formidable political battle on hand against the Congress(I) and Brigadier T. Sailo's People's Conference (PC)—both contenders for the power that Laldenga now wields. Said Deputy Chief Minister, Lalthanhawla, chief minister in the earlier Congress(I) ministry: "I stepped down to bring peace and not because I consider Laldenga to be the sole leader of the Mizos. In the next elections we intend to fight and defeat him."

The political accord between the Congress(I) high command and the MNF has only promised Laldenga chief ministership in an interim coalition ministry for six months. These six months could prove to be his Waterloo. Five of the nine ministers are from the Congress(I) and, given their antagonism, they could easily make Laldenga ineffective. State Congress(I) leaders are bent on getting even with Laldenga who, they believe, has humiliated them in the worst possible way. Recalled a Congress(I) minister: "The very first time Laldenga came to Mizoram after the accord he insulted us by claiming that we were like Aaron of the Old Testament who ruled with false gods while the true leader Moses was away.

However, Laldenga continues to ride the crest of the euphoria caused by the returning guerrillas, and is attracting fringe political parties and their leaders. Last fortnight, the Mizo Peace Forum and the Mizo Convention, two parties that have no representatives in the 30-member Mizoram Assembly, elected to join the MNF. Two MLA's, Rochunga Ralte of the Mizo National Union Party and Lalwawia, an independent, also crossed over to become the first MNF legislators in the state Assembly. "I hope this is only the beginning," said Laldenga, aware that euphoria is no substitute for organised support.

Laldenga (left) with Lalthanhawla

In fact, Laldenga's popularity is far from universal. A large chunk of the 1,500-odd former MNF men who came overground before the accord because of differences with Laldenga remain opposed to him. Says Bualranga, one of the 'Blue Group' who wanted to come to terms with the Centre after the creation of Bangladesh and who now runs a book shop in Aizawl: "The Mizo accord is proof that Laldenga's principal motivation in leading the insurgency was personal ambition." Others, like Vanlalaya, whose father was one of the 160-odd Mizos killed by the MNF, have more personal reasons for hating him. When Laldenga's MNF guerrillas brought along coffins of their dead comrades to July's surrender, Vanlalaya had asked bitterly: "Who will bring back my poor father's bones?"

The MNF has a battle on hand against the Congress(I) and Sailo's People's Conference—both contenders for the power that Laldenga now wields.

Laldenga's other formidable challenge comes from Sailo, who had broken the MNF's back by engineering a major surrender in 1979. In an attempt to cash in on the prevailing sentiment in favour of regionalism, the PC—which has eight MLA's in the present Assembly—has taken up Laldenga's original demand for Greater Mizoram. Sailo says by signing the Mizo accord Laldenga has formally given up the demand though Laldenga maintains that it has only been kept in abeyance, not abandoned.

Lalthanhawla expects that it will be the Congress(I) that emerges the winner in the next elections on the nationalist vote while the PC and the MNF fight over the regionalist vote. But whatever the outcome of the political battles launched by the implementation of the accord, it is certain that Laldenga will never return to the politics of insurgency. Says he: "If I ever take to arms again it will only be to defend the integrity and unity of the nation." The wheel has indeed come full circle and Laldenga's response to the political challenges that confront him will be crucial for the immediate future of Mizoram.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Aizawl

Sailo: formidable challenger

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'When I think of the good things in life, there's one I just cannot leave out.'

'When I look back and think about things life has give me, I feel really grateful. A happy childhood, the best possible education, fame on the cricket field, an understanding wife, lovely children...

Yet, just when I decide I've seen it all, life loves to spring surprises on me. It did that some time ago. By introducing me to Gwalior Suiting. Their Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab ranges are a perfectionist's dream. I immediately added Gwalior Suiting to my list of the good things in life. It's one suiting I recommend without hesitation to every man who cares about what he wears.'

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

MAPP-GR-88-115

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We never do.

The nicest people do their own thing in restful comfort at the Taj Mahal Hotel, New Delhi.

Shyam Benegal
Pierre Cardin
James Coburn
Walter Cronkite
Shashi Kapoor
Yves St. Laurent
Lata Mangeshkar
Zubin Mehta
Issey Miyake
Robert McNamara
Jacqueline Onassis
Nani Palkhiwala
Rekha
Zandra Rhodes
David Rockefeller
Salman Rushdie
Ravi Shankar
Omar Sharif
Lord Snowdon
Peter Ustinov

Not forgetting Master Ranjit Lall, all of eight years old, who was met at the airport last week, escorted to his parents' suite at the hotel, and presented with a reviving triple-decker chocolate sundae.

Why the red carpet?

Between friends no other colour will do.

THE TAJ MAHAL HOTEL
NEW DELHI

THE TAJ GROUP OF HOTELS

Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

softwear by dinesh

and designs are computer matche
From the finest checks to pin-stripes from cavalry twills to striking plains fashion is closely linked to comfort Dinesh. Like the occasion, it stays in memory rest/86/SDM/407

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

designs programmed for fashio

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Panic Ban

THE ARWAL massacre in April this year returned to haunt Bihar's Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey last fortnight, compelling him to take measures which turned Patna into a police fortress, antagonised several organisations with mass support among the landless and the poor and drew criticism from a powerful section of his partymen.

Dubey's action in banning the Mazdoor Kisan Sangram Samiti (MKSS)—whose activities in the Arwal area had resulted in the gunning down of 22 villagers there—on the eve of a gherao of the legislature by the Arwal Jansanhar Virodhi Sangarsh Morcha (anti-Arwal massacre front) was followed by a ban on landlords' armies who have long been ranged against the MKSS. The decisions, both panic responses, antagonised political opinion and raised doubts about Dubey's grip on Bihar.

As people moved into Patna to participate in the August 21 gherao, 12 companies of the Bihar police along with three companies of the CRPF sent by the Centre, were deployed to forcibly prevent people from entering Patna. A 70,000 strong morcha was stopped, but Home Commissioner B.K. Singh put the figure at 17,000. The ailing former Naxalite leader Nagabhushan Patnaik, now chairman of Morcha-constituent Indian Peoples' Front (IPF), managed to slip through and lead a group of 300 supporters towards the secretariat but was lathi-charged and arrested. Said Dubey : "I congratulate the people for ignoring such an anti-democratic call." But leader of the Opposition Karpoori Thakur charged: "The Dubey Government has proved that it can go to any length to suppress the voice of the poor."

The Bihar Government has been taking a tough stand on the Arwal massacre but the emergence of the morcha which contains many militant groups, panicked the state Government. Apart from the MKSS and the IPF, there are 12 other organisations which comprise the morcha. The Government took a sudden decision to ban the MKSS four days ahead of the gherao, hoping to demoralise them. The ban drew immediate criticism. Said former chief minister Jagannath Mishra: "It does not seem a well-considered political decision."

The MKSS, which has been fighting to get rights for the landless promised by the Government in various poverty-alleviation programmes, has long been the target of the police and the senas. After the Arwal massacre the Bihar Government had described the MKSS as "an extremist faction" and attributed nearly 200 murders, a series of dacoities in the south-central region of the state to it and its Lal Sena. But Dr Vinayan, who launched the MKSS in 1981 with the slogan of 'Jote boye kate dhan, khet ka malik wahi kisan' (the peasant who sows, tills and harvests the land is its real owner), dismissed all the charges as "totally fabricated". "The MKSS has no squads. It is an open, peaceful organisation creating a sense of self-confidence and awareness among the poor," he asserted.

As its influence spread from Jehanabad to the districts of Gaya, Patna, Rohtas, Beguserai, Palamau and Aurangabad, the landlords responded with a host of senas, the most aggressive being the Lorik Sena, Bramharshi Sena and Bhoomi Sena. At least one sena had the support of a powerful minister in Dubey's cabinet, as a CID report stated and Dubey later confirmed to the Centre. The area has since become a veritable battle ground.

With both sides to blame, Dubey was pressurised to ban the senas as well. Initially he disagreed, claiming that the senas were not organised associations, but fearing trouble in the legislature, he finally ordered the ban on four —the Bhoomi Sena, Lorik Sena, Bramharshi Sena and Hari Sena, and Lal Sena of the Naxalites.

But it was soon clear that Dubey's action had pleased nobody. Opposition leaders, Congress(I) dissidents and Dr Vinayan agreed that the ban order on the landlords' senas was an eyewash. Said the CPI(ML) MLA Umadhar Singh: "Had the Government been sincere and honest it would have immediately arrested the known leaders of these senas." The move also upset the 'Jehanabad lobby' of nine MLA's who have supported Dubey in the CLP(I) because he has been soft on the senas.

Nor has the ban broken the spirit of the MKSS, which intends to challenge the ban in court. Says Vinayan: "The whole purpose of the Government move is to force us to go underground but we are not prepared to oblige the Government." With the Opposition and mass organisations regrouping against the Dubey Government, public sentiment ranged against him and party dissidents pressing for a change in leadership, Dubey's position was more precarious than at any time in his 17-month-long stewardship of the state.

—FARZAND AHMED

Dubey's decision to ban the MKSS and the landlords' armies raised fresh doubts about his grip on the state.

Photographs by KRISHNA MURARI KISHAN

Arwal massacre demonstrators in Patna: burning issue

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA FLOODS

A Devastating Deluge

THE DEVASTATING deluge came after three years of distressing drought. And in its wake, the waters of the Godavari, glorified as placid and benign in Telugu literature, unleashed unprecedented havoc on their way to the Bay of Bengal. The death toll of 250-odd people in the freak floods that crippled Andhra Pradesh last fortnight does not convey the full nature of the catastrophe. The sudden rush of water through the Godavari and its distributaries discharged more than 10 times the designed flow through the 5,226 km of canals in the delta, damaged or destroyed 28 lakh acres of cropland, brought down 1.6 lakh houses and displaced over 10 lakh people. The coastal areas of Andhra Pradesh are no stranger to natural disasters—the 1977 cyclone took over 10,000 lives—but the sheer scale of devastation has not been matched by any calamity in this century.

Though Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao rashly put the total loss at Rs 880 crore, the fact is that the exact figure is still being totalled and will be available only in the first week of this month. But that the damage has been extensive was conceded even by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, who sanctioned Rs 30 crore for relief measures at the end of a day's survey.

More than anything else, Andhra Pradesh was a victim of its topography. Seventy-six per cent of the Godavari's catchment area is in Maharasthra, Madhya Pradesh and Orissa and, though the river flows for 1,465 km, its three principal tributaries—Pranahita, Indravati and Sabari—empty into it over its last 473 km, all in Andhra Pradesh. The floods were largely caused by unprecedented heavy rainfall in the catchment area of the Godavari and its tributaries. And there is no way of holding back the water in this stretch of the river; the only dam is at Sriramsagar, 302 km upstream of the Godavari's confluence with the Pranahita.

Matters were made worse by unusually heavy rain in the Godavari delta itself: in three days ending August 13, the rainfall was over 30 cm against the normal average of 19 cm for the whole month in the west Godavari district and 38 cm against the monthly average of 17 cm in the east Godavari district. The net result was that the Godavari rose to an unprecedented 55.65 ft at Bhadrachalam, the highest in 133 years of recorded flows and 6.9 ft. above the danger level. The Dowlaiswaram barrage on the Godavari near Rajahmundry, for example, was designed to hold a flow of 32.3 lakh cusecs; instead it held over 35 lakh cusecs on August 16. As a result, the Vijjeswaram canal, which leads off downstream and was designed to carry 3,000 cusecs, was suddenly filled with 50,000 to 60,000 cusecs of water, leading to the flooding of Nidadavolu, Tanuku and Bhimavaram towns. Rajahmundry, the most populous town in the Godavari delta (pop: 2 lakh), was saved by an upriver breach at Polavaram, 40 km from the town, which let out water into the nearby fields. But residents of over 2000 villages in the delta were not so lucky; 758 of them were marooned for as many as 10 days.

Map by B.K. SHARMA

With 2000 villages inundated, 28 lakh acres of cropland destroyed and one million people rendered homeless, the damage in the Andhra floods has been unmatched in this century.

Predictably, the state Government was totally unprepared to deal with the calamity. Irrigation Minister K.E. Krishnamurthy threw up his hands and asked: "When the flow is unpredictable how can one expect the old canal bunds and lock chambers to remain intact?" But the administration did perform creditably in giving timely flood warnings, which helped to arrange evacuation in time and reducing the loss of human lives. In fact, the people of east Godavari district did not need any warning; they knew that danger was approaching when the old Dowlaiswaram barrage was breached in July. Their worst fears were confirmed when, on August 16, the statue of Sir Arthur Cotton which graces the new Dowlaiswaram barrage, situated 40 metres upstream from the old one, was washed away. Admitted District Collector M.V.P.C. Sastry: "When this news spread, people thought it was all over." Sir Arthur, who designed the delta's canal system, is almost revered in the region and his photograph can be found in the houses of most farmers in the area.

Relief operations were mounted quickly enough with the armed forces and volunteers distinguishing themselves. Navy and air force helicopters operated from dawn to dusk from three make-shift helipads at Eluru, Kothagudem and Rajahmundry. Batches of 250 prisoners in the sprawling Central Jail in Rajahmundry cooked and packed pulihora (a tamarind and rice mix) through the night so that the helicopters could drop the food packets the next day. Said lifer Raja Reddy: "We cannot describe the satisfaction that it gives us to help the hungry from inside a jail." Batches of three ham radio operators stationed themselves in the secretariat in Hyderabad, in district collectorates and in tiny towns to keep communication lines alive.

But the Government's relief effort

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by K. RAMESH

Scenes of devastation in the Godavari delta: freak floods lacked proper planning, direction or co-ordination. The revenue administration assigned the task of relief to mandal revenue officers but with staffs of less than 10 people the mandals naturally could not cope with the task. Outside the office of the mandal revenue officer in Bhimavaram stood an angry crowd chanting: "We want food. We want water." Said a distraught MP from Narsapur, Vijay Kumar Raju, who was stranded at Bhimavaram: "Nobody is willing to take responsibility. I spent a whole night looking for police constables because I heard that some villagers would try to breach canal bunds which would have forced water into all parts of Bhimavaram."

Even intrepid villagers who set out to organise relief were disappointed with the official response. Said A. Ramakrishna Raju, a fish farmer of Korukullu, a marooned village near Bhimavaram: "I had to wait for six hours to get the stock of anti-cholera vaccine though a doctor in the village was willing to give the shots if I could fetch it from the mandal office." And pastor Srinivasa Rao of Vissakoderu village said wryly: "Even in such a tragic situation we are asked to run from pillar to post. There is no help reaching our village and when I went to Bhimavaram I was asked to go to my mandal headquarters Palakoderu, which is further away and under water. Can help in times of distress be made a routine official exercise?"

The Government is bound to face more flak from the farmers in the coming weeks about the poor maintenance of the canals and the delay in the modernisation plans of the delta system. A worried Rama Rao has already asked ex-chief secretary A. Krishnaswamy to draw up a plan to repair the canals so that water for irrigation can be reached to all areas in time for the second crop, sowing for which starts next month.

But for the moment, Rama Rao's concern is to mollify the powerful lobby of the delta's farmers. The Godavari delta accounts for about half the 25 lakh tonnes of paddy procured for the public distribution system and the chief minister's successful scheme of supplying rice at Rs 2 a kg to the poor. Unless he can restore confidence in them by making sure that repairs to the irrigation system area are carried out quickly, Andhra Pradesh's food output and Rama Rao's populist programme of distributing rice are both in for a severe setback.

—AMARNATH K. MENON in Rajahmundry

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by

PAKISTAN

A War of Nerves

FOR FOUR months her steel grey Mitsubishi Pajero jeep had become a symbol of her ruthless march to power or martyrdom, a shining new political bandwagon on which millions battled for a foothold as she traversed the country delivering just one relentless slogan in her shrill voice: "General Zia jawe, jawe, jawe." (Zia should go). But last fortnight, the band was on the run, chased by an armada of police vehicles as the Government opted to crack down on Benazir Bhutto who upped the stakes by choosing the path of direct confrontation on August 14, Pakistan Independence Day.

For three hours, their modest Suzukis had failed to catch up with her as she played hide-and-seek with the pursuing police. And she could hardly have found a better hide-out than her traditional stronghold of Lyari, the sprawling Karachi ghetto notorious for the volatile tempers of its inhabitants who had, since the previous night, been fighting pitched battles with the police. The throng of 20,000 was not about to give her up to the police so easily. And as tear-gas and lathi charge failed to break the surging crowd's resolve, Benazir triumphantly drove back home to be arrested at the place and time of her choosing: during a press conference at 70, Clifton, the Bhutto family's retreat in Karachi's exclusive beach side locality.

Using every bit of the penchant for the theatrical that she has inherited from her father—former prime minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto who was executed on Zia's orders in 1979—she declared, before boarding the police car on way to the Landhi jail outside Karachi which is meant for juvenile delinquents: "To go to jail is a matter of pride for me. This has exposed to the world the kind of democracy that prevails in Pakistan." The arrest was just the spark needed to ignite pent up frustrations in large parts of the country, leading to rioting in both Karachi and Lahore and then, as the army moved in, resulting in persistent violence in Sind, the stronghold of the Bhutto family.

In April, shortly after Benazir had returned from exile to a tumultuous welcome by millions, Zia had sarcastically remarked: "This is nothing serious, just a small spillover because we've taken the lid off the boiling pot" (by lifting martial law). The spillover was now threatening to become Zia's greatest challenge since he began to liberalise the political system in the country a couple of years ago.

As it often does in Pakistan, the violence began at Lyari where mobs attacked the police and soon the narrow, congested streets were littered with burnt-out shells of vehicles, debris of property destroyed in rioting and at least five bodies. Many of the rioters shouted "Wazir-e-azam (prime minister) Benazir Zindabad", as they threw brickbats at the police.

If Lyari was a microcosm of the swelling wave of resentment all over the country, Lahore, the nucleus of all power in Punjabi-dominated Pakistan politics, threatened at one stage to return to the kind of pyromania that saw the back of Bhutto a decade ago. The historic walled city, which has seen many political battles, was the scene of the worst rioting that day. For over four hours the police and

Benazir on her anti-Zia campaign; and (right) demonstrators being arrested

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

and eGangotri

Photographs by JAY ULLAL

supporters of the opposition alliance, the Movement for the Restoration of Democracy (MRD), fought it out, leaving seven dead and many injured. It was the worst incidence of violence in the Punjab since the imposition of Martial Law in 1977.

But as often happens in Pakistan, the trouble soon shifted to Sind where long-standing ethnic frustrations and regionalistic aspirations came to the fore as thousands battled with the police and the army even in small towns. In the small town of Tando Adam, 200 km from Karachi, masked, hidden snipers even fired at police patrols killing at least two policemen. Consternation in Islamabad was immediate as a company of the Baluch Regiment moved in. Slowly but surely, Junejo's Government was collecting the courage to call out the army in strength to keep law and order, an action which quickly put paid to the agitators' hopes that the army would turn against Zia when the final crunch came.

As the violence abated in the Punjab however, Zia's supporters insisted that the agitation was bound to be a short-lived one. But Sind was a different matter altogether. Armed men stalked the highways at night, disrupting traffic and attacked government installations even by day. Also, rather significantly, in Sind the trouble spread from the towns to the villages. Says Fazal Rahu, senior vice-president of the newly-formed Awami National Party: "Undeclared curfew is in force in most of rural Sind. People are arrested when they go out of their houses. The law enforcing agencies are behaving as if they are in an alien territory."

The administration which had treaded fairly softly in the Punjab (apart from the first day of killings in Lahore), struck with a vengeance in Sind. Demonstrators were not only indiscriminately fired upon, but also humiliated. Women and children were arrested and tortured. There were also reports of pregnant women being dragged on to the roads.

IN SIND the wounds of the 1983 movement which was brutally crushed by the military government (killing over a thousand people) are still fresh. Besides, the hanging of Zulfikar Ali Bhutto and economic deprivation have all combined to make the situation politically volatile. The 1983 movement left a deep scar on the minds of younger Sindhis who, short of jobs, money and social opportunity, easily take to militancy.

The renewed repression in Sind also revived the chronic alienation. "The very fact that the army has been stationed throughout the province is proof that Sind is being treated on a different level. Law enforcing agencies have unleashed a reign of terror on the people of Sind," says Moulana Shah Mohammed Amroti, the acting convenor of the MRD, the multi-party anti-Zia political group spearheaded by Benazir Bhutto's Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP).

The showdown began to build in right earnest on August 12 when Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Junejo, who is also president of the official Muslim League, cancelled his party meeting scheduled for Independence Day and also banned all public gatherings planned for August 14. But with the opposition unrelenting he decided to strike. The midnight knock woke up most of the mainline leaders of the MRD who were unceremoniously bundled off to prison. Over the next two days,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

DESIGN AND NIKY TASHA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Take a technologist, an industrial designer and a panel of consumers.
Give them the subject of "Television and the Viewer."
And give them 100 days—to search, innovate and develop.
The result is a new idea in television design, integrating Sight, Sound and Touch in a unique televiewing experience.

NIKY TASHA
PRESENTS

THE TRIPLE SENSE SERIES

SIGHT ADVANCED DIGITAL TECHNOLOGY

Beyond the classic looks, beyond the modern, vertical format, the NT 30X and NT 15X are equipped with the latest Digital Tuning and Memory Systems.

The result is locked-in, drift-free reception and a high-resolution picture, rich and vibrant in colour.

SOUND SYNTHESISED STEREO

Design breeds another first—twin detachable column speakers for synthesised stereo sound, plus a third built-in speaker. Full-bodied sound of 32 watts, unmatched by any other TV.

And another exclusive feature—individual Treble, Bass and Loudness controls for custom-made sound.

TOUCH MEMBRANE-ACTIVATED REMOTE

The first of its kind. The infra-red, membrane-activated remote incorporates total capability—colour, brightness, contrast, programme selection, volume, mute, standby on/off, even an 'Ideal' memory recall. Absolute command at your finger tips.

NIKY TASHA
It's a whole generation ahead.

NT 30X TWIN SPEAKERS

NT 15X BUILT-IN SINGLE SPEAKER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Government made more preventive detentions in Punjab and Sind than had ever been done before.

Blank detention orders were issued to local officials and arrests were made even without warrants. The short period of a democratic facade seems to have come to an end. The crackdown brought immediate protest from even Amnesty International which sent a cable to Junejo expressing concern at the detentions and the reversal of the liberalisation process which had begun in the country after the lifting of martial law.

For the Junejo Government, which came into power as a result of the partyless elections of February 1985, it was the moment of truth. Tauntingly, even Benazir had remarked: "General Zia has left for Haj along with his family, leaving the rest to be done by Mr Junejo, but there is no stopping the popular storm."

While the police and the army battled with the obdurate protest in Sind, Zia, who returned home last fortnight, could seek satisfaction in the fact that the immediate trouble had seemingly blown over. "The present situation is regrettable but not serious," he told a Saudi newspaper and added: "Miss Bhutto wants power and is in a hurry. But she has to play according to the rules of the political game which includes general elections in 1990."

IF ZIA felt smug and secure it is because in Pakistani power projections whatever happens in Sind, Baluchistan or the North-West Frontier Province, the power remains in the hands of whoever controls Punjab. "It is the same old story again," says veteran Pakistan-watcher Kuldip Nayar, adding: "Punjab has again let her down."

The fundamental contradictions which arise partly from the PPP's befuddled ideology and partly from the quixotic traits in the Bhutto way of functioning play a crucial role in Punjab. The upper class Punjabi does not want change. The economy seems to be flush, the shops are full of goodies and despite high prices he has more money than he can spend. The PPP's rhetoric is left-of-centre and makes the prosperous Punjabi elite apprehensive. "There are two faces of Punjab—the ugly face of the intolerant soldiers of the status quo, and the serene face of the mass that has accepted the rationale for change," says I.A. Rahman, a prominent intellectual.

Conversely, the poorer masses are for change and support the PPP but they have no leader to orchestrate their voice. The lack of an able deputy in Punjab is Benazir's major problem. With the departure of the "uncles"—Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi and Ghulam Mustafa Khar from her party—she has no back-up.

Benazir at her Clifton house before being arrested

Another problem is that nine years of martial law has emasculated the whole democratic process in the country. Such long abstinence from political activity has rendered each political party a victim of muscle-waste and atrophy. Even the PPP, despite its popularity, has no organisation worth the name. "The problem," a PPP leader admits, is that "the populism of a leader can win you elections by itself but to run a movement you need an organisation."

This lack has been evident even in the course of the latest conflagration. The large-scale arrests have totally paralysed the party. If processions are still being taken out in Lahore it is because some of the top leaders of the Punjab Peoples Party have managed to escape arrest and have gone underground.

Though it would be premature to believe that Benazir's campaign has lost momentum, there is no doubt that she made a few miscalculations. Says a Lahore lawyer: "To begin with she moved too early, even before she was able to reorganise her own party and then in her arrogance she alienated everybody else who mattered." This indeed was a surprising error for one who should have been wiser by experience. Shortly after her return from exile she had told INDIA TODAY: "My father was let down by the party. He did so much for his partymen but when he went to the gallows no one did anything, not a dog barked." In the same, bitter, determined vein she had asserted that this would not be repeated were she to be arrested. But, outside Sind, history more or less repeated itself.

She is also paying the price for her arrogance, so typically a Bhutto trait. At scores of public meetings millions of her supporters had kept up the chant of "Bhutto family, hero, hero, baaki saare zero-zero", much to the chagrin of the older, more senior leaders of the various other constituents of the MRD who may not count very much at the national level but have their own loyal support bases in their constituencies. This could have come handy in this confrontation when the PPP lacked a grassroots organisation. For example, if Khan Wali Khan of the Awami National Party has support in the NWFP, retired Air Marshal Asghar Khan's Tehrik-e-Istiqlal party has its own limited voice. So does Ghous Bux Bizenjo in Baluchistan, and though Meraj Mohammed Khan and Iqbla Haider of Quami Mahaz-e-Azadi do not count for much nationally, their vociferous support among the large labour class in Karachi is vital to the success of any agitation. Benazir did not try to take these leaders with her. This, when as prominent lawyer and political activist Aitzaz Ahsan says: "She was the only one on Pakistan's political scene who could afford to be generous."

She was indeed gifted with a situation where the political parties, beaten in the great phase of state terrorism in 1983, were looking for a bit of charisma

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Excellence.

A never-ending search through diverse directions. A search that invariably leads to new heights of growth. The search for excellence is on at Swadeshi Polytex.

An enthusiastic group of motivated professionals, the present management is steering the company towards new directions of progress.

With increased production targets and redoubled zeal, the company is well on its way to a dramatic change.

For the better!

SP jailene®

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Shems/943

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pakistan Peoples Party supporters being teargassed in Karachi and leadership. Instead of filling that vital gap she only stressed on the irrelevance of these parties. She never made any effort to remove the distrust haunting the various constituents of MRD.

WALI KHAN and Asghar Khan have kept themselves totally out of the movement. "We want democracy but there is no need for us to get caught in all this when we are unprepared", says Wali Khan. Asghar Khan's party's distrust of Benazir is deeper. Says Lahore-based lawyer and Tehrik leader Khurshid Kasuri: "You can't just alight from an aircraft and take over the leadership. We won't accept that." By not consolidating these anti-Zia forces, Benazir gave the Government a chance of trying to isolate her from the rest of the MRD.

But while she has paid dearly for her impetuousness, the Government has also suffered some jarring knocks. The trouble in Sind has made it clear that alienation still persists there. In Punjab, the masses have shown their anger even if it did not last long. Most of all, the Government has paid a price for its indiscriminate repression.

It was basically under American pressure that Zia lifted the martial law and restored a semblance of democracy. The latest crack-down, is hardly the kind of thing that pleases public opinion in the US, so vital to the Zia regime. "In Pakistan the army decides who rules and this is a surrogate army of the Americans," says Aitzaz Ahsan underlining the fact that the Americans could, indeed pull the plug in a Philippines-like fashion though Zia's insurance lies in the great stakes in Afghanistan. But the US State Department has had to criticise Benazir's arrest, ironically making common cause with Muammar Gadafi, one of the first foreign leaders to speak out in her favour.

Zia has proved a master strategist. By absenting himself from the country, he has succeeded in pitting the Opposition against Junejo. If the situation worsens Junejo will become a convenient scapegoat.

The reaction in the US thus would always figure in Zia's calculations as he now sets about deciding what he should do with Benazir after he has put her in jail. Already the Government has decided not to proceed with the sedition case initially registered against her.

Sooner or later Zia will have to release Benazir, thus adding to her image of a living political martyr. But once again, he has shown that he is a master strategist. By absenting himself from the country during the agitation, he has succeeded in pitting the opposition against Junejo. If the situation gets out of control, it is Junejo who will be the convenient scapegoat. Says Mushahid Hussain, the articulate young editor of The Muslim: "Both sides have lost out in the confrontation," adding: "The PPP was caught with its pants down but the biggest casualty is Junejo who had come to symbolise the democratisation in post-martial law Pakistan. His claims of tolerance of political dissent received some hard knocks in the streets of Lahore and Karachi."

In the first round thus, the honours were even though both sides took a nasty beating, and also have plenty to brood about. But with the die cast now, Benazir and the other opposition parties have no choice but to intensify the ongoing war of attrition. That could bring Zia out in a more direct control of the Government and put the clock back, to some degree, on his much-publicised ploy of civilianisation.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA with ZAHID HUSSAIN in Pakistan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The LOBBYISTS

THE Ministries of Industry, Defence, Commerce and Finance exert a vice-like grip over the cradle-to-grave existence of just about every commercial enterprise in this country. Bureaucrats can help create or break the back of any business.

THE GOVERNMENT floats a multi-crore proposal for the manufacture of video cassettes in India. Just about every big business house applies for a licence to undertake the venture. The last date for selection—January 21, 1986—passes by. Seven months later, no decision is made. The Uttar Pradesh Government invites private companies to collaborate in a Rs 700-crore joint sector undertaking for an aromatics plant in Salempur. Over half-a-dozen groups apply and three of them—the Singhanias, Reliance, and the Birlas—are short-listed for final selection. Two years have passed but the state Cabinet has still not made a choice. A new Maruti dealership was to be opened in Faridabad near Delhi last month. Bidders came in droves. But the company's board, in a seemingly inexplicable move, decided to postpone the dealership.

These are examples—not of bureaucratic sloth or buck-passing but of decisions involving massive amounts of money that have been deliberately deferred in the course of the high-stakes game of lobbying that has become an integral part of the everyday affairs of this country. In each of these cases, lobbyists and influence peddlers on various sides have been battling behind the scenes and bringing to bear their weight—through politicians or bureaucrats—on the officials who must ultimately make the decisions. And the Government has responded by setting up supercommittees, task forces, and expert committees which have stymied all action while the bidders pull their weight at various ministerial levels in an attempt to out-muscle one another.

Lobbying—the art of winning politicians and influencing Government decisions—is orchestrated by industrial houses, trade groups and associations as well as individual businesses in a concerted effort to bag a contract, to destroy a competitor through political pressure, win an industrial licence, or help shape official policy in the interest of their own clients. The more visible lobbies—Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI), Federation of Indian Export Organisations (FIEO), the Apparel Export Promotion Council—are highly organised and well-financed groups that use a mixture of seminars, formal representations and personal persuasion to wrest trade concessions in the marketplace from a Government which controls not only the commanding heights of the economy but also straddles trade and commerce in the form of a bureaucratic colossus. Within these lobbying organisations themselves, there is fierce competition for the top posts by the industrialists who, by virtue of occupying these positions, stand to gain access to Government officials and ministers to seek favours for their personal businesses.

Ultimately, it is the Government's control over expenditures that is one of the key reasons for the existence of the lobbies. More than Rs 40,000 crore are spent annually by government agencies on the purchase of items ranging from a sophisticated fighter plane to letter writing paper. The ministries of industry, electronics, communications, commerce, defence, and finance have a vice-like grip over the cradle-to-grave existence of just about any commercial enterprise in this country. The Department of Industrial Development alone clears more than 2,000 applications for new projects each year. The Commerce Ministry—through a system of clearances, permits, and concessions—oversees more than Rs 28,000 crore in trade annually. Bureaucrats in the various departments of these ministries can help give birth to a new enterprise, break the back of an existing one, or delay the functioning of a nascent one. The Controller of Capital Issues, a joint secretary in the Finance Ministry, is solely responsible for multi-crore decisions involving the issuance of shares and debentures in the Indian market-place. And the joint secretary, banking, a man with an innocuous sounding title, is really the czar before whom all bank chairmen quake and tremble because the edicts he issues decides their careers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hidden Persuaders

Without a doubt, the most powerful group within this configuration is the Finance Ministry which can torpedo—by holding up money—decisions made by other ministries. The most powerful bureaucrats within this ministry—a handful of joint secretaries—sit within the Department of Economic Affairs. They collect data and make what are euphemistically called "notations on files." But these "notations", mostly terse and scribbled in ink, can pack a deadly punch.

"These notations," says a long-time FICCI member, "can make or break a file. They can be very subtle, very brief, but the effect can be felt in hundreds of crores. A little weight given to one project, a little criticism directed at another can decide the fate of the entire industry." Each proposal to the Government is processed by over half-a-dozen officials within a ministry plus another set of officials in another ministry if the matter is relevant to both. If the proposal involves any policy change, the file travels from the section officer to the minister, and in some cases to the Cabinet for final approval.

The file for an industrial licence is handled by more than 50 officials before any action is taken on it. Says Gaur Hari Singhania, chairman of J.K. Synthetics: "To chase this phalanx of clerks we have our own people who understand their culture and language. You may call it lobbying but we think it is legitimate. It is better to chase your way up than to be stranded at the bottom." The J.K. group maintains a battery of officials whose only job is to religiously report to Delhi's Udyog Bhawan and North Block every day and file a status report for their bosses. Other groups like the Tatas and Birlas, as well as multinationals like Hindustan Lever and Siemens, maintain "follow-up" departments headed by senior officials with the rank of a regional director or vice-president.

The multinationals sometimes call their officials 'development officers'. They enjoy virtually unlimited expense accounts and maintain luxury guest-houses, five-star hotel suites and fleets of cars exclusively for the use of civil servants and politicians. Reliance, for example, operates through vice-president V. Balasubramaniam, whose main function is to chase Government officials and ministers for getting the company's projects cleared. Bombay Dyeing's prepossessing

THE file for an industrial licence is handled by more than fifty officials before any action is taken on it. "To chase this phalanx of clerks and officials," says an industrialist, "we have our own people who understand their culture and language."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chairman Nusli Wadia handles these jobs by himself, with the help of both ruling as well as opposition MP's. The Tatas are represented by the polished and aggressive Delhi-based Surjit Gupta, while Aditya Birla has an able representative in the safari-suited B.N. Saxena. R.P. Goenka who once had a hot-line to the Government via R.K. Dhawan and Pranab Mukherjee during Mrs Gandhi's heyday, now uses his crucial position as FICCI president to establish rapport with the most important Government functionaries.

With the recent spurt in foreign deals, there have come to the fore several influential people not usually associated with business. For example, cricketer Mansur Ali Khan Pataudi's company initiated the process whereby a Gulf-based industrialist obtained the contract for the giant Jagdishpur fertiliser plant. And last year, the portly and affable Ranjit Jayratnam, son of a former Union minister, used his super-salesmanship on behalf of Airbus Industrie, which eventually bagged an order for Airbuses worth Rs 1,600-crore from the country's domestic airline, Indian Airlines. In this case the Government reversed an earlier decision to buy the aircraft from Boeing.

Some of the capital's exclusive bungalows in South Delhi are the venues for lavish parties thrown by powerful Indian and foreign lobbyists. Their mansions serve as the rendezvous for bureaucrats, businessmen, civil servants, journalists and politicians. Some of the regular party-givers are enterprising MP's like Suresh Kalmadi, the former air force officer-turned-politician, and Murli Deora, the Bombay-based man for all seasons. In Friends Colony, Ottavio Quattrochhi, who has very successfully represented the Italian company Snamprogetti in India for about two decades, is known for his closeness to the Gandhi family as well as for the excellent rapport he enjoys with senior Government officials. Another lobbyist, sought after by the large hotel chains as well as by the Tatas, is the politically active lawyer Lalit Bhasin, who is well-connected with the bigwigs of the ruling party.

THE BUREAUCRAT most courted by lobbyists in all the ministries is the joint secretary. As a general rule, he is the most powerful figure in the world of delegated policy-making. Above him, the officials are often too busy to be accessible. Below him, policy decisions don't usually get taken. The joint secretary sits on the boards of public sector companies, sanctions foreign exchange for every conceivable purpose, runs the industrial licensing secretariat, sits on the small committee that takes oil import decisions, and is responsible for vetting every proposal for a contract. "The joint secretary's notations on any file," says a lobbyist for the export industry, "are key to the movement of any project and even more important than what his secretary does." A secretary will rarely overrule a joint secretary on paper.

A key office for company lobbyists is the Directorate General of Technical Development (DGTD), within which relatively junior development officers are assigned responsibility for the various industries. These officers can sometimes be more important than almost anyone else, for before any licence is issued, the DGTD makes an extensive evaluation of the proposal in order to determine its "viability", the demand for the product, the estimated lag in supplies, how many licences should be issued, and whether foreign components should even be allowed into the country. A small display of disapproval for even a miniscule portion of a project under consideration can sound its death-knell.

In one case recently, the Government said that the minimum economic size for units in the chemical industry should be 60,000 tonnes. Earlier, the technical recommendation had been 50,000 tonnes. Some company lobbyist who wanted to expand capacity had obviously been at work. When an objection was raised, the change was explained away as a typing error. But the "typing error" has still not been corrected.

The office of the Director General of Supply and Disposal (DGSD) is another important hang-out for the influence peddlers. As part of the Ministry of Supply, this department approves the rates at which the Government will buy items like steel, water-pipes, clothes, and consumer and office items. The DGSD's stamp of approval for the rates charged by a company enables it to sell to Government agencies without going through formal tender requirements. Since these INFLUENCE peddlers on various sides fight behind the scenes and bring to bear their weight—through politicians and bureaucrats—on officials who must ultimately make the decisions. Government responds by setting up expert committees.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

agencies buy Rs 3,000 crore worth of goods at DGSD rates, lobbyists work day and night to get their own rates approved. And often the lobbying is aimed at profiteering through this mechanism. When V.P. Singh was commerce minister, he ordered an inquiry into why the DGSD had approved rates that were higher than those prevailing in the market—for the sale of Rs 50 crore worth of water-pipes.

A new entrepreneur functioning without the aid of a lobbyist is like a babe in the bureaucratic woods. Consider what he has to go through to start a project: he must first submit a detailed preliminary project report that usually runs into a score of pages, not counting the supporting affidavits and supplementary forms which must be appended to it. The applicant must obtain a "letter of intent" issued by the ministry, by filling out more forms spelling out the scope of the project, the raw material and components to be used and the capitalisation plans, which are evaluated by several technical wings within the pertinent ministries.

In this continuing process, which can take years, the application goes to the licensing committee within the Secretariat of Industrial Approvals (SIA). A committee within the SIA will meet in order to determine whether approval should be given for the letter of intent. Several steps later, the letter of intent will be converted to an industrial licence. The entrepreneur must also begin a new round of negotiations with Government-owned financial institutions—Industrial Finance Corporation of India, Industrial Development Bank of India, Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India—each with its own rules and regulations—to arrange for loans, and with state governments to arrange for land.

THE capital's exclusive bungalows in south Delhi are the venue for lavish parties thrown by powerful Indian and foreign lobbyists. Their mansions serve as the rendezvous for businessmen, civil servants, journalists and politicians.

It is small wonder then that most industries employ armies of lobbyists just to keep track of their business proposals as they wind their way tortuously through the labyrinthine corridors of Government. The Apparel Export Promotion Council, the lobbying arm of India's nearly 8,000 garment exporters consists of three directors from the Government and 27 directors from the industry and has compiled a war chest—from membership donations—of Rs 20 crore to be spent on promotional activities.

BUT ULTIMATELY, tricky decisions on trade, commerce and industry, particularly those with a potential political fall-out, are usually handled by officials close to the prime minister. In Mrs Gandhi's time, a cabal in her office including Yashpal Kapur and R.K. Dhawan dispensed favours freely to chosen industrialists by short-circuiting or strongarming the bureaucracy. In more recent times, the battle royal between the London-based businessman Swraj Paul and H.P. Nanda of Escorts—the battle between the NRI lobby and FICCI—was informally arbitrated in the Prime Minister's Secretariat.

Because of this over-centralisation of decision-making, interest groups failing to influence Government decisions through the traditional methods of public relations and liaison work resort to opening up new fronts—pressure points—at the political level in order to reverse decisions already made. For example, after interminable haggling between highly-connected French and Italian lobbies in this country, the Government decided to award the Rs 722-crore contract for the HBJ pipeline deal to an international consortium led by the French company Spie Capag. This created conflicting camps even within the Prime Minister's Secretariat. One powerful lobby, backing the Italian competitor, Snamprogetti, wasn't about to give up without a fight. There is no way to revise a Government decision except at the Cabinet level. But in this case, a committee headed by the then cabinet secretary, P.K. Kaul, was assigned to take another hard look at the contract. This committee did not reverse the initial decision. And, before Kaul could complete his term as cabinet secretary, he was sent to Washington as ambassador. Two other powerful men who were dealing with the pipeline decision—Minister of State for Petroleum Nawal Kishore Sharma and Gas Authority of India Chairman B.S. Cheema—also lost their jobs.

But Government decisions—under pressure from powerful political lobbies—

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

have been reversed in the past. The most notable example of this was the reversal of the decision, in 1981, to award a large fertiliser technology contract—partly funded by the World Bank—to the California firm of C.F. Braun. Ignoring the Government committee's endorsement of the scheme, Mrs Gandhi appointed yet another special cabinet committee which recommended that the project be awarded to Haldor Topsoe, a Danish subsidiary of Snamprogetti. In another interesting instance, the Janata Government plumped for the British Jaguar aircraft, but as soon as Mrs Gandhi returned to power she aborted the Jaguar deal midway and plumped for the French Mirage.

MOST politicians, adept in the art of lobbying, rarely like to leave behind a paper trail leading to the favour-seeker. A minister will usually fire his gun from the shoulder of a joint secretary or secretary. If the bureaucrat doesn't agree to play along, he will be shunted off to a do-nothing job. The traditional role of the bureaucrat was to protect the Government or his minister from embarrassment or from being publicly compromised.

But with the advent of big bucks, big deals and big lobbyists, these distinctions have become hazy. Ministers want their dirty work done, but they are averse to over-ruling their secretaries in writing. And, increasingly, bureaucrats do not write dissenting opinions. "Today, what makes a successful bureaucrat," says an official in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, "is his ability to manipulate a politician and keep his mouth shut. They now emulate the skills of a politician, knowing that there will be prize jobs waiting for them at the end of it all." Indeed, while old Government files had reasoned arguments going back and forth, most today have brief notings that say "Please speak" or "As discussed". So no record is left of what really went on.

Politicians not only work for special interests through ministries but openly lobby for competing businesses through Parliament. Some MP's ask questions about the same business group in a single session of Parliament with uncommon frequency. A large number of politicians continue to hold the same jobs they had with companies prior to their becoming MP's or MLA's. During the last Parliamentary session, the domestic soft drinks lobby was clearly on the attack in order to embarrass the Government over its proposed deal to allow Pepsi Cola to manufacture its product in India. Earlier this domestic lobby had been at loggerheads as both the Campa Cola and Parle groups attempted to use Parliament to raise embarrassing questions about each other.

Interestingly, between 1979 and 1982 about 15 MP's asked 86 questions against the Parle group of companies. Fifty-six of these questions were posed by three MP's—K. Lakkappa, Dharam Das Shastri, and J.K. Jain. Later, Parle responded in kind. Till recently, a Rajya Sabha member with financial connections to a drug company in Bombay specialised in asking embarrassing questions about market rivals Glaxo and Pfizer. And another seemed to have interest in little other than the affairs of tobacco giant ITC.

Industrial houses will often seek to influence an MP or MLA during an election campaign. During the last elections, for example, the Khoday group favoured the victory of Janardhan Poojari from Karnataka. Poojari won and went on to become minister of state for finance. In a neighbouring district, a rival of the Khoday group—Vijay Mallya of United Breweries—was backing S.M. Krishna, who lost. Mallya, who has been a subject of investigation, has alluded that he is a victim of his rivals' political connections. Mallya himself, however, attempted to use another political connection to his advantage. Last August, when he was in trouble with the authorities over the Shaw Wallace take-over controversy, an MP from Madhya Pradesh, Shivendra Bahadur Singh, wrote a personal letter to Rajiv Gandhi pleading Mallya's case. Singh, a Doon School mate of Rajiv, wrote that the charges against Mallya appeared to be false and were instigated "by an industrial lobby of the Poddars and Goenkas". In that letter, Singh pointed POLITICIANS not only work for special interests through ministries but also lobby for competing businesses through Parliament. Some MP's ask repetitive questions about the same business group in a single session of Parliament with uncommon frequency.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

out: "Vijay and his group...have contributed to the party (and) he is also helping the promotion of the Indian public school cause...and also establishing a scholarship for Doon School..."

A classic case of an industrialist currying favour with a political candidate and chalking up a big IOU in return is that of a Bombay businessman who supplied fuel for Mrs Gandhi's aircraft and helicopter travels during the 1980 elections that brought Mrs Gandhi back to power. The Petroleum Ministry then had put a strict ban on the supply of aviation kerosene because of its short supply, and had turned down several requests from Mrs Gandhi's aide, Yashpal Kapoor, for supplying it. The Bombay businessman managed to locate and buy the fuel privately in the Gulf and have it shipped to Mrs Gandhi's campaign helicopter. He went on to prosper more than anyone else once Mrs Gandhi was in power.

One of the most common uses of powerful lobbies is to chalk out niches in the market-place, to ensure monopoly contracts, or destroy competitors through political manipulation. For example, India buys about 25 million tonnes of coking coal a year at Rs 42 per tonne for the Steel Authority of India Limited (SAIL). For the past several years, a company supplied coal from Australia. The arrangement was considered reliable. This year, under pressure from lobbyists for a new company, the testing of the old company's coal supplies was delayed for four months and then rejected at one testing ground even though the same coal had been approved at another testing ground. When the old company filed an appeal, the SAIL authorities asked its officers to negotiate a deal under new contract terms. But even though bidding was to occur under new terms the coal from the new company—supplied under the old terms—was accepted. In the war of the coal lobbies, the old company lost out.

THERE is also the case of India's insurance companies, which for the last 32 years have been conducting their reinsurance business in the Lloyds market in London through three exclusive brokers. So powerful is this link—backed by politicians and high officials—between the Indian companies and the three brokers that no other broker has been allowed to bid for business in 32 years. Due to this set pattern, the London market offers skyrocketing premiums to the Indian market because the business can only be placed through the three brokerage houses which have divided the business among themselves.

In order to prevent special interest favours, conscientious bureaucrats try and protect their ministerial bosses from the impact of organised lobbies by not allowing industry and trade representatives to meet them on a one-on-one basis. In Rail Bhawan, for example, there is a hard and fast rule that no foreign delegations or their representatives will be allowed to meet the minister of state for railways unless there is at least one joint secretary present. "But they can always find a way to get through, through a sister or a brother or an aunt," says a Government official who has worked for several ministries. "The relationship starts with small presents. But once a contact is established it continues. I am always amazed to see how easy it is to win over ministers with small presents. And soon, the lobbyist finds that a minister or a Government official is working for him, not as a lackey, but as a friend."

On Diwali and Christmas, the corridors of Government offices crawl with lobbyists bearing gifts—pens, designer glasses, calendars, brief-cases, diaries. But these are the smallest items at which this public relations effort begins. The diaries and pens get more expensive when they are meant for senior officials. Leather brief-cases, cut-glass ashtrays and table pen-sets are commonplace gifts for senior officials. Then, of course, there is the time-honoured custom of sending sweets and fresh fruit baskets to officials on Diwali and Holi: the higher-placed the recipient, the bigger the basket. And beneath the yellow cellophane-covered fruit are layers

AFTER interminable haggling between highly-connected French and Italian lobbies in the country, a government decision was made to award the Rs 722 crore HBJ pipeline contract to an international consortium led by the French company Spie Capag.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of dry fruits and bottles of Scotch whisky. Says a senior bureaucrat: "You can get more information out of a bureaucrat by serving him a bottle of Scotch whisky than by giving him Rs 1 lakh. The former makes him feel he is among friends and he blabs out the details wanted."

The other common method of getting bureaucrats beholden is to bear their and their family's holiday expenses. All bureaucrats are entitled to take their LTC once in two years, and when they do, they go to a holiday resort where they are generously looked after. The same thing happens on foreign trips too.

SOME of the biggest deals, naturally enough, are struck on the golf course. Money literally changes hands, but in a very legitimate way. The lobbyists who flock to the golf course have acquired a knack of losing to the senior officials they are trying to befriend. The technique is ingenious. They carefully note the habits and times that senior officials play, arrive at the same time, and lay large wagers with the officials. They play badly and intentionally lose to the officials. As a result, the officials are always winning money from these lobbyists, who become known more for their high wagers than for their golfing ability. Thus are born some of the strangest foursomes on the greens. And it is during these games and over the inevitable beer or whisky which follows that important nuggets of information are obtained.

"Lobbyists keep extensive profiles and dossiers," a Finance Ministry official says. "There is rarely a false move. They know who takes money, who has greedy relatives, who dines with whom." A prominent Congress(I) politician—who made his fortune as a lobbyist for the electronics industry as well as for competing big business houses in both Delhi and Bombay—has perfected information-gathering to a fine art. His organisation keeps a special who's who directory of officials in Government departments and ministries who can always be counted on for a quick favour. Several servants in the Maharashtra state guest-house are on his pay-roll. They eavesdrop on guest-house telephones and keep a tab on visiting VIP's. They know—and report back on—who calls whom, who meets whom and who is who's relative. A Rajiv Gandhi intimate who stayed there recently was shocked to discover that a prominent lobbyist knew the names and financial and private businesses of every member of his family soon afterwards.

THE game is played out day in and day out—the hustle, the shuffle, the fix, the political twist, the con deal, the artful arm twist—in which the big fish eats the little fish in a scenario where only the jungle law operates.

That particular lobbyist has a permanent suite booked at a leading five-star hotel in Delhi. Every Diwali, he sends 2,000 packets of export-quality suit-lengths and 3,000 Banarasi saris to influential contacts. Brand-specific whisky bottles and Cartier watches are delivered to newspaper editors. In Bombay, he has organised some 25 ethnic associations of workers from different regions who live there to welcome—and influence—visiting politicians from those areas.

There is, for example, the Garhwal Association which recently welcomed Industry Minister N.D. Tiwari in Bombay—to his pleasant surprise—to the singing of Garhwali folk-songs. But such festivities have a purpose, for at the appropriate moment one person from the association—usually by prior arrangement—is chosen to approach the minister and ask him for a favour which will ultimately benefit the lobbyist's client. The minister never suspects that behind the "leader" of this ethnic group is a master hidden persuader at work. When H.N. Bahuguna was campaigning from Garhwal in 1982, the Garhwal Association sent 500 letters home to their families asking them not to vote for him. Copies of these letters were shown to Tiwari in order to impress him.

And so the game is played out, day in and day out—the hustle, the shuffle, the fix, the political twist, the con deal, the artful arm twist—in which the big fish eats the little fish. There are no other rules, for what is being acted out—in a world in which Big Government and Big Business hold each other captive in a symbiotic embrace—is an amoral morality play in which the only spiritual barometer is how much and how quickly the players can grab a chunk of the Indian economic pie. The only moral, ultimately is: You take your money. You run.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with PRABHU CHAWLA and RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEFENCE Bucks and Bangs

THE MOST intense lobbying is done in the field of defence procurement—the Government's purchase of weapons systems, spares and add-ons. In the cut-throat atmosphere that surrounds this activity, the lobbying for defence contracts is hard core, brutal and uncompromising.

In its basic form the wining and dining and influence-peddling is not very different from what occurs in the civilian sectors. But there are several elements which render the defence arena unique: there is a clearly discernible revolving door through which retiring armed services officers march onto the pay-roll of lobbyists and contractors and then begin dealing with the Defence Ministry as "experts" on behalf of their organisations. Because so many of the purchases are high-tech, lobbyists are able to take advantage of the lack of technical knowledge within the Government to push through their arms packages. Often, foreign governments lend their entire weight to international arms deals and purchases, rendering them "politicised"—an instrument of foreign policy; and the Defence Ministry remains virtually unaccountable to Parliament, the Finance Ministry, or even to the Public Accounts Committee—cloaking all its actions under the blanket of "national security".

The end result, often, is that the country is saddled with weapons systems that are either too expensive, won't work, or won't serve a useful tactical purpose. The systems are often cocktail projects concocted, sold and delivered by the super-salesmen of the defence contracting lobby. The process usually works in the following way: Say the country is looking for a new helicopter. The three chiefs are asked by the Ministry of Defence to give their recommendations. As soon as word gets out, they begin receiving fancy advertisement packages and glossy representations from the middlemen. The three services usually make three different cases. Technical appraisal teams—consisting of brass plus joint secretaries—are sent to Paris, London and New York. Here they are lavishly wined and dined by contractors and lobbyists who have smelt blood. They return armed with arguments supporting purchases from the countries visited.

WHEN retired officers join big armaments manufacturers as their liaison men or consultants in Delhi, their job is to lobby former peers and juniors for foreign equipment manufacturers. This creates a dilemma for servicemen.

During the next stage, the research and development (R&D) teams begin studying the various reports. At this point, the lobbying is hot and heavy, not only from agents but also from the officers who have prepared the initial reports and been "worked on" by the agents. Finally, there is the testing and evaluation stage—during which weapons are field tested for performance. Senior ministry and defence officials agree that at this stage "a lot of money changes hands"—because the testing reports will decide whether a weapon is finally purchased. High-level civilian officials are usually excluded from participating in the field tests and have to rely only on reports. These reports, and even the tests which are sometimes conducted in foreign countries, can be rigged in order to exalt the performance of a weapon and enhance a company's chance of selling it. The "cut" for a favourable report is almost always given in foreign countries.

In the defence game of winning contracts and influencing officers, lobbyists set their sights on officers close to retirement, or the sons of former generals, or officers who have been compromised or in financial trouble. As one retired general put it: "They book them in advance as agents, or put them on their pay-rolls while they still have a few years of service. The idea is to get advance information on what they, the services, want to buy. The lobbyists then approach the firms and the dealing begins."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHEN retired officers join big armaments manufacturers as their liaison men or consultants in Delhi, their job is to lobby with their former peers and juniors for foreign equipment manufacturers. This often creates an embarrassing situation for serving officials, who can neither turn their former bosses away nor agree to their proposals. But considerations of esprit de corps allow the retired officials to attend all service functions at which they get the information they want. And they throw lavish parties where free-flowing Scotch irrigates the desiccated throats of serving officials. Retired government officials seeking employment anywhere in the first two years after retirement have to take the Government's permission. But many of them bypass this rule by becoming consultants or advisers—which, strictly speaking, is not considered employment—or better still, by getting their wives employed by the foreign companies. Major agents brag about the number of retired major-generals, air marshals and admirals they have on their staff.

Former services luminaries who dabbled in or still are in the consultancy business include retired services chiefs like Air Chief Marshal H. Moolgavkar and Admiral S.M. Nanda. Moolgavkar is consultant to Ferranti and other French companies. Nanda joined his son Suresh to set up Globtech International after the admiral left the chairmanship of the Shipping Corporation of India. They have the agency of MTU engines which power many of India's merchant ships and are now bidding to supply the engine for the Army's main battle tank (MBT). Vice-Admiral Suraj Prakash, former director-general of the Coast Guard, represented companies manufacturing Japanese inshore vessels; Air Marshal T.N. Ghadiok, former head of the National Defence College, represented Challenger, a commuter aircraft manufactured by Canadair; Air Vice Marshal E. Dhatigara (former IAF vice-chief) represents the Lockheed C-130 Hercules, a transport plane Lockheed has been trying to sell to the air force for supply flights to the Indian base in Antartica. Air Marshal L.S. Grewal (former vice-chief who during his tenure passed orders that ex-service officers representing foreign equipment suppliers should, for security reasons, not be entertained in Air Headquarters) himself joined the ranks of the lobbyists and lobbied for the Transall aircraft; Lt-General M.N. Batra, former director of Military Intelligence, works for M.M. Bhagat and Company, a big name in the arms business. Commmodore Sanjana (IN) represents Britten Norman, an aircraft company which sold the Islander plane to the navy and the Coast Guard. Commander M.R.A. Rao (IN) for many years represented the Swedish Bofors. There is a liberal sprinkling of other generals, brigadiers, air commodores and lower ranks still in the business.

After Rajiv Gandhi became prime minister—and in the wake of the Larkins scandal—the Government made it clear that in major defence deals it would talk only to the manufacturers or their senior officials. This virtually banned the entry of agents and liaison men representing these companies in India from within the corridors of the defence and defence production ministries in South Block. This has now forced some manufacturers to open their own offices in India. Previously, agents used to get a 10 per cent commission of which between 2 and 5 per cent used to go to party funds and some more was spread around among people who had helped at various levels. Out of this, about 2 per cent remained with the agent. Some years ago, the Government laid down the norm that agents should get no more than 2 per cent and the money should be paid in Indian currency. But these steps have not eliminated the agents. Many of them have gone underground or operate behind the facade of overseas agencies run by NRI's who collect the commission abroad. Others stayed in the business by renaming themselves consultants, which enables them to pick up consultancy fees and expenses.

FINALLY, there is the testing and evaluation stage during which weapons are field-tested for performance. Senior ministry and defence officials agree quite candidly that at this stage, "a lot of money changes hands".

Some of the major defence agents/consultants include: Eureka, owned by Rajiv and Sanjiv Chowdhrie, both nephews of the former Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd chairman Baljit Kapur. Eureka represents Marconi, Sagem (naval-attack systems for Jaguar and Mirage), Sperry (flight data recorders), SNECMA (the French engine manufacturer) and, previously, Aerospatiale and Marcel Dassault; Roger Enterprises and Roger International (previously William Jacks) headed by Mahendra K. Jajodia and his brother, representing equipment manufacturers; Indian

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Avitronics, owned by Brij Mohan Gupta and his sons—Deb Mohan, Surinder Mohan and Harsh Mohan Gupta—a family of old Delhi cloth merchants who entered the business of aviation just after the Second World War. The Guptas are agents in India for Pratt and Whitney engines, which are fitted onto almost all the Air-India Boeing 707s and 747s, and Indian Airlines' 737s. Their company makes a commission on all engines and spares sold. They later became the Indian agents for Recaro, suppliers of airplane seats and interiors and CAE flight simulators. After this, they started picking up the agencies of various international companies and at their peak represented several hundred companies, many of them French, and also Westland Seaking helicopters.

Rotax is owned by Surrinder Gupta, representing the Tracor-manufactured Omega navigation systems which are being fitted onto all IAF transport planes and RCA Primus colour weather radar, Collins navigation systems and Thorn EMI electronic warfare pods; Concord International is run by Vinod Khanna who represents Saab Scania. His brother Lt-Colonel Vipin Khanna runs the Dynamic Sales Service Industries (DSSI) representing Hughes helicopters, Magnavox, and some Saab products. Usha Services and Consultants Pvt Ltd is owned by Kulwant Rai, brother-in-law of Swraj Paul. Their arms agency division was set up by Air Vice-Marshal K.N. Ram. They represent many equipment companies. The company had earlier employed Air Vice-Marshal Larkins.

THE ultimate effect of this pressure group scenario may be that even as the country spends bigger bucks on defence, it may be getting in return a correspondingly smaller bang—weapons that don't really work or are unsuitable.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Anatronics is owned by W.I.N. Chadha, one of the biggest defence agents, who represents Bofors (which recently sold 155 mm guns worth Rs 1,500 crore to India), Ericsson, SATT electronics, and Whitehead (homing heads for torpedoes).

THE GROWTH and power of these companies reflects in part the massively growing defence demands of the country. In the Seventh Five Year Plan, the Defence Ministry's budget is more than Rs 60,000 crore. Of this, an estimated Rs 12,000 crore is to be spent on maintenance and procurement. This expenditure is a massive jump over the Rs 27,000 crore budgetted in the sixth plan. This year alone, because there has been such a flurry of acquisitions, the Defence Ministry has already overshot its procurement budget by about Rs 650 crore. It is now seeking a Rs 700-crore supplemental appropriation to meet the shortfall. But Finance Minister V.P. Singh has been privately insisting that the Defence Ministry provide a detailed accounting of purchases as well as cost over-runs on weapons systems which have been procured, in the interest of fiscal discipline.

There have been large cost over-runs. The aircraft-carrier Hermes, with its 40-year-old hull, was purchased on the suggestion of a London-based lobbyist. The creaky vessel, now being refitted with fancy equipment, has already cost Rs 120 crore with more expenditure to come. And this despite the fact that there is no expenditure targeted for it in the 1985-86 budget. "And no one from the Indian side," said one insider, "has the real expertise to evaluate what fancy systems are being put in there by the subcontractors." An additional Rs 300 crore will be spent on the project to buy eight Sea Harriers for the vessel.

The Bofors 155 mm gun project has also become controversial because senior government officials have begun to question its range of fire. Its ultimate cost—with transfer of technology for its manufacture here—is expected to be Rs 2,000 crore. Another project—Operation Skylark—for the installation of VHF transmission systems, is already in the red. And the Dornier aircraft is now being loaded with so many additional systems—fancy radars and missile systems—that some officials are beginning to wonder whether it will be able to give an optimum performance in the air because of its weight. "There is entirely too much ad hocism in these purchases," a senior official remarked. But the ultimate effect of this pressure group infested scenario may well be that even as India spends more bucks on defence it may be getting in return, a correspondingly smaller bang.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR
with RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long after you've stood on your own legs, you can still count on support from Computer Point.

Right from the very first step you take in buying a computer, you can count on dependable support from Computer Point.

We'll examine your needs thoroughly – and help you choose the best system to answer them.

We'll advise you on what software to buy and why. We'll even train you to use it meaningfully.

Computer Point offers you the convenience of a single-source computer supermarket, and the assurance of genuine quality and personalised service.

When you buy a computer from us, you'll find our prices as low as (sometimes, even lower than) manufacturers' own prices. You'll also find our delivery schedules more realistic and pleasing than anybody else's!

Even long after you've started using your computer – whenever you need us, you'll find us right behind you!

Yes, if it's computers you're thinking of, you can't come to a better place than Computer Point.

Because, while everyone else looks at your needs from their angle, we see your point of view!

COMPUTER POINT

We see your point of view !

43, Dickenson Road (Road Opp. Webb's Garage) Bangalore 560 042 Tel: 578718/578452 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.30 pm
92, G. N. Chetty Road (Opp. Vani Mahal) T. Nagar, Madras 600 017 Tel: 441192 Open: Mon-Sat 10 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.30 pm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sista's-CP/1367

221, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025 Tel: 4936716/4930543 Open: Mon-Sat 10.30 am – 1 pm & 2.30 pm – 7.30 pm
F-41, South Extension Part I, New Delhi 110 049 Tel: 624370 Open: Mon-Sat 10 am – 1.30 pm & 2.30 pm – 7 pm

DON'T BE A PARTNER IN SOFTWARE PIRACY

BUY GENUINE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KALAHANDI

The Tribal Farce

IN JULY 1985, when it was announced that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was scheduled to tour the tribal areas of Orissa, Principal Correspondent FARZAND AHMED visited the tribal area of Kalahandi in western Orissa to assess the situation and report on the shocking condition of the tribals, symbolised by the example of Phanas Punji, a tribal woman who had just sold her sister-in-law Banita, in bondage.

PRASANTA PATNAIK

In August, 1985, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi visited the tribal district of Kalahandi. During the tour, he was so moved by the plight of the tribals that he ordered the implementation of a crash welfare programme dubbed Operation Salvage.

In January, 1986, five months after Rajiv's visit, Farzand Ahmed toured the same area in western Orissa and reported (INDIA TODAY, January 31) that the state administration had done little to carry out the prime minister's directive even though state government officials claimed to have pumped about Rs 3 crore as developmental assistance in the area.

Five months after the article was published, the secretary to the Government of Orissa sent a detailed rebuttal of Ahmed's report to the Prime Minister's Secretariat claiming that massive improvements had taken place in Kalahandi. Ahmed went back to Kalahandi last fortnight to re-assess the situation. His conclusion, this time, was equally categorical. According to the evidence gathered during last fortnight's visit, the Orissa Government appears to have seriously misled the prime minister's office about the current state of affairs in the district of Kalahandi. The various employment schemes have not taken off. Rations of essential commodities have not been distributed. Villagers were selling their only crop, paddy, at distress prices. And, the life of Phanas Punji, who came to the prime minister's notice because she had sold her sister-in-law in bondage, has not improved. "The Orissa Government appears to have lied to the prime minister's office. In order to contradict our findings, they have tried to create a jungle of figures which are basically cooked-up," Ahmed writes.

INDIA TODAY gives below the Orissa Government's version (titled 'Claim') as presented to the Prime Minister's Secretariat along with the real facts ('Findings'). The findings are backed up by documents and on-site interviews with tribals, officials and social workers.

Claim: "Phanas Punji of Amalapalli did not sell her sister-in-law. She is a farmer, having five acres of land."

Findings: A.R. Nanda, secretary to the chief minister, forwarded a report (DO No: 7293, dated 9.9.85) from the collector of Kalahandi (No:1 Emer, dated 4.8.85) to a joint secretary to the prime minister, confirming the sale of the young woman. This is backed by affidavits from Punji and her family. In addition, the collectorate has records clearly showing that Phanas' husband—not Punji—owned land, most of which is now mortgaged. And sister-in-law Banita, who has just returned home, has herself revealed that she was sold for Rs 40 as a domestic servant.

Claim: In Nawapara subdivision alone, 2,276 fair price shops functioned during 1985-86 and 9,583 quintals of rice, 29,927 quintals of sugar, 10,19,510 litres of kerosene oil, and 6,563 tins of edible oil were distributed.

DEV DUTT PANDA

The Orissa Government claims that Phanas Punji did not sell her sister-in-law.

A.R. Nanda, secretary to the chief minister, forwarded a report confirming the sale, backed by affidavits from Punji.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASANTA PATNAIK

According to the state Government about 100 tubewells have been sunk in the district.

In the entire Sardhapur panchayat there are only eight tubewells, three of which have stopped functioning.

Findings: According to Manohar Gahir, former sarpanch of Sardhapur panchayat in the subdivision, not a single fair price shop had been opened in the 10 villages in the panchayat. In the few fair price shops opened in adjacent areas only kerosene and sugar had been distributed once a week. One fair price shop located at a deserted roadside in Chalapara, Kharia block, consisted of nothing else except a signboard. The area's collector Chinmay Basu, admitted that essential commodities were not being distributed through fair price shops.

Claim: About 100 tubewells have been installed in the district, "out of which 36 tubewells have been sunk in the Nawapara subdivision alone. There is not a single revenue village in this subdivision without a tubewell."

Findings: In the entire Sardhapur panchayat within the Nawapara subdivision there are only eight tubewells, three of which have fallen into disuse. There is no governmental effort to rebuild them. In Birighat, Khariar block, there is only one tubewell, constructed four years ago, for a population of 4,000. According to Ghansham Bhitriya of the Jagrat Sharmik Sangathan, a group dedicated to tribal welfare, villages in the Khariar block with a population of 5,000 "do not have any source of drinking water."

Claim: An expenditure of more than Rs 39 lakh had funded employment-generating schemes in the Nawapara subdivision involving the construction of houses, roads and trench fencing work.

Findings: Under the relief work one tank was constructed at Budhipur village, in the Boden block. As of last fortnight the workers had not been paid. Social worker

DEV DUTT PANDA

The Government reports that in Nawapara sub-division, 2,276 fair price shops functioned in 1985-86.

No fair price shops were opened in Sardhapur in Nawapara sub-division. One, located in Chalapara, consisted only of a signboard.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

K.P. Tiwary, who was partly responsible for bringing the plight of Kalahandi to the prime minister's notice has now written a strong letter to the block development officer asking for the release of funds to pay the wages. In the vicinity of Khariar, Domjher and Temri, Government contractors have sprinkled morum (red soil) on the ground, passing them off as roads. Several hundred houses constructed during the past year—adivasi colonies—collapsed after the first monsoon showers.

Claim: Allegations about the selling of paddy crops at throwaway prices are "unfounded. It is not a fact that a 75 kg bag of paddy was sold at Rs 50".

Findings: A writ petition admitted by the Supreme Court from social workers in the area states that residents of the Nawapara sub-division "live in subhuman conditions and are compelled to sell their only product (paddy) at Rs 50 a bag of 75 kg". This was confirmed by interviews with villagers in the area. According to Bhagta Charan Das, a young Janata MLA who toured 250 villages in the area, the distress sales (during a good crop year) were made by farmers in order to pay off money-lender debts. This was largely due to the failure of the Government to pick up the rice at the minimum support price of Rs 142 per quintal.

Claim: Allegations that the Government was unwilling to streamline the public distribution system "are not based on fact. Sale of essential commodities were streamlined".

Findings: The prime minister despatched special emissaries, ex-Union minister of state K.P. Singh Deo and Lt-General K. Balram, to assess the situation in the area five months after his visit. They stated after the tour that the situation could only be salvaged if ex-servicemen were deployed to check the activities of middlemen and streamline the public distribution system. Singh Deo, who visited three roadside villages, was barraged by complaints from residents who said they had not received rations of sugar, rice, kerosene and edible oil for the last three months. At a meeting with district officials Singh Deo chastised them saying: "If this is the situation in roadside villages I can well imagine the plight of the people in the interior."

Claim: Steps have been taken to help the common people through implementation of various anti-poverty programmes.

Findings: In Amalapalli village the Government constructed one weaving training centre where 17 young people were given a crash course and promised loans for looms and yarn. For the past four months the youngsters have been visiting rural banks but have been unable to get loans. Chamar Bag, who took the brief weaving course, said that local officials and bankers were trying to force them to buy looms at the rate of Rs 1,500 when they were available for Rs 1,000 in neighbouring Bolangir.

Claim: The allegation that people have little confidence in Government is not true. The allegations made in INDIA TODAY in its issue of January 31, 1986, are without basis and call for no action.

Findings: In response to the social workers' writ petition to the Supreme Court on behalf of the villagers, the court had ordered the appointment of two special commissioners to visit the district and make an independent assessment last January. But the Orissa Government has managed to obtain a stay of this Supreme Court order. During the past few months Governor B.N. Pandey has frequently criticised the state Government for its failure to take concrete measures to tackle poverty in districts such as Kalahandi. Four months ago the Assembly Estimates Committee also presented a report on Kalahandi, stating that labourers are being exploited by contractors in league with state agencies by being denied the minimum wage: "It appears that the labour department is very callous and has not insisted on minimum wages." It also found "accumulations of huge unspent balances" of anti-poverty funds "and target projects are not being achieved in various blocks." The report also referred to a lack of any visible progress by departments responsible for implementing the prime minister's welfare programme, Operation Salvage.

DEV DUTT PANDA

The Government says it spent Rs 39 lakh on building houses, roads and trench-fencing work.

Several hundred houses constructed in the district last year collapsed after the first monsoon showers.

DEV DUTT PANDA

The Government set up a weaving centre and promised loans for people to buy looms.

Officials were forcing them to buy looms for Rs 1,500 when they were available for Rs 1,000.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Non-stop to Europe.

Only Lufthansa can bring you 4 weekly flights from Delhi. And 4 weekly flights from Bombay. All bound for Frankfurt. All non-stop and all with arrival times designed to bring you the most convenient connections to Europe and North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

LH 1414-3 IND

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today homemakers no longer paint their walls. They create the atm

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls

Now for the first time a wall finish that helps you create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls. In the shades that you choose. In the mood that you want. Because Dulux Velvet Touch is a wall finish beyond compare. For it combines the richness of velvet and the inimitable glow of pearls. To give you the most luxurious atmospheres.

Dulux

Velvet Touch

the feel of velvet, a glow of pearls

The magic of Dulux. No one else has it!

IEL

IEL Limited

CLARION C-IEL VT-3

ngri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

21 reasons why more and more people will

Aarlon combines the durability of synthetic yarns and the comfort of the natural. No wonder so many people the world over are using it. It's success story even covers countries with the same tropical climate like ours. Now introduced for the first time in India, Aarlon will soon be widely used in the manufacture of undergarments, sportswear, furnishing fabrics and for industrial use. Here's why.

1. Low Electro Static build up

Aarlon has the lowest static component of any man-made fibre. Due to this feature, dust, dirt and grime are less likely to be attracted. Aarlon yarns therefore are extremely suitable for next to skin wear.

2. Outstanding Thermal Insulation Power

Aarlon has the lowest thermal conductivity of all fibres, and therefore, the highest insulation power.

3. Non Allergic and Anti-Bacteria

Fabrics in Aarlon do not cause allergy or bacterial growth, making it exceptionally suitable for hosiery, children's wear clinical and hospital uses, office/hotel furnishings.

4. Odour Free

Apparel and undergarments whether woven or knitted in Aarlon are odour free.

5. Keeps the skin dry

Because of its unique wicking action Aarlon transfers moisture from the skin to the outer surface where it is either absorbed or it evaporates increasing wearing comfort. You can forget the 'sticky' feeling, for Aarlon keeps the skin dry.

6. Bulk without weight

More fabric per kg of yarn — the fabric in Aarlon at the same weight has greater covering power than those in other fibres or the fabric has more bulk with same weight.

7. Dimensional Stability

Knitted or woven fabrics in Aarlon keeps its dimension during use and during washing.

8. Crease Resistance

The fabric in Aarlon has good resistance to wrinkle and crease.

9. Setting and Pleating Permanence

The thermo plasticity of Aarlon, allows it to obtain permanent folds and pleats on fabrics.

10. Supremely Washable

Fabrics in Aarlon are washable in water or can be dry cleaned, as Trichloroethylene and parachloroethylene do not affect this yarn.

11. Stain Removal & Cleaning

One of the advantages of Aarlon is the ability to release stains. This makes the removal of most spots and stains a simple matter.

12. Quick Drying

Because Aarlon is moisture repellent, garments made from it will dry faster than any other fibre.

13. Ironing Behaviour

Like silk, wool and other synthetic fibres, the fabrics in Aarlon must be ironed with a wet cloth interposed between the fabric and the iron, or with an iron at controlled temperature 100°C

14. Chemical Inertness

Aarlon is not affected by solvents containing entire range of acids, alkalies oxidents and reducers.

MORE VALUE aarlon MORE COMFORT

For more information contact:

Rajasthan Petro Synthetics Limited

4, Community Centre,
East of Kailash, New Delhi-110065
Phone: 6431418.
Telex: 031-61304 RPSD-IN

Fill the coupon below and mail it to us.

Please send me detailed information about Aarlon.

Name: _____

Designation: _____

Organisation: _____

Address: _____

_____

Phones: _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

will now be using Aarlon

15. Resistance to Damage by Rot, Mildew, & Insects

Aarlon neither supports the growth of Rot, Mildew & Insects nor is affected by them.

16. High Strength

Whether in wet or dry conditions, the strength of Aarlon yarn is comparable to Nylon yarn.

17. Good Resistance to Abrasion : Tough & Hard Wearing

High abrasion resistance is of utmost importance not only for industrial applications, but also for furnishing and clothing fabrics to obtain longer life. Aarlon has superior abrasion resistance in wet as well as in dry conditions. Fabrics in Aarlon wear considerably longer than other synthetic or natural fibres.

18. Unique Soil & Stain Resistance

Aarlon is highly resistant to soiling due mainly to its resistance to static and chemical inertness. It does not attract as much dirt or dust as other man-made fibres.

19. Resistance to sun light

Spun dyed and U.V. Stabilized Aarlon offers remarkable resistance to sunlight fading and degradation.

20. Exceptionally High Colour Fastness

Pigment dyed Aarlon yarns in a vast range of bright shades attain a high level of colour fastness to water, perspiration, light and atmospheric weathering agents. It has superior colour fastness compared to most conventionally dyed yarns viz. wool, nylon, acrylic etc.

21. It's Soft with a rich spun yarn look

Aarlon has a soft feel and the look of spun yarns. Making it an ideal yarn for children's wear and under garments.

Aarlon — the versatile yarn

Aarlon multi filament yarn is available in 3 varieties covering an entire range of fabrics for various uses:

Crimped yarns — used in the manufacture of undergarments, sportswear, apparel, socks, children's wear, swimsuits etc.

Fancy yarns — for the manufacture of decorative furnishing fabrics, curtains, carpets, bedspreads, car seat covers etc.

Industrial yarns — for belting, ropes, fishnets, filter fabrics, rubber liner fabrics, sewing threads, decorative light weight luggage, tarpaulin, tents etc.

Yes! Soon more and more people in India will be using Aarlon — the new synthetic filament yarn that's going to change your world.

aarlon

POLYPROPYLENE

It's changing our world

Systems-334

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As I gazed at the snow-clad mountains of the Himalayas, the balance sheets in my mind began to fade.

As a businessman,
I was obsessed with ascending graphs.

A stage came, when I began to see nothing but lines.
Be it a ladder, or the string of a flying kite, or even the ascending side of a mountain.

Finally I got tired of it all.
And made a get-away.

It was the second week of November. And Manali was beautiful amidst tall, dark and brooding pine trees, and the snow-clad mountains towering above.

The very sight of pure white snow wiped my mind clean.

But the crucial lesson came when I was trekking through the Rohtang Pass.

There I was, forty-five years of sound common sense, sliding down the snow on an ice-sledge, with the uncontrolled glee of a four-year-old.

It was then that I discovered life is for living.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"New India Assurance? Of course."

"Frankly, I know all about oil rigs and very little about general insurance. But one thing I do know... if it wasn't for New India insuring rigs like this, and given the rising cost of fuel, we'd still be driving bullock carts. (And, I believe they insure those, too)."

And there's more, much more that New India insure. Such as oil wells, thermal power plants, steel plants, potteries, truck fleets and computers... Just some of the many innovative facets of the services offered by New India.

As leaders in General Insurance, New India provide the widest range of covers to meet any and every insurance need... whether urban or rural, business or personal — adding upto more than 74 different policies.

Over 700 offices in India and abroad ensure that New India is always at your service... to answer all your insurance problems. Assuring you the security you need and improving the quality of life.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India.

So much security. For so little.

The New India range of assurance covers:
Cancer Insurance, Personal Accident, Hospitalisation and Domiciliary Hospitalisation Policy, Domestic Package Policy, All Risks Insurance, Burglary and House Breaking, Fire Insurance, Combined Fire and Theft, Passenger Flight, Public Liability, Carrier's Liability, Horse Insurance, Engineering Insurance, Professional Indemnity, Workmen's Compensation, Multi Perils, Fidelity Guarantee, Plate Glass, Business Interruption, Cash in Transit, Marine, New Well Insurance, Bullock Cart, Pump Set, Pedal Cycle and many more.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contour Ads-NIA-835C/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

House Breaking

FOR ASLAM Sher Khan, enough is obviously not enough. The former hockey Olympian, who quit his job with Indian Airlines for a more lucrative career in politics, has taken to acquiring houses now instead of goals. Not satisfied with his two houses in Bhopal—one an ancestral mansion and the other a Housing Board villa gifted by the Madhya Pradesh Government in recognition of his contribution to sports—the Congress(I) MP from Betul last fortnight grabbed another house in Bhopal, this one a government bungalow allotted to state Minorities Commission Chairman Shamsuddin. The state Government, of course, did not take action as the airlines-employee-turned-politician is said to be close to another airlines-employee-turned-politician who happens to be at the helm of affairs.

Close Encounter

IT'S AN unenviable lot that falls to a Congress(I) leader in West Bengal. Much like the meat in the sandwich, he has to face a simultaneous onslaught from various quarters—the state's ruling Marxists, his own partymen, and as PCC(I) chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi learnt to his discomfort last fortnight, armed desperadoes too. The leader was neck deep in party work when a group of menacing looking dissidents, armed with pipe-guns and rods, burst into his office, shouting anti-Das Munshi slogans. While one part of them confronted a shaken Das Munshi, the other went about ransacking the office. It was only thanks to the pluck of his security guard, and the timely arrival of a posse of Indian National Trade Union Congress workers, that the Pradesh Congress(I) Committee chief escaped certain death, or at least injury. And so all-pervading is the dissidence in the party that the troubled politician had a hard time fixing responsibility for the attack. The list of suspects swung from Union Law Minister Asoke Sen to PCC(I) General Secretary Subrata Mukherjee. Even after Party General Secretary R.L. Bhatia was sent rushing to solve the whodunit, the final shortlist had five names, whom the party decided to expel. Nonetheless, Das Munshi is still guessing.

Das Munshi: threatened

Blood Relations

RAMPURA Taluke Majra, an obscure hamlet 70 km from Shahjahanpur in Uttar Pradesh, suddenly woke up in the middle of the night to the shrieks of 13 members of a Sikh family who were hacked to death by a family member. The maniacal killer, Gurmeet Singh, 30, was the youngest son of Nazir Singh, the patriarch of the family. In his drunken orgy, Gurmeet, along with an accomplice, Lakkha Singh, killed his father, two of his brothers, their wives and his eight nieces and nephews. Gurmeet had always been the family's black sheep and had run away from home to Punjab where he met Lakkha Singh, a hard core criminal wanted on a murder charge. Gurmeet and Lakkha came back to the village to live with Gurmeet and Gurmeet's new wife, Dalbir Kaur. Police claim that Lakkha turned Gurmeet against his family, then he turned to the women in the family and developed relations with

SANJAY KUMAR TRIPATHI

Gurmeet Singh (right) and Lakkha Singh: snapping ties

Gurmeet's wife. Two days after Lakkha was caught making love to Dalbir by Nazir Singh, he and Gurmeet got together with the servant and attacked them with swords. Only four members of Nazir Singh's family survived the massacre.

Mourning Merit

THE DEATH occurred last fortnight of merit in the state of Andhra Pradesh. And "mourning the death of merit" throughout the state were students who expressed their grief by polishing shoes, sweeping streets, planting saplings and collecting clothes and money for the state's flood-victims. Underlying their novel campaign—provoked by the hike in reservation from 25 to 44 per cent—was the message: "No job is demeaning and merit knows no caste." Spearheading the protest, the Andhra Pradesh Nava Sangharshana Samithi organised a "challan bharo", collecting five paise each for the cremation of merit, a 6-km 'Merit Aid' run led by Asiad volleyballer Radhika Reddy and, borrowing a trick from Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao's bag of gimmicks, a procession of seven 'Pratibha Rathams' (merit chariots) in Hyderabad.

Students sweeping a street in Hyderabad: novel protest

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIKHS OUTSIDE PUNJAB

A Desperate Dilemma

AMONG the most tragic—and pathetic—victims of Sikh terrorism are the Sikhs themselves—millions of Sikhs who have made their homes and livelihoods outside Punjab and have prospered because of their skills and initiative. Many of them have never even stepped inside Punjab. But with increasing terrorism a pall of suspicion now surrounds this community which has lived in time-honoured religious fraternity with the Hindus. Because of a deeply-held psychological perception, real or imagined, among the majority community that moderate Sikhs have not boldly and vociferously denounced extremism, they are faced with a poignant existential dilemma: to stay where they are and repeatedly prove their nationalist credentials or to to give in to their fears and insecurities and migrate to Punjab from the only homes they have known. Thousands of them have already started leaving or, alternatively, clustering together in Sikh ghettos. Special Correspondent RAMINDAR SINGH travelled to Kanpur, Patna, Calcutta, and Bombay to gauge the feelings of Sikhs and report on their dilemma:

FOUR days a week, the Tata Express links Kanpur with Amritsar. Every time the train steams out of Kanpur railway station, it carries at least two Sikh families who are moving back to Punjab with bag and baggage. Sometimes more, but almost never less. In this way, the one lakh-strong Sikh population of Kanpur, Uttar Pradesh's worst-hit town during the November 1984 violence, is slowly dwindling.

"Half the property owned by Kanpur Sikhs has already been sold, sometimes at half the market price. No Sikh has bought land here after 1984. Not a brick has been added to houses that were being built," laments Bhajan Singh, a 58-year-old shopkeeper of the Birhana Road market. He says that a quarter of the Sikhs in the town have departed.

Whether it is Kanpur, Patna, Delhi or Haryana, and now Pune, the story is the same. A proud community, which till two years ago was the toughest warp in the country's socio-economic fabric, is now beset by fear and doubts about its future. The activities of the terrorists create turbulence for Sikh communities around the country but most of all in the Hindi belt states, where the hostility they face is thick and palpable. Some arm themselves; others, in a siege mentality, fortify their houses with iron railings. All this has left them confused, bitter and a little helpless; hostage to the developments in Punjab.

Take the plight of Patna's 7,000 Sikh families. Local toughs saunter down the middle of the road leading to the historic Gurudwara Harimandir Sahib, the birthplace of Guru Gobind Singh, daring motorists to brush past them. Sikhs are taunted constantly: "Sardarji kab Khalistan lay rahe ho (when will you get Khalistan)?" So, though estimates vary, many have left. Saran Singh, former Bihar chief secretary, claims that "at least half the Sikhs in Patna and Ranchi have left". Charanjit Singh, grandson of the gurudwara head priest argues that, in fact, "75 per cent of the Sikhs have left" and the head priest, Bhai Maan Singh, says that three-quarters of the visitors to the gurudwara are now Hindus. In the gallis and mohallas around the gurudwara, house after house is either locked or has been sold.

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Some arm themselves; others, in a siege mentality, fortify their houses with iron railings. This has left the Sikhs bitter.

Harbhajan Singh, who runs a small cloth shop near the gurudwara, is clearly worried. With so many of his neighbours and friends having moved away, he confesses he takes a Calmpose every night before sleeping. In the group of shopkeepers sitting by his side is a former neighbour, Iqbal Singh, who recently ended a 40-year association with Patna, sold his shop and house and migrated to Punjab. "I now come here only to sell goods," he said. Almost all the others in the group have sent their families away.

But it is difficult to say whether those that have left are any better off than those who have stayed behind. The feeling of vulnerability persists as much for those remaining behind as for the truncated families in faraway Punjab. Safety is a perceived state and nowhere is this more poignant than in Delhi, which has the largest concentration of Sikhs outside Punjab.

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Sikh Forum says about 25,000 Delhi families have completely or partially shifted. "Anyone who could afford it has gone," asserts Lt-General J.S. Aurora. Things had cooled down somewhat after the Punjab accord, but with that having come unstuck and the July 26, post-Muktsar riots in Delhi, uncertainty once again clouds the future plans of Delhi Sikhs. "All the businessmen who could make alternative arrangements in Punjab have done so. Everyone who has an establishment here is wondering how long he can continue being safe outside Punjab," says Manmohan Singh, managing director of Frick India and vice-president of the Punjab, Haryana and Delhi Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Entrenched factory owners like him and Raunaq Singh cannot obviously move out. But others like Texla TV have moved lock, stock and barrel to Mohali, near Chandigarh, the Ranbaxy group of companies has located two new plants in Punjab, while Continental Device, owned by Gurpreet Singh, former president of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry, has started a separate unit in Chandigarh.

More than anything else, the Sikhs outside Punjab mourn the loss of their place in public esteem. And many blame local newspapers for this. Said Manmohan Singh Kalra of Calcutta: "When a Sikh performs an act of bravery, only he is rewarded. But when a terrorist kills people, why is the whole community branded?" And former national pistol shooting champion Lt-Colonel P.S. Cheema is distressed that people doubt the Sikhs' nationalism. "I spent my entire life in the army and my son, an air force pilot, died in the service of the nation. What more proof of patriotism can I give? It upsets us Sikhs that despite being Indian, we are not being regarded as Indian." Saran Singh echoes this: "Everyone looks on a turbaned man with a degree of suspicion. When spies were caught a year ago, nobody called them Hindu spies. I say a terrorist is a terrorist, and the Government should come down on him with a heavy hand. The Punjab terrorists are not Sikhs; religion does not sanction violence. Before my guru or in my gurudwara, I am a Sikh and only a Sikh. But in the rest I am an Indian first and last. Why should I be doubted? I refuse to prove my patriotism."

IN THE illogical atmosphere of communal suspicion, some periodic demonstrative action by the Sikhs to reiterate their nationalism may be called for, even if it goes against their grain. Though the majority, however wrongly, view most Sikhs as fence-sitters on the issue of terrorism, probably because terrorism is seen as having originated in religious sentiment, most Sikhs outside Punjab are against Khalistan and say so. "The terrorists want dahshat (terror) to spread so that a Khalistan is formed. And we, who are asked to uproot home and hearth once again, will be Khalistan's first victims," says Bhajan Singh in anguish. Giani Nidharak Singh of Bombay's Koliwada is more forthright: "It's strange that a couple of mad terrorists with the help of Pakistan kill a few people in Punjab and in large parts of the country, Hindus organise themselves to attack us. The Hindus in Punjab have only the terrorists to fear as no Sikh mob in the state has attacked the Hindus. We face the prospect of ordinary people around us becoming mobs."

Younger Sikhs like Bombay's Amardeep Singh blame the Akalis' internal squabbles for queering the pitch for normalisation in Punjab and outside. "We are partly to blame. The idolisation of Bhindranwale by Punjab youth has proved counter-productive to the whole community," he says. Some Bombay Sikh leaders recently made it a point to participate prominently in the birthday celebrations of a Marathi savant Guru Namdev. And in Calcutta, Saran Singh himself joined a peace march organised by local Sikhs. "Every Sikh must believe his future and the country's future are interlinked," he declared.

Calcutta and Bombay are isolated islands of peace, and a drive past the Victoria Memorial provides proof that Calcutta's Sikhs are a more relaxed lot. Early every morning, the city's paunchy Sikh traders park their Marutis and Ambassadors by the kerbside and grunt and wheeze through the ritual game of volleyball they have played every morning for 20 years. One of them, Sarnagat Singh Sahni, complains he is treated like a common criminal when he travels out of the country. "Why such treatment, aren't we proper citizens of India?" Sahni says that in 1984, the Jyoti Basu Government managed to control things, "but what can you predict about mob behaviour?" Adds Gurbachan Singh Sethi, a motor parts dealer: "The bang bang will continue. But as long as the CPI(M) is in power we are safe in West Bengal." But safety is a relative thing, as Kulwant Singh Kohli, a prominent Bombay hotelier, found out. Just days before the Vaidya assassination, Kohli proudly

"I spent my life in the army, and my son died in the air force. What more proof of patriotism can I give?" —LT-COL. P.S. CHEEMA

"There is no show-sha even during weddings. We go to the gurudwara and that is it." —JOGINDER SINGH, Kanpur

Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Ha

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

pointed to the new 75-room luxury hotel he was building in Dadar, to illustrate that Sikhs were still expanding their businesses in Bombay. Ironically, his hotel was the first Sikh property to be damaged by a bomb in the wake of the assassination.

Kanpur industrialist and philanthropist Sajjan Singh Taluja, 70, the biggest manufacturer of oil expelling machinery in the country, illustrates the predicament many Sikhs are caught in. A school that he runs and his house were looted in the 1984 riots but Sajjan Singh vows to stay on. "If we must die we will die here," he declares, but at the same time refuses to refurnish his large home, which is still bare. And, in an attempt to reduce his assets, Taluja has closed down two of his three factories, "in case I have to leave". On the one hand is the never-say-die spirit which helped him build his industrial enterprise, and on the other, there is doubt and uncertainty.

UNLIKE him, Manjit Singh Kalra, who also has doggedly stuck on to his three-storeyed house in Kidwai Nagar, demonstrates a siege mentality. The Kalras have moved up from the ground floor to the third floor, installed a heavy steel grill at the entrance and by way of insurance, rented out the lower floors to Hindu families. "Hum danga peerit log hain (we are riot-affected people)," says his wife with an embarrassed laugh, apologising for the lack of furniture in the otherwise ornate house.

Everywhere, local politicians, toughs and rabble-rousers keep the tensions and Sikh fears alive. Kanpur's Sikhs point to the fiery speech by local Congress(I) MLA, Vilayati Ram Katyal, in which he exhorted Hindus not to buy the property of departing Sikhs. The meeting turned into a procession which closed markets in its path and created tension in the town. Bihar Rajya Sabha member S.S. Ahluwalia sent the prime minister copies of offensive posters in Lucknow and Patna virtually calling for a pogrom of the Sikhs, put up by the Bajrang Brigade, a militant off-shoot of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad. And in Bombay, after the murder of General Vaidya, Shiv Sena chief Bal Thackeray warned that any further terrorist action in Maharashtra would invite reprisals. As a local Sikh businessman asked: "Reprisals against whom? The local Sikhs? What have we done?" And in Delhi, the BJP, with its eye on future elections, kept an agitation going for weeks on the question of Hindu migrants from Punjab. All that the charged atmosphere of Delhi needed was a flashpoint, and the terrorists helpfully provided that at Muktsar.

Prosperous Sikhs say some of the hostility towards them may be economic. In most riot cases, unprincipled politicians and fundamentalists provide the spark and then the lumpen elements take over. "In Delhi, the Hindu Manch, Shiv Sena and BJP have motivated the lower class and the criminal fringe and given them status and respectability. Such people have now got used to looting," charges Mahip Singh of the Sikh Forum. To keep a low profile, many Sikhs have now simplified their lifestyle. Says Jogindar Singh of Kanpur: "There is no show-sha, lighting or decoration, even during weddings. We go to the gurudwara for the ceremony and that is it." Added Dilip Singh of Patna: "Earlier we used to live with thaath (style), now we don't move out after 7 p.m."

Reversing the Sikh diaspora would not be a solution to such problems. It would, in fact, create greater problems for the country, the Sikhs and Punjab. Neither is it possible for everyone to move. Except Jat Sikhs, who maintain an umbilical link with their village homes and land in Punjab, most other Sikhs, who migrated directly to Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Calcutta or Bombay after partition, have no such connection with the state. Operation Bluestar established an emotional link between Punjab and these Sikhs, but they are helpless to influence events in the state; yet they feel the backlash of each one. They are mere traders, rugged individualists who did not need the cement of community feeling to bond them together. Adversity has created that bond, but they still lack leadership. Leaderless, they are numbed by the suspicion that both the Barnala Government and Punjab's extremists have written them off as expatriate Sikhs, as G.S.

A Bihari by birth and upbringing, head priest Bhai Maan Singh speaks no Punjabi. He'd be a misfit in Punjab.

"The terrorists want dahshat to spread, and we, the uprooted, will be Khalistan's first victims." —BHAJAN SINGH, Kanpur

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tohra jokingly suggested while talking to Bombay Sikhs recently. Avtar Singh Bagga, secretary of the Patna Gurudwara Managing Committee complains that the five head priests told him: "We cannot take responsibility for outstate Sikhs. You all come to Punjab."

That's easier said than done. And nobody realises it more than Avtar Singh Manchanda, 38, who was born in Patna, spent all his life there and never travelled beyond Delhi till the day he dispatched his family off to Ludhiana. Appearances apart, Sikhs like Manchanda are more Bihari than Punjabi. A striking example of this cultural divide is head priest Bhai Maan Singh. A Bihari by birth and upbringing, the old man speaks not a word of Punjabi. Questions put to him in Punjabi have to be translated into Bhojpuri by his grandson. Maan Singh would be a total misfit were he to change places with the head priest of a major Punjab gurudwara. And herein lies the tragedy of the situation. Where do such people go?

FIFTY-year-old Pritam Kaur, wife of a Calcutta taxi owner, succinctly voices the common dilemma: "Na assi jaan jogay na rahen jogay. Punjab vich khaavan gay ki (We can neither stay nor go. How will we survive in Punjab if we go there)?" When her husband, Gurbachan Singh, suggests that they should return to Punjab, Pritam Kaur snorts: "Do you expect our boys to till land in Punjab?" The suspicion with which Sikhs are viewed often leads to gross miscarriage of justice. Like the arrest and torture, at Calcutta, of 21 villagers from Ferozepore who were boarding a Dhaka flight on July 7. They were charged with sedition till The Telegraph pointed out that they were mere dupes lulled by a travel agent into believing that highly-paid jobs awaited them in Lebanon. They had sold their land and belongings in Punjab to pay the travel agent. A similar incident took place in Gurgaon. The Delhi police raided and arrested the staff of a non-resident-owned export factory manufacturing ornamental rosewood and mother-of-pearl grips for revolvers. The police and local newspapers went to town proclaiming that a large gun manufacturing factory had been unearthed with "links to an international gun-running syndicate". An inquiry was ordered by the Prime Minister's Secretariat but the irate NRI-owner, Harbans Singh, is shifting part of the operation to Punjab and the rest to the Philippines. "I will pull out the Rs 50 lakh to Rs 60 lakh I have invested here," he said, "even if I get 70 paise for the rupee."

Harbans Singh could pull his money out, but all the Sikhs living elsewhere cannot shift to Punjab. "There won't be enough space in Punjab to park all the trucks and taxis owned by Sikhs in this country," remarked Lt-Colonel Cheema. But for every trader and industrialist who has moved to Punjab, there are hundreds who have stayed back. An ambitious, adventurous community which could not be contained by national boundaries, can hardly be expected to remain constricted within the confines of a postage-stamp size state like Punjab.

"Sikhs don't want Khalistan, because India is our country. Saara Hindustan saada hai." —MANMOHAN SINGH BEDI, ex-mayor, Bombay

Calcutta is an isolated island of peace. A drive past Victoria Memorial shows that Sikhs here are a more relaxed lot.

The desire for a solution to the Punjab problem and peace in the state fills the hearts of Sikhs everywhere. "Sachay padshah shanti rakhin (almighty God, keep things peaceful)" is the prayer Surinder Kaur Sohi of Patna recites daily.

But how can peace be brought about? "The Punjab accord must be implemented and the Hindus in Punjab must be given confidence. If they continue to migrate, it will affect Sikhs living outside Punjab," suggests Inder Singh Gandhi of Kanpur. Urges S.S. Bhatti, a Bombay businessman: "Rajiv must take the bull by the horns and talk to the representatives of the All India Sikh Students Federation and Damdami Taksal. If the present leadership (in Punjab) has failed, an alternative should be tried." And Pritam Singh Sohi of Patna warns: "The family whose members fight is destroyed. That nation whose communities fight is destroyed." Interjects Bombay's former mayor, Manmohan Singh Bedi: "Sikhs don't want Khalistan, because India is our country. Saara Hindustan saada hai." But ultimately, everyone agrees with the prescription of Gurcharan Singh Kochar, chairman of the Punjab-Maharashtra Cooperative Bank: "Punjab nay bachna hai tay Sikhan nay bachna hai (Sikhs will be saved if Punjab is saved)." And for that, it's not too late.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today, instead of passing the buck, let's try earning one instead.

"Come back after a week."
"It's not my Department."
"But we've been doing it like this for years."
"It can't be done."

Tragically, it's almost become an accepted part of our business ethic.

But wait, there is someone who can put a stop to all this.

You.

When you, in your own sphere don't start saying the same things.

When you break the vicious circle.

Sure, there is always reason enough to put someone off, but remember what it felt like when it happened to you.

How the job got delayed.
Quality suffered.
Costs went up.

The new social and commercial climate in our country needs a new and dynamic attitude from us.

At least that's the way we at Buckau Wolf see it.

We could have utilised all this space and money to emphasize the sophisticated machines we make.

All those difficult projects we handled with ease.

How profitable we are.

Our access to the technology of our West German principals, Krupp.

But that's not as important as reminding ourselves that we can't take India into the 21st century if our attitudes remain in the 13th.

That today, instead of passing the buck, we should try and earn one instead.

A large cement plant - a symbol of the qualitative changes in Buckau Wolf. From a company largely known over the years for its superior sugar machines to a company respected today for its diverse engineering skills. The result of a collective effort to respond positively to the dramatic industrial change in India.

Buckau Wolf India Limited
Pimpri, Pune 411 018.

KRUPP BUCKAU WOLF
More than engineers. People with a sense of values.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Nexus/BW/5a

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

P.C. SETHI

"I am not crazy"

JUST when the political grapevine in Delhi had begun to dismiss him in 'out of sight, out of mind' terms, Prakash Chandra Sethi, the Congress(I) MP from Indore who has held several portfolios in the Union Cabinet including home, besides the chief ministership of Madhya Pradesh for four and a half years, was back in the headlines. With a display of rash, idiosyncratic behaviour that left a trail of controversy from Srinagar to Delhi, he was back in form while reputations tumbled and his party leaders watched in red-faced stupor.

This bull in the china shop spell culminated last fortnight in the Kidwai Bhawan trunk telephone exchange in Delhi. "They did not give my lightning call to Bombay for two hours and I offered to go and find out what was the problem," he says, justifying his midnight inspection tour of the phone exchange manned by "fat and lazy women". But it was no ordinary inspection for Sethi stormed into the exchange with his Czech-made pistol at the ready ("I put it in my pocket when I entered the exchange," he says). The result; a row with the exchange staff who struck work and also shattered over Rs 1 crore worth of imported equipment.

This was the third time Sethi had made news in the capital within a week. On Independence day he had clashed with officials including Home Minister Buta Singh for not seating him in the front row at the Red Fort function and, later in the day had an angry exchange at the Rashtrapati Bhawan reception with the prime minister who chided him for "first of all coming late and then fighting for a front-row seat". There are many versions as to what exactly Sethi said to Rajiv Gandhi. But eye witnesses say he expressed doubts about the pedigree of the Union Cabinet members. Sethi who repeatedly pleads: "I am not crazy, I am fit as a fiddle," refers to his letter to the prime minister which begins with an apology for "having spoken to you in a loud voice".

The trouble at Rashtrapati Bhawan began when the ushers refused his 10-year-old grand-niece Sonal to go along with him and his wife, as children were not invited. But Sethi managed to bully his way in. In his letter he reminds the prime minister that on seeing Sonal "you smiled and you were very happy when she presented a rose to the President and to you a rajnigandha (tuberose)." The action resumed when the prime minister pulled him up for the tantrums at the Red Fort. Sethi concludes his letter. "I respect you and you have always respected me. You call my wife chachiji and me Sethiji."

> I used to drink foreign whiskey, cognac, red and white wine. But madam told me to stop.

> I spent Rs 5 lakh a month for information from Punjab. Had madam listened to me history would have been different.

> I want to stay within the party and reform it from inside. I do not want to leave like Pranab Mukherjee.

But it was quite obvious that Rajiv was upset with Sethi for many other reasons. Just a day before, he had held the administration in Chandigarh in terrified embarrassment by standing at the balcony of his state guest-house room, screaming that he was going to be assassinated and that his security was inadequate. He had officials on tenterhooks for four hours in which they summoned an ambulance and fire brigade, till senior officials came and he agreed to unbolt the door at six in the morning. "They were going to kill me. There was a plot. I am the second on the Bluestar hit-list. Number one, Mrs Gandhi and number three, Vaidya are already gone," he repeatedly says.

This paranoia of the hit-list explains some of his recent shenanigans. At Srinagar, where he had gone to "relax" before going to Chandigarh, Sethi got upset on finding that the geyser in his Pahalgam room had its light on but did not heat water. Curiously, he discovered the same problem with the geyser at Chandigarh. "There was sabotage at both places to kill me," he asserts.

His prime concern is his security and, besides the extremists, he also sees a lot of "threats from within". He thinks party Vice-President Arjun Singh is constantly plotting against him. He says Arjun Singh planned the trouble in Chandigarh through trusted officers "whom he bought there while he was the governor" and of planting newspaper stories against him by using the "PBI" (PIB, Press Information Bureau) in a manner worse than in the Emergency.

In the midst of this controversy, perhaps the most serious of his career, which has had its moments of comedy, however embarrassing, he spoke to INDIA TODAY Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA for three hours. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. Have you apologised for your conduct at the telephone exchange in Delhi?

A. No, that is wrong. In fact I am planning to sue Mr Mirdha, PIB, telephone department and the police. They have deliberately defamed me. Mr Mirdha has not done the right thing.

Q. But why did Mr Mirdha do this?

A. I will tell you how it happened. Bhajan Lalji first took a blank paper signed by me in good faith. Later when he came back around 11.30 p.m. with the draft, I said, Bhajan Lalji yeh draft nahin chalega. I did not go to the exchange unauthorised or as a trespasser. I came on the invitation of the monitor. Trespassers are those persons who are security risks. How could I be a security risk when I have a security risk on myself? I had my security. I had my licenced pistol which I put in my shirt pocket before entering.

Q. Then it must be a small weapon with short range?

A. No, no. It is a Czech brand which now costs Rs 40,000. It can shoot up to 200 yards. According to Home Ministry instructions, hit-listed people should carry it like this (gestures with the palm in shooting position) without the lock. But before I entered, I put the lock.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. When did you learn to fire it? Have you practised at a range?

A. Of course, when I was the chief minister of Madhya Pradesh. I will show you where I shoot. (Moves to the large tree in the backyard of his Safdarjang Road bungalow and points towards the large blotch on the trunk where the bark has been blown off). I can shoot beautifully.

Q. Were you drunk or intoxicated when you went to the exchange?

A. How could I be drunk when I gave up drinking so long ago? I used to drink foreign whiskey, cognac or red and white wine. But once Madam called my wife and me and asked me to promise that I would never drink. Now once I promised her, I cannot drink. So when the allegation was made I went to the hospital. The two doctors on duty said. "Sir, where is the need for a test? We will give you a certificate just like that." I said no. I insisted on the test.

Q. Do you think the Punjab problem has been handled properly?

A. Not at all. If they had taken my advice, history would have been different. When Atwal was killed I went to Madam and said this is the time. I will lose 50 to 60 people but I shall bring Bhindranwale to you tomorrow morning dead or alive. But she did not decide.

Q. Why was she hesitant?

A. Because of people like Rao Saheb and Alexander. Even Rajiv. They said the Sikh opinion will turn against us.

Q. And didn't you agree?

A. No. I said a Sikh DIG has been killed. The Sikh opinion is with you. Today Bhindranwale is in the serai and you can do it. I told Madam that within 10 days he will move to the Akal Takht. I said this information is from my sources.

Q. What do you mean by "my own information?"

A. I spent Rs 5 lakh every month for information from Punjab. All home ministers have a fund from which they can spend for such work.

Q. Didn't you have serious problems with Punjab and Assam?

A. To tell you the truth, I was the home minister for all things minus Punjab and Assam. These two were handled by the committee of ministers. Left to me, things would have been different. Now, had Lal Bahadur Shastri been prime minister, you think he would have waited to amend the Constitution? No one would have known a thing and overnight the forces would have crossed into Pakistan.

Q. You think Lal Bahadur Shastri was a much more decisive prime minister than the present one?

A. So was Indira Gandhi. After all she was the one who did Bangladesh in 1971.

Q. But didn't even she show a lot of weaknesses later?

BHAWAN SINGH

A. Yes, after Sanjay's death. She became a completely different person. She did not cry in front of anyone. But she cried in front of me. She said she had lost her everything.

Q. Are you happy with the way the Government is going?

A. What do I say? Now see how they removed Shah (in Kashmir). Till the last moment they kept on saying that he would not be removed. Lekin yeh jo baitha hai yehan par Fotedar (But this Fotedar is operating here). He is Mufti's (the Kashmir Congress-I leader) man. Mufti wanted to become chief minister with the breakaway group from Shah's party. Rajiv had asked me. "Sethiji, what do we do about Kashmir?" I said, call Mufti to the Centre. Make Mir Qasim the president of the Kashmir PCC(I), make Farooq's wife the CM and send Farooq away as an ambassador.

Q. But isn't Farooq's wife a foreigner?

A. O.K, if she is a foreigner then make Farooq the chief minister. It is just that he is a slippery customer. Like that MGR.

Q. Isn't it true that the governor himself wants to rule Kashmir for some time?

A. Yes. Phir to aur marengey (they will suffer even more). He has already started beautifying Srinagar. He has broken a bridge upsetting 6,000 people. Once a man acquires a habit, it is difficult for him to shed it. At this rate we will lose more Muslim votes. Already the BJP has won a by-election in Jammu. Now who takes care of all this when Fotedar and Arun Singh have taken on the role of advisers? Arun Nehru was a better adviser. (Now) you have Shiv Shankar, Arjun Singh.

Q. What is the state of the party?

A. The prime minister takes advice only from these people. There are no standards. When a train accident took place, Lal Bahadur Shastri quit. Mrs Gandhi was killed when Narasimha Rao was home minister. He is still there. Look at Jaipal Reddy's allegations against Madhavrao Scindia. In spite of their efforts to stop it, many newspapers carried it. They did not want the Pandora's box opened. But it has been opened. When does Madhavrao Scindia come and sit in the central hall (of Parliament) now? He doesn't.

Q. You say Arjun Singh is plotting against you. Why should he do that?

A. Because that has been his style of politics for many years. In politics he is like a snake; you don't know through which burrow he will enter and through which he will escape. Muh mein ram-ram bagal mein chhuri (He talks sweetly but carries a dagger by his side).

Q. What are your political plans for the future? Are you happy with the way you are now?

A. I want to stay within the party and reform it from inside. I do not want to leave like Pranab Mukherjee. But at the same time if these people insist on turning me out of the party what can I do? But Rajiv Gandhi knows my loyalty to him.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Smile. Skypak has just placed four aircraft at your disposal!

And this can revolutionize the way you've been doing business. These aircraft will help give your package a flying start to a guaranteed delivery within 24 hours for at least 70 destinations all over India!

How are we going to do it? Well, imagine this for a start.

Every day. Yes, every day 4 Vayudoot aircraft touching eight major airports, will converge at Nagpur.

They will exchange notes. And they will exchange documents and packages. And before the dust can settle they will be on their way back to their respective starting points.

Your packages therefore will be very close to their specific destinations while the night is still young! And at no point in transit will they be out of our total control.

So it's only obvious that we're calling it the Skypak Overnite. A special service that has suddenly taken the courier business beyond the horizons. Almost overnight.

SKYPAK OVERNITE

We've put time on your side.

SKYPAK OVERNITE: Off M. Vissanji Road, Marol, Andheri (E), Bombay-400 059.
Ph: 6342853/6348226/6320881/6320354.

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

Avenues: SC: 281:86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Himachal's newest package of pure adventure.....

New! Exciting!

SARĀHAN TO SĀNGLĀ VALLEY

Trekking Programme, Sept. 26th—Oct. 12th 1986

Discover a whole new world of great natural beauty... quaint flora & fauna...exciting topography. Experience Kinnaur—a retreat of unspoilt charm, steeped amidst Himalayan ranges. Blooming with apple and apricot orchards, fascinating trekking terrains and exotic tribal folklife.

Join the maiden Sarāhan to Sānglā Valley

TREKKING PROGRAMME.

For the first time, trekking is being organised in a new, unexplored area. in collaboration with THE YOUTH HOSTELS ASSOCIATION OF INDIA.

- Entries are with Police verification.
- Apply for entries before Sept. 20th 1986, to Youth Hostels Association of India 5, Nayaya Marg, Chankaya Puri, New Delhi-110 021, Phone: 3016250

Compacta

For information please write or contact: Chandralok Bldg., 36, Janpath, New Delhi, Phones: 345320, 352104

Dy. General Manager,

Himachal Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation Limited
Ritz Annexe, Simla-171 001
Phones: 3977, 5071

HIMACHAL
THE TREKKERS' PARADISE... ALL THE WAY!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FRESH PASTURES

THE MODIS, who have been going through a rough patch rcently, and whose fibre project has run into a wall of opposition from the Birlas, have signed up a series of new foreign collaborations. A deal has already been sewn up with the German Triumph-Adler to manufacture electronic typewriters, and another is on the anvil with the Italian Olivetti (now a subsidiary of American AT&T) for a range of computers. A collaboration has been clinched with the reputed American Champion for the manufacture of spark plugs, though an earlier project for automobile ancillaries has been given up. A fourth project being readied is for photofilm and the Modis are negotiating for a collaborator. Some of the group's projects had been held up in the past because it had been black-listed by the Finance Ministry. But with tax money now being paid up regularly, the required clearances are expected to come through.

PRESTIGE PROJECT

THE TTK group is floating a new company in association with Britain's Prestige group to manufacture stickproof cookingware, pressure cookers and portable barbecue stands at Hosur in Tamil Nadu. The group already makes some items in this range, but is expanding production with an eye to breaking into the vast unexplored markets of South-East Asia. The new venture is to be called Prestige Housewares (India) Ltd. The group is also branching out into hard gelatine capsule machinery. Sales from the two projects are expected to be anything in the region of Rs 15 crore once business gets fully under way.

CALIFORNIA DREAM

THE FIRST bank founded by Indians outside India will begin business in San Francisco this month. The First Indo-American Bank, initially conceived nearly five years ago and formally moved nearly three years ago, has been organised predominantly by non-resident Indians—most of them based in California, but including Hari Harilela of Hong Kong. The bank has now collected the minimum opening share subscription of $ 7.5 million (over Rs 9 crore) after several months of effort in a competitive market for funds. Substantial share subscriptions came in from the motel-owning Patels of California. The bank is expected to cater mainly to the needs of Indians in California, especially the small and medium-sized business and professional enterprises in and around San Francisco, including the hotel and motel business.

PRIVATE MOVES

WITH private consultants (both resident and non-resident) quite the government-rage, public sector units are taking a leaf from the Government's book. Three West Bengal-based public sector drug companies, all losing ventures, are about to invite private consultants to look into ways of rehabilitating them. No decision has yet been taken on the appointments, but the consultants are supposed to submit reports three to five months after they swing into action. Smith Stanistreet, Bengal Chemicals and Pharmaceuticals and Bengal Immunity have combined losses of about Rs 15 crore in the last five years. Earlier, the Government was considering other options, but action must now await the consultants' opinion.

GOLD RUSH

FOR ALMOST three months from the middle of April, gold prices had fallen steadily. Now, suddenly, bullion prices have gone through the roof. In early July, gold was on offer in Bombay at no more than Rs 2,105 for 10 grammes. By August 21, this had shot up to Rs 2,245: an increase of almost one per cent every week. Silver prices have similarly been climbing up the charts, from Rs 3,945 for a kilogramme in early July to Rs 4,114 by August 21. Several factors have brought about the sudden spurt: currency fluctuations, trends in smuggling, and uncertainty about current economic trends.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

GIANT MERGER

THE STATE Trading Corporation of India (STC) and the Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation of India (MMTC) are sizeable companies, but a Rs 5,000-crore-turnover colossus could emerge if a proposal to merge the two goes through. The proposal, awaiting Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shankar's clearance, recommends the formation of Bharat International Trading Corporation on the lines of the Japanese sogo shoshas, or general trading houses. A note which may go to the Cabinet argues that STC and MMTC together represent a buying power of almost Rs 5,000 crore in world markets, that the new trading conglomerate can use this to advantage, and that duplication of effort and infrastructure abroad can thereby be avoided. However, even if the Government agrees, it may not put all the STC and MMTC subsidiaries under the trading corporation. S.V.S. Raghavan, till recently common chairman of both companies, and now only the MMTC chairman, is pushing for the proposal.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The whole world is in the hands of Ganapati

The Largest Manufacturer Trading House of Select Products in India.

Since its inception in 1977, Ganapati Exports has taken a wide variety of Indian products to buyers around the world and is constantly exploring new markets. Subsequently, they won not only international goodwill but also National Awards for Outstanding Performance in Exports and in 1984-85 the Government of India has bestowed upon them the distinction as a Trading House.

कर्मण्येवाधिकारस्ते मा फलेषु कदाचन । मा कर्मफलहेतुर्भूर्मा ते सङ्गोऽस्त्वकर्मणि ॥ — भगवद्गीता

"YOUR RIGHT IS TO WORK ONLY,
BUT NEVER TO THE FRUIT THEREOF
LET NOT THE FRUIT OF ACTION BE YOUR OBJECT.
NOR LET YOUR ATTACHMENT BE TO INACTION" – BHAGAVADGITA

GANAPATI EXPORTS LIMITED
(A recognised Trading House)
225D Lower Circular Road Calcutta 700 020
Phone : 44-0702/5296/5653
Cable : CALGANAPEX
Telex : 021-7492 "GANXIN"
021-2942 "GANTIN"

DPS/GEP-861

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Reliance Example

THE controversy that has erupted around the alleged wholesale infringement of the country's export-import, industrial licensing and banking laws by Reliance Industries highlights how, over three decades, this country's economic laws have become instruments for providing stagnation not growth, increasing social inequalities instead of reducing them, and augmenting social tensions instead of dissipating them.

Reliance stands accused of cornering Rs 100 crore in bank loans to speculate in its own debentures, of salting foreign exchange away in tax havens abroad for a variety of purposes, including the purchase of its own shares, of "smuggling" in polyester filament yarn plants, and last but not least of corrupting virtually the country's entire bureaucracy and intelligentsia.

A close look at the accusations shows that while they contain some truth, they are highly exaggerated. To take one aspect of the "Reliance loan mela" first, a four-member committee has already cleared Reliance of the charge of speculation, and concluded that it had only indulged in support operations for its shares in the stock exchange. This, the committee has pointed out, is a common practice among large companies.

The other two accusations are a good deal less well founded. There can be no doubt that the Chairman of Reliance, Dhirubhai Ambani, was able to raise Rs 22.5 crore abroad literally over a weekend. But the Indian Express gives no evidence to support the implied contention that the money belonged to Reliance's managers, and not to Asian investors abroad as Ambani claims. And it is possible to fault some of the premises of the 'machinery smuggling' accusation and ask for a good deal more proof.

But my purpose is not to enter into a lengthy defence of Reliance, or to suggest that the more serious charges made against it should not be examined. There is enough evidence in the Express articles, and indeed in much else that has been rumoured or written about this amazing company, to lend strong support to the belief that it has merrily violated the spirit if not the letter of not one but a score of laws designed to regulate economic activity.

My purpose is to ask whether the laws that Reliance has violated ever made sense. Take the "loan mela" first: even if the Ambanis' benamis made a killing on the resale of the debentures they bought, where would the money have gone? A great deal would have gone to the Government in taxes and the rest would have been invested in more Reliance shares to finance further increases in investment and output. It is also possible that Reliance's managers cornered debentures and shares to prevent a dilution of their degree of control over the company. Since Indian laws virtually force promoters to dilute their shareholdings if they wish to expand, and since this has made company after company vulnerable to hostile take-over bids, can Reliance's management be altogether blamed for seeking to postpone this evil day as long as possible?

> "Licensing and import curbs combine to create a shortage regime from which competition is eliminated. Only inefficient producers and black-marketeers benefit."

Reliance has also been accused of consistently producing far more than its licensed capacity and seeking to create a monopoly. Apart from the fact that the way to prevent the growth of monopolistic conditions is to free access to all industries, it is necessary to ask: did capacity-based industrial licensing ever make sense? As far back as in the mid-1960s, economists Jagdish Bhagwati and Padma Desai had pointed out that such licensing discourages increases in productivity. More recently, the Government has been dismantling capacity constraints because it has at last realised how harmful these are. But what if growth has been through clandestine expansion instead of increased efficiency? The answer is that over-investment in plant and machinery has been going on for 30 years, and is a product of the licensing system itself. Reliance may have excelled in bending the rules, but it has done no more than what hundreds, if not thousands, of enterprises have been doing for the last three decades.

The central question is: what was Reliance's aim in exploiting loopholes in the law? Was it to make money for the owners, to spend in riotous living, or was it to speed up still further the growth of the company? In a poor country, beset by shortages of products and rising unemployment, is it a crime to produce more?

What purpose are laws serving that aim to restrict production, and make those who raise output in the face of these laws vulnerable to prosecution? If Reliance's growth falters, if its share prices plummet and future debenture issues start failing, if banks cut off lines of credit and create cash flow problems, who will gain? Will it be the consumer, who faces inflated prices today because of the perennial shortage of synthetic textiles in the country? Will it be the Government that, till July last year, took more than six times the imported price of polyester fibre in taxes on every metre of cloth produced? Will it be the million or so shareholders of Reliance, many of whom are new to the stock market? Can the share buying spree which has gathered momentum over the last three or four years itself survive the shock of a Reliance collapse? Can any other scrip remain unaffected by such a collapse, and if not, what will happen to the stock-market, and to Indian capitalism?

So whom does the jungle of regulatory laws really help? The answer is that whatever may be the ostensible purpose of these laws, the real beneficiaries are those who thrive in the pampered and protected market that such laws create. Industrial licensing combines with restrictions on imports to create a regime of permanent shortages from which all competition is eliminated. Inefficient producers and black-marketeers are the only ones who benefit, while the lines of the jobless grow longer every day.

PREM SHANKAR JHA is a well known economic writer and, till recently, senior assistant editor of The Times of India. He will be writing a fortnightly column for INDIA TODAY on the economy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAX POLICY

Re-writing the Books

FINANCE Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh has a computer on his office desk in North Block. But what he refers to more often these days is an unusually powerful pocket-sized model, loaded with information on Singh's programme of action on more than a dozen fronts. The meticulous finance minister checks on his tiny machine every day on fresh deadlines for a new policy or administrative action, on the issues to be discussed at his daily morning reviews with senior ministry officials, on the monthly targets of revenue collection, on follow-up action that has to be taken during the month, on the trends in foreign exchange reserves, even on vacancies to be filled in his ministry and in public sector units under his charge.

The computer still comes in useful for the more detailed fact-sheets (the Government's computer network bosses say that Singh uses his machine more than anyone else). So, last fortnight, when Singh laid on the table of Parliament a 'Discussion Paper' on proposals to simplify and rationalise direct taxes, his electronic monitor told him that he had come close to the end of one stage of his labours for drastically overhauling the country's cumbersome tax structure.

Included in the discussion paper were such far-reaching suggestions as a uniform accounting year for all companies (meant to plug a major loophole used for tax evasion), major relaxations on taxing property income, the removal of ceilings on such items of expenditure as advertising, entertainment and travel, the setting up of a 'national court of direct taxes' that will take over some functions from the high courts, more liberal incentives for savings and investment in housing, and further liberalisations in wealth tax. In their totality, these proposals are as dramatic as those in Singh's path-breaking 1985 Budget. Said Singh: "The whole idea behind this discussion paper is to let the people decide how they want to pay their taxes. Let them decide the ways in which we should collect them. But once we agree on this, then there will be no room for evasion and defiance."

The discussion paper comes on the heels of several other steps that Singh has undertaken in an exercise that began with the 1985 Budget. Between then and now, Singh has announced a long-term fiscal policy, brought out a discussion on administered prices policy, announced an amnesty scheme to help excise evaders come clean, similarly encouraged the disclosure of concealed assets and income, announced (and, more important, stuck to) a total ban on state overdrafts, laid down clear guidelines for giving Central assistance to the states, reclassified the excise and customs nomenclature for greater 'harmonisation' (claimed to be the first such exercise in the world) and through the budgets themselves introduced the modified value added tax (MODVAT), radically altered direct tax rates, and begun what Singh calls the 'demystification' of the budget. Said Singh: "I was given a clear directive by the prime minister to carry out certain reforms in the financial management of the country. He provided the guidelines and we in the ministry have converted them into workable policies. The objective was to make the laws simpler and effective, so that there is better compliance and taxpayers become more honest."

RAGHU RAI

Finance Minister V.P. Singh by his computer: calculated change

Singh has certainly made history as a finance minister: none of his predecessors ever attempted any task of the scale and sweep that Singh has taken on; indeed, Singh has more to show for his 20 months in office than many finance ministers with far longer tenures. Said O.P. Vaish, a prominent tax consultant and vice-president of the Federation Of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI):

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"There has never been such a major overhaul of the tax structure and its management. Now we have better machinery for tax collection, for conducting raids and for better coordination in implementing the tax changes. Never before has the taxpayer been made to realise so clearly that he has no option but to be honest." Added a senior Finance Ministry official: "The finance minister has created a situation in which it will soon become more profitable to pay taxes rather than to evade them."

Singh's unfolded package—containing a series of tax reductions—has not met with too much criticism from even those with a socialist orientation because it has obviously delivered results. Despite the lower tax rates, revenue from direct taxes was a handsome 20 per cent higher than in the previous year. And revenue from personal income tax shot up by an unprecedented 45 per cent. Said M.S. Narayanan, chairman of the Central Board of Direct Taxes: "By reducing the income tax marginally, we have achieved a major spurt in our collections. What does this prove? Everybody is willing to pay, provided we in the Government are reasonable." And since the dangling of the carrot has been accompanied by the judicious wielding of the stick, Singh has been able to bring to the surface an additional income of Rs 1,000 crore which would otherwise have stayed underground. The Government earned extra revenue of Rs 300 crore out of this: equal to the sum recovered under the bearer bond scheme of 1982. Said Singh: "I think we have proved beyond doubt that higher taxation and numerous and irrelevant laws are no guarantee for generating higher revenue. We will not hesitate in reconsidering the existing rates yet again if they lead to buoyancy in tax collections."

Nevertheless, several unfinished tasks remain. Black money has been tackled to some degree through the lower tax rates, which reduce the incentive to keep earnings unaccounted. But the Government has yet to act fully on the basis of the black money report submitted last year by the National Institute of Public Finance and Policy. Also, the discussion papers on administered prices and direct taxes are only a starting point, and firm policies and decisions are still to be handed down—though this is now a matter of time. Finally, the announcement of a long-term fiscal policy has not introduced greater stability in tax rates, with Singh announcing new concessions and changes in tax rates with regular periodicity. And among the other measures that Singh has announced, MODVAT led to some confusion initially, and quick disenchantment with a proposal that had hung fire for a full decade.

But excise officials now defend MODVAT, arguing that it has delivered results. They point to the increase of over 23 per cent in the collection of excise duties during the first quarter of the current financial year (the corresponding quarter in the last year had seen an increase in excise revenue of only 14 per cent). One reason for this improvement: all production by companies has to be recorded for claiming tax set-offs under MODVAT; in the process, unrecorded production sharply comes down, and excise collection goes up. Encouraged by this rise in excise collections, Singh announced last month an amnesty scheme for those who had evaded excise duties in the past. Said Jyotirmoy Dutta, chairman of the Central Board Of Excise and Customs: "The basic attempt is to bring black money back into productive channels."

Perhaps as important as the tax reform has been the effort to enforce fiscal discipline in the states, by abolishing overdrafts. This has been attempted repeatedly in the past, only for the problem to resurface in next to no time. But this time around, Singh has made it clear that he will stand firm, and that plan funds will not be released in advance because they get diverted to non-developmental purposes. Result: earlier there would be as many as 50 questions in one session of Parliament on the overdraft question; now this issue has disappeared from the agenda of Centre-state disputes.

In another innovation, Singh has thrown wide open the doors of the Finance Ministry, inviting people from a large number of fields and specialisations to come and give their suggestions. None of the new policies was formulated without consulting a cross-section of experts. And Singh's Open House sessions have now become another regular feature, logged faithfully into his computerised schedule.

With major policy constraints out of the way, Singh is now concentrating on minimising the leeway that civil servants have in tax matters. One method: enlarging the scope for self-assessment for both direct and indirect taxes, up to a financial limit. The ministry has also devised a proposal for the time-bound clearance of all proposals for foreign collaborations, equity expansion, commercial borrowing from abroad and other requests for tax concessions. He says his ultimate objective is simple: "I want to get rid of the Finance Ministry's image as being a deterrent to growth." —PRABHU CHAWLA

FINANCE MINISTRY

Measures Taken	Results/Goals
Direct tax reforms in 1985 Budget	Direct tax revenue up 20 per cent. Large seizures of concealed assets
Long term Fiscal Policy announced	Direction of tax policy made clear to country
New excise and customs nomenclature	More rational and simple classification
MODVAT introduced	Cascading taxes minimised, reduced evasion
Discussion paper on administered prices	Public debate invited
Discussion paper on direct taxes	Public debate invited
Firm control over state overdrafts	No state now has an overdraft
Adoption of zero-base budgeting under way	Better control of expenditure
Thrust towards better bank customer service	Survey confirms improvement in service
Intensive drive against smugglers	Seizures up 80 per cent in 1985-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NTC

Smokescreen

IT WAS meant to be a tax raid. It has turned out to be a lesson in high-stakes corporate shenanigans. The tax money involved is not small: over Rs 85 crore. But the more important story of the New Tobacco Company (NTC) is about how its owner, Calcutta-based tycoon Gouri Prasad Goenka, used it as a milch cow to finance corporate acquisitions and then carefully divested it of its assets before selling it to a former employee—for no more than a notional price. And once Goenka was no longer on the scene, came the tax raids.

When the tax sleuths came calling last fortnight on the manufacturer of such well-known cigarettes as Number 10, Regent, Rothmans and Oxford, what they found was not the expected bonanza but a hollow shell of a company struggling to stay in business. If there had been any money around, it was all gone. Refusing to be cheated, they homed in on Goenka, the man behind a host of companies including Duncans Agro Industries Ltd (DAIL). They raided his office, burst into his home, seized various documents and accused him of perpetrating a massive excise fraud on the Government. Goenka was unperturbed, pointing out that DAIL no longer controlled NTC, 55 per cent of whose shares had passed on to new owners. Nevertheless, Goenka applied for anticipatory bail. When contacted, he declined comment on account of ill health.

Goenka's sensational but unannounced exit from NTC had been carefully planned, as the evidence now showed. The new owners were Goenka's former employee, N.K. Jain, and Andhra-based tobacco magnate Maddi Venkatesh Rao. The tax rap therefore falls on Jain and Rao, who now face an array of dismaying charges that are being investigated by the taxmen:

► NTC had created four front companies—Tabac Traders, Swan Marketing, Fairlie Distributors and Eagle Distributors—for routing kickbacks from wholesale dealers throughout the country.

► One of the front companies had been collecting crores of rupees from wholesale dealers and depositing these sums into the bank accounts of fictitious firms floated by NTC employees, who in turn were transferring the funds to NTC headquarters. The officials said that documents showing such "laundering" to the tune of Rs 40 crore had been seized.

► NTC had been getting kickbacks from its front companies by imposing service charges on its wholesalers.

To these are added two earlier charges by the Calcutta and Guntur excise collectors, involving alleged excise evasion to the tune of Rs 13.9 crore and a staggering Rs 73 crore. The charges will be brought to court only after they are firmly established.

G.P. Goenka used NTC as a milch cow to finance corporate acquisitions, then divested it of its assets before selling it to a former employee.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The irony of this sudden blow, as NTC's present chief N.K. Jain explains, is that "all these tax evasion cases relate to the period up to December last year, when we were nowhere in the picture." Even the latest accusations about the operation of the front companies relate to the time when DAIL controlled NTC. "We severed links with all the front companies by June this year and entered into a new agreement with one of them, Eagles Distributor," adds Jain. "And under the new agreement, we scrapped all previous arrangements for collecting service charges from dealers."

NTC was in fact flat broke when Jain and Rao took over. Indeed, so desperate had Goenka been to rid his flagship company, DAIL, of the NTC burden that he had actually given the two entrepreneurs a 55 per cent stake in NTC without any immediate payment. This had been done by raising NTC's capital base from Rs 45 lakh to Rs 100 lakh, with the extra Rs 55 lakh coming from DAIL via four private investment companies floated by Jain and Rao. The money given to the four investment companies, according to a DAIL executive, is non-recoverable. Goenka also pumped an additional Rs 2.75 crore into NTC's working capital to help the new management restart cigarette production that had ground to a virtual halt for three months since mid-December last year. The remaining 45 per cent of NTC shares are also proposed to be transferred to Jain and Rao, after necessary government approval.

Goenka's affair with NTC had obviously ended. When he had bought NTC in 1974, it was a sick company. Under Goenka and his hand-picked men, the company's fortunes improved dramatically. The company made a profit for the first time in years, in 1980-81. Cigarette production touched an all-time high of about 9,000 million sticks in 1982, and NTC, once derisively known as the "Number 10 company" (after the brand name of its cigarette), became the high profile makers of Regent filters. G.P. Goenka became one of the country's corporate celebrities.

But 1983-84 saw a decline in NTC's fortunes while Goenka prospered. DAIL acquired three major companies—Bakelite Hylam, Herdillia Chemicals and National Rayon. NTC's annual liabilities inched upwards as the company started borrowing heavily. Then abruptly, in March 1984, NTC was severed from DAIL and made into a wholly-owned subsidiary. Most significantly, the 1984 DAIL balance sheet explicitly stated that the entire "excise liabilities of DAIL up to 31st March, 1984...stand transferred to NTC without corresponding tax benefits". Also, as investigations revealed, massive

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Every time the skin suffers... reach for the soothing touch.

CUTS

BOILS

MINOR BURNS

INSECT BITES

NAPPY RASH

SHAVING NICKS

Dettol protects

DETTOL ANTISEPTIC CREAM

• NON-STAINING • NON-GREASY •

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS (C)/DAC/1/2417

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA

The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever in an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi-Program Selection so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split-second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541, Japan

For information only

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FLY BUY DUBAI

Enjoy the world's No.1 Airport Duty Free Shopping Complex.

MEED The Middle East's Business Week

Duty-Free Complex is Shopper's Paradise

WHERE is the world's cheapest duty-free shopping? Amsterdam, Singapore, Hongkong? All wrong! Since December 1983, when its designer-styled 24-shop complex opened, Dubai International Airport has offered lower prices than any of its rivals, backed by constantly improving standards of service.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

"... a duty free shopping complex quite unlike any other -even Shannon, Amsterdam or Singapore."

TIME

"Amsterdam may be cheap but Dubai, is cheaper."

Herald Tribune

"... a duty free shopping complex should be an integral part of the airport services and (at Dubai) every effort is being made to turn 'Fliers into buyers'."

Travel MARKETING The TTC Magazine

"The shops carry upwards of 15,000 different lines, which are constantly being reviewed, updated and improved. The statistics have steadily improved since the opening of this complex and in one year we sold 103 million cigarettes, half ton of gold, 15 tons of Toblerone, 40,000 watches and some 12,000 calculators."

INTERNATIONAL TAX-FREE TRADER

LOW PRICE POLICY SUCCEEDS AT DUBAI

Operated directly by the airport authority, Dubai's new Duty-free complex has achieved $20m sales in its first year and is now poised for further expansion. JULIAN FOX reports on this latest successor to Shannon and Schiphol.

Frontier The international duty free monthly

"An understanding of the needs of their customers, as reflected in their shop layouts and promotional activities, has won Dubai airport the Airport Tax Free Operator of the year."

مجمع السوق الحرة

DUBAI INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

DUTY FREE SHOPPING COMPLEX

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bank loans unsecured by stocks or other assets, were also transferred to NTC.

"By the end of 1984, G.P. had made up his mind to dispose of NTC," recalls a senior NTC executive. Initially, Goenka even suggested the formation of a co-operative to run NTC, and held fruitless discussions with Godfrey Phillips for a sale. In the meantime, NTC's assets too were being disposed of, beginning with the sale of its Guntur factory. Then, amid angry protests from the NTC unions, Goenka transferred the Tobacco House building in Calcutta's Dalhousie Square (valued at Rs 85 lakh) to DAIL. The stage was set for Goenka's divorce with NTC.

Jain, who had been associated with DAIL for over 10 years and had left the group only in June 1985, was approached by Goenka, who promised him a stake in NTC if he agreed to run the company. "I had started a small leasing company but it had not really taken off," explains Jain, "and NTC was a challenge and a promise to become a true entrepreneur from an ordinary executive."

He denies parlour gossip in Calcutta by saying: "I am not Goenka's front man, although I have been his employee in the past." And he adds that he and Rao, and NTC's 4,000-odd employees, all have a stake in bringing the company back to life. "We are bringing money into the company and we are convinced we can make NTC profitable again," Jain stresses. Already, Jain claims, NTC's monthly costs have been brought down from Rs 140 lakh at the time of the transfer to Rs 85 lakh, while cigarette production has inched up to 200 million sticks a month. Three losing NTC units—at Hyderabad, Biccavolu (Andhra Pradesh) and Ghaziabad—are being wound up, leaving the company with one healthy, modern unit at Agarpara near Calcutta, which, apart from its usual Regent brands, has started producing three successful new brands.

But, like the tax hounds, NTC's new management might just have missed the bus. While their coffers are empty, the interest burden on the loans inherited from the DAIL days is proving to be crippling. The NTC management was counting on Government help—financial assistance and even a possible excise waiver—but now it is more likely that it is the governmental hatchet that will be on offer. If that does indeed happen, the tax sleuths will only complete the job that Goenka began. And the name behind the well-known cigarette brands will go up in smoke.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

STOCK MARKET

Crash of '86

LAST year, Vinay Kapoor, 37, invested Rs 40,000 in the stock market. This year, the Delhi-based Kapoor has decided to give shares the go-by. Instead, the multinational company's employee will put Rs 20,000 into government securities and bank deposits. Says Kapoor: "I am not investing in shares. They don't provide steady returns."

Unlike Kapoor, M.G. Chopra will invest in the market this year—but only in top drawer shares. When the stock market boomed last year, the 57-year-old public sector company executive pulled money out of his widowed daughter's fixed deposit and bought stock for close to Rs 15,000. If he is wary now, it is because the shares Chopra bought last year have lost in value.

Charts by B.K. SHARMA

Kapoor and Chopra are among the thousands of small investors round the country who have woken up to a disillusioning reality: the heady stock market boom of 1985 is over, the crash of 1986 is here. Shares prices have nose-dived, with several blue chips leading the plunge. Mirroring the fall, The Economic Times share price index dipped by a worrisome 59 points, from 550.7 in June to 491.6 last fortnight (see chart). With the total equity shares listed on the stock exchanges worth some Rs 22,000 crore in June, that means the nation's shareholders have lost an awesome Rs 2,400 crore over the last three months.

"People have lost faith. Small investors are getting out," says Bombay Stock Exchange (BSE) President Ramdas Lallubhai Dalal. One result: several new share issues have been under-subscribed. Says a Delhi share broker: "It's the new issues market which has been affected. This is reflected in the prices of other shares." Inevitably, brokers who underwrote several new issues have had to cough up cash to meet the short-fall. Admits Vinod Kumar, a Delhi-based share underwriter: "In earlier times one used to underwrite almost every issue. One is very careful now." Scores of small-time speculators are totting up their losses and a "bull operator" on a bearish BSE was granted an eleventh-hour reprieve recently when his colleagues passed the hat around to enable him to meet his financial commitments. Even companies seem to have realised that money is hard to come by in the stock market. Fewer of them are issuing shares. Last January, 55 firms listed on the Delhi Stock Exchange (DSE) offered equity to the public. In June, the number had tumbled to 14.

Clearly, the mood is downbeat—in stark contrast to the euphoria of 1985 when the metropolises throbbed to the strains of a new gold rush. Officegoers, businessmen, even housewives pooled their funds to play the market.

The precipitious fall of 1986 has been sparked off by a combine of factors: the Reliance Industries imbroglio, the Government's announcement in June that it would not permit companies to convert non-convertible debentures into equity, and what some share-market men regard as plain hanky-panky by several managements. Battered by adverse publicity and the official ban on converting debentures, Reliance plunged from more than Rs 390 at one stage to Rs 250. Even then, it had to be propped up by a ban on the sales of those shares that were not backed up by immediate delivery.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Reliance was not the sole victim of bull baiting. Orkay, which had been riding high at Rs 159 in early August, came crashing to Rs 102 in unofficial deals in Bombay after the declaration of its results. "The management had painted a very rosy picture," says a broker. "The figures belied all that." Forward trading in Associated Cement, Tata Iron and Steel and Premier Automobile shares also had to be banned to prevent a calamitous plunge.

"We are doing everything we can to prevent a crisis," said an obviously harried M.R. Mayya, executive director of the BSE. "Our job is to prevent a payment crisis and keep the market going and so far we have succeeded." That view is not, however, shared by official sources. The BSE accounts for most of the stocks traded in the country and last fortnight a government functionary pinned part of the blame on the BSE authorities for the market having got over-heated. Said the official: "Bull operators overbought without having the cash to take delivery of shares, and kept prices unrealistically high. The BSE's cash-down margins on shares that are speculated in were inadequate."

While the BSE for its part blames the crisis on the Reliance and Orkay affairs, others see more insidious reasons. Says Amritlal Bajaj, former president of the DSE: "The managements of many companies have been manipulating share prices before they come out with an issue. They created an artificially high unofficial premium on their shares."

"Ultimately, shares have to stand on the company's merit," echoes Delhi stockbroker Prakash Jusroi. "While the craze was on, most companies went in for private placement of shares in a big way. Brokers charged a commission and split the take with managements—money which didn't go into the books. With fewer shares available for the public, prices reached dizzy heights." The bubble had to burst some day.

"The bane of the market," says Dalal, "is insider trading." Although company managements abroad are banned from dabbling in their own shares, this is a standard practice here. Reliance and Orkay, for instance, picked up big chunks of their shares recently in support operations. That, however, is not Dalal's prime objection. His grouse is that many companies are not above spreading rumours about their good performance, bonus issues and other goodies in the offing. But when the prices have risen and the managements have made a killing, the cupboard is found to be bare. "This is a market that operates on faith, trust and hope," he says. "You take away the faith and the trust, how long can hope sustain you?" And though the Government has been making its customary noises (a committee which went into the market's functioning has recommended a ban on insider trading), a new code of ethics is yet to see the light of day.

Amidst this rumpus, the market stabilising arms of the Government, the financial institutions, have refused to start buying operations. But in the end, it is probably the institutions that will rescue the market from its present plight. For one, they have clubbed together to form the Stockholding Corporation of India, a body meant to coordinate their share buying and selling, and it should get into top gear over the next few months. Then, a good part of the Unit Trust of India-Merrill Lynch pickings of Rs 125 crore in non-resident funds will be invested in equity, all helping to muzzle the bears.

What the latest ballyhoo in the stock market implies is plain enough: last year companies raised Rs 3,000 crore from the public, including public sector bonds, debentures floated by private firms, rights issues and new issues. This year's target is Rs 5,000 crore, and in the light of the present situation, that figure may be difficult to attain. The beneficiary of the investor's disenchantment with shares could well turn out to be public sector companies, several of which are bracing to kick off bond issues. The bonds are safe, if nothing else, and offer tax benefits to boot.

"But predicting the market," observes an investment counsellor, "is a species of crystal gazing. You can go to the race course after having studied form and fitness, but the chances are that you will still get taken for a ride. The stock market is no different." That perhaps is a telling comment on an institution which corporate skulduggery and Government pussyfooting have plunged into a crisis.

—PARTHASARATHY SWAMI and PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

MAGS BHOJANI

SHARE SLUMP

	PRICES AS ON 3.6.86	PRICES AS ON 21.8.86	% CHANGE
SPIC	169.00	61.00	-63.9%
RELIANCE INDUSTRIES	377.00	254.00	-32.6%
HIND DORR	490.00	345.00	-29.6%
ACC	287.00	208.00	-27.5%
BARODA RAYON	370.00	270.00	-27.0%
GARWARE NYLON	52.00	39.50	-24.0%
HIND MOTORS	53.40	42.55	-20.3%
GSFC	180.50	149.00	-17.4%
CENTURY	880.00	740.00	-15.9%
ORKAY SILK	164.00	147.00	-10.4%

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Money talks

MERCARD talks easier

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MERCARD

from Mercantile Credit Corporation

MERCARD – the elegant Credit Card – from Mercantile Credit Corporation is all set to make your life comfortable.

Why you need a MERCARD

Because the life around you has become fast paced.

And you can't afford to be left behind.

So your "on the move" lifestyle needs the easy to carry, easy to charge MERCARD. Which does away with those bothersome travellers cheques. Or unsafe wads of money.

What's more, MERCARD becomes all yours for a mere Rs. 600/-. A "distinctive" MERCARD feature.

Just think of it.

MERCARD throws open the doors to some of the best hotels and eateries, in any part of the country.

MERCARD makes the cumbersome formality of checking out – so simple!

With MERCARD you can pack your bags and keep moving. For the kind of Travel Agents who work with the card are SUPER FAST.

Besides all this, with MERCARD, you can shop to your heart's content – in any shopping complex, in any place.

Take your MERCARD to any metro in the country. Watch the way it works wonders for you!

Mercantile Credit Corporation Ltd.

MERCARD

Credit Card Division
"South India House", 36-40 Armenian Street, Madras – 600 001 Phone : 25221
144 Maker Chambers III, Nariman Point, Bombay – 400 021. Phone : 2048214
303, Kusal Bazar, 3rd Floor, 32/33 Nehru Place, New Delhi – 110 019

PROFAD/MERCARD/137/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why the devil...

Why? Because it's the devil who's supposed to fan the fire of negative emotions like envy. But then, why the devil should anyone continue to envy the ONIDA TV when one can buy it and enjoy it evermore? Except, of course, some of your neighbours who have already bought some other brand and are stuck with it!

For them, it's very tough not to envy your ONIDA. Its classy, futuristic looks (which all recent brands are trying to copy)...Its astounding true-to-life colour. The sharpest picture (due to much higher resolution than any other TV)...And its celebrated Japanese pedigree which puts every other TV almost a generation behind!

But be that as it may, neighbours will always be neighbours. And when they drop in to watch the Sunday Feature Film ... you can only keep a cautious watch. And during the interval, perhaps, you can drop them a mild hint ...That buying an ONIDA will always mean a happy ending. ■ ONIDA with cordless remote

Love thy neighbour. But guard thy ONIDA

"The modern technology that we want is just not available in India."

D.K. SANGAL telecommunications secretary

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

"Until we develop our infrastructure, telecommunications cannot be improved."

SAM PITRODA
chairman, Centre for Development of Telematics

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Importing Trouble

WHEN faced with a problem, go in for imports. That seems to be the "quickfix" formula that the Department of Telecommunications has hit upon in a desperate bid to nurse the country's ailing telecom network to good health. But, inevitably, this has now resulted in a flaming row with the domestic manufacturers of telecom equipment, who fear a lack of orders to feed their own factories. What emerges from the squabble is a picture of lopsided planning, hasty imports, and the setting up of domestic production units that will have no customers.

The international shopping list this year includes a whole lot of equipment including cable systems, microwave equipment, electronic telephone line concentrators, automatic dehydrators, digital coaxial equipment, wave guide equipment, and 23 other items. And turning a deaf ear to the growing protests from domestic manufacturers, the department recently announced that it plans to import switching equipment (which is the heart of the telephone exchange) and one lakh telephone instruments.

That was what finally snapped the final cord of tolerance, and furious lobbying by the industry saw red-faced telecom officials withdrawing a limited tender floated for foreign telephone instruments. The total demand for telephone instruments in the country is not expected to cross 10 lakh a year even by 1990, and the public sector Indian Telephone Industries (ITI) alone will have the required capacity to manufacture that number. Besides, another 50 companies have been licensed recently by the Government to produce telephone instruments in the private sector. So, as far as the manufacturers were concerned, this was nothing more than trigger-happy imports.

But Telecommunications Secretary D.K. Sangal argued that the instruments to be imported were sophisticated "executive-secretary plan" telephones which, though in great demand, were not manufactured in the country. Talking of switching equipment, he said: "The modern technology that we want is just not available in India." Reacting to the widespread criticism that the department is on an import spree, he countered: "The import content in our plan is among the lowest. Why is it that only we are picked on? Why is the Gas Authority being allowed to import its entire telecom facility?"

But Sam Pitroda, chairman of the Centre for Development of Telematics (CDOT), argued: "Unless and until we change from our import-based mania to the development of local infrastructure, telecommunications cannot be improved in this country. The fact that, despite the existence of Hindustan Teleprinters and Hindustan Cables, we are still going in for large-scale imports of both teleprinters and transmission equipment shows that somebody forgot to plan in time for the upgradation of technology in both these units."

He has a point. For as K.P.P. Nambiar, chairman and managing director of ITI, points out: "Our technology acquisition is full of problems because it takes one-and-a-half years for negotiations with the collaborator, then another year for the licensing procedures, and finally another one-and-a-half years for project implementation. By the time all this is over, new technology develops and fresh imports become necessary."

Also, while the technology in some telecom sectors has been upgraded, that in others has not, so that imports have become unavoidable in order to install a fully modern system. Thus, the planners moved first on modernising switching equipment and telephone instruments, and forgot about the transmission systems in between; so now crash imports of transmission equipment are needed to maintain a balance in the network. With no present domestic manufacturing facility for optical fibre cables and microwave equipment, the department has no option but to import these if the investment at the two ends is to produce a better overall system.

Nevertheless, the import programme drastically affects the plans of a consortium of domestic public sector manufacturers—ITI, Bharat Electronics Ltd, and the Electronics Corporation of India Ltd (ECIL)—which were set up to fill this very transmission vacuum. The consortium had floated a tender in May last year for the manufacture of digital microwave and optical fibre equipment. But, according to ITI's Nambiar: "The imports now planned may not leave

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ENTERPRISING

PROMOTERS

THE ISPAT GROUP with a track record of success in

PT ISPAT INDO, Indonesia

and

NIPPON DENRO ISPAT,

now launches a new venture

ISPAT ALLOYS

The Equity Issue

ISPAT ALLOYS will offer to the public 17,90,000 Equity Shares of Rs.10/- each for cash at par.

SALIENT FEATURES

- ☐ Promoted by the dynamic ISPAT GROUP with excellent track record
- ☐ State of the art Technology from world leaders ELKEM a/s, NORWAY
- ☐ Trials commenced — No gestation period
- ☐ Commercial Production in September, 1986 — Profits from day one.
- ☐ Import substitute products — assured market
- ☐ No Industry District. 80 CC and Wealth Tax benefits to investors
- ☐ Easy liquidity — Listing at Calcutta, Bombay and Delhi Stock Exchanges

PROJECTS WORTH RUPEES 200 CRORES UNDER IMPLEMENTATION BY THE GROUP.

Issue opens on 10th September, 1986

Managers to the Issue
State Bank of India
Merchant Banking Division

Co-Managers to the Issue
Industrial Finance Corporation of India
Merchant Banking Division

J M Financial & Investment Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd.
Merchant Banking Division

Advisors to the Issue
Computech International Ltd.
77/2A Hazra Road, Calcutta 700 029

ADVANCED

TECHNOLOGY

from ES ELKEM of Norway

Technology and Furnace equipments with energy saving features from ELKEM of Norway world leaders in metals and alloys. Technology ELKEM furnaces are successfully working in all 5 continents. ELKEM are one of the largest producers of Silicon in the world.

SPACE-AGE

PRODUCTS

SILICON & CALCIUM SILICIDE

Silicon : 21st Century metal with innumerable uses in Electronics, Solar energy, Aerospace, Automobiles, Aluminium Alloys, Chemicals and Domestic appliances with no limits for futuristic applications in a host of industries.

Calcium Silicide : A wonder alloy presently being imported, extensively used in high quality stainless and special steels. Most popular with Foundry, Steel and Continuous Casting Industries due to its excellent efficiency to cost ratio making unique contributions to increasing productivity, cost reduction and quality of Steel.

ISPAT ALLOYS LIMITED

Registered Office & Works : Balgopalpur 756 020, Dist. Balasore
Head Office : 33A Jawaharlal Nehru Road, Calcutta 700 071

the spirit of dynamism continues

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri enough demand for domestic production to be economically viable."

Even where the Government has gone ahead and created new manufacturing capacity for modern telecom equipment, the Department of Telecommunications may not now have the money to buy the goods that will be produced. Thus, a new electronic switching equipment factory is now coming up with the help of French collaboration at Mankapur in Uttar Pradesh. But the department now realises that it does not have the resources to pick up the production from this unit. Mankapur can produce five lakh lines of switching equipment annually, but the department's budget does not stretch beyond three lakh lines.

Meanwhile, ITI's Bangalore unit is faced with labour retrenchment problems because of the phasing out of its now obsolete Strowger and Crossbar exchange systems. ITI would like a second electronic switching factory to be located at Bangalore, to absorb the labour, but this too has not been cleared—for lack of funds, among other reasons. Said Sangal: "What we're telling them now is, if you set up a second factory and we can't place orders, what will you do?"

Meanwhile, CDOT (set up in 1984 to design an indigenous switching system in three years' time) expects to have its designs ready by mid-1987. Once again, there seem to be neither the plans nor the funds for setting up manufacturing facilities using this system. "It's not something that can come up in a day, once the designs are finalised. There has to be advance planning," says Pitroda.

At its root, the problem may be simply a lack of funds. The Planning Commission first scaled down the department's Seventh Five-Year Plan to barely a third of the initially proposed Rs 12,000 crore. And the 1986-87 annual plan was, as a result, scaled down from Rs 1,382 crore to Rs 835 crore. Of this, more than a fourth (Rs 220 crore) is meant to be spent on imports.

Predictably, the department has now come up with a please-all solution to the problem: a desperate plea for more funds, so that the five-year telecommunication plan can be increased from the present Rs 4,100 crore to Rs 6,000 crore. If the Government approves, it will meet with a lot more happier faces. If it doesn't, the gloves are going to come off in the fight between the domestic manufacturers and those pumping for imports.

—TANIA MIDHA

FASHION

Bunny Hop

THE BUNNIES are coming to India. Courtesy Fashionsport (India) Pvt Ltd, Playboy Enterprises of the US will soon be making its debut in this country: but not with the magazine, casinos, nightclubs and playmates, not in fact with anything that means uncovering the body. Instead, the Fashionsport-Playboy tie-up is for manufacturing a wide range of garments, footwear and accessories: as Fashionsport Chairman Prabodh Agrawal puts it, "items that will cover all parts of the body".

Playboy clothes and accessories; and (below right) Agrawal: new markets

Though the group's and its magazine's strengths are more in the uncovering line, Playboy's merchandising division earned more than $240 million last year under its famous 'bunny' logo. Under the collaboration agreement, cleared by the Government last month, Fashionsport will pay Playboy 5 per cent of its sales turnover as royalty. "We expect a turnover of Rs 10 crore in the first year itself," says Agrawal, "most of it in exports".

Agrawal has promised to export 50 per cent of his production, though this is not a formal condition stipulated by the Government (such a condition caused Burroughs Wellcome to abandon its sportswear deal with Nike last fortnight), and Playboy has assigned it 35 countries as its exclusive territory—in west Asia, the Soviet Union and the east European bloc. Playboy is evidently hoping that it will effect a backdoor penetration in the land of the sheikhs and the citadels of communism.

On the Indian front, though government restrictions preclude the use of the Playboy brand name, it is likely that the logo will be displayed on the products. Fashionsport plans to set up half a dozen exclusive boutiques where men can get fully outfitted in the Playboy mode, from shirts and shoes to briefs, belts, gloves and caps. The fairer sex too will have a chance to pick up their 'playmate' apparel and accessories for women.

The price, however, may prove the limiting factor. With shirts at Rs 350 and even a humble belt or wallet at Rs 150, the rates are easily 20 per cent higher than existing up-market brands. Agrawal agrees, but adds that the target segment is made up of those who presently buy their clothes abroad. "Besides, we will be focusing more on exports," he says.

Fashionsport, with a project cost of Rs 1 crore, is the group's third venture in this line. Supra Fashions was set up in 1977 to cater to the designer-end of the market, followed by Elar Fashions which had more of a mass production orientation, but neither made much of a splash. Negotiations for a new collaborator began three years ago, and included Levi's and Wrangler. "We opted for Playboy because they gave us the best deal," says Agrawal.

But it all depends on the success of the export effort. A lot of components will have to be imported—the foreign exchange expenditure on this head alone is estimated at Rs 8 crore in the first five years. Playboy has undertaken to buy $2 million worth of products annually, but the icing on the cake depends on how fast the markets respond, and whether the Playboy image will appeal. Agrawal has an answer to that too: "Just because you wear a Playboy shirt you do not automatically become a Playboy. I have been negotiating with the company for over a year now, but I'm still faithful to my wife." Today's bunnies are evidently aimed at the wallet; their undercover aspirations are another chapter.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LEASING

The New Boom

THEIR names suggest that they are small, insignificant enterprises: Ashok Leasing, South Asian Financial Engineering, Samudra, Cholamandalam Investment and Finance, Key Leasing, Classic Leasing and Financial Services. In fact, they represent the wholesale entry by big business into the new corporate El Dorado: leasing.

The big daddies of industry are now storming a citadel long held by a cluster of small companies. Commercial vehicle manufacturer Ashok Leyland kicked off Ashok Leasing last September, 25 big southern companies later joined hands to float South Asian Financial Engineering (SAFE), R.P. Goenka's Duncan group floated Samudra, the Madras-based TI Cycles group roped in Standard Chartered Bank and started the Cholamandalam Investment and Finance Company, and tobacco giant ITC is readying to launch Classic Leasing along with some of its business associates. Even the Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India (ICICI) has got into the act. Last month, a leasing and hire-purchase company promoted by the DCM group's Shri Ram Fibres (SRF) went to the market to raise cash, close on the heels of J.K. Synthetics' Chairman Gaur Hari Singhania's Key Leasing and Finance.

"Big houses started floating leasing firms a few months ago. More are in the pipeline," says a director of Key Leasing. He is right. Goetze (India), an Escorts stablemate, has a leasing division on its anvil, and Reliance Industries is planning to shortly set up the Reliance Capital Finance Trust.

Clearly, the rush is on for the pot of gold at the end of the leasing rainbow, in the form of business opportunities and ready cash available virtually on tap to promoters (leasing companies are allowed to borrow 10 times their capital and reserves). Says P. Bhalla, general manager and secretary of Goetze: "The financial institutions have limited funds and will lend less to the corporate sector in future. Companies are looking ahead." Adds a Grindlays Bank official: "All the big groups want to get into financial services. In 10 to 15 years' time, it's going to be big business."

Most of the entrants are convinced that today's Rs 400-crore leasing market will burgeon in the years ahead. T. Anantha Narayanan, chief executive of the Ashok Leyland-promoted Ashok Leasing and Hire Purchase, reckons that companies can do up to Rs 2,000 crore worth of leasing business. And SRF sees an opportunity in carving out for itself a niche in financing the purchase of consumer goods durables. Says the company's Managing Director Arun Bharat Ram: "Our decision to go into leasing has everything to do with commercial reasons and nothing to do with tax reasons. It's a purely commercial venture which we think makes good sense."

Clearly, companies also plan to use in-house leasing and hire-purchase firms to finance the sale of wares produced by their stablemates. Examples: The soaring yen has pushed up the prices of DCM Toyota's trucks, slowing down sales. SRF Finance could partly remedy that by financing customers. Ashok Leyland's in-house firm already offers cash to truck buyers at a time when bank credit is tight. Notes P.N. Vijay, who heads Citibank's merchant banking division in India: "An in-house leasing company that finances sales makes eminent sense."

For all the optimism, however, several bankers and small businessmen who run leasing companies point out that the pickings are neither fat nor easy. Delhi stockbroker Harish Bhasin, who runs a leasing company, points out that leasing firms used to charge rentals of up to 48 per cent, and that the mushrooming of leasing companies has quite steeply pared rentals. Says Bhasin: "The cost of money to firms is 19 per cent. If you lend the asset at 21 per cent, your margin is just 2 per cent. Pick any leasing company. You will find that its profits come from activities other than leasing."

The new heavyweight entrants do not agree, however, that the gold has already been panned in leasing. Says F.R. Vevalna, finance director of ITC: "Leasing on a realistic and planned basis could be a reasonably viable business." Several big companies are also clearly banking on the goodwill that their names enjoy to raise money. Key Leasing, which shares only a common chairman with J.K. Synthetics, had its public issue oversubscribed recently, perhaps because it mentioned in its advertisements that it had sewn up a business deal with the J.K. group.

Finally, the big boys maintain that small leasing companies have failed to blend the more profitable hire-purchase business with the less profitable leasing. Says J.K. Synthetics President F.C. Rustagi: "With a balanced portfolio, leasing companies can offset their profits from

HARI OM GULATI

F.C. RUSTAGI
president, J.K. Synthetics

"Leasing firms can offset their profits from hire-purchase by depreciating assets and getting tax benefits."

RANJAN BASU

ARUN BHARAT RAM
managing director, Shri Ram Fibres

"Our entry into leasing is not for tax reasons. It's a commercial venture which makes good sense."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hire-purchase business by depreciating their assets and taking advantage of the tax benefits." Indeed, this works both ways for a business group. Corporations are entitled to a tax write-off on the lease rentals they pay for equipment. Their leasing outfits in turn can depreciate their assets and so wind up paying little or even no taxes. "It's a case of having your cake and eating it too," one businessman said gleefully.

Leasing is certainly a beguiling option for companies that want money to expand, because of their generous debt-equity ratio. Firms can deploy this money, provided the legal hurdles are crossed. SAFE's corporate promoters invested Rs 2 crore in the company, which is going to the market to raise another Rs 3 crore. On a Rs 5 crore capital base, SAFE can borrow anything up to a staggering Rs 50 crore—and as the capital base expands, the process can, in theory, continue indefinitely.

Best of all, few formalities are involved in raising funds through leasing firms than if a company were to go to the financial institutions hat in hand. If a big group has exhausted its bank credit limits, it can set up a leasing company and ask for bank loans of up to Rs 6 crore without having to seek prior Reserve Bank of India permission. And if it wants cash for machinery, it can lease this from its leasing company, thereby circumventing the red tape involved in seeking term loans from the institutions.

Leasing's principal attractions for big business are plainly twofold: speedy access to money, and the tax shelters that leasing firms provide. A sister leasing outfit offers a manufacturing company considerable leeway to pare its tax bills. Goetze's Bhalla cites tax savings as one reason for Goetze setting up a leasing division. Says Bhalla: "Goetze is entering leasing as a business venture but we can also get tax benefits. The money that will be available by not paying taxes can be put to more profitable use."

A SIDESHOW to this tax avoidance saga is the ploy some tea companies have adopted of revaluing their vastly depreciated assets (usually furniture and stores) in line with current market rates, selling them to a leasing company at the new bloated values and then taking them back on lease. True, these companies have to pay capital gains tax when revaluing their assets. Also, the Government slaps on a sales tax when the assets are hawked. Nevertheless, the benefits can be substantial to both parties in the deal. Explains the chairman of a leasing outfit which has handled several such deals: "The company gets a large amount of money while retaining the assets. It also gets tax deductions by paying high rentals to the leasing firm. And the leasing company can charge depreciation on the assets."

With such a formidable combine of attractions, more and more corporate giants are likely to leap into the leasing arena in the months ahead. And as is inevitable with any fledgling industry, that means that several of the small firms that have characterised the industry so far could close down. Forecasts Arun Bharat Ram: "We foresee a shake-out in leasing, and two things will happen. Fly-by-night operators will not survive for long. And big companies will survive." If he is right, big will finally be beautiful in the leasing industry.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

FICCI

Fading Out

FOR WEEKS, R.P. Goenka, president of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), held out the olive branch: come back into the fold, he said; all is forgiven, all is mended. But the loud and clear response was that all is ended. For the Indian Merchants Chamber (IMC) and the others who had quit FICCI, there would be no second coming. IMC had found a suitable bedfellow in the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry (Assocham).

On August 8, Goenka had announced that FICCI's bogus members had been weeded out, and the decks cleared for the rebels' re-entry. But the rebels had their options chalked out. "We are going ahead with our plans," said former IMC chairman Pratap Bhogilal.

August 11 saw the first meeting between Assocham and IMC, plus two corporate luminaries like Hari Shanker Singhania, Lalit Thapar and Ashok Jain. "We all saw eye to eye, only the nitty-gritty remains to be resolved," said IMC strongman Viren Shah.

The Assocham constitution will be amended to enlarge its membership and executive council. The budget will also be hiked from Rs 18 lakh to Rs 80 lakh. And safeguards will be built in so that no large houses or factions can dominate the new body. To raise funds for the big league venture, 15 large groups or companies will become patron members, contributing Rs 3 lakh each annually for the first five years, and the promoter chambers will also chip in with more funds. "Finance is really no problem," said Shah.

HARI OM GULATI

Former IMC chairman Bhogilal: starting anew

There could be other problems, though. IMC would like Assocham (a stronghold of the Indian subsidiaries of multinational corporations) to change its name to reflect its new membership (mostly Indian business houses), but Assocham President B.R. Sule said: "We are quite fond of it and see no reason to adopt a new identity." He added, however: "Now it will have to be a larger body with a wider point of view. But we don't want to include every minor organisation as member. The trade bodies we induct must have an all-India base."

There is already some jockeying for power. The ex-FICCI group initially held out for parity with the present Assocham members, but this did not find favour. A three-member panel has now been set up to finalise the new constitution. If things work out, Assocham will be able to present itself as a truly rival body to FICCI. That is when the real fun and games will start.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Guess which Colour TV
Electronic Colour Pr

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TV has the Preference Control?

Only Bush.
Bush with its tradition of 'firsts' brings you Electronic Colour Preference Control (ECPC)*.
Now you can increase or decrease the red or blue tones yourself to get the most realistic and true-to-life pictures that you choose to see on your Colour TV. The Bush Colour TV is the only one of its kind in India with the ECPC facility.
Adjust the ECPC knob to preferred levels. Clockwise for warm red and anticlockwise for cool blue colour.
You'll have to see it to believe it.

Choose Red or Blue for pictures so true.

ONLY WITH BUSH TV

*Patent and Registration applied for.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/B/4859 b

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Bearing Down

RARELY have the bears been as firmly in control of the market as they are now, and rarely have the bulls been routed from the trading ring as completely as in recent weeks. Whether because of the Reliance controversy, the seeming lack of government control over national affairs or the several nagging questions on the economic front, there is little doubt that the market is now in a pessimistic mood. The Bombay stock-exchange Sensitive Index of Equity Prices dropped 10 points in one day last fortnight, and touched 529 (compared to a high of 635 a few months ago). And The Economic Times index fell through the 500-point barrier to as low as 491.6.

For good measure, investors have become very choosy regarding new share issues, and many will now not get the kind of enthusiastic response their promoters might have expected. Quite a few of the share issues recently floated were not fully subscribed, and the fate of some public sector bond issues due soon hangs in the balance.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Nothing seemed able to cheer the market: not the momentary buying that the financial institutions resorted to, not the finance minister's new proposals on direct taxes, not the low charges for carrying business over to a subsequent settlement, not even the over-sold position of the market (which should normally have resulted in a corrective upswing and put sellers on guard). The market seems determinedly pessimistic, and leading companies in almost every kind of business have therefore suffered. The bears were even bold enough to launch attacks on the shares of some well-known multinational companies.

Indeed, the new word around the market is that the small investors' short-lived honeymoon with shares may now be over. Certainly, the phenomenon of shares of newly-floated companies hovering in stratospheric price ranges is now a thing of the past. Even several established companies closed the fortnight at prices well below the year's best prices, and dangerously close to the year's lowest quotations. Thus, Vulcan Laval closed at 52.50, compared to the year's high of 162.50, SPIC was at 59.50 (year's high: 184), Larsen & Toubro was down to 124.50 (year's high: 204), and Lohia Machines was struggling at 23 (year's high: 70).

Investor confidence in these circumstances was not bolstered by charges of insider trading in Orkay shares (which dipped dramatically around the time when the company announced its dividend), and by the statement made by TISCO's chairman that the company could not expect very good results this year without a hike in steel prices. Last year's boom phase now seems a distant and improbable happening.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 22.8.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	25.75	27.00	0.50 –
Asian Paints	280.00	130.00	202.50	20.00 –
Associated Cement	389.00	186.00	212.00	17.50 –
Atlas Copco	97.00	64.00	84.00	6.00 –
Avery India	146.00	100.00	135.00	nil
Bajaj Auto	3975.00	1950.00	3325.00	425.00 –
Baroda Rayon	490.00	260.00	270.00	25.00 –
Bata India	82.50	54.00	77.00	6.50 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	580.00	20.00 –
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	76.00	1.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	82.50	5.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	123.00	77.00	91.00	11.00 -
Britania Ind.	150.25	85.00	141.00	5.00 –
Brooke Bond	96.75	56.00	72.50	11.50 +
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	475.00	15.00 –
Century Spinning	1690.00	710.00	735.00	35.00 –
Chloride India	132.00	86.00	123.00	2.00 +
Colgate	350.00	200.00	300.00	16.00 –
DCM	58.50	32.62	37.00	1.50 –
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	64.25	5.75 –
Elecon	127.00	80.00	100.00	5.00 –
Escorts	117.00	69.00	93.00	3.00 –
Finolex Cables	97.00	36.00	84.50	1.50 –
Food Specialities	375.00	215.00	349.00	6.00 –
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	38.50	1.50 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	13.00	16.00	0.50 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	182.00	92.50	151.00	1.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	76.00	3.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	170.00	97.50	157.50	nil
Hindustan Lever	184.00	124.00	173.00	3.00 –
Hindustan Motors	128.50	37.75	42.70	2.90 +
Hind. Dorr	660.00	330.00	350.00	25.00 –
IEL	84.50	61.50	65.25	1.75 +
Indian Hotels	157.00	90.00	100.00	25.00 –
Indian Organic	97.00	63.00	74.00	8.00 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	122.00	nil
Indrol	455.00	200.00	395.00	20.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	505.00	250.00	277.50	17.50 –
ITC	76.50	53.00	65.25	0.75 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	112.00	3.50 –
Kinetic Engineering	385.00	220.00	315.00	35.00 –
KSB Pumps	495.00	205.00	235.00	45.00 –
Lakme	195.00	120.00	147.50	2.50 –
Larson & Toubro	204.00	111.00	124.50	1.50 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	55.00	3.00 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	22.00	23.00	3.00 –
Madura Coats	92.00	51.00	55.00	2.00 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	47.50	60.00	2.00 –
Motor Industries	1000.00	605.00	857.00	17.50 –
National Organic	840.00	530.00	742.50	32.50 –
Nirlon	77.00	29.00	34.00	1.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	192.00	111.00	149.00	16.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	48.00	58.00	5.50 +
Polychem	235.00	105.00	212.50	7.50 –
Ponds	390.00	200.00	347.50	22.50 –
Premier Auto	975.00	555.00	887.50	7.50 –
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	132.50	7.50 –
Raymond	97.00	72.00	78.00	nil
Reckitt & Colman	152.00	81.25	134.00	6.00 –
Reliance Industries	392.00	226.00	251.00	7.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	40.00	45.00	2.50 +
Sandoz	135.00	62.00	104.00	8.00 –
SPIC	184.00	51.00	59.50	1.50 +
Tata Steel	1610.00	1090.00	1255.00	22.50 –
Telco	910.00	575.00	700.00	32.50 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	52.50	52.50	7.50 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	7.7389	7.6606
Austria	Schilling	100	87.9079	87.1358
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.3638	33.3180
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.3383	42.8610
Canada	Dollar	1	9.0885	9.0166
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.6326	1.6189
Egypt	Pound	1	15.1210	15.0388
France	Franc	1	1.8850	1.8790
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6196	1.6078
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1099	1.0998
Iran	Rial	100	16.2480	16.1438
Italy	Lira	100	0.8730	0.8701
Japan	Yen	100	8.2538	8.1878
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7579	0.7406
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.3987	42.3008
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8030	4.7661
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9430	0.9080
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5998	0.5436
Netherlands	Guilder	1	5.4873	5.4431
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7338	0.7220
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0556	5.8479
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0920	0.0901
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4221	0.4110
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.8377	1.8216
Switzerland	Franc	1	7.6823	7.6217
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.6998	0.6738
Thailand	Baht	100	47.9990	47.4038
UK	Pound	1	18.9178	18.7958
USA	Dollar	1	12.5950	12.5075
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3930	3.3740
USSR	Rouble	1	17.3660	17.3008
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	6.1804	6.1236

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 23.8.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

• For Information Only

Gangotri

"Now I see what I'd been missing."

NV-G10EN VHS
PAL-System Video Cassette Recorder

- Fully Automated Operation: Auto Power-On, Auto-Play, Auto Rewind/Counter Memory, Auto Eject, Power-Off Eject, Auto Voltage
- Super One-Touch Timer Recording
- 14-Day/4-Programme Timer
- 14-Mode Wireless Infra-red Remote Control

*NV-G10EM (PAL/MESECAM) also available

"I can enjoy a movie in ordinary playback mode ... or savor exciting parts at a snail's pace with Super Fine Slow Motion ... or step through scenes a little at a time with Super Still Advance ... or stop the action completely with Super Still. No matter which 'Super' viewing mode I use, my National provides a beautiful, life-like picture without noise or jitter ... thanks to its 3-video head system. And despite its slim, front-loading design, my National is surprisingly well equipped. And if something does go wrong, the National Service Network is there to back me up. Now I see what I'd been missing. You can see it too, at a shop that sells quality National electronic products."

Mithun Chakraborty

FULL SERVICE National NETWORK

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Bolta Airconditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only)
• 271, Cadell Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 4303719/4309270

Associated Electrical Agencies (For audio/video products only)
• Anugraha Apartments, "B" Block, Ground Floor 19, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 478559

Esquire Distributing & Servicing Co. Pvt. Ltd.
(For video-related products only)
• Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor, Rehmat Manzil, 75 Veer Nariman Road, Churchgate, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 231 2620/21

National

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In all the colours of a woman's world...

Sweet Memories

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Sarees
Dress Material

Fabric
PERFECTION
ONLY VIMAL
FROM THE BEST PLANT
SCIENCE CAN BUILD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember your thirst fair?

Remember the excitement? The giddy delight you felt? Remember the thirst Limca you shared with her at that fair? You can still taste that zingi lime 'n' lemoni flavour each time you have a Limca. The feeling is heady. Just like the thirst time!

Limca. Each time is the thirst time!

is veri veri lime 'n' lemon

Limca

SERVE CHILLED

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHOLESALE prices are steady but consumers face double-digit inflation. Bank credit is expanding rapidly. The trade gap has narrowed as exports have picked up and imports have fallen. Foreign reserves are also up. The share market continues to be depressed and shows a steeply declining trend, while gold ruled steady before recording a spurt.

All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trends are computed on the basis of the last six or twelve months data to which a regression is fitted.

After discounting the normal seasonal price rise that occurs, the increase in prices is modest. But there was a sudden upswing in early August.

There is double-digit inflation in consumer prices, but the rising price curve has slightly levelled after March and might get better.

Money supply has maintained its steady growth, and the usual seasonal shrinking, with the onset of the monsoons has not taken place.

After holding steady through most of May and June, bank credit too expanded rapidly in July—climbing by 2.5 per cent in just three weeks.

Foreign trade is now less imbalanced—exports picked up in January while imports dropped for the second successive month.

The slide in reserves since May has been somewhat checked as they rose by 2 per cent in July but on a long-term trend they are growing slower.

Share prices slumped in August after a momentary rise in end-July, causing only a slight step up in the negative trend seen throughout July.

After a spurt in June, gold prices were steady in the latter half of July and early August, but in subsequent weeks picked up momentum.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of Items in July, 1986

	% Growth
Ceramic Tiles	21.79
Onions	14.94
Pesticides and Insecticides	9.15
PVC Compounds	7.42
Hides Raw	6.82
Groundnut Seeds	6.51
Atta	5.43
Linseed	5.35
Oranges	4.51
Coir Yarn	4.39
Groundnut Oil	4.39
Fish	3.93
Cashew-Nuts	3.91
Zinc	3.39
Copra	2.28
Machine Tools	2.16
Groundnut Oilcake	1.96
Tin Containers	1.84
Tobacco Raw	1.8
Rape and Mustard Seed	1.52
Jower	1.41
Ghee	1.38
Watches and Clocks	1.17
Cars	1.17
Sugar	1.08
Mining Machinery	1.01
Caustic Soda	.92
Bolts and Nuts	.91
Silk Raw	.9
Dyeing Materials	.88
Meat	.87
Bananas	.78
Industrial Instruments	.75
Boilers	.73
Coir Fibre	.73
Cotton Yarn	.71
Pipes and Tubes	.69
Limestone	.63
Woollen Cloth and Woollen Khadi	.58
Buses	.57
Tractors	.53
Power-Driven Pumps	.5
Sugarcane	.5
Rice	.49
Tobacco & other Tobacco Products	.47
Dry Cells	.46

Of the 139 series considered, 74 of them with a total weight of 46.948 had a positive growth and 65 of them with a total weight of 39.878 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, July	11537	10797
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, July	600.4	656.0
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, July	2700	2718
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, July	541.4	451.1
Thermal Plant Factor
Percent, July	47.4	46.9

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The company which generates wealth from waste should do wonders for your investment too.

HIGHLIGHTS

- A Rs. 51 crore project promoted by OSWAL AGRO MILLS LTD — whose shares have shown phenomenal appreciation.
- A UNIQUE PROJECT to manufacture high value added products from rice husk — an agricultural waste.
- WORLD'S LATEST TECHNOLOGY
  - — Rice Processing Plant from BUHLER MIAG, WEST GERMANY.
  - — Furfural Plant from SOCIETA ITALIANA FURFUROLO S.p.A., ITALY.
  - — Power Generation Plant from STANDARDKESSEL GESSELSCHAFT LENTJES-FASEL GmbH, WEST GERMANY.
  - — Edible Rice Bran Oil Plant based on latest technology from EX-TECHNIK, WEST GERMANY.
  - — Full performance guarantees from STANDARDKESSEL who are supplying the complete plant on turnkey basis.
- COMPLETE MARKET TIE UP
  - — High purity furfural to be fully exported to West Germany (tied up for five years with WILHELM MEINSHAUSEN GmbH of WEST GERMANY).
  - — Edible rice bran oil for domestic market/(import substitute). Will be exported if permitted by the Government.
  - — De-oiled bran cake to be exported to UK and Europe (sales tied up for 5 years with WILHELM MEINSHAUSEN GmbH of WEST GERMANY).
  - — White Rice to Food Corporation of India and State Agencies. Will be exported if permitted by the Government.
  - — Rice Husk Ash to be exported to West Europe.
  - — Sufficient power generation for captive consumption and surplus to be sold to State Electricity Board.
- HIGH PROFITABILITY
  - — No customs duty on imported equipment due to 100% export status.
  - — Access to highly sophisticated closely guarded furfural technology not available to any other Indian company.
  - — Virtually free raw material in abundant supply.
  - — Very low working capital requirements.
  - — Tax concessions on account of backward area location.
  - — Self-sufficiency in power ensures no production hold-ups.
- 80 CC AND WEALTH TAX BENEFITS
- EASY LIQUIDITY
  - — Listing on Bombay, Ahmedabad, Delhi, Calcutta, Madras and Ludhiana Stock Exchanges.

Promoted by Oswal Agro Mills Ltd.

OSWAL AGRO FURANE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The largest 100% export oriented furfural plant in Asia.

The largest rice processing plant in the world.

The largest edible rice bran oil plant in the country.

The only power plant in the country based on rice husk, a non conventional energy source.

Public Issue of 88,20,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10 each for cash at par.

ISSUE OPENS FOR
NON-RESIDENT INDIANS ON 2ND SEPTEMBER, 1986
INDIAN PUBLIC ON 9TH SEPTEMBER, 1986

Managers to the Issue

DSP FINANCIAL CONSULTANTS LTD.
914, Raheja Chambers,
213 Backbay Reclamation,,
Bombay 400 021.

HongkongBank
Merchant Banking Division
314, D.N. Road, Bombay 400 001

Advisors to the Issue

MEHTA FINANCIAL CONSULTANTS & MANAGEMENT SERVICES PVT. LTD.
12/3 Asaf Ali Road,
New Delhi 110 002.

ARORA FINANCIAL CONSULTANTS PVT. LTD.
565, National Road,
Near Bhai Bala Chowk,
Ludhiana 140001.

OSWAL AGRO FURANE LTD.

Regd Office: 434, Sector 37A, Chandigarh.

Head Office: 107-108, Padma Tower,
5, Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008.

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHOPAL

The New Nightmare

JUSTICE P.D. Muley, who was appointed commissioner under a special Central statute about a year ago to oversee the welfare and decide the claims of the gas victims of the Union Carbide plant in Bhopal, recently excoriated the Government in an interview with INDIA TODAY. "So far I have been given neither staff, nor funds or office, and no facilities to start work," said the judge of the Madhya Pradesh High Court bench. "I am yet to start functioning and I have not received any communication from the Government apart from the order appointing me as the commissioner." His plight sums up the delays, confusion, and lethargy which have become the hallmark of the Government in its attitude towards the worst industrial disaster ever occur in this century. Principal Correspondent N.K. SINGH reports:

Gas victims' claim office in Bhopal: confusion confounded

THE BIGGEST law suit in the world may also become the biggest legal mess in the world. After 20 months of legal wrangling, and with $20 billion worth of compensation claim cases finally consolidated in the Bhopal district court, nothing, it appears, is moving forward in the complicated legal battle between the Government of India, representing the victims, and the corporate giant Union Carbide Corporation (UCC).

True, the dimension of the case is mind-boggling: more than five lakh damage claims for deaths, injuries and losses, another five lakh in claims for personal injuries, and thousands more for losses of livestock and businesses. The claim forms alone occupy 3,000 feet of space in the Directorate of Gas Claims (DGC) set up by the Madhya Pradesh Government. The logistics of the case should have galvanized the Government into speedy action. But just the opposite appears to be the case. Nobody has the faintest idea about how much time the case will take. Said Babulal Gaur, local MLA and a practising lawyer: "It may take up to five years in the district court provided 50 district and additional judges are appointed for this purpose." But if the experience of Justice Muley is any indication this appears to be a pipe-dream. "Government efforts in this direction," said Liyaqat Khan, an activist

Sunil, 16, lost his parents in the tragedy and was left to care for his little brother and sister. Earlier this year, the Government had him appear in a US court as an example of a gas victim. He has received no compensation so far.

In Public D... Coll...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

n Bhopal:
led rs to be the t idea about ll take. Said a practising years in the district and ted for this ce of Justice ppears to be fforts in this

, an activist

er
an

of the Citizens Relief and Rehabilitation Committee fighting for the cause of gas victims, "suffer from ad hocism and lack of imagination." The DGC set up by an executive order last year has not been able to even scrutinise all the compensation forms the people had filled up last year. The director of DGC J.A. Khare, confessed that during the last 11 months the department had processed only 40 per cent of the forms. "I hope the work will be over within the next three months," he told INDIA TODAY. But insiders say that, at the rate things are going, a year might be a better guess. Earlier this year, reports appeared in local newspapers that hundreds of claim forms in the directorate were torn because there were no file covers for them. The directorate did not have powers to make purchases worth more than Rs 50,000 and a proposal sent to the state secretariat for the purchase of files gathered dust for months.

Such is the state of confusion in official circles that the citizens of Bhopal—all 5,17,992 of them—are being asked to file fresh compensation forms—for the third time in the last one and a half years. During the second such exercise, the state Government had established 113 camps in the gas-affected areas where citizens could file application forms "because the earlier forms did not have proper documentation". But even these revised forms, says Justice Muley, have not been filled out properly. So the process starts all over again this fortnight, along with a new and ambitious "medical documentation programme" launched by the Madhya Pradesh Government.

All the five lakh plus claimants who have sued for "personal injury" are being advised to undergo complicated medical tests to find out the extent of damage they have suffered because, according to official sources, "that will form the basis of compensation to each individual". When

CRIMINAL CASE

Jigsaw Puzzle

THE PROSPECT of millions of dollars of compensation money from Union Carbide Corporation (UCC) has overshadowed the once burning issue of the criminal liability of individual officials—those responsible for the catastrophe. Soon after the disaster, the Madhya Pradesh Government had registered, with much fanfare and publicity, criminal cases against several Union Carbide officials and arrested eight of them including the UCC Chief Warren Anderson, noted Indian industrialist and Union Carbide of India Ltd (UCIL) Chairman Keshub Mahindra, UCIL's Managing Director V.P. Gokhale and Bhopal Plant Works Manager J. Mukund.

Photographs by RAKESH JAIMINI

(clockwise from top left): Anderson, Mahindra, Gokhale and Mukund

Although the boss of the powerful transnational corporation was bailed out and flown to New Delhi by a state aircraft within six hours, the charges against the Union Carbide officials made impressive reading. They ranged from Section 304 IPC (culpable homicide not amounting to murder) to Section 120B IPC (criminal conspiracy) and Section 304A IPC (causing death by negligence). If found guilty, these men can be punished with life imprisonment.

The then chief minister of Madhya Pradesh Arjun Singh had thundered: "This Government cannot remain a helpless spectator to the tragedy and knows its duty towards thousands of innocent citizens, whose lives have been so rudely and traumatically affected by cruel and wanton negligence on the part of the management of Union Carbide. The power of the state is committed to fight for its citizens rights."

But once the powerful corporate managers were bailed out, matters came to a grinding halt. The Hanumanganj police station in Bhopal, which had registered case No. 1104/84 against the officials, says that the case was transferred to the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI). Although 20 months have passed, the CBI is yet to frame charges against Anderson and other Union Carbide officials. The families of gas victims are fast losing hope of seeing the guilty brought to book. No one knows when or whether the trial will ever start. Said CBI Deputy Superintendent of Police B.K. Shukla: "We are still investigating the case. It (the case) appears to be a jigsaw puzzle and no one can say how much time it will take."

In sharp contrast to this, the Government has acted with extraordinary swiftness in the cases instituted against activists fighting for the cause of the victims of the gas leak. The Bhopal police had earlier registered two cases against them, one for "attempt to murder" and another for "rioting and causing hurt", following scuffles between the police and the rallies brought out by the action groups. Now charges have been framed and challans instituted in the courts. Among those accused are the noted social worker Anil Sadgopal, painter and Bharat Bhavan trustee J. Swaminathan and renowned theatre personality B.V. Karanth, who had gone to demonstrate in front of "killer Carbide".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Fortunately Qantas have 3 non-stop flights every week to London from Bombay. Otherwise I don't think my boss would bother going."

Now you can fly non-stop to London every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday on Qantas.

On nothing less than a spacious Qantas Boeing 747.

With a choice of First Class, Business Class or Economy service.

And be able to choose from our wide range of vegetarian cuisine.

Of course no matter which class you choose you'll still enjoy warm and friendly Australian hospitality every step of the way.

(Your Qantas experience doesn't have to end in London, you can also fly Qantas non-stop on your return trip.)

Call your travel agent or your nearest Qantas office at Bombay Tel: 2020410, Calcutta Tel: 440718, Madras Tel: 478649, New Delhi Tel: 351434.

QANTAS
THE AUSTRALIAN AIRLINE

QF 69/MDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

asked what utility such tests would have 21 months after the disaster, Dr N.P. Misra, dean of the local medical college said: "It is true that if someone recovered subsequently we would not be able to tell what was there at the time of disaster, but we should be able to project it with the help of past records." According to Relief Commissioner S.L. Satyam, who brings a rare zeal to his work, it will take nine to 12 months to complete the job.

Embroiled in a legal and administrative muddle which they can neither understand nor contest, the hapless victims, a majority of them the poorest of poor, continue to wait for the compensation. They need some sort of interim relief and they need it fast. The MIC aftereffects have crippled an estimated 10,000 persons in the town. Most of the victims are daily wage-earners who, if

UNION CARBIDE

Red Herrings

LAST fortnight, CBI sleuths were back at the Union Carbide of India Ltd (UCIL) plant to investigate the multinational corporation's charge that the Bhopal disaster was an act of sabotage by a man with a grudge against his employers. So far the inquiry has drawn a blank. "Sabotage simply does not look plausible," Deputy Superintendent of Police B.K. Shukla told INDIA TODAY. Nevertheless, the CBI team has been combing the records in order to determine whether the disgruntled saboteur-employee, so far identified as Mr X by the company did, indeed, have anything to do with the disaster.

According to the company's theory, this unidentified employee sneaked into the well-guarded plant without management authorisation, rigged up a water hose to the methyl isocyanate (MIC) storage tank and quietly injected a large amount of water into the highly volatile and toxic chemical on the night of December 2, 1984, triggering off the disaster. All this in the name of revenge, following a demotion and a row with a supervisor.

UCC's accusations against Mr X surfaced last fortnight in the World Petrochemicals Analysis; Editor Hilfra Tandy was flown into India by the corporation for an exclusive interview on the subject with company executives. UCC spokesman Harvey Cobert refused to identify the culprit but said their lawyers would name and question him when the case comes up before the Bhopal district court.

The legal implications of the UCC claims, if found true, could be stunning. Lawyers said it could not only dilute the company's responsibility but also absolve it of criminal liability. But official sources said this was a psychological tactic aimed at shaking the confidence of Indian officials, who had ruled out the sabotage theory earlier. "Publicity about the sabotage claims is also aimed at lowering expectation in India about the size of claims by implying that the Government bungled or covered up its investigation of the disaster," contended Bhopal advocate S.C. Godha, a former associate of lawyer John P. Coale who had filed compensation suits in the US on behalf of thousands of gas victims. But Michael Ciresi, a lawyer representing the Indian Government in the US says that notwithstanding proof of sabotage, UCC would still be liable for its failure to design an adequate safety system to prevent the catastrophe. And while the Indian Government has hinted that UCC has committed an obstruction of justice by witholding from it information about the alleged sabotage, American attorneys were quoted by newspapers saying that such limited disclosures were commonly used in legal infighting.

The pesticide plant's former employees at Bhopal pooh-poohed the charges and said the company's new "explanation" appeared to be one more attempt to shift the blame away from itself. UCIL Employees Union General Secretary R.K. Yadav described it as a ploy to divert attention. He said that the union had investigated the allegation and found that "no one was demoted a week before the incident and in fact no such person exists".

Scientists agree that water came into contact, whether deliberately or not, with MIC stored in the tank. The Vardarajan Committee, appointed by the Union Government to make a scientific inquiry into the leak, had offered an easy explanation: "During the cleaning of choked filters with water in the relief valve vent header, on the night of December 2, 1984, such water, perhaps mixed with alkali from vent gas scrubber accumulator, could have entered the non-pressurised tank and may have carried some metallic contaminants from the carbon steel portions of header pipelines." And that led to the disaster.

Various inquiries have established that Bhopal was a disaster waiting to happen. The investigations have indicated that it was the defective design of the plant, the failure to provide adequate safety measures and reckless cost-cutting which led to vital safety systems being switched off. But it appears that UCC has decided that the best defence is offence and is likely to put up a hard fight before it agrees to pay out any compensation.

—N.K. SINGH

Closed Carbide plant: sabotage theory

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

they don't work today, cannot hope to get any food tomorrow. With their earning capacity having gone down considerably due to MIC after-effects—they find physical labour impossible—they are on the verge of starvation. Life has become, for some of them, worse than death.

Compensation, if it comes, would mean little to Ranu, who was one and a half months old when the pesticide plant orphaned her, or 8-year-old Suresh whose father, mother and two younger brothers perished in the leak, or young Ganga, who is simply unable to tell where her parents lived, or Salim, 12, who does not know what happened to his parents, or Ashok Kumar, 14, whose parents died in the disaster and he himself sustained irreparable damage to his lungs or Rajesh, who had landed in Bhopal by a quirk of fate just before the tragedy. Can any amount of compensation make life the same for these children in the orphanage?

COMPENSATION

Fraud Claims

THE PEOPLE of Kasaipura, a slum in old Bhopal, could not believe their eyes. The young, lanky man walking furtively in the dingy lanes of their locality was none other than Abdul Rehman, 29, who was believed to have perished in the great Bhopal tragedy 20 months ago. His parents, brothers and wife had, in fact, identified him from one of the official photographs of unclaimed bodies of gas victims and collected the ex-gratia relief of Rs 10,000 announced by the Madhya Pradesh Government. In the computerised list of gas victims, his name figured at serial No. 557 and his family members sued Union Carbide for damages through the Government of India.

Whispers from Kasaipura soon reached the ears of the city police crime branch and, last fortnight, Bhopal CID nabbed Rehman and charged him and his family members with fraud under Section 420 IPC. "The plot went much deeper. We are investigating how he procured a death certificate and the local municipal corporation approved payment of compensation," said A.R. Pawar, the SP of Bhopal. After he was bailed out of prison, Rehman said that he had fled to Bombay the night of the disaster because of a tiff with his wife. "I worked as a baker there and made no contact with my family," he claimed. He returned to Bhopal, he said, because, "I wanted to meet my two children, Javed and Farzana". His family members, who live in abject poverty in subhuman conditions, also denied the charge of conspiracy. "We had reported him missing and we were given money by the Government," said his mother, Noor Bai. But police allege that although Rehman had returned to Bhopal about a month ago he never tried to contact them.

Abdul Rehman and (below) Noor Bai: using a tragedy

Rehman's is not the first case of its kind in Bhopal where those out to make a fast buck have tried to milk the tragedy to their advantage. There was the case of Neelam Bai, 40, who claimed that her husband and two relatives died in the leak, "identified" the photographs of their bodies and blamed the heartless authorities for not providing her with any relief. Taken in by her story, BBC's TV crew and Granada TV of Britain filmed her, scores of journalists wrote about her plight and Chief Minister Motilal Vora ordered a top-level inquiry, until one day her husband turned up to claim her. It appeared that she had left her husband and had tried to use the disaster to her advantage.

Police believe that there existed a well-organised racket, involving among others, some politicians, behind preparations of false death certificates for getting approvals for ex-gratia relief from the area municipal corporators. Official figures reveal that so far 685 persons have tried to include their relatives' names in the death-list but their claims have been found to be false after inquiry.

It is not only the poor who were tempted by the lure of easy money flowing in the city following the world's biggest industrial disaster. Several well-to-do persons also obtained the subsistence grant of Rs 1,500 which the state Government had announced for each gas-affected family with an income of less than Rs 500 per month. Moreover, many top government officials and rich traders were among those who drew the free rations announced for slum dwellers after the disaster.

—N.K. SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DISTINCTIVELY HYATT.

The Regency Club at Hyatt Regency Delhi is our way of showing the business traveller how very special he is.

This distinguished 'hotel within a hotel' concept spans the entire 6th floor. Where the elevator stops only when you use your personal club key!

As a Regency Club guest you are entitled to services that exceed even the Hyatt hallmark of excellence. A warm welcome and express check-in just for you. 60 deluxe rooms and 5 elegant suites to choose from. A special escort up to your private floor. Personalised stationery, the finest toiletries, fruit and flowers that are always fresh. Personal attention from the Club's gracious concierge. Complimentary breakfast, cocktails with hors d' oeuvres everyday. Even a private lounge, conference room – and so much more.

Everytime you stay at the Regency Club you'll discover another reason why Hyatt is the international business traveller's hotel — worldwide.

You'll agree a touch of distinction does make real business sense. Don't you

WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY® DELHI

INDIA

Reservations: Call the hotel 609911 Telex: 031-62779, 031-61512 HYT IN Or Sales & Reservation office at Bombay Telephone: 244578, 244579
Telex: 011-2818 SUBH IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

THE NORTH-EAST

Search of the Lost Tribe

The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth to another, and there thou shall serve other gods which neither thou nor thy forefathers have known, even wood and stones.

Deuteronomy

THAT ancient biblical curse is being visited upon the unlikeliest of people—some 4,300 tribals in the remote North-east who have fiercely embraced Judaism in the belief that they are descendants of one of the 10 legendary lost tribes of ancient Israel. Scattered across the states of Manipur, Mizoram and Nagaland, the Jews of the North-east have discarded their traditional tribal customs to rebuild their lives along the Mosaic and other Halachic precepts, carving out a lonely and isolated niche among hostile non-believers. "The Old Testament verse in Deuteronomy has come true for us," says Vaniah Benjamin, once a prosperous automobile dealer in Imphal and now reduced to driving a taxi for a living. But for the North-eastern Jews, such deprivation and suffering are shrugged aside as their divine destiny—till the day they finally return to the Holy Land, Israel.

Jews at prayer in Imphal Synagogue; and (left) Gideon Rey

More remarkable is the fact that the number of converts to Judaism is steadily growing. Between March and July this year, 93 tribals in the region had voluntarily become Jews—at no small personal sacrifice. Conversion entails giving up the eating of pork (the traditional tribal delicacy in the North-east) and the eating of any flesh without ritual purification (kosher), abandoning their old promiscuous ways to practise the teachings of the holy Torah, and for the men, undergoing the painful process of circumcision. In the process, they have also antagonised their Hindu and Christian fellow-tribals. But the separate, unique identity they strive to maintain has only added to the allure of Judaism among the tribals.

Fuelling the Jewish upsurge in the area is the powerful conviction that all the two million-odd Chin-kuki tribals living in Burma, Mizoram, Manipur, Nagaland and parts of the Chittagong hill tracts are descendants of one of the 10 lost tribes of Israel. The basis of this "rediscovery" lies in the traditional Chin-kuki belief that they are descendants of a common pro-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A copy of the religious Torah brought from Israel monitor—called Manmasi or Menashi. Says Gideon Rey, a leader of the North-eastern Jewish community: "We realised that the ancestor our tribal priests would refer to was none other than Manasse, the son of Joseph, who belonged to one of the 10 lost tribes of Israel."

According to Jewish belief, the Jewish tribes were scattered all over West Asia after the Assyrian victory in 721 B.C., eventually integrating with the customs and religious leanings of their captors. The only Jews who retained their customs and genealogical purity in the diaspora were the descendants of the two tribes of the Kingdom of Judah: they ultimately returned to Palestine to create modern Israel. The other 10 tribes were "lost" in the demographic and martial upheavals of history.

But whether one of the tribes had found its way to the North-eastern reaches of India is open to lively debate. For centuries, the present converts—no different from the rest of the inhabitants in the area in their physical characteristics—have tramped the traditional tribal path, many of them being shepherded into the Christian fold by missionaries. In the mid-'50s, according to Nehsaul Ben Menasse, the rabbi of Imphal, the "miraculous reawakening" occurred in the Kuki-dominated town of Churachandpur in south-west Manipur when a group of tribals was "inspired" to study and preach Judaism. The movement revived in the mid-'70s and has been gaining momentum ever since.

Now, having "rediscovered" their roots, the North-eastern Jews have their sights set on an ambitious goal—migration to Israel. "How can we be happy living away from our eternal home?" asks Moshe Isaac, the Jewish community's president and a baker by profession. That yearning is fuelled not so much by faith as by the persecution new converts face from their Christian neighbours, mainly eviction from the community. "All of us fear that we will be forcibly evicted one day, if not by religious wrath then by government policy," says Benjamin.

But getting to Israel will be like the biblical crossing of the Red Sea. In 1983, when North-eastern Indian Jews' request to their Israeli prime minister Menachem Begin for recognition and assistance in returning "home" evoked little response. Four Kukis were allowed into Israel to authenticate their claims and receive formal instructions in the Torah and other religious texts. But since then, the Jewish Agency has refused to issue any more visas for Israel, obviously because of serious doubts regarding their claims.

Fuelling the Jewish upsurge in the area is the powerful conviction that all the two million-odd Chin-kuki tribals living in Burma, Mizoram, Manipur, Nagaland and parts of the Chittagong hill tracts are descendants of one of the 10 lost tribes of Israel.

Consequently, these people are currently engaged in frantically trying to prove their Israeli ancestry. Says Rey: "Years of wandering and the influence of alien religions have smothered our Jewishness, but much still remains to show we are the tribe of Menasse." This is mainly contained in vague references to Jewish history in ancient tribal songs like the one which supposedly refers to the crossing of the Red Sea and translates:

We observed the Sipkui feast, crossing over the Red Sea running dry before us
And the walking enemies of mine, the riding foes of mine, were swallowed by the sea in the thousands
At night we led by fire and by cloud in the day.

Another tribal song declares

Manmasi, you came crossing seas and rivers, you came through hills and mountains
You came through all this to the land of strangers.

This journey, the tribals believe, began in 721 B.C. The Menasse tribe settled in different parts of Medo-Persia till religious persecution drove them eastwards to Afghanistan and finally to China by about 100 A.D. Rabbinical authority has accepted the trail till China but not the Chin-kuki claims to subsequent migration. The tribals, however, believe that between 600 and 700 A.D., their religion came into conflict with the state religions of China, Taoism and Buddhism and they were driven into Vietnam, eventually arriving at Aupatuang in Burma via Indochina around 1,300 A.D. and then spilling over into the North-east in India.

Argues Manipur Government Tourism Director L.S. Thangjom, a prominent member of the state's Jewish community: "If there can be black Jews (Falashas) in Ethiopia and Mongoloid Jews (Kai Feng Fu) in China, what is so surprising about our Jewish ancestry?" But that is an argument that can only be resolved by the orthodox Rabbinate in Israel. Till then, the Jews of the North-east seem content with the inner conviction that one day they will receive the call to return to Zion.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in the North-east

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNISTAR.
Means soaring progress.

The versatile cable. UNISTAR

• PEX Power Cable LT/HT/EHT • Flamuni Cable FRLS/FS/HF. • PILC Cable MIND/Draining. • PVC Power and Control Cables • Elevator Cable PVC/Rubber • Railway Signalling and Loco Cables • Aircraft Wiring/Air Field Lighting Cables • Mining Cables Fixed and Trailing • High Temp. Cable Silicone/Fluoroplastic • Oil Exploration Cables (Rig and Data-Logging) • Welding Cables GP & HR • Ship Wiring Cable • Nuclear Radiation Resistant Cable • DC HV Cable Precipitator/X-Ray • High Frequency Cables Audio/Video/RF/Cable TV, Microwave • Multi Pair Screened Instrumentation/Data Cable.

AMA-UC-284X

UNISTAR® CABLES AND CAPACITORS

The all pervading element in industries.

UNIVERSAL CABLES LIMITED P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.) Tel.: 2551, 2552, 2708, Telex No.: 0766-202 UCL IN.

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159, Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Tel. 202 6340, 202 8019, 202 3170 Telex: 011-3732 BRLA IN.

CALCUTTA: 27-B Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016, Tel. 44 4351, 446198 Telex: 021-7653 RMCO IN.

NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Bldg. Parliament Street, New Delhi 110 001 Tel. 384851, 382750 Telex: 031-62646, 031-62598

BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore 560 020. Tel. 362674, 368179. Telex: 084-653.

MADRAS: 20 Greams Road 1st floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras 600 006 Tel. 472427, 477551 Telex: 041-428.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

McDowell

The Moving Spirit

Presents

MUSIC INDIA'S

AAFREEN

A nation wide
Programme of Ghazals by

Pankaj Udhas

Date	City
22.8.86	Bombay
23.8.86	Bombay
30.8.86	Bombay
5.9.86	Jaipur
6.9.86	Delhi
7.9.86	Calcutta
12.9.86	Hyderabad
13.9.86	Bangalore
14.9.86	Madras
20.9.86	Goa
21.9.86	Pune
26.9.86	Lucknow
27.9.86	Patna
28.9.86	Gauhati

Just released
'Aafreen'
double cassette of all new ghazals

MUSIC INDIA
WE GIVE OUR ARTISTES
THE WORLD

No.1 moments with McDowell

AMA-UC-284X

OBM/7965

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ADVANCED LIGHT HELICOPTER

Designed Delays

Line drawing of the Advanced Light Helicopter

B.K. SHARMA

INDIA'S first indigenous helicopter, being designed at Hindustan Aeronautics Ltd (HAL) and grandly named the Advanced Light Helicopter (ALH), may be neither advanced nor light when—and if—it finally takes to the air. Billed as a unique helicopter for "hot (up to 44 degrees centigrade) and high (6 km) performances", the ALH project has, since it was first mooted in 1969, been dogged by unseemly controversies and inexplicable delays that have turned the entire and expensive exercise into a mockery of indigenous defence planning and production.

For nearly a decade, the helicopter was supposed to have a single engine. Then, in 1979, when the design was more or less complete, the ALH became a twin-engined affair because the Indian Air Force (IAF) had changed its mind two years earlier. And, another five years later, the French collaboration was replaced with a German one. So in 1984, work began from scratch on what had been planned as a multi-purpose workhorse helicopter "for the eighties". In the intervening period of uncertainty, a large number of design engineers left HAL in disgust.

Ever since, the Rs 100-crore project has been mired in a seemingly endless series of disputes over technical specifications, disputes with the collaborators, and sharp divisions within HAL itself. Planned as a high-tech replacement for the Cheetah and Chetak helicopters in service with the IAF, with different versions for the navy, the army and civilian use, the ALH was supposed to be unique because of its two very special features: its light weight and its ability to survive crashes (or crashworthiness). But now, both the special features may be missing from the final product, due to start production only after the 1980s are long gone, in 1991.

Investigations by INDIA TODAY reveal that the chopper's crashworthiness—the feature which had endeared the craft to planners and pilots alike—has been slashed from the initially quoted 95 per cent to less than 50 per cent. Its load carrying capacity has also been lowered by almost 100 kg, about 6 per cent. Last May, after the helicopter's mock-up, a wooden life-size model, was readied, an HAL designer quipped: "This model will make a mockery of what we are doing." Added another senior designer: "It's like trying to make a car and ending up with a motorcycle." Sources in HAL's helicopter design bureau conceded that even after the ALH goes into production, India may still need to import helicopters to meet its defence needs of the 1990s. Already, an undisclosed number of additional Soviet helicopters has been ordered to make up for the protracted delay in the ALH project.

The Government had decided to go in for the collaboration with Messerschmitt - Bolkow - Blohm (MBB) GmbH of West Germany after five years of haggling and innumerable negotiating forays abroad by HAL officers. The MBB was to be paid a fee of 89.7 million DM (roughly Rs 53 crore), in 13 six-monthly schedules, called "milestones". But ever since work started on the first milestone (the preliminary design phase) in November 1984, there has been much disagreement between HAL and MBB officials over the design.

These differences have now reduced the occasional meetings between the designers of the two partners into shouting matches, and vertically split HAL's staff on the utility of the changes. While a large section of the HAL team accuses MBB of "diluting" the contract it signed, HAL's top-rung officials feel there is no real problem. Said the Managing Director of HAL's Design and Development Complex, K. Balaraman: "It is nonsensi-

THE ALH PROJECT HISTORY

1969—A high-level committee headed by former defence minister C. Subramanium recommends that India should go in for an Armed Light Helicopter.

1971—India enters into a ten-year agreement with Aerospatiale of France for the designing of a single-engined ALH. The first prototype is scheduled to fly in 1982. Armed Light Helicopter project renamed Advanced Light Helicopter.

1977—Indian Air Force changes its Air Staff Requirement to a twin-engined configuration and recommends that the ALH project be suitably modified.

1979—The IAF proposal is sanctioned and HAL starts search for another collaborator. Cost of development on the project has escalated from Rs 23.04 crore in 1972 to Rs 37.50 crore in 1979.

1981—Agreement with Aerospatiale is terminated and direct project cost of Rs 7 crore along with single-engine helicopter design which was ready, goes to waste.

1984—A seven-year collaboration agreement for the ALH project signed with MBB of West Germany. Decision delay because of serious differences among HAL designers over the choice of collaborator. Work on the ALH project starts all over again from scratch.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Vasanthi Foundation, Chennai and eGangotri

TISCARE
A quality product from Tata Steel

Mothers like her receive a special kind of care under the Tata Steel Family Planning Programme implemented through nine Family Welfare Centres and eleven Child Clinics which provide free health care services to a large number of people living in and around Jamshedpur.

The programme covers pre-natal check-ups, immunisation, contraceptive counselling and motivational education programmes for special focus groups. The 'Parents of Tomorrow' programme, for instance, aims at newly married couples between the ages of 18 and 25 years and covers family relationships, health and sex education.

Record achievement

Tata Steel's Family Planning Programme has resulted in Jamshedpur already attaining a birth rate of 19.81 per thousand, targetted for the country as a whole, by 2000 AD, according to the International Institute of Population Sciences. Thus, in this important field, Jamshedpur is already on the threshold of the 21st Century.

Tiscare has come to mean hope in so many areas. Ranging from health services to sports programmes. Employee welfare to community service. Rural development to relief and rehabilitation. Tiscare means many different things to many different people.

To Tata Steel it is a continuing commitment to improving the quality of life.

TIS-6306

TATA STEEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE NEVER FORGET HOW IMPORTANT YOUR TIME IS.

You're the executive on the 'inside track' everyone's talki about. And you know what's behind this success: the value attach to your time.

We never forget this. That's why we lay down a st service standard for each and every function we con for you. For instance, personal cheques must be encashed wi 5 minutes flat. Letters must be attended to within 48 hours.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...that's not all. We also control our service. With spot ...ts on every branch every 90 days. And with a special team ...ervice Inspectors sent in from London to double check once ...r 12 months.

...u know how serious we are about your money. ...can now also be sure that ...alue your time.

Personal Banking from

Grindlays Bank p.l.c.

Contract-GB-59/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the valley of peace the only flutter is the rustle of breeze amongst the chinars

Kashmir invites you to a serene experience. Here nature unfolds her treasures in the most beautiful ways. Stately chinars line your path to breathtaking sights: majestic snow-peaked mountains, bubbling brooks, sparkling lakes and flower-spangled meadows. The cool mountain air caresses you. You are at peace with yourself and the world.

Kashmir offers you many tranquil retreats. Conveniently close to the necessities of life and yet blissfully away from it all.

Come keep a date with peace. Go back refreshed.

Visit Kashmir
Discover Paradise

Department of Tourism
Government of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cal to say that we are making unnecessary changes. Whatever changes have been made were with the approval of the customers (the IAF)." HAL's Adviser (designs), R. Varadarajan, was equally firm when he brushed aside the objections raised by the heads of various design sections in the helicopter design bureau, noting that "the changes are minimal".

But the differences were obvious, and matters came to a head four months ago when the chief of the bureau, J.M. Debnath, was transferred to the insignificant advanced technology group, apparently for refusing to clear the changes introduced in the helicopter's design. While Debnath declined comment, it appears that he threatened to stall the second payment of Rs 3-crore due to MBB, forcing Balaraman to transfer him. The appointment and promotion of K.S.Sudhindra to replace Debnath, superseding two other officials, has only increased the sharp divisions within HAL.

MBB's chief engineer in Bangalore, Dieter Bender, also defended the changes: "It is ridiculous to say we are changing things. Changes have been made by MBB and HAL together, in consultation with the Indian armed forces. The collaboration is going on smoothly." Sources in the IAF, however, argue that approval was given to certain changes "only with a view to getting the best helicopter under the circumstances" after realising that MBB could not meet the ideal requirements specified in the contract.

CHANGES in the ALH began within weeks of the start of the project when the diameter of the main rotor was increased from 12.8 metres to 13.2 metres which may not have had any effect on the performance but was a precursor of things to come. More recently, the rotor (which should have been rigid and hingeless) had a damper added to it to dampen vibrations. This increases maintenance problems, leading to yet another squabble within the design bureau.

The aircraft's weight carrying capacity was also altered. According to the agreement, the basic empty weight (BEW) of the ALH—the weight of the empty helicopter on the ground—was to be a maximum of 2,240 kg. But in April, MBB projected an empty weight of as much as 2,700 kg—even though the agreement stipulated that a penalty would be levied if the weight crossed 2,374 kg. Inevitably, this drew strong objections from HAL designers. Furious arguments broke out between the designers of the two companies as to what constituted empty weight—whether it included just the pilot or the co-pilot as well, and whether the windscreen weight should be counted. The MBB designers finally recommended, and got approved, the replacement of indigenous avionics equipment like altimeters and sonars with lighter imported equipment so as to bring the empty weight down to 2,520 kg.

BHAWAN SINGH

Indian Navy Chetak helicopters on the Vikrant: no replacement

But this remained beyond the cut-off limit after which the penalty clause applies. So MBB designers decided to replace the retractable landing gear, weighing 240 kg, with skids that weigh barely 80 kg. This was yet another controversial change because a retractable undercarriage would have reduced air resistance during flight, and increased the craft's air speed. Also, in case of a crash, it would have minimised the danger to the helicopter's fuselage and the men on board. So, with the change in landing gear, the helicopter's crashworthiness dropped from 95 per cent to 50 per cent. In layman's terms, this means that instead of surviving 95 per cent of the crashes at a speed of 72.8 miles per hour, its survivability is now down to below 50 per cent.

The changes have raised a major question mark over the choice of MBB in preference to Aerospatiale of France and Augusta of Italy. While Augusta, which was interested in letting India manufacture its A-129 helicopter under licence, was eliminated in the early stages, Aerospatiale had lost out by the proverbial whisker. Those who favoured the French company had based their argument on the fact that Aerospatiale had been engaged in the earlier single-engine project. However, Aerospatiale's suggestion that India might have to import several of the Dauphin AS-65 components had gone against it. MBB, with no similar experience in manufacturing helicopters, had bagged the contract as it had developed considerable technical know-how and was ready to transfer its technology to India.

But as it turned out MBB made an ambitious and, as one top designer put it, "impracticable" offer to get the Indian contract and is now finding it difficult to deliver the promised package. Incidentally, Eurocopter, the company formed jointly by Aerospatiale and MBB to make PAH-2, an anti-tank helicopter for France and West Germany, has run into "serious technical difficulties" and is reportedly close to abandonment. The respected Jane's Defence Weekly said in a recent issue: "(Only) political will could save Eurocopter."

Meanwhile, the ALH project has to overcome yet another major hurdle: the selection of the engine. The current contenders for the engine are Turbomeca of France and Pratt and Whitney of Canada. Though HAL had sent its proposals to the Defence Ministry last December on the make of the engine, the ministry is yet to make up its mind. Further, as an earlier report of the Public Accounts Committee quoted the Defence Ministry, "the delay in the development and manufacture of the ALH has delayed the availability of the weapons system". Already the helicopter is priced at 1984 rates at Rs 2.2 crore, and HAL intends to manufacture at least 240 helicopters initially. The delay so far is likely to cause cost overruns, which can only bolster the foreboding that the jinx on the project is likely to keep the ALH on the skids till well past its planned debut.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Do you need to study management to kill a caterpillar?

Every endeavour of FICIDES INDIA is directed to bring the world's latest crop protection technology to the discerning Indian farmer.

And the science of agronomy and professional business management are the key forces behind every FICIDES accomplishment.

Complementing the green revolution – our prized national commitment.

Ficides India –

- A dynamic company in the core sector.
- Committed management team of leading professionals.
- Established infrastructural network throughout the country.
- Market leader in agro-chemicals.
- Complete range of agro-chemicals with total farmer acceptance.
- Strong Research & Development base.
- Access to frontline technology worldwide and the freedom to bring it to India.

FICIDES INDIA

Sweeping Green Fields to Golden Harvests

LINTAS-M-FI-COR 14a 2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIGH FLIER

That's IPCL – reaching for the sky. Dynamic, enterprising, soaring from strength to strength.
From a gross block of Rs. 30 crores to Rs. 484 crores.
From a turnover of Rs. 5 crores to Rs. 687 crores.
All in just 12 years. Though young, IPCL is now one of the top ten companies in the country, in the Corporate Sector, public and private sector included.

A handsome dividend of Rs. 18.6 crores, enviable debt – equity ratio and reserves... a record breaking performance that has got us a unique 300 million dollar loan from the World Bank. An important phase in the transformation of IPCL into a megacorporation in less than a decade.

Growth plans that go beyond today. A Rs. 1400 crore capital outlay for expansion at our Vadodara Complex and the new Maharashtra Gas Cracker Complex at Nagothane. A targetted turnover of Rs. 1200 crores by the end of the decade.
A determination to promote and manage multi-locational enterprises and maintain leadership in a competitive and diversifying market.

Good reasons to say we're High Fliers.

Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Limited. (A Government of India Undertaking)
P.O. Petrochemicals 391 346. Dist. Vadodara.

Shilp) IPCL 1/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SANYO

SHARPEN YOUR SIGHTS

Our new VHS format video doesn't miss a thing. It has HQ (High Quality) picture enhancement. Using advanced circuitry to raise the white clip by 20%, it sharpens the edge of objects on the screen and reduces interference. Whites become truly white. And with a detail enhancer the fine details of even whiskers and fur appear crisp and distinct. Indeed, the definition and color fidelity are so true you might think it's "real". Picture it for yourself. Sanyo's High Quality VHS Video.

CMX 2100STR Great sight and sound come together in this 21" 16-System Color TV with Hi-Fidelity Stereo Sound, FST (Flat Square Picture Tube), voltage synthesizer electronic tuning, 27-function infrared remote control and Automatic Voltage Selection.

VHR-1700M The ultimate VHS VCR with worldwide multi-system versatility: PAL B/G, PAL I, PAL D/K, MESECAM, MESECAM OIRT, NTSC 3.58MHz and NTSC 4.43MHz. It also features HQ (High Quality) picture enhancement, 14-day 4-event programmable timer and 13-function infrared remote control.

CMX 2600STR If you're looking for the ultimate big-picture television, look no further than this magnificent 26" 16-System Color TV with Hi-Fidelity Stereo Sound, voltage synthesizer electronic search tuning, 27-function infrared remote control and Automatic Voltage Selection.

CMX1905R The styling from Sanyo couldn't be any sleeker with this 19" 16-System Color TV with FST (Flat Square Picture Tube), voltage synthesizer electronic search tuning, 27-function infrared remote control and Automatic Voltage Selection.

VHR-1200PS This attractive PAL/MESECAM system VHS VCR features HQ (High Quality) picture enhancement, 14-day 1-event programmable timer, 12-function infrared remote control and automatic power-on. It comes in your choice of gold, silver or red.

HQ VHS

VHR-1110 A PAL system high-performance VHS VCR featuring HQ (High Quality) picture enhancement, 14-day 2-event programmable timer, Quick Start Recording, 9-function infrared remote control, self power-on and automatic tape playback after rewind.

HQ VHS

BPL-INDIA
In pursuit of perfection

Sanyo products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres:
- Bangalore: TEL 220266 Telex: 0845-511
- Calcutta: TEL 431916 Telex: 021-2390
- Bombay: TEL 4940384 Telex: 011-73789
- Cochin: TEL 39422
- New Delhi: TEL 6434037 Telex: 031-2692
- Madras: TEL 74810 Telex: 041-6507
- Palghat: TEL 3241 Telex: 0852-213

Sanyo products are available wherever you go:
- Bahrain: A.A. Zayani & Sons., P.O. Box 932, State of Bahrain TEL 255921
- Kuwait: Supplying Store W.L.L., P.O. Box 1154, Safat, Kuwait TEL 425367
- Qatar: Qatar Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 8883, Doha TEL 431511
- Republic of Maldives: Srimal Enterprises, Male, Republic of Maldives TEL Male 3087 or 3461
- Sultanate of Oman: General Electric & Trading Co., P.O. Box 7006, Muttrah TEL 704457
- Saudi Arabia: Basic Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 1402 Alkhobar TEL 8641180/Abdullah Bin Sulaiman Basahel & Sons Co., P.O. Box 60, Jeddah TEL 6369581
- Sri Lanka: St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, Colombo 10 TEL 24261
- U.A.E.: Al-Futtaim Electronics, Marketing Division, P.O. Box 5559, Dubai TEL 231566

SANYO ELECTRIC TRADING CO., LTD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VAIDYA CASE

The Killer Trail

EVEN as the massive manhunt for General A.S. Vaidya's assassins moved into top gear last fortnight, Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) officials investigating the killing had little illusions about the tough task ahead of them. Led by the shrewd and ruthless Jinda (see box), the killers have been able to cover their tracks effectively, having successfully evaded the police in several states during their gory career of dacoity and murder. Said a senior police official: "It's like looking for a needle in a haystack."

Besides Jinda, the other two killers identified are: Sukhwinder Singh alias Sukhi alias Vikas Goyal, who is from Ludhiana and who had escaped from the Golden Temple during Operation Bluestar, and Gurinder Singh alias Bhola, the terrorist who was involved in the Kamachanda killing in Delhi and later rescued by Sten gun blazing killers from a Jalandhar court last April. The fourth, who has not been identified, is described as medium-built and dark-complexioned.

The identifications were made on the basis of descriptions given by eyewitnesses. But the clincher came from the seizure of a book during a raid on the Antop Hill hide-out of Jinda in Bombay on July 3. The seizure was made by a Rajasthan police sub-inspector accompanied by a constable from the Bombay police on the basis of a tip off that Jinda and his gang were holed up in a flat rented from a Central Government employee. But while Jinda was able to bluff his way past the police, the articles seized included the photograph of an unidentified man, suspected to be a Maharashtrian from Bombay, and the novel Triple by Ken Follet. Inside the novel was scribbled General Vaidya's Maruti car number DIB 1437.

Surprisingly, police officials in pursuit of bank robbers known to have terrorist links and suspected of sending part of the booty to extremists in Punjab did not give much significance to the mysterious noting in Follet's novel. Their routine query from Delhi Police on the registration number brought them a simple answer: the car belonged to one Bhanu Vaidya. But on August 10, after General Vaidya was assassinated in Pune while driving home from the market in his white Maruti, the significance of the car registration number hit home with chilling finality.

Said a CBI official: "The car number in the novel is a dead give-away of the involvement of Jinda's gang. Besides, the modus operandi identifies them as the same gang—it was a swift, neat operation on stolen vehicles and the gang covered its tracks well, never staying in hotels or lodges but renting private houses through underworld contacts or sympathisers."

M. RAHMAN

'Wanted' posters of the killers in Pune

Thousands of posters have since been put up by the Maharashtra police in Pune and other state towns describing the killers and offering a reward for information. The posters describe Jinda as 5 feet 7 inches tall with a mole on the right side of his neck and two wounds on his right leg; Sukhwinder Singh, 28, as 5 feet 10 inches tall, who speaks softly, is fluent in English, Hindi and Punjabi, always walks with his head down, strokes his hair often and is fond of English novels; Gurinder Singh alias Bhola, 23, as 5 feet 8 inches tall, who can drive any vehicle and is a good painter; and an unidentified medium-built, dark-complexioned man, about 23 years old, who speaks Hindi in the Bombaiya Marathi style and occasionally breaks into Punjabi.

Ten CBI officials headed by a deputy inspector-general are working on the case, assisted by detectives from Pune and the Bombay police. A top CRPF officer from Punjab, familiar both with terrorist operations and Pune city where he was posted some years ago, has also been flown down to assist. The police suspect that Jinda and his accomplices may be holed up somewhere in Maharashtra using the network of terrorist sympathisers.

The police have been able to confirm that the killer quartet, possibly with other accomplices, came to Pune some days before the killing of General Vaidya. They were, according to the police, "definitely given shelter by a local person, possibly an ex-armyman or a local sympathiser". According to them, Jinda and Sukhi, who has definitely been identified by witnesses as one of the gangsters in the abortive bank robbery in Pune in June, remained in the city till August 14, and even visited a prostitute on August 13. Jinda is also believed to have visited a village, Vadgaon-Nimbalwad, near Pune soon after the killing.

In pursuit of its theory, the police raided a bungalow in Chief Minister Chavan (left) with Vaidya's bodyguard (extreme right)

UDAY KAKATKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

It's Light...

...Yet Strong-

Thermocole
a BASF product regd. trademark of BASF India Ltd.

BASF
EXPANDED Styropor® PACKS

Light yet strong, Expanded Styropor has many other excellent characteristics which make it the most versatile and ideal packaging material yet developed.

Be your product big or small, fragile, heat sensitive, perishable, etc. Expanded Styropor is the ideal packaging material, as it:-

- Insulates against extremes of climate.
- Prevents breakage.
- Absorbs shakes and shocks of transportation and handling.
- Keeps out dirt and moisture.
- Can be custom moulded to embrace any size or shape of product to hold it securely.

It protects, while it pleases the eye.

Styropor® is the registered trade mark of BASF Aktiengesellschaft, West Germany. Registered users– BASF India Limited.

Both Thermocole® and Styropor® are made in India by:–

BASF India Limited
Maybaker House, Sudam Kalu Ahire Marg, Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4930703.
Branches at:
Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Delhi • Madras.

BASF

BILJ61-E/PREM ASSOCIATES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sarayu Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chardi on the outskirts of Pune, and arrested its owner, truck operator Maliyat Singh Niranjan Singh Tiwana, his two sons and a visitor from Jalandhar. Police chief Mohan Katre said that among the material seized from the house were two fake passports which had been used for travel to the US last year, some cartridges, pro-Khalistan posters and manuscripts of seditious articles in English, foreign currency, a diary containing phone numbers in India and abroad, and letters in Gurumukhi and English posted from Punjab and Delhi.

The police, however, is yet to find the Lohia scooter used in the killing and there are doubts whether the Ind-Suzuki motor-cycle used was the same which was stolen from an Ethiopian student on the morning of the killing. But these are minor factors in an investigation which promises to be one of the most exhaustive—and obsessive—in criminal history.

—M. RAHMAN in Pune

JINDA

Death Dealer

WHO IS Jinda? The man suspected to be the mastermind behind the killing of General Vaidya is currently the most wanted man in the country, a sinister shadowy figure who wanders unseen through the length and breadth of India carefully selecting his victims, killing them and then disappearing once more into the shadowy limbo in which terrorists find refuge.

